CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

The audience at Ziegfeld Theater on last Saturday morning certainly maintained throughout a decided "show me" attitude.

It was a large audience and must, naturally, have included many friends of the various participants in the concert, but not once was there given any sort of reception to any one coming on to the stage.

It is therefore all the more of a credit to the young players and singers that each one finished up with flying colors and each had to return to bow appreciation of hearty applause.

Perhaps the most prolonged of this went to Dorothy Ames, a fine young student of Rudolph Reuter, who played with immense dash and fine finish the "Rigoletto" Paraphrase of Verdi-Liszt.

Other pianists were Gudrun Jorgenson, who did much credit to the pedagogy of C. Gordon Wedertz in the suave and exceptionally attractive Fantasie Impromptu (Chopin), Margaret Wilson, representing the work of Karl Reckzeh, who made a glittering and bewitching proposition of the Valse Paraphrase of Strauss-Schutt, and Cora Rogers, who had the difficult task of showing good pianism (which she accomplished) in the exceedingly unattractive "Sonetta Petrarca" (Liszt).

Florence Morris, a young soprano who is studying with Burton Thatcher, reflected great credit on his work in the intelligence and effect with which she used a very pretty voice in "Tes Yeux" (Rubey) and the fine "Dawn" of Curran, which last she made exceptionally attractive, especially in the full voice section at the close.

"The Wren," an unusual but exceedingly pleasing piece by Benedict, was skillfully and musically sung by Lillian Nottleman and "It Is Enough" (Elijah) proved conclusively that Lowell Wadmond is the possessor of both voice and brains, although he seems destined for ballad singing rather than oratorio, in my opinion.

Two violinists appeared, both excellent; Maurice Fuchs, a student of Max Fischel, and Silvestre Revueltas, studying with Leon Sametini.

Mr. Fuchs played a "Gypsy Dance" of Naches with great skill and style and Mr. Revueltas showed beautiful tone and fine musicianship in the sedate Sonata of Tartini.

AT THE PRINCESS

"The Bashful Hero," now on view at the Princess, is a play that everyone will want to see during its run and one that will linger in memory as a piece of superb writing.

There is no wonderful amount of action in it and the story is a little tenuous at times, but so witty and brilliant is the dialogue and so altogether well is it spoken by the capable, though small cast, that one goes away with a jumble of smart sayings and brisk repartee ringing in his ears even if with no very definite idea of characterizations or play development.

The Bashful Hero is a youth who, although he has done terrible things to the Bosche and has won the V. C. in the British Army, is yet deadly afraid of the ladies.

In spite of this fear, however, he brags openly about his "conquests," just to try to fool his men friends.

Among these, Tommy Ludlow, also a soldier "on leave," undertakes to "call his bluff" and at the same time to teach him what the society of a genuine girl may be.

The V. C. man is therefore plunged into a morass of difficulties, but his native wit and courage coming to the top even in the emergencies manufactured by his loving friends, he finally proves his own case and walks away with the prettiest girl in the play.

The part could be played by no one but a small, rather delicate and absolutely nervous man (or at least all these things must be deftly simulated), and therefore it is hard to think of any one else who could do it except Ernest Truex.

Ernest, in fact, does it convincingly and is easily the star of the performance, although as matter of cold fact, he is talented in a very meager way.

But he has some of the most brilliant speeches to make you ever heard and both he and his associates play the piece like lightning and the audiences are kept in a gale of laughter thereby.

Daisy Maliphant, the chief charmer of the play, was attractively done by Nancy Fair, though one wishes that she were a little more distinct of enunciation.

In the scene in which she assumes the Cockney accent and manner she is better than as the English chorus girl because more intelligible.

Gilbert Douglas, as Captain Tommy, is thoroughly convincing and all the others of the cast fully hold up the responsibilities placed upon them.

Waukegan—At the Parish House, Waukegan, a splendid program was given on October 17 by the Dasch Orchestra. In other concerts of the series the soloists will be Jennie F. W. Johnson, contralto, and others.

EDWARD WALKER

After three years of public singing, but constant study and observation, and three periods of instruction in New York City, the result is a voice developed into a full, clear, high tenor, capable of every interpretative expression. Added to this, is versatile musicianship and much experience. About forty performances of "The Messiah" stand to Mr. Walker's credit.

FRED FAASSEN IN ORGAN RECITAL

A very interesting Organ Concert was given on the great organ at Shiloh Tabernacle, Zion City, Ill., last Thursday evening before an appreciative audience of over 1,200 by Mr. Fred Faassen, the organist.

He was assisted by Mr. Glenn R. Sparrow, tenor, who sang "Comfort Ye" from the Messiah, and Mr. Richard F. Hire, violinist, playing Vieuxtemps' "Fantaisie, Op. II." Both were well received.

The first organ group consisted of the four movements of Mendelssohn's "Second Sonata," Grave, Adagio, Allegro Maestoso e Vivace, and Fuga. Each movement was well rendered, and the strong boldness of the last fugal movement was especially good.

The second group consisted of "Will-of-the-Wisp" (Nevin), "At Evening" (Kinder), "Allegretto" (Foote), and "Resurrection Morn" (Johnson). The first of this group is a bewitching little selection, and a happy combination of flute stops made it very effective. In the second number the choir echo organ was used, and owing to its distance from the main organ and auditorium, it proved a very good combination.

The last group consisted of the now famous "Finlandia" (Sibelius), "Fanfare in D Major" (Lemmens), and "Pomp and Circumstance" (Elgar). The first of this group was the crowning success of the evening. The choral was played on the vox humana in the echo, while the chimes were used on the repetition, which proved most adaptable for it. This is a most remarkably descriptive work and its colors and moods were well brought out through the endless resources of this great instrument. The Fanfare was executed with a flourish and blare that was thrilling. Elgar's number was performed with bigness and majesty that made a very fitting close to the splendid program.

The big organ responded beautifully to every demand made upon it by Mr. Faassen, the organist. He held this position for a short time before entering the navy, and since his release has officiated regularly. He understands his instrument, knows its resources and possibilities and displays real art and mastery in its manipulation.

Frederiksen — Frederik Frederiksen, violinist, played at the Athenæum, in Milwaukee, on last Thursday evening, his numbers being "Souvenir de Moscou" and "Elegie" (Sauret), and "Norwegian Dance" (Tor Aulin). Hans Bruening was at the piano.

GLENN DILLARD GUNN LECTURES

Glenn Dillard Gunn and Elizabeth Stokes announce a course of 120 normal lectures and demonstration classes in piano and voice, beginning November 3, in their studios, Suite 630, Fine Arts Building, Chicago. Mr. Gunn will have charge of the piano classes, Miss Stokes of the vocal work. The course is designed to prepare the student to analyze the needs of the individual pupil in relation to the fundamental technical principles of his art and to supply a thorough and detailed knowledge of teaching repertory, preparing him to give to each pupil just the technical and musical material demanded by his especial problems.

This attention to practical teaching repertory is the feature that distinguishes the course. Classification of teaching material is haphazard and woefully inaccurate with the majority of youthful teachers, whose teaching repertoires are so limited that they practically are forced to give the same work to every pupil.

Miss Eva Jack and Miss Esther Linder will assist Mr. Gunn in conducting these demonstration classes with beginners.

Mr. Gunn's lectures are outlined as follows:

Lecture I. "The Hand and the Keyboard"—Fundamental principles governing the production of tone and the development of facility.

Lecture II. "Habit and the Piano Student"—Every hour spent at the piano contributes to the forming of habit. Are your practice habits good or bad?

Lectures III and IV. "Outlining a Logical Beginning for the Piano Student"—Should long and dry technical preparation preface the beginning of musical study? Should the child's relatively slight musical experience be used as a starting point in piano work?

Lectures V and VI. "What to Practice"—Outlining elementary teaching material.

Lectures VII and VIII. "How to Practice"—Detailing sundry technical and musical plans for study.

Lectures IX and X. "How to Grade Teaching Material"—Further classification of teaching repertory.

Lectures XI and XII. "Keyboard Problems"—Treating of the scale, chord and arpeggio, and their technical derivatives.

Lecture XIII. "Methods, Ancient and Modern"—Physical law versus arbitrary theory. The European and the American teacher and pupil contrasted.

Lectures XIV and XV. "Etude Material and Its Value"—Concerning a profitable division of mechanical study into pure keyboard routine and etude material.

Lecture XVI. "On Memorizing"—Three types of sense impressions to be developed in the mimnetic processes as applied to music.

Lecture XVII. "Concerning Fingerings"—Discussing some astonishing fruits of prejudice as manifested by editors of piano music.

Lectures XVIII to XXX will discuss interpretative problems, when and how to introduce the student to the works of Bach, the sonatina and sonata literature, classic ornamentation, octaves and double intervals, modern technic, the pedals, pianistic illusions, traditions of the classic literature and style in both ancient and modern music. All lectures will be abundantly illustrated and each problem worked out by the students in the demonstration classes.

ILLINOIS FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS

At the recent meeting of the Federation at Alton there were very important discussions on "Americanization Through Music" and "Credits for Music in the Public Schools."

There were many fine concerts, and at the banquet at Mineral Springs Hotel a program was rendered by Charlotte Bergh, soprano, Chicago, and Mrs. F. A. Seiberling, Akron, Ohio, with Mrs. C. F. Galigher of Cairo, Ill., as accompanist.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Mrs. A. J. Ochsner, Chicago.

First Vice President—Mr. J. Lawrence Erb, Urbana.

Second Vice President—Mrs. Charles Burton, Edwardsville.

Recording Secretary—Mrs. Edmund J. Tyler, Chicago.

Corresponding Secretary—To be appointed by president.

Treasurer—Mrs. Julia Cattron, Pekin.

Auditor—Mrs. Vernon Ford, Chicago.

Directors—Miss Katherine V. Dickinson, Alton; Mr. Eugene Simpson, Taylorville; Mrs. Emil W. Ritter, Chicago.

Some of those who attended the convention: Mrs. F. A. Seiberling, Akron, Ohio, national president; Mrs. Emil W. Ritter (retiring president), Mrs. E. J. Tyler, Mrs. Louis E. Yager, Mrs. Anne S. Obendorfer, Mme. Anna Groff Bryant, Mr. Peter Lutkin, Miss Phylis Fergus, Mrs. Anna B. Ayers, Mr. Frederick Ryder, Mrs. J. G. Davis, Mrs. G. Stift, Miss Zella Marshall, Mrs. H. G. Tate, and Mr. Brand White, all of Chicago.

Winners in State Contest who appeared on programs: Effa Sundstrom, Edith Ayers McCullough, Charlotte Bergh, and Lois Baptiste Harsch.

Made honorary presidents: Mrs. Emil W. Ritter and Mrs. W. A. Hinckle.

GEORGES PIERKOT

Mr. Georges Pierkot, the new Director of the Violin Department of the Auditorium Musical-Dramatic Conservatory, Karl B. Stein, President, was born in Ostend, Belgium, from whose Conservatory he received his early musical training. Later he completed the violin course in the Ghent Conservatory, then went to Brussels, where he was graduated with highest honors from the Royal Conservatory. He then toured England and the Continent, playing in all the large cities, and the press comments were exceptionally eulogistic concerning his talent and skill. Since coming to this country he has won renown as an artist and teacher. His pupils are enthusiastic over his work.

GEORGES PIERKOT

Mr. Pierkot is a man of splendid personality and unusual musicianship. He has had the best instruction possible in Violin, Chamber Music, Conducting, Harmony and composition, under such masters as Cesar Thomson, Yohann Schmidt, P. Lebrun, Van Cryschoot and others. He is an exponent of the famous Belgian School of Violin playing from which the Sevcek and all the good modern methods were developed, and which has produced the greatest artists of the world, such as Marsick and Remy of Paris, Leonard and Vieuxtemps of Brussels, Musin and Wieniawski of Liege, Sauret of London, Hubay of Budapest, Carl Flesh, Fritz Kreisler, Eugene Ysaye, Albert Spalding and many others.

Mr. Pierkot had been connected with the Conservatories and Orchestras of Detroit and Cincinnati before coming to Chicago two years ago to be one of the first violins of the Chicago Grand Opera Orchestra, which position he still holds. He has just returned from an extended tour as soloist with his own concert company and will begin his duties at the Conservatory November 1.

Mrs. Lela Lowe Pierson and Mr. Alfred von Beudwitz, both well known in the city as successful soloists and teachers, are the other members of the Violin Faculty, making the department one of the strongest of any school in the city.

ETHEL JONES

Ethel Jones, mezzo, will be heard in a recital of modern songs Tuesday afternoon, November 11, at the Blackstone Theater.

Her program will include the big aria from Cadman's "Shanewis," which she sang on several of her programs last spring, and with decided success.

Miss Jones is to give a recital in Kenosha, Wis., on November 15, and in Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island, Ill., the first week of December.

She will be the soloist, by request, at the Mangasarian services at Cohan's Grand on November 2.

MENDELSSOHN CONSERVATORY GIVES WELCOME PROGRAM

Thursday evening of last week Miss Carrie Scott, director of Mendelssohn Conservatory of Music, gave a banquet and musical at Morrison Hotel for the boys of the school returned from service. A big task it was for anyone, but the program motto applies just as well to Miss Scott, and it is: "Doing our bit is not answering the call; let us do more and do our all."

Miss Scott is to be congratulated, and I know the people there were sincere, for they let everyone know it, and the attendance was around three hundred.

A. Alfred Holmes was toastmaster, and presided with the ease and graciousness that made things go without a hitch. Mr. Holmes' song, "On to Victory," sung by the Mendolssohn Conservatory Ladies' Quartet, went over well. Piano numbers were thoroughly enjoyed. Clara Anderson gave a good account of herself in the Liszt E Flat Concerto. The Male Quartet, William Rapp, William Jespersen, P. Bjorlin and F. Swanson, did some good singing. The Ladies' Quartet has been heard often by this writer, and they sang well on this occasion. The personnel is Rose Larson, Hazel Reid, Margaret and Clara Anderson.

Mr. Simons, violin teacher, won hearty applause after his playing.

L. E. Allen, an excellent tenor of manly bearing, gave a splendid rendition of Foster's "The Americans Come." He was compelled to repeat it. The male quartet on the program was sponsored by him.

Weber's "Jubal" Overture was a fine closing number, played by Hazel Reid, Margaret Anderson, Anna Swanson and Gertrude Larson.

CHICAGO CONCERT ENSEMBLE

One of the most important factors in Chicago's musical education of last Sunday afternoon was the playing of the Chicago Concert Ensemble at Fullerton Hall. In one way it may be surmised that this artistic organization did a greater public service than any of the three great solo artists who appeared, for it gave people a program of excellent music at a purely nominal price and repeated the same program for two different audiences. And this occurs not only once but every Sunday afternoon throughout the season. So that as an institution of service and education this little orchestra, with Mr. George Dasch at the head, cannot be given too great consideration.

The members are all of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, which speaks for their caliber without saying more, and Mr. Dasch is a director and program maker of superior discrimination.

On Sunday were heard Adam's overture "If I Were King," "Chanson D'Amoui" (Saar), and selections from "La Boheme." The Saar number was rich in coloring and highly imaginative and these qualities were brought out in bas relief by Mr. Itte's obligato against the subdued background of the other instruments.

The "Boheme" selections were done "in the mode" and with a suavity which was not blasé but genuinely attractive.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

ERIC DE LAMARTER

If you want to hear frequently some of the most sincere, constructive music presented in the city of Chicago, fall in line and follow the faithful little coterie that makes its way up to the Fourth Presbyterian Church to hear Eric DeLamarter every Thursday afternoon. There is something very alluring about these weekly trips when you get in the habit of taking them. You will find that you cannot stay away—that you are bound by a sort of magic spell—a sum total of a beautiful instrument, adeptly chosen programs and a personality of peculiar power wielding the magic wand. You will find your period of enchantment very short—all too short—I think, and will be retracing your steps each successive week, after some diamond necklace or silver slipper left behind.

If you are tired of crowds and confusing noises, you will find the church a near-by haven for an hour of rest, where you can come and commune quietly with your own thought and not feel that you have to sit up at bold-eyed attention every moment to get your money's worth. Your moods and Mr. DeLamarter's music will react upon each other in the creation of an atmosphere of serenity and uplift.

The program this week, which will have passed and left its impression by the time this story appears, is one which is typical in style and variety. We note the Bonnet "Poeme du Soir," followed by a Cesar Franck Chorale, followed in its turn by a "Caprice" (Ralph Kinder), ministering in turn to your reflective, dignified or whimsical fancies and making of them agencies of delight and satisfaction.

Next week, October 30, the following program will be given, to which, ye music lovers, "Come one, come all":

Toccata—Adagio and Fugue, in C major
Aria—Bleed and Break (the Matthew Passion)
Sonata in E minor—Adagio vivace; andante; un poco allegro
Aria—Lord, to Thee My Heart I Offer (the Matthew Passion)
Chorale-preludes—
Jesu, Priceless Treasure
Praise Will I Give Thee
O Spotless Lamb of God

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

GUNSTER-DOELLING TO APPEAR BEFORE THE LAKE VIEW MUSICAL SOCIETY

On Monday afternoon, November 10, at Parkway Hotel, Frederick Gunster, tenor, New York, and Mae Doelling, pianist, Chicago, will appear in recital before the Lake View Musical Society, with Alma Birmingham as accompanist for Mr. Gunster.

OLIVE JUNE LACEY

Olive June Lacey, soprano, is a rarely gifted young artist who stands for the highest and best in her profession. Her voice is dramatic in quality, of unusual range, enabling her to cope with the lyric as well as the dramatic songs. Gifted with rare intelligence and personality, she immediately commands the attention of her audience and holds it. Miss Lacey has spent many years in sincere study and preparation with the most capable instructors in Chicago and New York. She is prepared to do the standard oratorios and cantatas, while her knowledge of song literature, including the best of the modern composers, is most extensive. Miss Lacey has filled successfully many engagements in the East as well as in the Middle West, and with her teaching and engagements in this city expects to have a splendid season.

SIBYL SAMMIS MAC DERMID

Mrs. MacDermid is one of Chicago's teachers who has been presenting, in the last two years, a number of artist pupils with singular success, and one of the latest of these is the gifted young contralto, Merlyn Pococke, who appeared recently in a recital featuring the songs of Seneca Pierce. Miss Pococke's voice is warm, free and colorful, and she is the mistress of a very ingratiating personality, which she gives out in generous proportions in her song interpretations.

Her program was as follows, well-built and done with conscientious thought and youthful enthusiasm in gratifying coalition:

Lord, to Thee ..... Handel
Lieti Signor (Les Huguenots) ..... Meyerbeer
Ye Who Have Yearned Alone ..... Tschaikowski
Floods of Spring ..... Rachmaninoff

As to Our Directory Columns

The name of every Musician in the United States—every Composer, every Manager, every Publisher, every Teacher, every School, and every Manufacturer of Music Instruments, should be in the Classified Directory Columns of THE MUSIC NEWS.

It is a fact today that Managers, Directors of Schools, Program Committees, Festival Directors, Lyceum Promoters—in fact, everybody who has to do with Musicians, has formed the habit, when the address of a Musician is wanted, of looking in our Directory Columns for it.

We have been told again and again,

"Your Directory Is the Most Useful List Published in the United States"

Even if you have no intention of doing more public work—even though you are located where no change seems possible—it is still advisable to have your name in our columns in order that your friends, the managers, the publishers and the public at large may have a ready means of finding your address.

And—if you ARE in the field for increased engagements or activities of any kind you will find no medium so useful as this.

We have Classifications for every Instrument, for the Voice, for Publishers, Manufacturers, Composers, Directors, Ensembles, Theory Teachers, Dancing, Dramatic Art, Clubs, Choir Boy Training, Pageantry, Community Singing Directors, Managers, Accompanists, Public School Music Teachers, and others.

If we have not your Classification we will create a Department for you.

The cost of this service is only fifteen dollars a year, but the service itself is invaluable.

During the last season we carried in the Classified Columns hundreds of names. We want to carry additional hundreds this season, and expect to make the list as near complete as we possibly can.

Payment for this service can be made Annually, Semi-Annually or Quarterly—and, as we send THE MUSIC NEWS to each one whose name is in these columns, you need have no further expense for subscription.

Display Advertising in MUSIC NEWS is considered today the most useful in America, and you will—eventually—be in the field for that. But, meantime, you should not delay one week in having your name in our Classified Directory Columns, for this is AN INVALUABLE SERVICE.

THE OPENING RECITAL OF JOHN MC CORMACK

The first recital of the season by John McCormack was given at the Auditorium last Sunday afternoon, in the presence of an audience which in size attained the absolute limit of the vast place and which was equally great in appreciation and enthusiasm.

The McCormack audiences adore his voice and himself; they love his programs, and they are always enthusiastic also about his assistants, especially Edwin Schneider, his wonderful accompanist.

And on last Sunday there was a special meed of praise for Mr. Schneider, for his new song, "Only You," was sung by the popular tenor in a way to bring out its very manifest beauties to the full and to win a tremendous indorsement for both artists.

The third person of the little concert party was Winston Wilkinson, violinist, and he, too, shared in the general approval of the enormous audience.

Mr. McCormack began, as usual, with some Old Classics, this time "Come se ti vedro" and "Mio caro bene" (Handel), and again demonstrated the well-known fact that in this genre of song he has no superiors and very few equals.

His second group included the brilliant setting of "A Birthday," by Arthur Whiting, which was given a splendidly effective reading, and "The Red Rose Whispers of Passion," a charming little song of Arthur Foote, decidedly in the best vein for Mr. McCormack, besides fine songs by Graham Peel and Charles Marshall.

The third group was made up of Irish Folk Songs, all of them new, I think, except "Trottin' to the Fair," which was done with such infectious humor and supreme art that the audience demanded a repetition forthwith.

Besides the big success of Mr. Schneider, the last group included two Negro Spirituals (Burleigh) and the "Bedouin Love Song" (Chadwick), given a superb rendition.

There were far too many encores to recount, but among those giving most intense delight were "The Sweetest Flower That Blows" (Rogers), "Mother Machree," and "I Hear You Calling Me."

ing of pupils to spend the season in the East.

Miss Case will fill numerous recital engagements during the year both East and West. She appeared as soloist before the Chiropean Club of Brooklyn on October 17.

Miss Case gives a song recital for the Monday Evening Musical Club of Albany on November 17.

CHARLES W. CLARK AND GLADYS SWARTHOUT GIVE PROGRAM

Sunday afternoon a delightful program was given at the Illinois Athletic Club by Charles W. Clark, Gladys Swarthout, and Edgar Nelson, accompanist. Mr. Clark gave four groups of songs, in addition to two duets with Miss Swarthout. He is a superb artist, and is justly classed as one of the foremost interpreters of songs. Mr. Clark is, to my mind, one of the best singers of the Negro Spirituals. He has caught the spirit of them so well that they are unusual. Two of Czerwonky's songs were made interesting in Mr. Clark's artistic hands. "Uncle Rome" and "Courtin' Liza Jane" were a joy to him, and "Vision Fugitive," one of the baritone's best arias, won enthusiastic applause. He has a fine command of vocal effects, and the light and shade enhances his interpretative moods. Mr. Clark is one of the best.

Miss Swarthout was in happy mood and sang two groups with fine style. She gave the Carmen Aria and a group by Logan, Ganz, Mitchell and Bemberg. She has a good quality of tone and gave it out without reserve in "Lift Up Thine Eyes" and "Aime Moi."

Harriet Ware's "Good Night" is a good duet number, and it was redemanded as they sang it.

Mr. Nelson was a tower of artistic strength at the piano.

LYON AND HEALY HALL

On Friday, October 10, at Lyon and Healy Hall, a program of unusual merit was given, in which the participants were Monica Graham Stults, Charles and Violet Martens Link, Zetta Gay Whitson, Mildred Brown, Elizabeth Olk Roehlk and Mary

VIOLET MARTENS LINK

Wood Chase, who played the Romance from the Chopin Concerto E Minor with Paul Snyder at the second piano.

Both singers, Mrs. Stults and Mr. Link, were in splendid voice and used them to the best advantage in well selected songs. Mr. Link substituted an additional group in the place of Harold Dale Saurer, who was ill. It is intended as no reflection on the absentee to say that he was not missed, but simply as an enthusiastic tribute to Mr. Link, who has not been heard by this writer before, and who left a most unusual impression thereon. His voice is a tenor of true lyric quality, fresh and used with great ease. He was particularly effective in a group of Bohemian songs which were of novel character. Mrs. Link played very beautiful accompaniments for Mr. Link and also for Mrs. Stults. She is an artist of great breadth and ability. Her skill and facility in ensemble playing was also demonstrated in the Dvorak Piano Quintette, in which she played the piano part, while Mr. Link played the viola, in which capacity he is well known to Chicago.

Zetta Gay Whitson in the Lalo Symphonie Espagnole, played with technical acumen and a wealth of flash and color which could only be properly appreciated by one of her own profession. To a great bulk of the audience who heard her she appeared as a rare artist who stirred them in an unusual way, but another violinist must have analyzed easily the keen intellectual perception and refinement of sentiment which gave the tone of the exceptional to her work.

Mrs. Stults, always brilliant in personality, created great enthusiasm over her singing of some modern English and some modern French songs. "Sheep and Lambs" of Sidney Homer was especially appreciated and her best work was done in Parker's "The Lark Now Leaves His Wat'ry Nest," where she found opportunity to use the coloratura qualities which are so distinctively a part of her voice. PROKOFIEFF

"An Unusual Pianist"
(John H. Raftery in the New York Morning Telegraph)

Chicago Appearance, Sunday Afternoon, October 26

The young Russian wizard of the piano made his appearance at Aeolian Hall October 12. Following are the press comments:

NEW YORK TIMES
(October 13, 1919)

Serge Prokofieff, the Russian pianist, reappeared before an audience in which his own countrymen were numerous in Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon. He played Bach's melodious suite with simplicity and grace such as belongs to it, and he found delightful expression for Beethoven's little pieces.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE

At his concert yesterday afternoon, Serge Prokofieff cooed as gently as any suckling dove. This young Prometheus from Russia, who, it had been asserted, had already stolen from heaven the sacred fire which is to light the music of the future, submitted himself to being bound to the rock of the classics and discoursed Bach, Beethoven and Chopin as if he were any ordinary Hofmann or Paderewski. Moreover, his discourse was well tempered, clear, reticent, serene.

His playing of the Bach French Suite would have endeared him to a generation who had never heard of Scriabine or any of the later moderns. It was playing of a high order of beauty, rhythmic, gracious, exquisite in balance and proportion. Beautifully, too, did he give the three "Country Dances" of Beethoven, and in them he proved that joy can still be understood by a Russian, at least by a Russian out of Russia. He then played the Schumann F sharp minor sonata to general satisfaction. Mr. Prokofieff is a pianist of a rare talent.

NEW YORK HERALD
(October 13, 1919)

SERGE PROKOFIEFF SHOWS NEW SIDE OF HIS PIANISTIC ART

Lightness and Delicacy of Touch Take Place of Thunderings With Effective Results

Long fingers do not always stand for proficiency in piano playing, but those of Serge Prokofieff, longer than those of any of his rivals, made delightful music yesterday afternoon at his first recital of the season in Aeolian Hall. Last season he excited great interest by playing several of his own compositions. Yesterday he was heard in a suite from Bach and in Three Country Dances of Beethoven.

A remarkable light and delicate touch characterized the playing of these things. They were done with exquisite delicacy. Clearness in runs and swift passages and beauty of tone marked all of his light playing. A large audience containing several prominent pianists found enjoyment in his recital.

THE SUN
(October 13, 1919)

Mr. Prokofieff's reading was beautiful in line and color, the interpretation indeed of an artist capable of entering deeply into moods foreign to his own. The performance was an interesting disclosure of the pianist's breadth of vision. His own compositions again brought forward his fondness for the witchery of beating rhythms.

THE WORLD
(October 13, 1919)

It was a fine performance and enjoyed by a big audience.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH

Bach, Beethoven, Schumann and five characteristic compositions of his own furnished forth the recital program of the gifted and "unusual" pianist, Serge Prokofieff, at Aeolian Hall in the afternoon. Personality, a great, visionary, poetical and seemingly prophetic personality, entered again into the playing of this interesting Russian composer-pianist, Bach's Fifth French Suite at the outset brought him into complete understanding with the newcomers in his fine audience, acquainting them with the overmastering individuality of the artist and his own peculiarly pensive, but never morose, outlook upon musical literature. The Beethoven Country Dances even better illustrated the elfin fancy and magical technic of this gentle giant of the North, and the Schumann Sonate with its dizzying scherzo and overpowering finale completed the willing subjugation of his enthusiastic hearers.

He closed the program with five of his own frankly and fearlessly impressionistic numbers, Prelude, Etude, March, Gavotte and Suggestion Diabolique—each with its own bewildering and bemusing facet of wayward phantasy, droll grotesquerie, uplifted tonal surprise, breathless acceleration or suspended and seemingly unfinished chord left alone and aloft in the mid-air of startled silence. Another progressional triumph in "personal programmaking," as well as in consummate artistry at his instrument kept the audience in a constantly advancing state of interest and enjoyment. It's like witnessing a good play—hearing Prokofieff—for he is something of a dramatist both in his awareness of dramatic argument and climax, as well as in his ability to project values with originality and unforgettable effect.

NEW YORK EVENING MAIL

Partly to show that he could, and largely because he enjoyed it, Serge Prokofieff played Bach, Beethoven and Schumann in Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon before he gave his own compositions.

The inscrutable young Russian has not lost his fingers of steel, though there was a slight suggestion of the velvet glove over them. He brought lightness, grace and imagination to the Three Country Dances of Beethoven, but somehow his admirers waited for the group which included his own bewitching Prelude and Suggestion Diabolique.

Iva Bigelow Weaver

The first monthly organ recital at the Grand Avenue Congregational Church took place October 12 by the organist, Carl Mueller, assisted by Pearl Brice, violinist. The work of Mr. Mueller is probably as far-reaching as any in the city, having one of the best organs, and is also sponsor for the largest chorus choir in the city. His program on this occasion included numbers by Hollins, Ferrata, Spalding Stoughton, and closed with the big toccata of Widor, which in its entirety gave him opportunity to display the resources of his organ and his own musicianship and versatility in fine manner. Miss Brice gave two groups: "Melody de Gluck," by Wilhelmj; Prelude from "Le Deluge," and "Serenade," by Carl F. Mueller.

Miss Brice compares favorably with violinists to be found in any city, and is duly appreciated in Milwaukee, both as soloist and orchestral director.

Many of our talented local singers are being heard at the Butterfly Theater with the Bach Orchestra. Miss Malck, soprano, sang "Lo, Here the Gentle Voice" one week. Her voice is high and clear in character, and pleased again her many friends. Miss Elso Bloedel has a deep, rich contralto, backed by excellent musicianship. Mrs. Rupert Fry was another soloist whose voice is large and resonant, and Miss Adelle Strohmeyer, mezzo-soprano, is being heard this week. Her quality is especially luscious and her stage presence very commendable. The sincere character of the work of these singers forms a decided attraction to the program and it is to be hoped will be continued by the management.

Miss Ethel Brenk opens her season by giving a recital at the Milwaukee Art Institute next Sunday afternoon. Miss Pearl Van Vliet, pianist, will be the assisting artist.

Chicago Opera Association

Miss Marion Andrews, impresario, opened her season with two appearances of opera by the Chicago Company. "Aida" was staged in all the splendor and charm of color possible to the imagination. It would be very trying to go back to the days when any setting or even furniture "did," whether of the period or otherwise, and the same may be said of the dramatic side, for once prima donnas walked contentedly throug their parts quite satisfied with voice only as the attraction. Rosa Raisa in the title role has all the requirements. Her voice is gorgeously soulful, as well as brilliant, and of tremendous volume. The audience was, if possible, more enthused at her work in "The Masked Ball," given the second evening, where she replaced Emmy Destinn, who was ill. Possibly because she has the opportunity of appearing as she is, instead of an Ethiopean, for Mme. Raisa also wears clothes in a stunning manner.

ROSA RAISA

Sig. Dolci, tenor, has one of the best dramatic voices before the public. His work as Rhadames was all that could be desired, and his splendid physique amply suited the character of the successful warrior. Rimini, as the father, again delighted with his intensity of acting and virile voice. Lila Eubank, a stranger to Milwaukee, supplied for Sophie Braslau as Amneris. Miss Braslau also has never appeared here, so we know not what we missed, but Miss Eubank has a voice of velvety richness in the middle and lower portions, and as brilliant as a soprano in the upper register. She also took the part of the Gypsy in "The Masked Ball."

One was left to wonder why the opera, "The Masked Ball," is so seldom given, as it proved grateful to the singers and was greatly appreciated by the audience. Much of the pleasure was due to Bonci, whose voice is always at his slightest command and whose general artistic sense musically and dramatically pervaded every moment of the opera. Miss Andrews' next attraction will be Mme. Galli-Curci.

Frederick Fredericksen, violinist, and Bernhardt Bronson, baritone, will be heard this evening in recital from the Wisconsin College of Music.

Miss Anna Kubosch, soprano, pupil of Iva Bigelow Weaver, has just finished a two weeks' engagement at the Strand Theater. Miss Kubosch's voice is rich and brilliant, and she is a very promising member of the younger singers.

SOUTH SHORE MUSIC CLUB

The South Shore Music Club held its first meeting of the season on Monday, October 13, with Mrs. B. B. Hadley presiding. The answer of roll call by current events led to many interesting discussions. An interesting paper on Slavic music was read by Miss Virginia Smietanka. An instrumental trio by Mesdames Sisson, Palmer and Wells, a group of songs by Mrs. Swanstrom, and piano solos by Mrs. Stewart and Miss Gillespie made up the program. The club welcomed the return of Marcia Kelly Stewart.

MUSICAL EXTENSION SERIES

A musical enterprise that is being watched with great interest by musicians and the general public is the Musical Extension Series, which was originated last season by Frank A. Morgan and is being continued for the fall and winter with a greatly increased interest. His plan includes the giving of high-class concerts in Chicago and suburban churches in conjunction with a series of four concerts in Orchestra Hall. The season ticket to the church series includes certain advantages that accrue to the purchaser in attending the series at Orchestra Hall.

The first concert in the Orchestra Hall series will be given by the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, with Harold Henry piano soloist, Thursday evening, October 30. This will be followed November 20 with a concert by the Apollo Musical Club, Harrison M. Wild conductor and Ernest Davis tenor soloist. The Zoellner String Quartet, with Edna Gunnar Peterson, pianist, will appear February 16. Oscar Seagle, baritone; Barbara Maurel, mezzo-soprano, and Isador Berger, violinist, will appear in joint recital on March 16.

The artists from which the churches select their four concerts for their series include such well-known musicians as Frances Ingram and Frederica Gerhardt-Downing, contraltos; Louis Kreidler, baritone; Ernest Davis, tenor; Margery Maxwell and Lois Johnston, sopranos; Zetta Gay Whitson, Margaret Whitaker, and Samuel Hungerford, violinists; Vera Poppe, cellist, and Clara Louise Thurston, harpist.

The pianists offered as soloists and accompanists include Georgia Hall-Quick, Helen Whitaker, Katharine Howard Ward, Lyell Barber, Grace Grove, Arthur Fram, Mary Glen, and Elsie Barge.

The churches that have already closed contracts are the following: Berwyn Baptist Church, Brookline Presbyterian, Bryn Mawr Community, Calvary Presbyterian, Englewood Christian, Emerald Avenue Presbyterian, Evanston Second Presbyterian, Gary Presbyterian, Harvey Congregational, Kenwood Evangelical, Morgan Park Congregational, Naperville Woman's Club and Northwestern College, Grace Church, Oak Park; Park Ridge Improvement Association, River Forest Woman's Club, Trinity Congregational, Western Springs Congregational Church, Woodlawn M. E. Church, and Harvard Avenue Congregational Church.

It is highly gratifying to see with what interest the churches have responded to this new effort to offer good music at community centers.

HERBERT GOULD

Herbert Gould, basso, cantante, will give his Chicago recital February 24, 1920, at Kimball Hall, under the direction of F. Wight Neumann.

Libbe—Frances Carey Libbe sang on October 22 at the Ridge Woman's Club the "La Ballade des Pere" (Bemberg), for cello, violin, piano, reader and contralto.

———♯♯♯———

Thurston—Clara Louise Thurston played recently at a wedding ceremony in Kankakee, Ill. Miss Thurston is harpist of distinguished reputation both here and in many other cities.

SOME REMARKABLE SONGS

A group of seven songs recently brought out by J. Fischer & Bro. of New York is attracting considerable attention and favorable comment in metropolitan music circles.

The composer, Minette Hirst, is a native of the south, now a resident of New York. A woman of beauty and personal charm, she is also a member of the summer colony at Southampton, L. I., where she entertains at her villa, taking active part in the music-social affairs of summer life at that place.

A joint recital was given at the Meadow Club recently by Oliver Denton, pianist, and Rafaelo Diaz, the well known tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company. The latter sang two songs by Mrs. Hirst, which aroused enthusiastic applause, and he was obliged to repeat them. On October 8 the same songs were included in Mr. Diaz's groups at De Witt High School Auditorium and also Westminster College Chapel, New Wilmington, Pa., on October 10, where he sang "Not Far Away" and "The Little Drab Wren," the latter being the only song on the program to receive an encore.

Mrs. Hirst's appearance as a composer was a complete surprise, even to her closest friends. "I find it difficult to explain how I first started to compose," she remarked recently when asked about her newly published song. "A melody will suddenly come to me, perhaps in the night, and leaves me no rest until it begins to take form of a song. Of course, I carefully work out the accompaniment, for on that part one must rely altogether for musical color."

Mrs. Hirst will give several musicales during the fall and early winter before going to Palm Beach in February.

ALMA BIRMINGHAM IN DEMAND

Alma Birmingham was the accompanist for the duet singing of Mrs. Benedict and Mrs. Worthington at the Musicians' Club of Women Concert on October 13 and shared with them in the artistry and success of the occasion.

Miss Birmingham has many engagements in the immediate future, among them to play accompaniments for Frederick Gunster, tenor, in his appearance before the Lake View Musical Society in November.

LEVITZKI'S FIRST AUDITION WITH DOHNANYI

Mischa Levitzki was barely fourteen years of age when he was sent abroad to continue the studies which he had begun four years before under Sigismund Stojowski at the Institute of Musical Art, New York. It was rather unusual to send a boy of his years to Europe, but he had proved himself to be such a prodigy that his advisers had no hesitancy in recommending such a step. He arrived in Berlin, his heart set on becoming a pupil of Ernest von Dohnanyi, the renowned Hungarian pianist and teacher, who is well known in this country on account of the concert appearances he has made here in the past.

He telephoned immediately on his arrival, only to be told that Dohnanyi was out of the city for several days. He was extremely anxious to play for the master, for he knew that the classes in the Hochschule of Music were being formed and that Dohnanyi, as usual, was limiting himself to sixteen students. Each prospective pupil had to demonstrate the possession of extraordinary talent before he could hope to be accepted, and the boy coveted the honor more than anything else. He learned that already twelve others had qualified and that there was a long waiting list, including several who had influence, and were leaving nothing undone in their efforts to be chosen. He phoned Mme. Dohnanyi every day, and at last learned that the teacher had returned. Over the telephone Dohnanyi held out little hope and tried to put the boy off by saying that perhaps there would be a chance the following year. However, Levitzki was insistent and pleaded for a hearing, and at last an appointment was given him for the next evening, immediately after dinner.

When Dohnanyi came out from his dining room the following night, he found awaiting him a small boy in knickerbockers. He was not only amazed, but also annoyed. His was the master class, and all of his pupils were of maturer years. He had no time for beginners, as he supposed the child to be.

"Are you the new student from America?' he asked, none too graciously.

"Yes, sir," answered the boy, whose feet scarcely touched the floor when he was seated.

"Don't, you know that we don't admit pupils under sixteen to the Hochschule?" began the pianist, and before Levitzki could answer, he added, "and I personally have never taught children," with a perceptible emphasis on the last word.

Levitzki was determined that he would not be dismissed in this summary fashion, and he asked that he be allowed to play but one piece and let the verdict rest on that. Dohnanyi at length consented, and the boy played "La Fileuse," by Raff. To his surprise, when he had finished, without other comment, he was asked to play something else, and Mendelssohn's "Spring Song" followed.

"Come tomorrow morning at 11 to the Hochschule for the entrance examination," said the man as he gravely bent down and shook hands with the boy.

The next morning Levitzki was confronted with no less than fifteen examiners.

"What do you want to play?" he was asked.

"The Mendelssohn Concerto in G Minor," was the astonishing reply.

"But that requires an orchestra or at least a second piano for the accompaniment," answered one of the judges.

"I will play the second piano," said Dohnanyi, who was present, and the examiners were as much surprised at this as was Levitzki.

This act of consideration inspired the boy to do his very best, and when he had finished he was voted unanimously as a member of the great Dohnanyi's master class.

MUSICAL EXTENSION SERIES

The Englewood Christian Church, at Sixty-sixth place and Stewart avenue, held an enraptured audience Thursday evening, for Ernest Davis, tenor, and the Whitaker sisters, Helene, pianist, and Margaret, violinist, gave a program that was almost without flaw and subject only to commendation.

Mr. Davis has a voice of unusual sweetness, and he has perfect control of it. He had admirable support in Florence Barge for his accompaniments.

The Whitakers show excellent judgment in their selections and are exceedingly clever little artists.

This concert was the first of the series to be given in connection with the Orchestra Hall series under the direction of Frank A. Morgan and, judging from the enthusiasm of the audience, the success of the undertaking is assured.

The next program will be given by Margery Maxwell, soprano; Vera Poppe, cellist, and Isaac Van Grove, pianist. The date is November 13. W. A. H.

TWO ARTISTS

The two artists pictured above have forgiven us for "mixing up" their pictures in our article on the Musicians' Club of Women Concert in our last issue, for they are both as good natured as they are artistic and that is saying enough.

Mrs. Benedict is a Chicago soprano, who has made many successes both in this city and throughout the middle west especially, and Miss Bradley is an accompanist second to none in this vicinity.

IN OCCUPIED GERMANY

When Mr. Newman showed us the sleek looking German cities on last Wednesday evening—cities without a destroyed building and with, seemingly, the usual life going on undisturbed—and allowed us to compare those scenes mentally with the ones he had shown us the week before of devastated France, there was a feeling of "unfair" in every heart—and the thought that Germany had not "paid" as she should.

But, as the picture "Occupied Germany" proceeded and we were shown eventually the entire course of the Rhine, that absolute artery of Germany and the very essence of its pride, and witnessed every bridge guarded by Allied troops—Cologne positively ruled by the British, and Coblenz absolutely under the domination of the American doughboys, and when, as a final stroke we were allowed to witness the Stars and Stripes floating from the summit of Ehrenbreitstein, once Germany's finest stronghold, then indeed we felt that the war was indeed won and that Mr. Newman's reiterated question of "defeated or merely subdued?" was quite superfluous.

For if the Allies could go so far as that they could doubtless go marching into Berlin itself just as easily.

According to Mr. Newman there are no German flags whatever displayed in the Rhine country, and on every castle, bridge and public building in the zone of American occupation the saucy placard "And they thought we wouldn't fight" has been pasted up by the American soldiers to meet the eye of every passerby.

And this indeed was the only message of this particular lecture. Merely (but splendidly) the showing of what Germany is today (or was last summer) and the facts of the government by the Allies of some of the best territory and some of the biggest cities in Germany.

One of the characteristic moments in the showing of the territory occupied by the French was that when medals were presented to French soldiers in front of the statue of William the Conqueror; the retreat of the last remnants of the German army; the crowded streets of Cologne with British soldiers in preponderance in the Square before the Cathedral; the Americans halting all users of the bridge to Coblenz; the Knights of Columbus and the Y. M. C. A. canteens with American girls entertaining the soldiers, one of them looking strangely like the talented Mary Cameron of Chicago and another the exact picture of Bessie Bown Ricker, the St. Louis reader who was such a splendid favorite in France and the Germany occupied by the Allied troops; and last, but by no means least, the game of American baseball in full view of one of the ancient Rhine Castles, with ten thousand cheering and clapping doughboys! And, as addenda, a few glimpses of Berlin, still an imperial city notwithstanding that it is now kaiserless and still beautiful though shorn of its former power.

AT CENTRAL MUSIC HALL

"The Dream Song," a story by Edward Locke, set to music by Victor Herbert, opened at Central Music Hall last evening too late for current review in Music News.

It is spoken of as one of the most engaging novelties of the season, and in its cast is a popular young Chicago soprano—Margaret Owens, daughter of H. W. Owens, the well-known vocal teacher.

Review will appear in this paper next week.

Eddy—Clarence Eddy will play the following organ recitals: Grace Lutheran Church, Eau Claire, Wis., October 26; St. Catherine's College, St. Paul, Minn., October 27, and Plymouth Church, Minneapolis, October 28.

OPENING OF THE ORCHESTRA SEASON

To this reviewer the Saturday Evening Concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra is always more interesting than the Friday afternoon event, and therefore all reviews of this season will refer specifically to the former performances.

The opening, last Saturday night, was attended by a capacity audience and the usual scenes of joy at the resumption of the season.

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra is indeed a fine organization, and the concerts given throughout the season constitute one of the chief attractions of our very attractive music season.

The first concert, as usual, was wholly orchestral, and it served to emphasize the fact that the ensemble is in fine condition, and that evidently the conductor, Frederick Stock, and the men are able to take up the work at the exact artistic point where they laid it down last spring.

The personnel of the Orchestra has undergone some changes, but, of course, the majority of the faces are familiar.

One of the new players is Joseph Malkin, first cello, and his work at this concert was such as to show him a master.

In the luscious tone thrown out in one of the variations in the Elgar number he disclosed the indisputable fact that he has never been excelled by any member of the cello section of the Orchestra in musicianship or in musical feeling.

The program comprised the Third Symphony of Beethoven, majestic and satisfying; the somewhat tiresome "Finlandia" of Sibelius; the Variations, Op. 36 (Elgar), to my mind the most colorful and satisfactory number of the program; a Bizet Overture, and two pieces of Grieg, played with a most luscious and richly modulated tonal quality.

C. E. W.

Comment on the Orchestra opening from three of the daily newspapers read (in part) as follows:

Applause began yesterday afternoon in Orchestra Hall promptly at 2:12. At that time the members of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra appeared on the stage to take places for the afternoon concert. The applause of welcome grew and grew until, at 2:15, Mr. Stock came into sight and advanced to the director's desk. Then it reached its climax and its longest sustained duration.

He bowed again and again, then with face still to his auditors motioned his men to their feet. The audience, too, arose, and "Star Spangled Banner" played with stirring spirit and breadth, proclaimed that the twenty-ninth season of the Chicago Orchestra had commenced. Throughout the afternoon no opportunity was missed to show leader and men that their patrons were glad to have them back, glad to welcome them, and glad to feel the music season was at hand. After the "Eroica," which closed the first half of the program, Mr. Stock was recalled, and, having the orchestra rise, tribute was again paid.

Chief among four newcomers was Joseph Malkin, the first cellist, who comes from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and whose personality and playing of a fragment of obligato in the Elgar Variations hinted of popularity and of musical good things to come.

The program included only one novelty—the Romance and the Intermezzo from Grieg's G minor Quartet enlarged to orchestral proportions. It is a number which will be heard again if popular wish has way. It is Grieg in his melodic charmfulness and with his musical brogue which is ever unmistakable and delightfully in evidence. The men played it as though they were only four instead of fifty-three. Precision, unanimity, technical finish made the performance ideal from the mechanical viewpoint, and so thoroughly was Mr. Stock's interpretative spirit and wish caught and actualized that the Romance became a song of wondrous loveliness and the Intermezzo a message of happiness, jollity and mirth. It was a number which showed how splendid are the strings of our orchestra and how admirable is their schooling.—W. L. Hubbard in Tribune.

Like the single swallow which is currently reported not to make a summer, it takes more than one or two sporadic recitals to make a concert season, or even its beginning. Not until the Chicago Symphony Orchestra swings into line with its regular series of subscription concerts can the season be confidently pronounced under way. This official musical constellation appeared over the horizon at 2:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon, in full view of those who were seated in Orchestra Hall.

The Friday afternoon concerts of the orchestra are in a way quite as much social as musical events. The same patrons sit in the same seats year after year, and the first concert of the season takes on a good deal of the atmosphere of a reunion, and a rather joyful one, at that. As the guests arrived yesterday they were greeted and directed by ushers in becoming new uniforms of artistic cut. Once seated in their accustomed places, they began to direct welcoming applause toward members of the orchestra as these took their places on the stage. There was a spatter of applause for Harry Weisbach, the leader of the first violins; an increased flurry for Eric De Lamarter, the assistant conductor, as he climbed the mountaious steps toward the organ bench climbed the mountainous steps toward the organ bench and a gust on the approach of Conductor Frederick Stock.

Quite a number of changes were noted in the personnel of the orchestra. Four of those who went to war were back in their accustomed places after a year's absence. They were John H. Bramhall and Benjamin Paley among the first violins; Karl Schulte of the second violins, and Walter Guetter, the first bassoon. Albert Ulrich Jr., another returned warrior, took his place for the first time among the second violins. A new principal cello appeared in the person of Joseph Malkin, who comes here after having occupied the similar post in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Theodore Du Moulin taking the second chair in the cellos. Other newcomers were Siegmund Schein, viola; Adolph Hofmann and Carl Singer, cello, and Ray Knauss, second flute. It was announced that four of the new members take the places of four who last year were placed on life pensions after having served from twenty-five to twenty-eight years with the orchestra.

As the program continued there was very little difference to be noted in the quality of the orchestra over past years. In other words, it remains the magnificently fluent, mellow, flexible, sonorous organization that comes into the mind whenever the name of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra is mentioned. There is no single instrument half as fine as the collective instrument which is an orchestra of the first rank, and of these the United States knows no better one than the one of this city.—Edward Moore in the Journal.

Some of the familiar faces of the orchestra were missed, but there were several newcomers, and the most prominent of these is Joseph Malkin, the new principal violoncellist, who comes after having been the occupant of the first cello desk for eight years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The applause grew in volume and enthusiasm as the members of the orchestra filed in and took their places, grew in volume as Eric De Lamarter made his appearance, and reached a rousing climax as Frederick Stock emerged into view.

Beethoven's musical epitome of liberty, and of the great leader of freedom, "Napoleon," the "Eroica," Symphony No. 3, took up the rest of the first part of the concert. It was given with great attention to technical and interpretative detail in the reading which Mr. Stock accorded the work, and the men put forth their combined artistic efforts in their rendition of this long symphonic number. The passacaglia at the end brought the work to a brilliant close, the variations being presented with ever-changing contrast of tone and rhythm.—Maurice Rosenfeld in Daily News.

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER IN RECITAL ON THE WEST SIDE

An unusual and eagerly accepted opportunity was offered West Siders on last Sunday afternoon, when Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler gave one of her wonderfully effective piano recitals under the auspices of the Chicago Civic Association at the John Marshall High School, where Louis Block, a well-known musical amateur, is principal.

Mrs. Zeisler was in remarkably fine form and played with that abundance of skill and charm which is always at her command and which was received by a capacity audience with unbounded delight and enthusiasm.

ST. PAUL, MINN.

By MYRTLE WEED

A notable season of opera by the Chicago Grand Opera forces will usher in the musical season at the St. Paul Auditorium October 17 and 18. "Aida," the first night, promises much with Rosa Raisa in the principal role and Sophie Braslau as Amneris. One looks forward to this opera with the highest hopes, to hear these two magnificent artists and so fine a cast—Arimondi, Dolci, Lazzari, Rimini, Emma Noe and Oliviero. A big feature of this performance is the enlarged chorus which Mr. Campanini has assembled—new costuming as well.

"Madame Butterfly," to be given Saturday afternoon with the Japanese prima donna, Tamaki Miura, conceded one of the greatest living artists, in the title role, is always a big attraction. Forrest Lamont, Clarence Whitehill and Vittorio Trevisan add distinction to the cast.

The announcement of Verdi's celebrated opera, "The Masked Ball," to be given Saturday night, affords St. Paulists the opportunity of hearing an opera new though old. Hearing Emmy Destinn, after her three and a half years' internment in Bohemia, is of special significance, as will be the singing of the famous tenor, Allesandro Bonci.

The local management, under Hiram David Frankel, records the greatest season in the history of an opera tour—from the box office standpoint.

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra opens its sixth season in St. Paul at the Auditorium Thursday evening, October 23. There will be eighteen new faces in the personnel of the orchestra, and it is said to be brought up to its pre-war strength of eighty-five players. The concerts are under the auspices of the St. Paul Institute and under the personal management of Edmund A. Stein. St. Paul may enjoy the twelve concerts and the identical programs as they are given in Minneapolis the succeeding Friday evenings. The distinguished soloists to appear are: October 23, Margaret Matzenaur, contralto; November 6, Mischa Levitzki, pianist; November 20, Max Rosen, violin; December 4, Louis Graveure, baritone; December 18, Margaret Namara, soprano; January 1, Mischa Elman, violin; January 8, Tilly Koenen, contralto; January 15, Sergei Rachmaninoff, composer-pianist; February 21, Fritz Kreisler, violin; February 26, Percy Grainger, piano; March 11, Tascha Seidl, violin, and March 25, Katherine Goodson, piano.

The St. Paul Institute has arranged a series of illustrated talks, one of which will precede and analyze each of the concerts in the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra's St. Paul series.

Malcolm D. McMillan, organist and widely known composer, will give the talks Tuesday afternoons preceding the concerts in Dyer's Recital Hall. The first of these was given as an "extra attraction" October 14 on the subject of "The Orchestra."

The Schubert Club announces three evening recitals given by visiting artists at the People's Church. Arthur Alexander, American tenor, in self-accompanied recital, will give the first of these October 30; Lucy Gates, the American coloratura soprano, appears December 11, and Rosita Renard, the Chilean pianist, February 28.

Of the fortnightly recitals to be held Wednesday afternoons at Junior Pioneer Hall, the appearance of N. Stuart Smith, New York pianist; Carol Robinson, Chicago pianist, and the Minneapolis Symphony String Quartet are among the outstanding features of the season. Others featured on these programs include St. Paul musicians—Jessica De Wolf, soprano; Aurelia W. Larry, soprano, and George H. Fairclough—in an organ recital at the residence of Mrs. Louis W. Hill November 5.

The active section has arranged an afternoon of vocal ensemble directed by Katherine Hoffman, a two-piano recital, and a program of chamber music, together with other programs.

The associate section announces three afternoons of study, the first devoted to "Musical Conditions in St. Paul"; second, "Paderewski, the Patriot," and, third, "Music a Reconstructive Agent."

The student section will have five afternoons given over to the following subjects: "The Juillard Legacy," "History and Development of the Organ in the United States," "History and Development of the Piano in the United States," "Symphony Orchestras of the United States," and "Development of Music in the United States."

The unanimous re-election at the annual meeting of Mrs. W. S. Briggs as president of the club bespeaks her ability and resourcefulness as a presiding officer as well as her ennobling influence in the community. The section chairmen have greatly extended the work of the club in the high standard which characterizes the programs given.

The entertainment of public school students at three evening artists' recitals, music school branches, where an average of 250 lessons are given a month; programs offered to civic and private relief organizations, community singing propaganda, students' professional bureau, and free concerts in branch public libraries, all are indicative of the broad scope of work carried on in the club.

At the annual reception of the Schubert Club, given October 8 at the Town and Country Club, Halborg Gunderson Finkelson, violinist and pupil of George K. Cass, gave the program, with Katherine Hoffman at the piano. The young violinist created a real sensation in the following program, delightfully and artistically played:

Avia Maria.....Schubert-Wilhelmj
Valse.....Hummel
Country Dance.....Weber
Gypsy Dance.....Nachez
Andante from "Symphonie Espagnole".....Lalo
On Wings of Song.....Mendelssohn
Spanish Dance.....Rehfeld

The Municipal Chorus, numbering about 200 members, under the direction of Leopold G. Bruenner, give their first concert of the season at the Auditorium November 3. The "Rose Maiden," by Cowan, will be sung with an orchestra of twenty-five pieces and the following soloists: Mrs. J. L. Whitaker, soprano; Miss Alice Dailey, contralto; Walter Mallory, and Francis J. Rosenthal, bass.

An event given by St. Paul musicians which inaugurated the musical season was the recital by Peter Lisowski, violinist, at the Masonic Temple Friday evening, September 28. Mr. Lisowski was assisted by Myrtha Marie Gunderson at the piano and Jane Holland Cameron, contralto, with Katherine Hoffman as her accompanist.

The program follows:

Sonate—A Major.....Handel
Andante, Allegro
Adagio, Allegretto
Mr. Lisowski
Vittoria Vittoria.....Carrisima
My Heart Ever Faithful.....Bach
Oh Thou Billowy Harvest Feld.....Rachmaninoff

and musicianly feeling. Mr. Lisowski has made the "Orientale," by Cui, particularly his own, and plays it with a deftness that makes an irresistible appeal. This violinist has many admirable qualities and, as a whole, plays with clarity of tone. However, he has more individuality than his playing disclosed on this occasion. Mr. Lisowski plans to spend the winter in New York in study with Theodore Spiering, who promises him a brilliant future.

Miss Gunderson, just fresh from study the past summer with Percy Grainger in Chicago, played skillfully and with remarkable poise. Her playing combined a wealth of color with brilliance of execution. In the first group the pianist played with undue brilliance, but thereafter maintained a fine sense of balance.

A marvelous contralto is Mrs. Cameron's voice, and one of wide range. Hers is a beautiful stage presence and, while she has numerous times been said to resemble Galli-Curci, she has also been likened to the Madonna type of Da Vinci's "Mona Lisa." Her singing of the "Agnus Dei" (Bizet) in the Cathedral Choir, where she is soloist, is of ravishing beauty.

Of her first group the "L'Heure Exquise" (Poldowski) unmistakably created the greatest impression. It was woven with just the right atmosphere, and the pianissimo tones and fine phrasing beautifully expressed the finished art of the singer. Mrs. Cameron's warm, luscious tones made the "Long, Long Ago" of her second group effective, and the old song was a reminder of Julia Culp when she last sang here with theorchestra. Wonderfully impressive was this encore of hers. The "Ballynure Ballad" was finely done, and the accompaniment Mrs. Hoffman provided was a treat in itself.

The song "Joy," by Beatrice MacGowan Scott, formerly a Chicago composer, though whom St. Paul now claims, was sung with fine spirit by Mrs. Cameron. Mrs. Hoffman's exquisite art was made manifest throughout her playing and added much to the singer's fine success.

Lieut. John Philip Sousa, known as America's march king, and his band of seventy pieces, selected from more than 3,000 musicians who were mobilized under his direction at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, is booked for an afternoon and evening program at the St. Paul Auditorium October 27.

A feature of the Triennial Convention of the Episcopal Church, held in Detroit, Mich., was the hymn "Blessed Art Thou," from the Byzintian Orthodox Church music as sung by his grace, Archbishop Germanos, of Baalbek, Syria. The music to this hymn was arranged and harmonized by George H. Fairclough, organist and choirmaster of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul. "Eventide," by Mr. Fairclough, a composition for the organ recently published by H. W. Gray Company, sole agents for Novello & Co., London, is finding much favor. By organists in church and in the concert field it is widely played.

At the monthly music service at the Church of St. John the Evangelist the vested choir, under the direction of George H. Fairclough, sang Macfarren's "A Day in Thy Courts," "Hear, O Lord," by Watson, and "The Shadows of the Evening Hours," by Matthews. Mr. Leo Nadon, tenor, sang the Recitative and Aria "If With All Your Hearts," from "Elijah." Miss Margaret Horn played the Bach Aria for the G string and Andante by Lalo.

At the next musical service, November 2, "A Song of Thanksgiving," by Maunder, will be sung.

Miss Harriet Allen, organist of Andrew Presbyterian Church, Minneapolis, and secretary of the Guild of Organists, will give an organ recital under the auspices of the Minnesota Chapter of the American Guild of Organists Saturday afternoon, November 1, at the Masonic Temple, St. Paul.

Guild members are enjoying the recitals given by Hamlin Hunt, A. A. G. O., in his annual series, held three Monday evenings in October at Plymouth Congregational Church, Minneapolis. The first of these included an informal talk on "The Plymouth Organ." At the later recitals Mr. Hunt will speak on "The Tone Colors of the Organ" and "Types of Organ Music."

The program given October 6 follows:

Concert Variations.....Bonnet
Choral Prelude "Martyrdom".....Parry
Fugue in G Minor.....Bach
Andante Sostenuto.....Beethoven
Scherzo.....Bossi
Eventide.....Fairclough
Dedicated to Hamlin Hunt
Piece Heroique.....Franck Dreams.....Stoughton
Elves.....Bonnet
Carillon.....Boellmann

The Minnesota Chapter of the American Guild of Organists will hold their first monthly meeting of the season Tuesday evening, October 28, after which members will attend the recital given by Clarence Eddy at Plymouth Congregational Church, Minneapolis. The November meeting will be held in St. Paul.

PIER ADOLFO TIRINDELLI

Pier Adolfo Tirindelli, the Italian Master, has just located in New York. It is generally acceded that Signor Tirindelli is one of the greatest living Italian musicians, and his coming to that city will fill an ever-growing demand for the skilled violinist, coach and conductor. He needs no introduction into musical activities, as he is a man of international reputation.

In Venice he was director of the Conservatory of Music and conducted opera. He also conducted the Symphony Orchestra, succeeded later by such renowned men as Mancinelli, Giuseppe Martucci, Steinbach, Enrico Bossi and E. Wolf Ferrari.

It was for the great services rendered to Art and Music that Signor Tirindelli had the honor to be made Knight of the Crown by the late King Umberto of Italy.

For five years he was concert master in the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, London, where he coached many well-known artists in operatic roles.

In Europe he was soloist with the leading orchestras where he became renowned as a violinist, which fame later followed him to America. Through his compositions, Tirindelli has justly become identified with the world's greatest composers. His operas "Atenaide" and "Blanc et Noir" were given in Venice, Milan and Trieste and his latest, "Verso la Luce," is now ready to be presented. His orchestral works, which include "L'Intruse," "Celestial Legend" and a Violin Concerto were performed by many leading orchestras abroad as well as in America, with unqualified success, and evoked the appreciation due these works of art.

Ysaye, Mischa Elman, Kreisler, Maud Powell and Spalding, apart from being his close friends, play his compositions and highly endorse them.

Among his vocal compositions "Amor Amor," "Mystic," "Absent," "Primavera," "Only You" are jewels which are sung by such artists as Caruso, Martinelli, Amato, Scotti, Bonci, Campanari, De Luca, De Gogorza, Graveure, Claudia Muzio, Nina Morgana, Christine Miller, Gabriella Besanzoni, Lina Cavalieri.

Signor Tirindelli has for many years enjoyed the intimate friendship of Puccini, Mascagni, Leoncavallo, Giordano, Franco Leoni.

Among the Master's pupils are some of the leading musicians of America and Europe, including Ugo Ara, violinist of the Flonzaley Quartette; Roberta Moranzoni, who is conductor at the Metropolitan Opera Company; Guarnieri, the violinist now concertizing in Europe, and Chalmers Clifton, the composer-conductor.

Signor Tirindelli has been connected for twenty years with the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, of which Miss Bertha Baur is the most able directress. He created the Conservatory Orchestra, which has become the most famous of its kind in America; also founded the Operatic Department.

MARJORIE DODGE WARNER

A recent appearance of this popular soprano was with the Musicians' Club of Women at their first meeting of the year. Although she was heard only in a small group of three songs, the variety and breadth of musicianship as well as glory of voice evident in these were sufficient to create unusual enthusiasm and a permanent warmth of reception in the hearts of those who heard her. Her songs were "Carnaval" (Fourdrain), a scintillating gem of modern French literature; "My Little House" (Seneca Pierce), which she gave with a most tasteful share of simplicity and sympathy, and the Spross brilliant "Yesterday and Today," which gave her voice opportunity to say anything which was left unsaid by the others. Mrs. Warner has a personality which is not met every day and which is distinctly and delightfully just "Marjorie Dodge Warner."

RUTHERFORD, N. J.

One of the most notable musical events of the season at Rutherford, N. J., was held Saturday evening, October 11 at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Roselle.

It was an international gathering and included musicians from many parts of the world, Spain and South America being unusually well represented.

The feature of the evening was the singing of Stephen Sobolewski, baritone, artist pupil of Alfredo Martino, who sang a widely varied program, including songs and operatic selections in Italian, French, German, Polish and English.

His rendition of the Prologue from "Pagliacci" was received with enthusiastic applause as well as "Pour un baiser" by Tosti.

The accompaniments were ably executed by John Koenig.

The program follows:

Prologue
Pagliacci.....Leoncavallo
Simon Boccanegra—"Il lacerato spirito".....Verdi
Vespri Siciliani—"Oh, tu Palermo!".....Verdi
Werther—"Pourquoi me reveiller".....Massenet
Pour un baiser.....Tosti
The Rose Enslaves the Nightingale.....Rimsky Korsakov
Ich liebe dich.....Mildenburg

CLARENCE EDDY RECITAL

Mr. Eddy's recital at Kimball Hall, under the management of F. Wight Neumann, on Tuesday was seized on as an occasion to demonstrate to the artist and veteran how many friends he had in the "home town," and that they had discriminating admiration and enthusiasm to bestow in abundance. It was an audience of such quality that it supplied just the atmosphere to call forth the best endeavor of one extremely sensitive to such a state.

Perhaps the sincerest sort of comment that can be made is to say that Mr. Eddy plays just as well as ever. Which means that he is past master of a style so admirable as to be unique. Sitting with an artist friend when we heard Ysaye play for the first time, she said: "It sounds like it was oiled." The sentence returned frequently during the concert last week. There is a marvelous smoothness, suavity, neatness and sympathy throughout Mr. Eddy's playing. Nothing obtrudes, nothing is harsh or ungraceful. Yet force, power and vigor are ever undercurrent. The Bach Prelude and Fugue on Bach, which opened the concert, might stand as exemplar of this unity. It was never wanting for a sense of bigness, potency, authority; it rolled along in compelling majesty and stateliness; it was coherent and cohesive; it grew as it went on into accumulating strength and towered into musical heights of splendor. Yet all the time it was illuminated; many times mellow and tender; at times almost lingering in pleasant curves; at all times genial; light and shade and the intimacy of personal enjoyment touched continually the moving flow of sound. Granting excellence and inspiration to the things which followed, they did not outrun the felicitous standard set by the Bach playing.

Yon's big "Sonata Cromatica" occupied a prominent place in the list and was warmed by the player's intelligent conception of a masterpiece. The work is epochal and incites fresh admiration every rehearing.

In quite another voicing Bonnet's "Romance Without Words" was made to express what it said to the player. The stunning "Caprice Heroique" also had its place in the list.

Herbert Wrightson's "Night Song" is distinctively modern in utterance, superbly written to work its spell, full of suggestion, abounding in moods for color and feeling. It came to my first hearing, but certainly has a place for those who will search for its poetic message. Borowski's "March" was accorded a dignified, almost churchly, presentation at Mr. Eddy's hands. It does not affect any involved intention and goes along easily, stately musical grace and body giving it purpose and meaning.

New things are always important items on Mr. Eddy's programs. Ireland's "Holy Boy" is an exquisite gem and so adorably simple and direct that it will go into everybody's repertoire as a godsend. Arensky's "Basso Ostinato" is fascinating in texture and treatment, adroit, inventive.

It was reserved for Karl Theodore Saul's "Paraphrase" to make a real hit in the novelties. And Mr. Saul deserves well at the hands of all Americans for preserving and beautifying a melody which has held its own as the best flash from a versatile American of the long ago. Gottschalk's "Last Hope" is rather scoffed at by the astute, but its theme is of the very best musical warp and woof. Mr. Saul has treated it originally, treated it kindly, too, and made of the "Paraphrase" a set of variations worthy the best endeavors of those who use the organ aright. The reception at this time was eager and interesting and frequent hearings will but accent the values it contains.

A spirited rendition of Crawford's dashing "Toccata" closed the program, but applause brought Schubert's "Ave Maria" played with such consummate skill and taste as to be beyond praise. At such moments Mr. Eddy has no peer on the organ bench.

NAMARA SINGS FOR MEMBERS OF THE SPHINX CLUB IN NEW YORK

Marguerite Namara was the one woman among five hundred men when she sang on October 14 at the annual banquet of the Sphinx Club at the Waldorf-Astoria. It is considered quite a distinction to be invited to appear before this club comprising many of the most prominent magazine owners and publishers in New York, and the charming Namara captured all by her beautiful singing of several operatic arias and songs—with encores played to her own accompaniments.

TEXAS MUSIC TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

The following is an excerpt from a report by President E. Clyde Whitlock, which appeared in a recent issue of the Musicale, Dallas:

"One of the greatest pleasures of the year's work has been the reading of the many cordial letters of acceptance from the county vice presidents. Several of the nominees have not yet been heard from, but there has not been a single instance of declining to serve. Almost all the replies have been not only cordial, but have expressed keen interest in carrying on the work. This signifies a healthy condition of the association.

TWO NEW BOOKS

"The Story of British Music," by Clement Antrobus Harris. Publishers: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Ltd., London.

"The Evolution of the Organ and Its Control," by J. M. B. Publishers: William Clowes & Sons, Ltd., London.

We came across the story of British music, from the pen of C. A. Harris. More exhaustive and more illuminating volumes have come to print, but the present volume of some two hundred pages will prove good and educational reading to those who do not care for too large volumes, which remind one of the A to Z encyclopedias. The author gives historical sketches of the origin of British music and includes even the birds as a factor to the vocal muses, and the legends and the myths are developed to show their relation also. Folk lore and popular music of England and its provinces, plus the popular tunes of Ireland, Scotland and Wales, find space in Mr. Harris' book. Church and secular music, the minstrels—all will be assimilated by lovers of musical reading. The most interesting paragraph is on Henry Purcell, the forgotten composer. I say forgotten, because we have only infrequent performances of England's greatest musician and composer. In these days of nationalization and struggles for the recognition of American compositions it would be advisable to study the works of our English cousins. It will tend to bring us nearer to them and to comprehension of their ideals. Only a musical entente of the Anglo-Saxons can bring both countries to cordial relationship.

"The Evolution of the Modern Organ and Its Control" by J. M. B., is a technical exposition of the growth of the huge instrument during fifty years. The fifty pages will prove worthy reading not only to the manipulator of the organ, but to laymen. How the organ is built now and how it was form subjects of interest to the interpreter. Perhaps the organist will find a remedy for facilitating his pedaling and the use of the king of instruments. The volume is a personal record of fifty years of observation and experiment, with some suggestions and conclusions.

CREATIVE MUSIC FOR THE BABY CHILD

Mothers and teachers know that the baby child demands constructive work.

It loves to build with blocks—to mould with clay—to draw with chalk or pencil.

What educator can tell which great building had its beginning in the wooden blocks; which marble matserpiece was conceived in the soft mud; which master picture was first outlined by the baby hand with chalk or pencil?

The baby loves to sing—it loves a picture—it loves a story.

What teacher can tell which great song—which master picture; and which literary gem received its inspiration from the song, the picture, and the story presented by the mother or teacher in the nursery or in the studio.

In consideration of all of this it becomes necessary for the mother and the teacher to give the deepest thought to the selection of music, pictures and stories which are used in the unfoldment of the child.

Effa Ellis Perfield, whose Pedagogy of Inner-Feeling, Reasoning, and drills, through three educational senses—Ear, Eye, and Touch, is so well known; has solved this great problem for the mother and teacher of the child, three to six or seven years of age.

She has COMPOSED the WORDS and MUSIC for forty-five "Songs About Birds, Animals, and Flowers."

She has SELECTED the PICTURES for these.

She has WRITTEN STORIES which are presented in a way that give the child a chance to express his previous knowledge.

The "MOTHER'S CREATIVE MUSIC COURSE" is a correlation of these songs, pictures, stories and the exercises for developing:

Rhythmic Writing, Rhythmic Counting, Tonal Memory, Tonal Transposition, Staff Notation, Note Values, Body Expression, and Rainbow through Ear, Eye, and Touch.

A mother knows how to rock the cradle in a way that "lulls" the baby to sleep, but many a mother sings, or worse still, "hums" a series of tones without rhythm and form, and later wonders why her child is unmusical.

The child's time and energy must be conserved, because the child of today has a greater world to discover than the child of yesterday.

Its education must be more extensive. Hence, the mother and teacher should choose the fundamental and final things that enable a child to build for future work.

Elementary training in music and in school work has stressed the Eye and Touch. The child has had nothing to awaken its inner ear, which explains why the "grown-up" enjoys the "movie" more than the spoken drama and does not discriminate between "rag time" music and the master message.

Even the "Rote Song" has been presented in Public Schools in a way which stresses only the words, the pupils are not taught to listen for melody, hence appreciation for beautiful tone and pure music cannot result.

The "MOTHER'S CREATIVE MUSIC COURSE" is ideal to use for constructive work with the baby child before it is old enough to attend kindergarten. The child not only unfolds along the musical line, but it learns to correlate the three senses, Ear, Eye, and Touch.

It learns to count by rhythmic groups instead of counting by "ones" on the fingers.

It learns to write the letters and figures with body freedom, because the rhythm and melody furnish the stimulus for spontaneous action. The physical becomes responsive through the Ear Exercises.

All subjects correlate because they are presented by the same scientific pedagogy.

The channel of expression is kept open so that focusing on the goal—unfoldment of the child—is achieved.

Give the child creative work which will show its power, and give it the satisfaction which comes only with natural unfoldment.

Gala Opening of Chicago Opera Association Season—Superb Galaxy of Stars Includes Rosa Raisa, Lillian Eubank, Bonci, Dolci, Baklanoff, and Rimini—Splendid Revival of "Masked Ball"—Maestro Teofilo De Angelis Scores Distinct Success

The two performances, October 13 and 14, at the Milwaukee Auditorium, marked the opening of the Chicago Opera Association season, as well as opening of the Marion Andrews Concert Bureau season.

The original program, as scheduled, included "Aida," with Raisa and Sophie Braslau; "Butterfly," with Tamaki Miura and Forrest Lamont, and "La Boheme," with Alma Gluck. The breakdown of the latter and Miura's inability to arrive resulted in cancellation of "Butterfly" and a change of bill for the evening performance from "La Boheme" to a revival of "The Masked Ball," promising the initial bow of Emmy Destinn this season. It would not be grand opera if it ran according to schedule, and one change always leads to another, as following paragraphs will reveal, but the big auditorium was well filled both evenings, in spite of changes, and two rarely beautiful performances were given.

Whatever the bureau sponsored the public was evidently willing to purchase, and no lack of good judgment was evidenced in any particular.

The orchestra, under the new conductor, Teofilo De Angelis, played the opening prelude to "Aida" promptly at 8:15 Monday evening, and the receding curtains revealed delightfully fresh scenery, which contributed to visual pleasure, for there have been times when the scenery used by the company on tour has been better fitted for junk than use.

The house, contrary to prevailing custom in our good old U. S. A., was quiet, if not all seated, when Dolci sang in subdued but withal pleasing style an excellently phrased "Celeste Aida." His acting and singing were even and he carried his climaxes well as the performance proceeded. At no time did he seem to awaken any tremendous enthusiasm, but he gave a good, consistent and pleasing performance. The program says Sophie Braslau, but Amneris appears before us in the handsome figure of Lillian Eubank, a contralto hitherto unknown to the west. Miss Eubank is distinctive and an easy actress, thoroughly at home in these heavy roles. She was very good in the ensemble work and in the dramatic solo of the fourth act. There were other times when the lower tones were not over projected, but acoustics and nerve tension were very probable reasons for the few shortcomings. An announcement at end of first act that Miss Braslau had been forced to give up only that afternoon with an acute attack of laryngitis and Miss Eubank had taken up the performance on short notice, confirmed the idea that the singer was performing under a few difficulties.

Raisa, a name now to conjure with! Every time one hears her the admiration increases. She makes a beautiful Aida in every sense. Physically, vocally and histrionically there seems nothing left to be desired. She fills all exactions of every role. Limpidly clear as a coloratura and yet thrilled with a glowing warmth, her tones are colored faultlessly. Raisa sings her sobs, she does not sob her singing. There is a wide difference. She sings and acts all the time. Phrasing that holds you in tense, breathless amazement makes the character a real living personality; tonal interpretation exudes in every note, atmosphere is created by this wonder singer, and there is discrimination in all of it.

The Nile scene piled climaxes; from the pleading "Ciel Mio Padre" with Amonasro (Rimini, who gave excellent account of himself throughout) to the tempestuous "Fuggiane gli Ardori" with Rhadames, it was accelerando crescendo, and you are swept on with the tide of emotions and when it is over you marvel how it ever could have happened just that way. The answer seems to be Raisa. She is a human dynamo with a superlative amount of magnetism. No less wonderful was the final duet with Rhadames "Oterra addio." Plaintive and hauntingly lovely was the blend of the voices.

The small bit of the Priestess was well sung by the irresistible Emma Noe and the King and Ramfic adequately filled by Arimondi and Virgilio Lazzari.

The chorus, especially in the chanted numbers, was excellent. The ballet, with incidental dances by the new premiere danseuse, Anna Ludmilla, evoked genuine enthusiasm. Full of verve and originality, characteristic ideas well postured and exquisite costumes reflected credit on the ballet masters, Pavley and Oukrainsky. The new maestro, Teofilo De Angelis, well deserved the applause which drew him with the stars before the curtain. He conducts unostentatiously, perhaps, a little less virtuosly than some, but seems to have excellent co-ordination with those around and before him, and while his overtures and preludes rivet the attention, he keeps his ensemble definite and sufficiently subdued to paint the background of accompaniment rather than a dominant foreground, something as pleasing as it is unusual.

"The Masked Ball"

The libretto of this opera is decidedly old-fashioned and full of absurd dramatic situations and it is really more interesting in Italian you may not understand than it ever will be translated into English. Be content with the story outlined and then just listen to some of the most charming music Verdi ever wrote. With our American demand of a good balance in everything, I fear me much charming music will be in the discard when we finally don opera in English. Our common sense will never permit us to see the noble husband fail to recognize his own wife disguised solely by a veil over her head and shoulders, while a gown he surely must be familiar with, since it seems to be the only one his wife possesses, adorns her frame. However, we are going to ignore story and the opera is full of grateful moments for all. Even the page has several charming solos, the "Saper Vorriste" in the ballroom scene being almost as familiar a number as "Eri tu." In fact there is not an ungrateful vocal moment, and the choruses are simply delightful. Alessandro Bonci, absent from us for several seasons, gladdened his audience with his very first note. The clarity and smoothness of tone and distinct diction make his recitatives things of beauty and joys to remember.

The quintette, with the laughing chorus, "E Scherzo od e folia," was an exquisite bit of lyricism. Gayety and abandon graced action as well as voice; Bonci was thoroughly enjoying it and so were his auditors.

Baklanoff was the Renato.

Again Raisa, and this time she gains an added halo for volunteering to take the part of Amelia in place of the sick Destinn, thereby saving the local management from the final straw of disappointment. Dependability, combined with such artistry, is rare indeed. It proved a happy chance, for it enabled Milwaukee to hear her in two of the most widely different roles a dramatic soprano could be called upon for. Pathetic, passionate Aida, tender, sweet, pleading Amelia, there were moments when a less well schooled artist might have allowed personal mannerisms to obtrude, but not a gesture or tone was duplicated, her personality becomes engulfed in the characterization of the role she assumes. A singing actress who seems to have no equals. Lillian Eubank made a vocally effective and picturesque Ulrica; Myrna Sharlow a boyish page, and Constantin Nicoli, Arimondi and Dufrere supplied the bits of comedy and villainy we are accusomed to see, allotted to them, although this opera gave them more kindly opportunity for vocal display than many.

The real dramatic moments were carried by Raisa. Bonci is happy and truly golden in the first act Barcarolle and last act Romanza. His staccato tripped as light as down and crystal clear, but under heavy demands his voice clouds and loses its tonal beauty.

The Ballet, although short, was noticeable, as on the preceding night, for virility and originality. It is to be hoped an extra performance or so may be arranged later in the season to make up for the disappointments attending this engagement.

The public turned out well and in spite of odds against them the managements presented two extremely fine performances.

Principals, chorus, ballet, orchestra, mise-en-scene and all arrangements for the public were most satisfactory.

Milwaukee owes a note of thanks and loyal support to the Marion Andrews Bureau for the splendid carrying through in spite of obstacles and also to the opera association for their evident co-operation.

THE NEW YORK TRIO

A new chamber music organization, to be known as the New York Trio, will soon become a part of this city's musical activities. Its personnel is Clarence Adler, pianist; Scipione Guidi, violinist, and Cornelius Van Vliet, cellist.

The members, aside from being soloists of note, have all been identified with well-known ensemble organizations, Mr. Adler with the Hekking Trio, which had great success in Europe; Mr. Guidi, concert master of the New Symphony Orchestra of New York, whose chamber music work in London and Milan was acclaimed, and Mr. Van Vliet, solo cellist of the same orchestra, whose association with prominent ensembles has been widespread.

The New York Trio opens its season with the first of a series of concerts on Monday evening, December 1, at Aeolian Hall.

TORTURE IN BREATHING

By MAESTRO ALFREDO MARTINO

Translated by Joseph A. C. Pidala

Breathing has always been the fundamental basis of singing in the old Italian school. The study of singing should, then, begin with this element, which may be said to be the most important of all the things that go toward constituting the development of the voice.

The loss of many beautiful voices is attributed to faulty breathing, which always implies useless effort, and as a result vocal disturbances and illness of the phonetic apparatus, even for the student who is strongest and most richly endowed by nature with vocal gifts. Even he must cultivate his voice in the best manner so that he may not experience a premature decline in powers.

Correct breathing is a very essential function and, as stated before, the fundamental basis of good singing. Whatever the voice may be, it will never be so pleasing, and can never be employed artistically, if the breathing is wrong and the notes are attacked violently. Pains in the throat, weakness of voice, and painful fatigue of the muscles of the larynx are nothing but the result of bad breathing.

In order to correct this false method, one must undertake a study of breathing of a less painful manner, a study which must consist of the teaching as to how air is taken into the lungs and how its outlet is controlled. A teacher of singing who takes no account of these rules, and is not acquainted with the teaching of them, is like the doctor who does not know the laws of the human body.

Often I have had occasion to come in contact with teachers of singing, many of them my personal friends, who deem all advice concerning correct breathing almost useless. They believe that to teach how to breathe is a ridiculous and superfluous thing, because we breathe night and day almost without noticing the process. Still, the case cannot be dismissed so readily. The first thing a soldier is taught is to walk with the least effort; we often see people in the street who arouse laughter by the eccentricity in their walk, and still the process is the most natural in the world. To say "breathe naturally" is not clear enough; it is the same as to say "open your mouth and sing naturally." Then upon what is based their overpraised and so esteemed method of singing? Every one is able to breathe in that manner, just as every one is able to sing without a teacher's guide. To sing well it is necessary to breathe in accordance with the nature of the vocal work. If an energetic phrase must be held, this requires a greater expenditure of air than that required for some other work. In the greatest intensity a good pulmonary capacity is necessary, since one must waste more air and must be capable of holding the vocal muscles contracted without tremolos or leapy shakes.

Finally, it is necessary to regulate breathing to conform with the artistic effect that one wishes to obtain. First one must inhale the amount of air needed; second, exhale it according to the necessity. To slight these rules means a sure march toward the acquisition of bad habits in breathing, and, likewise, many other habits are acquired that will cost considerable pain to correct.

They will cost considerable pain because, candidly speaking, there are only a very few teachers who apply, in a right and logical manner, the art of singing, which consists of a rational system of teaching. Also, of all the principles of the physiology of the vocal apparatus, which should be observed as soon as the training of the voice is begun. It is not a very enlightening thing to nourish the student with fantastic and whimsical theories which possess no significance, such as "Push your voice up to the mask," "Let your lower lip drop," "Send all your voice upward, as if one were speaking about the floor above," "Draw it" (as if it were wine from a cask!). Nor is it very encouraging to use thousands of tricks, such as the stick between the teeth, and many other vague findings, which assist only in hopelessly ruining the voice. Thus singers are fashioned, to listen to whom is a painful experience to all who chance to hear them.

To the foregoing should be added the teachers who teach singing by imitation, basing their method exclusively upon their voice, scorning all scientific theories of singing. The reader must know that all voices differ from one another, and in such a method the only thing the student who imitates does is nothing more than to exaggerate the defects of his teacher.

By sending the breath in this or that manner without even knowing what he is doing, and, what is worse, without giving himself an account of what he is made to do, the student allows himself to be guided upon the edge of an abyss as a blind man would.

One who has a little common sense will understand how easy it is to tell the student, "This note you have produced in your throat; place it in the head." The student accustomed to produce voice in his throat does not know what method to use in order to place his voice in the head. The teacher, at this stage, tells him to do as he does. Thereupon the student imitates a voice which is not his own. In this manner there are cases in which the student loses all control of his voice only through nervous disturbances and nothing else—disturbances caused by the ignorance of a headstrong teacher who wants to make him perform that which he is unable and should not do.

With this I come to the end by saying to the student: "There is no better method for the development of the voice than nature's, which never errs and which is the basis of all the scientific principles which can be expressed in a few words:

"Science, nature, and art."

Correct breathing is the first condition imposed upon good singing; this is the most difficult secret to hit upon in the entire art of singing. It is not true that the teachers of the old school made their students sing from the diaphragm. It would be the same to say one sees with the mouth. The teachers of the old Italian school said that one who did not know how to breathe well could not sing well.

F. WIGHT NEUMANN ANNOUNCEMENTS

Serge Prokofieff, the sensational Russian composer-pianist, will give two recitals at Kimball Hall, under the direction of F. Wight Neumann, the first one taking place Sunday afternoon, October 26, at 3:30, and the second Tuesday evening, October 28, at 8:15. The programs for the two recitals will be as follows:

Fourth Sonata, C Minor.....Prokofieff
Allegro moderato. Andante. Finale.

Prelude

Etude No. 12 } .....Scriabin

The three very short pieces of Scriabin give an idea of the evolution of his genius. In the Prélude—we find much mysticism and meditation; in Désir, belonging to his later works—an exquisite refinement both in harmony and in feeling is apparent, while in the Etude, one of his earlier works, we find a strongly expressed mixture of dramatic and turbulent emotions.

Visions of Fugitifs (Ten piano pieces).....Prokofieff

These ten pieces are taken from the suite of twenty pieces called "Visions Fugitifs." They are inspired by the lines of Balmont, the most beloved of the modern Russian poets, in which he says, "In every fugitive moment, I see entire worlds sparkling with beauty and myriad rainbow colored lights."

Pictures at an Exposition.....Moussorgsky
Promenade—Bydlo—The Ballet of the Chickens in Their Shells—The Old Castle—Limoges.

Toccata .....Prokofieff

The Toccata of Prokofieff is a complicated piano piece, written from beginning to end in the same movement in the form of a sonata-allegro. The middle part of the allegro (the free fantasia) is developed by means of a combination of canonic counterpoint with the augmentation of the main theme.

Second Piano Recital Tuesday Evening, October 28, at 8:15 p. m.
Programme

Fifth French Suite, G Major.....Bach
Three Country Dances.....Beethoven-Seiss

Opera in German

Tomorrow evening there is to be undertaken the opening of a season of German opera given in the original at the Lexington theater in New York. Whether the municipal authorities or the populace will prevent the fulfillment of the plan remains to be seen.

When a similar undertaking was attempted some months ago soldiers and sailors backed up by the mayor prevented the consummating of the scheme. The same promoters who were responsible then are in charge now. It is probable that nothing will be done to interfere with the proposed season and that portion of the New York public which is pro-German in its sympathies and desirous of hearing German sung will be permitted to enjoy performances given by singers many of whom were so outspokenly in the American enemy class during the war that their services were immediately dispensed with in the opera and the concert world of this country. Our general spirit of leniency where such residents was concerned did not accomplish at that time their internment or their deportation, and therefore they now busy themselves even before peace is signed with the same propagandistic activities which they served during the war.

Whether such propaganda should be permitted, whether singing and teaching of German in this country is propaganda or not, whether permitting it weakens or strengthens our national well being and safety are questions which admit of much discussing and are affirmatively or negatively answered largely according to personal bias and belief. But the wretchedly bad taste displayed by such alien enemy musicians in thus flaunting in the face of the United States public their hatred of all that is American can but be evident to any one blessed with aught of fineness of sensibility and with appreciation of the fitness of things.

The Hun, however, has recently afforded the world only too ample proof that such fineness and such appreciation are not prominent elements in his makeup and therefore the acts of these resident representatives in New York probably should cause no surprise. They are running absolutely true to form. —Hubbard in the Sunday Tribune.

The American Syncopated Orchestra in the South

The American Syncopated Orchestra opens the bill. This orchestra consists of thirty negro musicians who play the latest hits according to their own version of syncopation. They have attained fame throughout the country and are considered the best orchestra of its kind in the world. They play under the leadership of George Edmund Dulf, a distinguished looking negro who knows music from A to Z. They scored big and many encores were demanded by the audience.—Dallas Daily Times Herald, Tuesday, October 7, 1919.

American Syncopated Orchestra and Singers gave a most interesting and entertaining program Sunday afternoon at the El Reno theater. This orchestra is a body of thirty colored musicians, eight of which are singers, with musical voices both in quality and range. These artists (for such they are) as vocalists and instrumentalists, are under the direction of George Edmund Dulf (formerly the leader of the Black Devils Band overseas, who were so highly complimented by the French Generals Foch and Matin and our own General Pershing at Brest.)

So versatile are these colored artists that they play and sing not only the music of their own race, but the popular classics, and the keen enjoyment they themselves get out of their own music making adds to the delight of the audience.

Besides the instrumental ensemble numbers were the spirituals and folk songs given by quartettes and double quartettes. The solo part in "Mammy o' Mine" was sung by J. Williams Coleman, who also gave the negro sermon. J. L. Lilard sang "Mammy," displaying a beautiful tenor quality, showing also unusual range and volume. The drummer, Archie Bell, could not be seen owing to the small stage, but came into prominence in his solo with his juggling of sticks. William Dover with his trombone was amusing and attracted attention.

The concert master, Clarence Lee, played with exquisite tone and good technique, bringing from his audience rounds of applause. Each and every member on the program received its encore, to which they responded graciously. On returning to El Reno this body of musicians will receive a hearty welcome from music lovers and all who enjoy a good artistic program.—El Reno (Oklahoma), Daily Democrat, Monday, October 6, 1919.

The opening number last night was styled Cook's Syncopated Orchestra. Well, any way you take it, Cook's Orchestra, nearly thirty musicians and the best voices I ever heard on any stage, are very much syncopated. I would have been well pleased with the Coliseum event had the curtain been lowered and the show called off after the first act. One of Cook's boys has the richest tenor voice I ever heard operate. The program said this bunch was from New York. They might have been in New York once, but there is too much to indicate that each singer has a real southern voice. There are coon songs, a religious song, burlesque and tuneful music that is inclined to upset one for all practical purposes. In addition to all this playing several of the boys are so full of music they juggle their banjos and violins and snare drum sticks in mid-air.—Dallas Daily Times Herald, Thursday, October 9, 1919.

In the south the American Syncopated Orchestra will probably prove the feature band of the five musical organizations giving their services at the fair. It is composed entirely of negroes with Will Marion Cook and George Edmund Dulf as directors. The repertoire of the band ranges from classic music to the jazz obtainable from instruments only by members of the negro race. Negro spirituals are also one of the features of the programs given daily at the Coliseum by the orchestra. Classic music of this organization always receives the wholesome appreciation of the audience, but the jazz and the negro spirituals bring the hearers to enthusiastic encores. George Dulf, one of the leaders of this orchestra, was the leader of the famous "Black Devils' Band" with the A. E. F., which played for Marshals Foch and Petain and for General Pershing. Dulf began his career as leader of the Primrose & West Minstrels.

An example of the act given by the orchestra may be obtained from one of the bills at the Coliseum. The afternoon performance yesterday was opened by the orchestra and singers in "Rain Song" by Cook. It was followed by a trombone solo, "Characteristic." The orchestra in a series of folklore songs of the negro race was accompanied by the singers of the company. The instruments gave "Arabian Nights." A solo and chorus in "Mammy o' Mine" followed. Other favorite songs of the chorus proved to be a negro sermon, "Exhortation," "It's Me, O Lord," "Swing Along," and a few religious melodies. The orchestra gave "Humoresque" to advantage, but only reached their full power in "Royal Garden Rag" and other jazz melodies.—Dallas Morning News, Wednesday, October 8, 1919,

The following is reprinted from the Bangor Daily Commercial of Saturday, October 4:

Chapman is always promising Bangor a magnificent new tenor, and he always makes his promises true. He has brought to Bangor in Ernest Davis a tenor who sang his way into admiration of the music lovers gathered to hear him. But Davis has done more than that. He has, no less with his personality than with his magnificent voice, won an enviable place in the hearts of Maine music devotees. Davis' reception on Friday night was expected by those who had heard him sing at rehearsal and who have had the pleasure of meeting him since his arrival two days ago. But rarely has Verdi's magnificent work been interpreted as it was interpreted by Ernest Davis on Friday evening. Temperament this tenor new to Bangor undoubtedly has—temperament and taste and training and talent far beyond the ordinary. In addition to that, there sounds in his voice the wholesome virility of the man. One is reminded, listening to Ernest Davis, of something akin to breadth and freedom, the music of the out of doors. His enunciation makes his singing a joy. His simplicity and sincerity are reflected in his voice. His encore numbers were beautifully rendered.

Lyell Barber Piano Recital

Comment of press:

Yesterday afternoon in Kimball Hall Lyell Barber appeared in piano recital. I was able to hear only the Beethoven Sonata, Opus 53, and while one selection of this nature and style cannot suffice to fix definitely the qualities and gifts of a player, yet it served to reveal many merits yesterday in the young musician's work. He has fleet, sure, clean fingers, strength which avoids the brutal yet can achieve a good climax, a tone that sings and is not without indications of coming color beauty, his pedaling is neat, and his musical feeling sane and just.—W. L. Hubbard, Chicago Tribune.

At Kimball Hall young Lyell Barber was heard playing modern French music with repose, understanding and imagination. In the Debussy "Cathedral," for instance, he caught admirably the spirit of majesty which the composer intended to convey, and in the Ravel "Play of the Waters" he was altogether reasonable. This means that Barber is already a well-balanced musician who gives every indication of going as far as his ambition may carry him.—Henriette Weber, Herald-Examiner.

Mr. Barber played the Handel Chaconne in F major excellently. The notes came out from under his fingers with the clarity demanded by the music of the classic masters, yet it was without any striving for the display of dexterity, but only to express the spirit of the music.—Karlton Hackett, Evening Post.

Lyell Barber, one of the group of young Chicago pianists, gave a recital at Kimball Hall yesterday afternoon of a kind to make it desirable to hear him again. Once in a while one hears a pianist who can create the impression that his fingers are guided by brains as well as routine. This was one of the times.—Edward C. Moore Chicago Journal.

Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata, Opus 53, in C major, the favorite of D'Albert, by itself is a big enough composition to test the powers of any concert pianist, and when Lyell Barber, who placed this sonata on his program at Kimball Hall yesterday afternoon in his recital, also added an interesting group of three modern French pieces by Faure, Debussy and Ravel, and ended with the Liszt "Venezia e Napoli" Tarantella, he undertook a big pianistic task. That he accomplished the work most creditably was made clear by a clean and refined performance of the Beethoven Sonata, by an imaginative rendition of "La Cathedrale Engloutie" (Debussy) and by a fanciful interpretation of "The Play of the Waters" (Ravel). Other numbers on the program were by Haydn, Chopin and Paderewski. —Maurice Rosenfeld, Chicago Daily News.

The new impresario firm of Miller, Resseguie & Tufts, which is on the way to becoming a boon to local artists, presented Lyell Barber, pianist, in recital at Kimball Hall yesterday and gave us a chance to prophesy good things for one of our citizens, contrary to the old proverb. Mr. Barber is a young man who plays the piano because he feels that playing the piano is his real profession. There is a quiet assurance in everything he does, an assurance that never becomes bravado nor mannerism but is always tempered by modesty and refinement.—Chicago American, Herman Devries.

Eddy-Frysinger

One of the interesting features of the recital at the Augustana College Chapel by Clarence Eddy, the famous organist, was the first public rendition of "A Parting of Day," written by J. Frank Frysinger, head of the organ department of the Augustana Conservatory of Music. The new composition is now in press by a large publishing concern in New York. The selection was written especially for Mr. Eddy by Mr. Frysinger, who has gained a nation-wide reputation as a composer.—Davenport (Iowa) Daily Times.

PAUL W. MALLORY

Paul W. Mallory, a tenor of rare talents and ability, has recently been engaged as solo successor to Warren Proctor at the First Christian Science Church. On his first Sunday Mr. Mallory sang "The Lord Is My Light," that most effective number of Oley Speaks, and the following week sang "The Ransomed of the Lord" (MacDermid) with the warmth and authority of the initiated in the interpretation of church music. An aria from "Elijah" was the selection for the third Sunday, showing that this artist possesses not only the ability to sing but breadth of repertoire as well.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND IN MILWAUKEE

Lieut. John Philip Sousa and his band gave four concerts under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus in the Auditorium afternoon and evening of October 18 and 19. Many were turned away. The concerts were inspired and inspiring.

Lieutenant Sousa has a band that can play the best things and satisfy and the lighter with appeal. It is a matter for conjecture whether the audiences who gather to hear this now regular institution realize just how good it is or whether they are here to satisfy curiosity and hear the original of the talking machine records they own.

The many years he has been in the business have taught John Philip Sousa how to reach the people. Novelties—and they are always on his programs. Some of it is given only to the ear. He does some weird things in instrumental color without bringing in any garden or kitchen implements to engage the eye. The ears are so busy taking it all in and the rhythms are so accented all the elemental emotions are busy. For instance, before we take up the programs we will take a novelty number he is using this season. He entitles it "A Mixture: Showing Off Before Company." It takes thirty minutes to play, but it is so novel that those who might wail over a sonata or symphony movement of twenty minutes never realize the time passing and also that they have taken a great many lessons in tone color. Played at the opening of the second part of the program, we first hear a brass choir off stage, then the harpist comes on alone and plays a solo and variations ("Annie Laurie"); enter clarinets to front of stage and play Delibes' "Pizzicati," take their seats and a quartet of tubas come on to center and play "Drinking," give place to flutes and piccolos, who in turn make way for trombones, followed by a straight solo trumpet, and another quartet of horns play "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," and a euphonium solo gives place to cornets, who brought the house down with "Hail, Hail." Saxophone solo, assisted by choir of saxophones, gives "Wild Women." A mixed quintet—cornets, oboe, clarinet and tambourine—do a little jazzy stunt; then the clowns of the orchestra, the bassoons, come on, and in this case a clever bit of acting made them a big hit. A xylophone solo, and as the different choirs have seated themselves they take up the ensemble work, so the color effect of instruments is well illustrated, and as finale Sousa enters to take up the baton for "Sempre Fidelis." Hardly any one hearing this once but will recognize the difference between the tuba bass and bassoon tone when they hear it, as they now will realize the woodwinds have bass as well as treble. The saxophone and trombone will have a new meaning other than jazz slides.

Another introduction was his new memorial march, "The Golden Star," which is more intense than anything in the march line ever given out by the march king. It is very much of a tone picture, with an introspective with song motif woven through the bombardment of heavy ensemble. The muffled bugles play heart-reaching taps, while this same little memory strain breathes over all of it. There is a big feeling and a tender, tearful feeling all in one. My hearing may not be sufficient to pass judgment, as memory may play false, but it seems to be the best thing of its kind Sousa has done, and it will grow, because it has a big emotional pull.

The soloists from the band include Mr. H. Berne Henton, saxophone, who made the instrument do some work that converted the writer, as there has never been any appreciation of its real musical value before. Mr. Frank Simon, cornetist, who plays with feeling and pleasant reserve in pyrotechnics, and Mr. Joseph Green, xylophone, whose solo number Sunday afternoon, intermezzo from "Jewels of the Madonna," was truly beautiful.

Miss Mary Baker, soprano, and Miss Florence Hardman, violinist, add variety and pleasure with their numbers. The programs for the four performances included: Overtures, "Mignon" (Thomas) and "Bartered Bride" (Smetana); suites, "Moorish" (Chapi), "American Maid," "Last Days of Pompeii," "Dwellers of the Western World" and "Impressions at the Movies" (Sousa); rhapsodies, "The Southern" (Hosmer), "American Indian" (Preston Ware Orem); novelties and miscellaneous numbers, "Wood Nymphs" (Coates), "The Caravan" (Hume), "Egyptian Dance" (Friml), "Gypsy Caprice" (Massenet), "Kamennoi Ostrow" (Rubinstein), "The Two Doves" (Messager), valse lente "Kisses" (Zamecuik), and "The Bohemians" (Hume). Sousa's marches, including the new wedding march, were programmed and used as encores, and were greeted vociferously, sometimes necessitating a second encore. Those played were: "Stars and Stripes Forever," "Meow," "Bride-Elect," "El Capitan," "Solid Men to the Front," "U. S. Field Artillery," "Sabers and Spurs," "Ireland Forever," "King Cotton," "Manhattan Beach," "Washington Post," "Invincible Eagle," "Lassus," and "Liberty Loan" and an arrangement of "Smiles," with combination of Rubinstein's "Spring Song" and Tosti's "Good-by," that made interesting musical counterpoint and plenty of real laughs.

Miss Baker also sang two of Lieutenant Sousa's compositions—"In Flanders Fields" and an encore march song, "Our Boys Are Home Again." Another thing this band can do is play an accompaniment with beautiful orchestral effect. There were times when it seemed like a single pipe organ, so smooth was the unison and subjugation of choirs. Here's to Sousa's Band, a real American institution; long may it live.

THEODORA STURKOW-RYDER

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, the well-known pianist, who will play with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra this winter, has written a trio, representing the North, South, East and West Winds, for soprano and baritone, with harp accompaniment. This cycle was written especially for and dedicated to Charlotte Bergh, soprano; Tracy Jay Kingman, baritone, and Dorothy Bell, harpist. These artists will use this cycle of song at a concert that they will give at Grant Hall, Kingston, Ontario, Canada, under the auspices of the Canadian Navy League, the first week in November, and at twenty other concerts in the Dominion.

MISS LUCILE LAWRENCE, A PUPIL OF LOUIS SIMMIONS, CAPTIVATES AUDIENCE

An audience which filled the large auditorium of the West Presbyterian Church at Bridgeton, N. J., was captivated by Miss Lucile Lawrence, on account of her great musical ability and charming personality. That Miss Lawrence captured her audience was shown by the spontaneous, hearty applause, but even more so by that intangible but very real thing called "atmosphere." One could feel the keen, highly appreciative interest of the large audience. Miss Lawrence has a fine soprano voice, which seems to have all the to-be-desired qualities. Her voice is remarkable for its sweetness and heart quality, as well as for brilliancy and volume. In fact, Bridgeton has seldom if ever had a vocalist even in the same class with Miss Lawrence, who ranks with the more brilliant of our galaxy of American stars. With a voice of quality, a good technic and an appealing personality, it is no wonder Miss Lawrence held her audience as if in her hand.

Serge Prokofieff, Metropolitan Quartet

Temporary indisposition prevented the writer from attending the recital of Serge Prokofieff at Aeolian Hall and the concert of the Metropolitan Quartet consisting of Morgan Kingston, substituting for Charles Hackett, Thomas Chalmers, substituting for Giuseppe De Luca, Carolina Lazzari and Frances Alda.

This concert was given at the Hippodrome on Sunday evening, October 12, and Mr. Prokofieff's recital in the afternoon, both being great successes.

It must have been exhilarating to the recitalist to see his hall so well garnished by a large audience on the evening of October 13. He was heard in the Norwegian group, consisting of Sinding, Victor Bendix, Lange-Muller and Grieg. Also in the French group of "Le Voyageur" (Godard), "L'Etoile du Matin" (Weckerlin), "La Vie Anterieure" (Duparc), "La Pluie" (Georges), and "Le Plongeur" (Widor). Mr. Williams disclosed a sympathetic baritonic voice, agreeable in the middle register. His falsettos, at times resembling the singing in the mezzo voce, were commendable for effective results. He sang with taste and exhibited unusual intelligence in the various moods of the programmed songs. The opening of the recital consisted of Jepensier Staneglio-getti" from "Orfeo," by Haydn, followed with dance song by Handel, "Have You Seen but a White Lily Grow" (time of James I.) and "Preghierra" (Durante). The last group comprised "In Memoriam" (Rhea Silberta, otherwise featured as "Yahrzeit"), "The Little Fisherman" (Eastwood Lane), "Rose Dark the Solemn Sunset" (H. N. Redman), and "The Wild Ride" (Bryceson Treharne). The audience redemanded the Norwegian song by Lange-Muller and "La Plerie," by Georges. Both were encored. Elmer Zoller was capital at the piano.

The Society of American Singers Opens With "Boccaccio"

There is a plausible reason why good operettas are not written just now. The high cost of living plus the complicated problems of the day are liable to discourage the greatest of optimists. The gay, fascinating music of the past is a consolation for the present struggling days. Franz Von Suppe's music, "Boccaccio," is old enough but still pleasing to the ears. The Society of American Singers opened its season with a revival of Suppe's comic opera on the evening of October 13. American audiences crave for comic operas in English. The large audience enjoyed the comedy as well as the old tunes. Many of them were redemanded. It is premature to pass a final judgment upon the question whether this year's contingent is superior to that of the last season. The cast in "Boccaccio" enlisted practically the same artists who were on the board last year in the various presentations.

Ruth Miller is developing into a coloratura soprano and by her singing of the Waltz (third act), she gives promise of becoming an excellent singer. The Serenade was also charmingly done. She was more at home when singing in Italian. She acted gracefully and was delightful to the eyes. Cora Tracy, who enacted Boccaccio, sang well but in action she was far from impersonating the poet and the novelist. William Danforth always causes laughter and so he did in his impersonation of Lambertuccio. In the cast Craig Campbell, Ralph Brainard, Frank Moulan, and several others. No less a factor was John McGhie at the baton. He extracted the old melodies with knowledge and with the most effective results. There can be no mishap either in the chorus or in the cast when this conductor is at the desk. Of the chorus, scenery and other details I shall speak on other occasions.

Exit Jadlowker, Enter John O'Sullivan

Herman Jadlowker, now singing at the Berlin Royal Opera House, was engaged by Maestro Cleofonte Campanini as a substitute, if possible, to the great Lucien Muratore. As America has not yet sent its ambassador to Germany, the government of the latter country refuses the Russian tenor a passport. Mr. Campanini, finding himself between the hammer and the anvil, recurred—not ill-advised—again to the brilliant tenor, John O'Sullivan, whose last year's appearances at the Auditorium and Lexington Theaters left a fine impression. The Irish-French tenor arrived on the steamer France in splendid state of health. Previous to his appearances with the Chicago Opera Association he will fulfill some concert engagements, and that at Carnegie Hall will take place in November. He is booked for some thirty concerts. We welcome the return of a tenor much appreciated in "William Tell," "Monna Vanna" and other French roles.

Olga Carrara in Recital February 10

One of the unusual recitals will be that of Olga Carrara, the lyric-dramatic soprano, whose appearances at the Stadium concerts last summer created a furor.

The Music League of America, affiliated with the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, announces a song recital at Aeolian Hall for Tuesday evening, February 10, 1920.

Mme. Carrara, in spite of her Italian nativity, believes in American music, consequently she will feature some of the worthiest songs by our native writers. Among the American songs she expects to feature "Joy" (Rihm), "Absence" (Martin), "The Bird of Wilderness" (Horsman), and one by Fay Foster. In programming her offerings one will find an Italian group followed by one French group and some Scandinavian songs. Previous to her appearance at Aeolian Hall she will be presented in some other important musical events.

Frederick Gunster in Recital

If Nature, at times, has no mercy on singing throats, the music lovers themselves are not exempted from sudden temperature changes. On the evening of Mr. Gunster's recital a torrential rain was bestowed by Nature, but the many thousands of admirers found it no inconvenience. Aeolian Hall was packed to its limits on the evening of October 16, not only with music lovers but also with professionals. The popularity of a singer is known by the box office, and such is the case with this American tenor. We have not heard him in New York for months because Mr. Gunster gave his efforts for the winning of the war and his return was a welcome factor to us.

I came while he was singing "Tes yeux," by Rabey. What makes this singer agreeable and interesting are his interpretative powers. Feeling, expression and the meaning of a song are to Mr. Gunster assets which few recitalists possess. He tempers his voice, he controls it and employs it according to the requirements of the composition. I prefer him in the lyrical compositions because his is a genuine lyric timbre. The "Faltering Dusk" by Walter A. Kramer was perhaps the worthiest of the native compositions. In it Mr. Gunster threw himself with abandon and carried the rendition to exquisite effects. Very enjoyable was the spiritual, "Standin' in de Need o' Prayer," by William Reddick, because the tenor brought out the characteristics of the southern negro. The Grieg group disclosed his artistry, especially in the "Swan."

Warm applause compelled two encores, "Values," by Frederick Vanderpool, a brief but very effective dramatic composition, and "Smilin' Thru," by Arthur Penn. He was in good voice and showed very little of the fatigue which one might expect after his strenuous work in the alleviation of war suffering. The evening was opened with Cesar Franck's "Paris Angelicus" and followed by "Lamento" (Duparc) and "Madrigal" by Fourdrain. The second group was a Grieg cycle and the third comprised "Serenade" by Oley Speaks. "The Dream" (Horsman), "Fragments" (H. T. Burleigh) and two dedicated songs by Marshall Bartholomew. The closing group enlisted "Little Wheel A-Turnin' in My Heart" and a "Nipponese Sword Song" by Fay Foster. Francis Moore gave capital support at the piano. J. de V.

The music season is yet asleep. There seems to be little moving, save a band parade up and down the streets. The studios and music schools evidently are at work, but no public offerings have been prominent as yet this fall. This is due to the Fall Exposition, which usually takes all attention. It closed this week. Now the theatrical, musical and public attractions can hope to get an inning. The music courses are completely overshadowed by the one big course—the Municipal Series. When a city offers ten good attractions for from 10 cents to 50 cents—50 cents the highest—per number, with an idea of only paying expenses, no profit, no other managerial situation could possibly arise and compete. It is evident that the city management does not anticipate a profit. No manager could hope to live and offer Schumann-Heink, Chicago Grand Opera Sextet, San Carlos Opera Company, Oscar Seagle, the Proctor Concert Company, Isadore Duncan Dancers, Mitzi Hajos, with Irvin Cobb and Mayor Ole Hanson, lecturers, at 10 cents per, and one other to be announced. True, you have to buy a season ticket for the ten numbers and spend $1 only. You can't spend more than $5. What is the result? All competitors fall into oblivion. It is a grand thing for the public. It spells death to competition, for Wichita can scarcely or will scarcely patronize two large courses, unless both would be offered at equally low and attractive prices. The city management is dominating thereby the "course" situation. The Knights of Columbus have contracted for a five-number course, and it will no doubt receive encouragement, as it should, but the bulk of the patronage will go to the Municipal Series, naturally. The Knights of Columbus are to be commended, nevertheless.

The local managers—the Armitages, Lucius Ades and the high school management, are withholding public activity. If the city keeps it up, and there appears to be no reason why they should not, it will afford fine music for many who otherwise could not afford it. The Forum, to date, is practically sold out.

Little other music is attracting attention. The various clubs are just starting; the various schools and studios have good lists, but the most of the public work has been set aside until the Fall Exposition ended. Wichita will have its regular interesting season. It is the musical center of the state today, but is always slow in starting in the fall.

L. W. GLOVER

Leonard Wood Glover, director of the department of music, Kansas City, Kan., high school, is also tenor soloist and director of music at the First Congregational Church, Kansas City, Kan. Mr. Glover's responsibilities as a church singer are manifold, inasmuch as he not only sings in the solo quartet, but directs a chorus choir and a church and Sunday school orchestra.

MUSIC IN NEW YORK

Aurore La Croix Plays Again

Notwithstanding that we are at the inception of a season which promises to be a fertile one for the reviewer and an exhaustive one for habitues of recitals, the manipulators of the keyboard exceed, already, the number of other musical events.

This was the second important piano recital in a day. Not unlike the vocalists, the pianist of the metropolis can be divided into three classes: First—The pedagogue who plays his annual recital merely for the sake of increasing his class. This exhibitor often shows no abilities beyond that of technic, therefore one is thankful as often for his just confinement to the precincts of his studio or the school he is connected with. Second—The welcome return of the favorites. Third—The debutants who aspire to the legitimate recital room in preference to the weary teaching. Aurore La Croix made her debut last season and her playing deserved more than passing attention. Her three recitals justified her return of October 17. In entering Aeolian Hall I noticed many professionals. This in itself is a tribute to a young pianist. But the hall was well filled, another proof of popularity. A certain pianist is being heralded as an exceptional player. I see him announced in several appearances as soloist with our New York orchestral bodies. He hails from Poland. The comely La Croix comes from some Massachusetts town and studied at Boston, a pure American product, and I can vouch that the attractive American girl would justify more her presence as soloist with our orchestras than the heralded Pole becaues beyond Debussy and Albenz the latter cannot go. What is the matter with our booking system? Miss La Croix's technic has developed to the extent where only occasional slips can be noticed during her playing. But these slips are insignificant. Beyond a trifle too heavy touch, her playing of Chopin's Scherzo, Op. 31, was splendidly done. Keen musicianship, a highly musical interpretation of the French Pole, the superb effects drawn out of her instrument, all these were the characteristics of a player whose aim is to play for art's sake. The "Mazurka," Op. 17, No. 4, showed the limpid and clear tone emanating from a delicate, graceful technic. There is dash, brilliancy and vigor in this pianist. Soul and temperament are not to be acquired through studies, they must be inherent. Miss La Croix has them. The pianist was not ashamed to feature our own genius, MacDowell. He was given an honorable place on the program, viz., "The Eagle of Salamanders," "March Wind" and Edward Royce was not neglected when she played his "Set of Eight." Cyril Scott was on the program with "The Garden of Soul Sympathy," "Prelude" by Debussy, besides the first number. "Variations and Fugue" on a theme of Haendel by Brahms were offerings to prove versatility. In the Chopin group we heard also "Prelude," Op. 45; "Prelude," Op. 28, No. 18, and "Nocturne," Op. 15, No. 1. They were all exquisitely played. The evening was concluded with Rubinstein's "Polonaise," not forgetting many encores.

Magdeleine Brard in Recital

The little damsel of fifteen years of age came back to Aeolian Hall on the afternoon of October 17.

A fair audience came to greet the prodigy of the keyboard, but she deserved a larger audience if we are to consider the high auspices under which she was appearing.

Notwithstanding her tender age, the winner of the first prize at the National Conservatory of Paris excels in technic many an adult player.

She possesses long hands which are employed in a manner to arouse wonderment.

She knows no obstacles in the production of the cadenzas. They come out with precision and accuracy.

Her tone is limpid, clear and musical. Her technic is facile, somewhat heavy at times, but often graceful and dazzling.

She is yet too young to perceive the meaning of a composition. Mature in most things, she has not reached the point where she could combine her marvelous technic with a comprehensible interpretation. Prodigies as a rule give great satisfaction to a certain age, especially in the extraordinary facility of employing an instrument.

At present Mademoiselle Brard is an exceptional pianist, if we consider her age, and for the sake of musical arts one hopes that this little French girl with her present qualities will become a musician and an ideal interpreter of the composers whom she presents in her exhibitions at the keyboard.

She was heard in the Theme and Variations by Glazounow and Impromptu, Opus 36, by Chopin and demonstrated to some extent the intentions of the composers. The balance of her program consisted of:

Etude, Opus 2, by Chopin; Deux Preludes, G minor, by Chopin; Ballade, Opus 23, by Chopin; Ballet "Alceste," by Gluck-Saint-Saens; Sospiro, by Liszt, and Eleventh Rhapsodie, by Liszt.

Tamaki Miura Returns from South American Tour

The quaint Japanese prima donna returned to New York from Valparaiso, South America, after a successful tour with the Braccale Opera Company. She expressed her delight when reaching port on the steamer Santa Ana Saturday, October 18. She will join, shortly, the Chicago Opera Association.

Thelma Given gave a violin recital at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, October 18.

Minnie Hauk, Blinded, Asks for Help

The famous American singer is totally blind, according to a letter written by herself from Lucerne, Switzerland. She asked our consular representatives in the Swiss republic to come to her rescue. Financial difficulties should be overcome if some prominent philanthropist would take into his hands the fate of one of the greatest American singers.

Edmond Warnery With the Chicago Opera

(From Our Correspondent)

Cannes, France, September 17.

Chicago will again welcome Edmond Warnery, who will be remembered as a former member of Mr. Campanini's French forces. He is to appear again, beginning November 18, at the Auditorium Theater, in the same parts in which he excelled. He appeared in our fashionable town concerts and in opera, meeting with success, especially in "Le Maitre de Chapelle."

Mlle. Vernet's pupils are making great strides. Among them the eleven-year-old violinist, Albert Lientier, promises to become an excellent violinist. Mlle. Vernet will open her third season of violin pedagogy on October 1, with a greater number of pupils.

Maitre Carlo del Grande will reopen his studios on October 1.

PASSING COMMENT

No young man ever lived who had not a chance, and a splendid chance, too, if he was ever employed at all. The young man who never had a chance is the same young man who has been canvassed over and over again by his superiors and found destitute of the necessary qualifications.

A basketful of bonds is the heaviest basket a young man ever had to carry. I would almost as soon leave a young man a curse as burden him with the almighty dollar.

I attribute most of my success in life to the fact that trouble runs off my back like water from a duck.

At first they own the money; later in life the money owns them.

It is not from the sons of the millionaire or the noble that the world receives its teachers, its martyrs, its inventors, its statesmen, its poets, or even its men of affairs. It is from the cottage of the poor that all these spring.

CHARLES M. COURBOIN

Charles M. Courboin, the famous Belgian organist, has moved to Philadelphia and taken up his work as guest soloist for the evening recitals at the great Wanamaker Auditorium, where he plays the largest organ in the world. His first recital on October 2 was attended by five thousand persons and the second by seven thousand. The success of this great series is already assured. Early in the new year the new organ in the New York Auditorium will be opened, and he will play there also as guest soloist.

Last March Mr. Courboin appeared in the Wanamaker Auditorium in Philadelphia with the Philadelphia Orchestra, led by Leopold Stokowski. On this occasion was given the first performance in this country of Charles M. Widor's famous "Sixth Symphony," for full orchestra and organ. This fall Mr. Courboin received a personal letter from M. Widor as follows:

"I received in the country where I am finishing up the fourth act of my opera, 'Nerto,' your beautiful program of the Wanamaker Auditorium, and I am doubly thankful to you for your performance first and then for the lovely thought of sending me the program. It is the second time that you were thoughtful enough to let me know of your very flattering propaganda, because I have received a cablegram from you which I have not answered, not having the address. This was several months ago.

"Give me your address in America so that I can send you my 'Sinfonia Sacra" for organ and small orchestra and also the 'Salvum Fac' for organ, trumpets, trombone, and drums. I return to Paris September 25.

"To you very thankfully,

"WIDOR."

LEILA LOWE PEARSON

Leila Lowe Pearson has reurned to the Auditorium Conservatory and to her studio in Rogers Park, where she is welcoming a large fall class. During August she was filling a Chautauqua engagement in the South. The following is quoted from a press comment received at Monteagle, Tenn., in August:

"At night in the Auditorium the regular week-end concert brought to the assembly Mrs. Leila Lowe Pearson, violinist. Mrs. Pearson is well known in Nashville, where she received her first musical training. She is now recognized as one of the leading artists on the Chautauqua platform, and she captivated the audience by the easy and brilliant way in which she rendered her solos. She responded to several encores."

ERIE, PA.

For the first time in Erie's musical annals, grand opera crowded a theater and turned hundreds away. Mrs. McCoy, manager of the Artists' Course, said that she could have filled the house twice, judging from the number who stormed her for tickets long after the house had been sold out for the performance of "L'Oracolo" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" by the Scotti Opera Company on Monday evening, October 13, at the Park Theater. The gallery (which was unreserved) was packed, people having stood in line for hours to get in, and standing room was at a premium. So much for the financial success of the event. A more finished performance and a better balanced cast has never been seen by the writer (even in New York or Chicago) and except for the difference in size of chorus and orchestra, and detail in stage setting, the operas were presented in a manner fully equal to the best traditions of the Metropolitan or the Auditorium. Of course, Scotti's thrilling interpretation of "Chim Fang" was the dominating feature of the evening, but Florence Easton's superb vocalism as "Ah Foe" and the resonant basso of Charles Gallagher as "Win Shee" came in for much favorable comment. In the Mascagni Opera, Frances Peralta swept everything before her by her superb acting and glorious singing of "Santuzza." Here is a young artist worthy of name. Francis Maclennan and Milo Picco in the leading male roles were heard to splendid advantage, while Mary Kent as "Mamma Lucia" and Jeanne Gordon as "Lola" are two young singers who gave splendid interpretations, both vocally and histrionically. Especially noteworthy was the work of Mary Kent in both operas (she sang the "Nurse" in "L'Oracolo"). There was something very sincere and individual in her characterizations, and her future work will be watched with interest. The orchestra, under Carlo Peroni, was a sheer joy, remarkably well balanced for so small a number of players—about twenty-five. All in all, this performance of the Scotti Opera Company will go down as the biggest musical event in the history of Erie, and the finest operatic evening ever experienced in this city.

The next event on Mrs. McCoy's Course will be a song recital by Anna Case, the popular Metropolitan soprano, who will be heard here at the Park Theater on the evening of November 3.

The Community House will open on Monday evening, October 27, giving the first of a series of five performances of "Pinafore" with the following cast:

Josephine	Mary Quinn
Buttercup	Mrs. Palen
The Admiral	Wilson Bushnell
Captain Corcoran	Roy Blanchard
Ralph Rackstraw	Marper Hurlburd
Dick Deadeye	William Bond
The Boatswain	John Kuebler
Hebe	Audrey Brown

For the week of November 10 Anatole France's "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife" will be given with Rachel Davis, Marie Dickey, James Flynn, Harold Titus, Albert Dowling, Harry Schwartz and Robert Boyd in the cast.

WORCESTER, MASS.

All-American Festival—The Sixty-First Annual Event Devoted Exclusively to American Compositions Presented by American Artists

Reviewed by LESTER S. BUTLER

The Sixty-First Musical Festival, held at Worcester, Mass., October 6 to 10, inclusive, was made famous by being "All-American" in program and program givers.

The first concert, Wednesday night, October 2, preceded, as usual, by public rehearsals Monday night, September 30;

EMMA ROBERTS
Contralto

Tuesday morning and night, October 1, was devoted to the production of "Judith," lyric drama in three acts, by George W. Chadwick, born at Lowell, Mass., November 13, 1854.

The soloists were: Judith, Louise Homer; Achoir and Sentinel, George Hamlin; Holofernes, Reinald Werrenrath; Ozias, Edgar Schofield. To these were added the Festival Chorus, Philadelphia Orchestra, and Conductor Dr. Arthur Mees.

"Judith" was written for the Festival of 1901, where it was first performed. Walter M. Carpenter says: "Certain details of the work strongly suggest opera. . . . Care has been taken to characterize the two leading persons of the drama by appropriately suggestive melody—Judith's airs are graceful, resolute or even vindictive. Holofernes is gruff, rude or brutal when he speaks."

The present reviewer was unable to hear the accents of brutality when Warrenrath sang. The tone was rather of suave beauty and polish than gruff and rude. Did the singer misconceive his role?

Homer, too, did not impress this hearer with being murderous or vindictive enough to decapitate a man and carry home his head in a bag under her mantle; in other words, the "graceful airs" seemed always present, and one listened and wondered why!

Hamlin had little to do, but did that little well. His voice improves, like wine, with years.

Mr. Schofield, as Ozias, showed himself to be a talented and conscientious singer. The chorus and orchestra, however, were of sterner mode and voiced their parts with vigor and virility, as such works should be.

Mr. Chadwick was honored by a rising audience that filled Mechanics' Hall when he appeared.

The program of the second concert, Thursday afternoon, October 9, was:

Tone-Poem, Samson*.....Goldmark
Symphony No. II—New England—in B Flat Minor, Op. 33*.....Kelley
Lento—Allegro appassionato
Andante pastorale
Lento
Allegro con fuoco
"Urbs Sion Aurea" from Hora Novissima.....Parker
George Hamlin
Four Character Pieces after the Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyam*.....Foote

*First Festival performance.

And the least interesting, to this hearer, was the Goldmark number. Hamlin was satisfying, but has been heard with greater appeal. The work did not seem to rouse him to such levels of singing as the writer has known him to attain. Perhaps another aria would better have suited his mood.

The symphony and four character pieces displayed the orchestras under the baton of Thaddeus Rich, associate conductor of the Festival. Mr. Rich is a violinist of exceptional attainment, holding, I believe, a concert master's chair in the Philadelphia Orchestra. As a soloist he delights his hearers, and the audiences received him with pronounced favor during the concerts being reviewed.

Mr. Kelly was applauded after the symphony.

The third concert, Thursday evening, October 9, was devoted to the second performance here of the "Ode to Music," by Henry Hadley, with the text by Dr. Henry Van Dyke. Soprano, Mabel Garrison; contralto, Emma Roberts; tenor, Lambert Murphy; bass, Milton C. Snyder; the Festival Chorus, Children's Chorus, orchestra and organ; Walter W. Farmer, organist.

The Children's Chorus was composed of pupils from Grades VII and VIII of the Sever Street School and was prepared under the direction of Miss A. Louise Jones.

This reviewer will refrain from scrutinizing the efforts of individuals comprising the quartet. The quartet ensemble was of exquisite workmanship, the chorus sang well, and the male choir, though fewer in numbers, surpassed some years in quality and effective effort.

The children, as usual, under Charles J. Rice, music director of public schools, added much by their clear, sweet singing.

A second hearing of the "Ode" gives one the impression that it has "come to stay" among choral works. Its beauty becomes clearer, its harmonies more purposeful, its unity less remote. The work "wears well," which speaks well for the work.

Mr. Hadley, who was present, was vigorously applauded during the performance.

HENRY HADLEY
Composer of "Ode to Music"

The fourth concert, Friday afternoon, October 10, had the following program:

Prelude to Act 3, Natoma*.....Herbert
Concerto No. 2 in D minor.....MacDowell Larghetto calmato—Poco piu mosso e con passione
Presto giocoso
Largo—Molto Allegro
Frances Nash
Symphonic Legend*.....Schelling
The Scalp Dance* (Northern Indian).....Loomis
The Looking Glass* (Eastern Ancestors).....Damrosch
I Stood on de Ribber ob Jerdon* (Southern Negro).....Burleigh
Dawn in the Desert* (Western Country).....Ross
Emma Roberts
Tam O'Shanter* (Ballad for Orchestra).....Chadwick

*First Festival performance.

The orchestral numbers were presented conventionally. The songs were interesting and artistically presented.

The Concerto, Miss Nash interpreter, was played well. It would appear that a school of performance is coming that attracts attention to the personal movements of the performer, at least such an idea was aroused by certain undulatory swayings with which the rendition of the Concerto was accompanied. This reviewer hopes that the "Old Style" of dignified position at the piano, when performing in public, will not be replaced by any less worthy attitude.

SYBIL COMER, Soprano
Management Louise Quealy, Cable Building WABASH 1853 CHICAGO

The fifth concert, Friday, October 10, closed the sixty-first festival. Program:

American Fantasie*.....Herbert
Graduale from Mass in E Flat*.....Beach
Lambert Murphy Light, My Light*
The Day Is No More*
Don't Ceäre*
.....Carpenter
Louise Homer
Indian Suite, Op. 48.....MacDowell
Dirgelike, mournfully
Swift and light
A California Idyl*.....Kelley
Mabel Garrison
Negro Rhapsody for Orchestra and Piano.....Powell
John Powell
Three American Dances*.....Gilbert To Russia*
Selections from Mother Goose*
..... Homer
Louise Homer
"Oh, Woo a Woman," from the Opera Cyrano
..... Damrosch
Mabel Garrison
Peace with a Sword*.....Daniels
Chorus and Orchestra

*First Festival performance.

All of the music forces rallied and made the evening a memorable one.

The Negro Rhapsody, played by the composer, is full of melody and rhythm, and Mr. Powell was recalled at its conclusion.

Each soloist received recalls, and the audience was released, not to say relieved, at 11:15.

That the All-American Festival was a real success and worthy of praise goes without saying.

Other organizations may well follow this Festival management by giving All-American programs.

MARIE SIDENIUS ZENDT

Marie Sidenius Zendt, the well-known soprano, is now in New York, singing records, and several recitals and musicales. She will leave the latter part of November for the coast, where she has been engaged to sing with the Amphion Society of singers at Seattle, Wash. Her New York address is 206 West Eighty-sixth street, Apartment 6-E.

A tribute to Marie Sidenius Zendt is contained in a small pamphlet that the Tindale Cabinet Company has sent out as follows:

"Marie Sidenius Zendt is one of the most conspicuous among Chicago artists that are appearing before the public today. Her musical work embraces oratorio, opera and recital, for all of which she has a voice equipment and a presence that is a delight to her audiences.

"This artist has appeared with success throughout the country as soloist in "The Messiah" and other standard oratorios. Her concert engagements have included Chicago Apollo Club, Mendelssohn Club, Swedish Choral Club, Chicago Auditorium, South Shore Country Club, Chicago Athletic Club, Amateur Musical Club, Arche Club, and Tuesday Art and Travel Club.

"Marie Zendt is often spoken of by her countrymen as "The Swedish Nightingale," for she comes of a race that gave to the world Jennie Lind."

Jones—Frances Pelton-Jones will give a Harpsichord Recital Tuesday, November 4, at 11 a. m., in Ziegfeld Theater. This will be the first appearance of Madame Pelton-Jones in Chicago.

Simmions—Miss Hertha Harmon, soprano, and artist pupil of Mr. Louis Simmions, sang at the monthly meeting of the Council of Jewish Women held October 23 at Temple Beth-El, 76th street and 5th avenue, New York. Miss Harmon interpreted "Eili, Eili," by Kurt Schindler, and "Rachel," by Mana-Zucca.

Editorial

PASSING COMMENT

The giving of opera in German at the Lexington Theater in New York the past week has been attended by scenes of rioting and general disorder.

While we do not indorse violence in the suppression of this venture, we do reiterate the opinion that it should never have been undertaken at this time.

To present opera in German at the present moment is properly considered as an affront to Americanism, and it will inevitably be the constant cause of disorders.

Peace with Germany is not yet signed, and the wounds of war are still too fresh to permit true-hearted Americans to view with quietness any effort to exploit the German language or German propaganda in this country.

In Chicago German plays are being given regularly at the Bush Temple Theater, and no one seems to make any definite protest.

Kreisler, an Austrian, and an officer in the Austrian army during the early years of the war, who was prevented from appearing on our concert stages during the period of the war, is announced for a recital at the Auditorium next Sunday afternoon.

This, in our opinion, is the height of bad taste, and before the engagement is consummated it may prove also to be the height of bad judgment.

No one outside of a publication office could begin to understand the complexity and the expense of the postal laws on second class matter which have been in effect for a year and a half.

The little magazine called "Class" has just printed an editorial which is so sane and direct, and which voices the opinion and sentiment of Music News so absolutely, that we here reproduce it for the benefit of our readers who may really wish to know what the present condition is:

For a Two-Cent Flat Postal Rate

The zone system of second-class postal rates has been in effect for more than a year. It has proved a colossal failure. It has created a tremendous mass of detail work that has burdened publishers, printers and the postoffices. Taking this added expense into account, it is doubtful if it has made good as a producer of revenue. Never in the history of the country has the general service of the Postoffice Department been so bad. The mails have been congested, delivery has been intolerably delayed, and the morale of the department obviously has been below par. Much of the congestion and demoralization may be attributed to the confusion caused by the unwinding of an illimitable mass of red tape required by the present mode of handling second-class matter.

"Class" is not in the confidence of the Postmaster General, and therefore current figures regarding costs of handling the second-class mail are not available, either separately or in comparison with costs of handling other mail matter. But "Class" believes that an analysis of the cost would show, without considering the increased burden assumed by the publisher in the preparation of his mail, that the increased expense of handling at the postoffice has largely offset the gain obtained through the increase in rates under the zone system.

Publishers realize, however, that the United States Government needs money. They know that a war has been fought to a victorious conclusion; they understand that billions of dollars in bonds have been issued, and that even paying the interest on this enormous debt means that taxes must be heavy for a long time to come. They are not endeavoring to shirk their share of the burden in any sense.

Speaking for the publishers of class, trade and technical journals, with whose point of view "Class" is familiar, we do not believe that any objection to the zone system has come from a desire to avoid paying a full and just share of the money needed for the support of the Government.

Publishers pay income and property taxes like all other citizens, but in addition to this they are willing to stand a reasonable increase in postage rates in order that the Government may be given the support that it requires at the present time.

Before the war publications were paying a cent a pound flat. This carried their papers to all parts of the country, which were on an even footing as to the postage rates of other publications. "Class" believes that an increase of the flat rate to 2 cents a pound, increasing the cost of mailing second-class matter 100 per cent compared with the pre-war rate, would be acceptable to publishers and would eliminate the enormous expense of operating the zone system.

Such a plan would have these advantages:

It would almost certainly insure a net saving to the Government compared with the present system.

It would simplify the handling of publications of the second class, speeding up the mails and relieving congestion.

It would eliminate the system of zoning for the delivery of mail, which is wrong in principle and faulty in practical operation.

There are many publishers who have contended that the old rate of 1 cent a pound flat should be restored. They point out that no accurate and trustworthy figures have ever been produced to show that an increase in the rate was necessary, from the standpoint of the cost of handling. They feel that there is no excuse for singling out the publishing business and the patrons of publishers for burdens not imposed on other lines.

But legislation is a matter of expediency and of compromise. The zone system is wrong. The old 1-cent rate may have been too low, especially in the light of the increasing costs that every department of the Government, as well as general business, has had to assume.

Why not cut the Gordian knot, wipe out of existence the useless, complicated and expensive machinery needed to operate the zone system, and at the same time relieve the publishers of what is becoming a serious burden and give the Government a larger net income for handling second-class matter?

This is a solution of the problem that "Class" offers in the sincere belief that it will commend itself to Congress, to the Postoffice Department, to the publishers and to the general public.

> "If all were determined to play the first violin, we should never have a complete orchestra. Therefore respect every musician in his proper place."—Schumann.

Music News offers sympathy to the Musical Courier and Musical America in their struggle against the difficult conditions existing in the printing world of New York.

After a silence of two weeks, the Courier emerged last Wednesday with a four-page issue consisting chiefly of editorial matter explanatory of the situation.

Musical America has been issued regularly but in a very abbreviated and rough dress, the printing being done outside of New York.

New York at the present moment is an impossible place for publications, but it is to be hoped that conditions will shortly be better.

EDWARD WALKER IS MISQUOTED THROUGH THE OMISSION OF THE WORD "NO"

Through the omission of the simple word "no," the entire sense of an article about Edward Walker in Music News last week was changed.

The article, as it should have been, reads as follows:

After three years of no public singing, but constant study and observation, and three periods of instruction in New York City, the result is a voice developed into a full, clear, high tenor, capable of every interpretative expression. Added to this, is versatile musicianship and much experience. About forty performances of "The Messiah" stand to Mr. Walker's credit.

CHICAGO COLLEGE OF MUSIC RECEPTION

Very agreeable and successful was the inauguration of the season's public activities at Chicago College of Music on Wednesday evening. The quarters occupied by the school are spacious, well arranged and tasteful in appointment and decoration. Great bunches of autumn leaves added a festive appearance, and there was cordiality and fellowship from the faculty in abundance toward the friends who crowded the rooms. The items of pretty costumes were not wanting in hostesses, guests and pupils, and these latter dispensed refreshments assiduously

Mrs. Esther Harris-Dua, the president, and Mr. Dua, the manager; Mrs. Dethier of the vocal department, and A. L. Shynman led in making the event informal and pleasant. Mrs. Dethier acted as mistress of ceremonies, presenting the extremely gifted pupil of Mrs. Harris-Dua, Isabelle Yalkowsky, who used a Scherzo of Rachmaninoff to demonstrate her talent and training. Libbie Brasnick, who has deft, sure, fleet fingers, played Lavalee's "Butterflies" and MacDowell's "Shadow Dance," and Bertha Stephens used effectively the familiar "Prelude" of Rachmaninoff. Both are pupils of Mr. Shynman, who contributed his own "Concert Waltz" with splendid dash and bravuras. It is interesting to note that he will play during the season with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, using his own piano concerto as a vehicle for his marked gifts.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

OPENING OF THE APOLLO CLUB SEASON

The Apollo Club, under direction of Harrison Wild, will open its season on next Monday evening with a gala performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," with full quota of singers and the entire Symphony Orchestra.

The soloists will be Lois Johnston, a splendid young soprano who has just taken up her residence in Chicago, and who last season scored heavily in many appearances, including one with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra and another as soprano soloist in Hadley's "Ode to Music" at Ann Arbor Festival last spring.

Anna Imig, a mezzo contralto of beautiful presence and voice, who has to her credit many fine concert and recital appearances, is also a newcomer here.

Robert Quait, the Chicago tenor, who has recently removed to New York, is scoring one big success after another.

Theodore Harrison, one of the most distinguished baritones and teachers in America, after several years of unprecedented success at the University School of Music in Ann Arbor, is now teaching at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory of Chicago and is rapidly becoming one of the most sought after teachers in Chicago.

Robinson—Carol Robinson will play a piano recital before the Schubert Club of St. Paul on November 19.

EBBA SUNDSTROM GIVES PROGRAM

Tuesday evening of last week Miss Ebba Sundstrom, violinist, and Ruth Bradley, accompanist, gave a fine concert at Concordia Lutheran Church. The choir of the church sang three numbers by Randegger, Stainer and Woodward very well indeed.

Miss Sundstrom is a fine violinist, the tone quality is lovely and she plays with spirit. Her musicianship is of the best sort and added to this is good interpretative ability and poise. Handel's "A Major Sonata" and Saint-Saen's "Rondo Capriccioso" were given with splendid quality of tone and breadth of style. In a group by Wieniawski, Hochstein, Hubay, Tschaikowski and Brahms-Johnson, she won the enthusiastic applause of the large audience.

Miss Bradley was sympathetic and musicianly in her artistic work at the piano.

DEARBORN QUARTET

Mildred Rodiger, contralto, and manager, presented the Dearborn Quartet at the Hippodrome last week and met with the usual success. Their principal numbers were "Sorta Miss You" and "Awake, Dearest One." Miss Rodiger and her assistants did well vocally, and the results obtained the last part of the week were good indeed.

Miss Rodiger not only has a voice, but is a business woman and has been very successful in her quartet work as well as the Dearborn Duo, organized last season.

KATHRYN LEE

Miss Kathryn Lee "is surely destined, in the zenith of her powers, to take her place among the great singers of the world, both past and present," is the prophecy of one admiring critic, several years ago. While we would hesitate to say she is even in the neighborhood of said "Zenith," Miss Lee is more than fulfilling the highest expectations of all who heard her at the commencement of her very interesting career.

Absolute sincerity seems to be her watchword in everything she does, and for a singer this is certainly THE program to follow. She has never undertaken to do anything beyond her powers, both as a musician and a singer. Many times she has been accused of underrating her own ability; but the invariable reply is "the public pays to enjoy an artist's accomplishments and talents set forth in the most pleasing way possible; not to worry through a long program of even very meritorious effort, to say at the end that the artist was 'courageous, but——'"

It is hard to classify the voice of this young artist; she has been acclaimed as every kind of soprano, from Coloratura to Mezzo, the outstanding fact that she seems unconsciously to change her voice to interpret the type of song or operatic role of the moment gives her a versatility of very remarkable scope. No better example of this peculiar trait can be quoted than a reviewal of her affecting and natural delivery of the music allotted to Marguerite in Gounod's immortal "Faust." The entrance couplets and Jewel Song are given with a pure coloratura tone which interests the music-lover if in no other way than to make him wonder what such a light, bird-like quality of voice will permit her to do with the heavy, mezzo-music of the church scene and final trio of the last act. But with true dramatic instinct this artist voices the sorrow and frenzy of the character from the mezzo notes of prayer to the highly dramatic finale with full bodied tones which never falter, except for the few minutes of return to her happiness as pictured in her insanity. When questioned about this phase of her art, Miss Lee replied that it had always been a matter of great controversy during her stay in Paris, certain critics contending that when her voice settled, so to speak, the quality would have suffered by just such means. That was five years ago and the full and appealing quality of her voice seems continually to grow in life and beauty.

The presence of this singer is at once commanding and yet unassuming; her beauty, while not extraordinary, is unusual and appealing. These attributes, when coupled with the voice and talent described above, enable one to immediately comprehend the very just and happy success which is augmented to a marked degree at each successive appearance of this soprano of the many gifts—Kathryn Lee.

DAI BUELL

Dai Buell, the popular and talented young Boston pianiste, undertook a stupendous task on Wednesday, October 22, when she gave, at the Ziegfeld Theater and on the occasion of her second appearance in Chicago, a program celebrating the birthday of Liszt. Many an older pianist would have hesitated at the thought of playing the great B Minor Sonata, following that by Schumann's "Papillons" and two numbers from the "Carnival Jest," and closing with the intense "Elegie en Memorie de Francois Liszt" (Liapounow) and the Hungarian Rhapsody 13. But so determined was Miss Buell to fulfill her purpose that nothing daunted her and she was thus able to accomplish successfully a most unique feat in the annals of Chicago's celebrated concert programs.

Miss Buell is a pianist of intellectual, as well as purely artistic proportions. She has been a careful and arduous student of the historical and literary side of music for many years, and so, from the historical standpoint, was enabled to bring together numbers of rare interest on this program. Her technic, which is large, shows the same admirable tendency toward the careful and the scholarly, a love of detail and earnest self-analysis, which go to make up the peculiar feminine charm and good taste which pervade her playing.

Miss Buell played Liszt with a perfect understanding of the fantasy and abandon required, and invested the Schumann numbers with truly Schumanesque mood and color. Good tone, decision and poetic insight are gifts or acquirements of which this pianist possesses great abundance, and there is no doubt but that she will grow in popularity as time goes on and her personality finds its way into the more intimate regions of Chicago's musical thought.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

NEIRA RIEGGER, SOPRANO

Miss Annie Friedberg, the well-known manager, whose headquarters are in the Metropolitan Opera House Building, New York, is confident of a brilliant career for her charming and gifted singer, Neira Riegger.

On October 23 this young soprano gave a recital in Paterson, N. J., an event which was followed by a similar one at Schenectady, N. Y., on October 25. This week she presented a very attractive program at the Raysen School in New York City.

Miss Riegger's season contains many re-engagements and a debut recital in Aeolian Hall, New York, as well as one in another great American center of art—Boston.

CARLO LITEN

Carlo Liten, the eminent Belgian tragedian, has just returned from abroad, where he has been recruiting his company for the season of French plays he is to give at the Lenox Little Theater, beginning December 18. Part of the company is already here and the others are arriving on the "La France."

The repertoire will be drawn from the greatest classical literature of the French and Belgian stage. One of the principal offerings will be Verhaeren's "Le Cloiture," a play in four acts.

GEORGE NELSON HOLT

CHICAGO ARTISTS' ASSOCIATION

Tuesday afternoon, October 21, the season's first program of the Chicago Artists' Association was given at Recital Hall, Fine Arts Building. Those taking part in the musical program were Mme. Sturkow Ryder, Horace L. Davis, Burton Thatcher, Robert Ambrosius and William Lester. Mr. George Nelson Holt, president, has taken a great personal interest in affairs of the Artists' Association, and, judging from the reception of Tuesday, there is going to be a warm response from the musicians. It is a fine thing, and if they respond to Mr. Halt's wishes—and they will be within reason—the Chicago Artists' Association should be the greatest musical club in the city in all respects, for it is for musicians and not limited by gender. Mr. Lester is chairman of the Program Committee, and no better choice could be made. The program was lively and of fine musical worth. Mr. Lester acted as accompanist for the vocal numbers; his playing was refined and musicianly.

Burton Thatcher's splendid baritone gave pleasure to the large audience in the Aria, "Come, Blessed Cross" (Bach), and a group by Saar. He sang the Bach with authority. "The Ships" and "Some Happy Day" were the best of the Saar group, and he was successful in interpretative intentions.

Mme. Sturkow Ryder, in a group of Waltzes, made a fine impression. Her fine artistry and facile technic are well known characteristics, as well as a personality of charm. The interpretative breadth of her work is a fine point also. Mme. Ryder responded with an encore from her own pen, I believe, and it met with sincere approval.

Horace Davis surprised many by the growth made both vocally and interpretatively. His "Jeptha," aria by Handel, was a lovely bit of refined singing, showing breath control and solid musicianship. The sentiment in Burleigh's "To You" has caught his fancy, and the audience liked it. The Tosca Aria was put forth well, and he bowed his acknowledgments of the applause.

The next meeting will be of interest, I know, but announcements will appear later.

MARJORIE DODGE WARNER

Marjorie Dodge Warner, soprano, is making a great success in Milwaukee this week.

CRAVEN STUDIO NOTES

Mary Camp Twyman, coloratura soprano, artist pupil of Carl Craven, is singing today (Friday) for the New Hampshire Colony Club at the Auditorium Hotel.

Alfred Cushing has been engaged as baritone soloist with the Emmett Briscoe Company, in vaudeville.

Agnes D'Avril, contralto soloist, has been engaged as contralto soloist for the New Orleans French Grand Opera Company.

Thurston—Clara Louise Thurston, harpist, scored a great success in a concert given at the Auditorium, Aurora, Ill., last Sunday.

ROSEMARY PFAFF AND BARTON BACHMANN SCORE SUCCESSES AT LYON & HEALY'S

Every day this week, at 12, 1 and 2 o'clock, Rosemary Pfaff is singing at the Lyon & Healy Hall, her program today (Friday) and Saturday including short songs of Brinn, Bachmann and Dell Acqua, and arias from "Il Re Pastore" (Mozart), "Rigoletto" (Verdi) and "Romeo and Juliet" (Gounod).

Mr. Bachmann will play a Prelude and the G. Minor Ballade of Chopin.

On Tuesday one of the programs was heard by this writer, and the work of Miss Pfaff proved to be amazing in its security and development, as well as in that remarkable facility and style which has always characterized it.

In the "Una voce," from "The Barber of Seville," she was brilliant to the fullest coloratura extent—trill, chromatic run, arpeggio and scale being perfect in quality and execution.

In the "Habanara," from "Carmen"—a song which lies much lower and which is distinctly of other than coloratura quality, she was equally impressive, and proved conclusively that her versatility is equal to her great gift.

Mr. Bachmann, besides playing splendid accompaniments for Miss Pfaff, proved himself a fine technician in a group of Chopin, including a Polonaise, an Etude and a Waltz, and in his readings showed also the finest sort of musical feeling and artistic impulse.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE CONCERT

At the Chicago Musical College on last Saturday morning there was even a greater audience than usual and this, no doubt, was because of the announced appearance of Dai Buell, guest artist.

Miss Buell gave a recital on last Wednesday morning and succeeded easily in making a fine impression and this carried over to Saturday morning in the form of eager enthusiasm for her group.

She played a Siciliano by Bach and the Ballet music from "Rosamunde" (Schubert-Fischof), both of which are dainty, rather quiet pieces, quaint as to content and calling for the finest sort of musicianship and the very best of tone quality.

These were supplied by Miss Buell in full measure and the audience voted her, unanimously, an artistic success.

Preceding Miss Buell four student pianists were heard to advantage.

Florence Rosenblum, an attentive and attractive student of C. Gordon Wedertz, played a Schubert Impromptu with good style; Jessie Thomas, an artist pupil of Harold V. Mickwitz, played (with him at the second piano) the "Capriccio Brilliant" of Mendelssohn so well as to reflect great credit on both herself and her teacher; Adelaide Anderson, a fine young player from Idaho, was particularly facile in a "Caprice a la Scarlatti" by Paderewski, and Wyoneta Cleveland, as talented and popular a young pianist as has ever studied at the college, again reflected great credit on her master, Rudolph Reuter, in the brilliance and style with which she presented numbers by Liszt and Dohnanyi.

Edward Richardson was the first vocalist of the morning and did himself credit in an aria from "The Messiah," and Theodore M. Kratt, a brilliant young basso who is rapidly imbibing quality and style from his teacher, Burton Thatcher, proved to be exceptionally popular in Flegier's "The Horn," and Salidad Rendon, a thoroughly attractive young soprano from Mexico, did wonders with the "Mad Scene" from "Lucia."

Miss Rendon did not show a very full voice on Saturday, but was wonderfully facile and proved that she has ample musicianship and style even for the big number that was assigned her.

Two violinists appeared, both pupils of Leon Sametini.

Anah Web was thoroughly successful in a Nocturne of Chopin and the unique "Play of the Dwarfs" (Grasse) and Lorraine Earnest, the very exceptional young artist from Missouri, again showed her remarkable talent and fine finish, her vehicle being the "Gypsy Airs of Sarasate."

A NEW TRIO

Emil Trachsel, a talented young Chicago pianist, has associated himself with Silvestre Revueltas, a brilliant young Spanish violinist, and Miss Salidad Rendon, a Mexican coloratura soprano, who has created a furore wherever she has been heard, for the purpose of giving trio programs.

Their programs will be largely Spanish in character and should prove unusually attractive.

MR. HUBBARD ADDRESSES THE ILLINOIS CHAPTER OF THE A. G. O.

At a dinner given by the A. G. O. at Stevens' last Monday evening W. L. Hubbard, critic on the Chicago Tribune, was guest of honor and the speaker of the evening.

There was an exceptional attendance and great cordiality and good will prevailed.

It chanced that a party of men were dining at the same hour and were separated from the A. G. O. by a thin and low partition only. Consequently when they lifted up their voices in more or less but always vociferous song, the conversation of the A. G. O.'s was swallowed up as by a great wave. Mr. Hubbard alone proved able to cope with the difficulty, and, though his speech was punctured continually by unadvertised and decidedly unwanted song, he managed to hold his own bravely.

Once in a while he had to stop entirely until the worst of some particular blast was over, and during one of these pauses, when "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" was sung with some show of real feeling and a little more of correct tone than anything else on the impromptu program, he was heard to murmur, "That should have been our national anthem."

Mr. Hubbard talked about critics, their duties, obligations and privileges in a most enlightening way, and gradually branched off into his favorite topic—the Americanization of music and especially the giving of opera in English.

"In modern opera," he said, "the story is everything—scenery, dressing, movement, action and music are all contributory to the story. Opera music, to be good opera music, must therefore be such as to fit the passing action absolutely—it need not be pleasing music in order to be good in its place, and therefore it is impossible for any one to judge as to whether any opera music is good or not simply by his feeling of liking or dislike for it. In order, then, to even judge whether opera music be good or bad the auditor must understand the words and, as there are very few opera goers (comparatively) who understand either Italian or French, it follows that it is an absurdity to give opera in those languages in this country."

In commenting on the plan of giving opera in German in this country at present Mr. Hubbard said: "It is not a question of German music in itself, for, of course, much of it is of proven worth—but, the German language is symbolic of Germany—and that country, by its recent acts, has placed itself outside the pale of civilization for the present—therefore, we should have no German opera and no German text songs this year."

Serge Prokofieff, Revolutionary Composer and Pianist

(Supplied by Chicago Opera Association)

Serge Prokofieff, the Russian revolutionary composer and pianist who plays at Kimball Hall on Sunday afternoon, is an interesting personality. At an early age he developed great ability as a pianist, and a remarkable gift for composition. One of the most interesting novelties of the Chicago Opera season will be his new opera "The Love for Three Oranges," to be sung in French.

V. G. Karatygin, Professor of History of Music of the Imperial Academy of Music in Petrograd, has written as follows concerning the remarkable career and achievements of Prokofieff:

"We do not need to recommend this composer to the Russian public. Though he is still very young, he has composed more than thirty large opuses which are so spirited, fresh and original that they must be considered as the most remarkable appearance in contemporary music. There is no musician who does not know the originality of Prokofieff's music, daring, turbulent and full of life power. But there are many musicians who cannot accept his music because of its unbridlings and because the sparkling foam of the brilliant Prokofieff's ingenuity is often overflooding the brim of the academic rules of harmony and counterpoint. But it is not difficult to observe that Prokofieff, violating the academic laws, is always logical. His music is marked by genuine truth and sometimes you will discover in it moments of revelation. He does not like trodden paths. He prefers to force through virgin forests, overthrowing all obstacles with a masterful hand, breaking trees and jumping over broad and deep streams. Much noise and rumble accompany him in his wandering towards new shores. Splinters and debris fly in all directions. But that does not mean sauciness or mischief. His daring has always a strong and convincing logic. The course of his ship is firm, straight and determined. The direction of Prokofieff's aspirations is towards the Sun, the fullness of life and the pagan joy of existence.

Music, in opposition to the other fine arts, has always kept to the spiritual or ideal side. But it is different with Prokofieff. From his first compositions he had to be considered as a musical materialist—and in this consists his originality. The "Legendes" and the "Fables," which he tells us, the "Phantoms," which he sees, the "Suggestions Diaboliques," which he feels, seem to have a material compactness, to consist of skeleton and body, to manifest an intensive activity of will. His whimsical "Sarcasms" are not ironical sketches, but real demons of sardonic laughter. The rhythm is sharp, the contour of the melodies salient, the musical ideas and images are so convex and weighty as if they were the objects of the same order as the piano which he mastered so splendidly. Certainly such musical thinking must exclude all pure lyricism, and really, until now the compositions of Prokofieff have had very little of it. Enormous energy, dazzling brilliancy, individual originality, sometimes stern dramatism, often capricious, grotesque and from time to time a deep impulse of soul—such were till now the principal traits of character in Prokofieff's works. A turn to a certain equilibrium of spirit and matter was desirous. And it seems to be arriving: the 20 miniatures called "Visions Fugitives" have besides the preceding musical materialism quite new elements. Here and there, among impetuous splashings and leapings of all kinds, one can be charmed by something tender, gentle, sweet. There are real pearls of fine musical poetry which become especially precious encased as they are with sharply contrasting episodes of boiling, chiseling and rushing music. The same lyrical current is to be felt in the new Sonatas of Prokofieff—in the Third and in the Fourth. The lyrical theme of the Third Sonata is one of the most penetrating and fortunate inspirations of the author. And his last Sonata—the Fourth—allows to affirm with full determination that Prokofieff's gift is always growing, striking roots in the deepest psychological layers.

Serge Prokofieff was born in the estate Sontsovka in the south of Russia April 11, 1891. He showed evidences of musical ability at a very early age—a "leitmotiv" of all famous musicians. His first manuscripts belong to the age of six. The first teacher of the boy was his mother, who later passed him to Professor Tancieff and Professor Gliere. In 1904 young Serge, then only 13 years old, entered the Petrograd Conservatory of Music, from which he graduated with highest honors, winning the coveted Rubinstein prize. In the Conservatory he studied composition with Rimsky-Korsakoff and Liadoff, piano under the famous pianiste, Anette Essipoff, and conducting of orchestra under Professor Toherepnine. Due to the brilliant technical potencies in the construction of his hands with their long, strong and tenacious fingers, Prokofieff became soon a remarkable pianist. The ease of managing piano brought him to cultivate pianoforte music in his early compositions. However, his first attempts to compose operas were at the early age of 7 and 9. At 11 years he composed a Symphony in four parts; at 12 a third opera. As the years rolled by, the imagination of the young composer worked more energetically. During the first years of Conservatory he wrote over 100 different works—the fourth opera "Undina," another Symphony in 3 parts, 2 violin sonatas, 6 pianoforte sonatas and over 90 other piano pieces. One of these Sonatas of his youth was recomposed in 1909 and published under Opus 1. To the same year belongs the composition of the very dramatic opera in one act, "Maddalena," and of the "Sinfonietta" in 6 parts. In 1910 the symphonic poems "Dream" and "Poem Autumnal" appeared. In 1911 the First Concerto for piano. In 1912 the Second Sonata, "Teccata," and "Ballads" for cello and piano. In 1913 the Second Concerto for piano. In 1914 the Scythian Suite "Ala and Lolly" for grand orchestra, and the "Sarcasms." In 1915 a ballet for the Russian season in Paris and London. That season, unfortunately, was postponed on account of the war. In 1916 the opera "Gambler," in 4 acts, according to the romance of the great Russian writer, F. N. Dostoevsky. The "Gambler" was accepted by the Imperial theaters of Petrograd and Moscow In 1917 the Third and Fourth Sonatas, the "Classical Symphony," the Concerto for violin, the "Visions Fugitives" and a "Conjurement" for chorus, solo and orchestra on a cuneiform Assyrian text. The catalog of Prokofieff's works will not be quite complete if we do not mention the charming "Miniatures" for pianoforte and many songs, composed at different times. His works are published by the Russian Musical Edition and Company, Jurgenson (Moscow).

Invincible strength, enormous temperament, richest themati imagination, remarkable harmonic inventiveness, sharply expressed individually, inclination to all characteristic and grotesque—such are the principal features of Prokefieff's music. Complexity of the whole, and at the same time simplification of details, painting with broad strokes, using of a decorative counterpoint and combination of many themes—such is the nature of the technics of Prokofieff's compositions. As a whole his music attains astonishing might, boldness, energy, the grandioso explosions of which are alternating with dazzling flashes of humor. It is quite wonderful music. You are bitten, pinched, burned, stung with sharp "Sarcasms," but you are enjoying your torments instead of revolting against your pitiful position. Where is the idea of such a paradox? Certainly in the divine power of art. Reading Dostoevsky or Edgar Allen Poe, you feel a deep delight in recognizing the unlimited power of art over man's soul. This power is so great that all the horror of grief, tears and desperation which are related by Poe and Dostoevsky is transformed in purest diamonds of poesy. We do not want to compare Prokofieff with Poe or Dostoevsky, especially because he is deprived of their painfulness, but some of the "cruelty" of these geniuses is to be found in the character of Prokofieff's works. In his "Sarcasms" and "Scythian Suits" there is an indubitable affinity with some of the grotesques of the great American. And it is not accidental that Prokofieff was the first composer who had the idea to write an opera on the works of Dostoevsky.

It is from Serge Prokofieff, more than from anybody else, that we have to expect new words in musical art, more and more deep and individual.

The well-known teacher of voice is a great admirer of good saddle horses, and the black "saddler" (Scotty) is a special favorite. Mr. Cook is the Chicago representative for the Continental Lyceum Bureau and is having now the busiest season of his twenty-one years of teaching in Chicago. The bureau has twenty companies on the road and is putting out a new circuit of one hundred towns throughout Florida and Alabama.

THE TWILIGHT MUSICALS

Miller, Resseguie & Tufts have taken over the management of the Twilight Musicals at the Edgewater Beach Hotel. The musical Sunday, November 2, will be given by Ebba Sundstrom, violinist, and George H. Roth, baritone. Last Sunday Joseph Sheehan, the favorite tenor; Helen Grahame Wait, prima donna soprano, and Jeanne Boyd, composer-accompanist, gave an unusually attractive program.

BERTHA ANN COOPER

One of the distinguished visitors at the National American Music Festival at Lockport this year was Bertha Ann Cooper of the State University of Iowa, the possessor of a peculiarly beautiful soprano voice. The writer, who has not heard Miss Cooper, bases her statement on good authority, however, and is eagerly looking forward to hearing Miss Cooper next season at Lockport, where she is engaged to appear during the Festival week.

BERTHA ANN COOPER

The Register and Leader of Des Moines, Ia., says:

"Miss Cooper, the other visitor, aroused equal enthusiasm with her sweet soprano, high and clear. That she knows the secrets of good legato work was self-evident in the smoothness of her singing, in which her phrasing was also noteworthy. Miss Cooper acquitted herself well in the thrilling 'Inflammatus' as well as in the quartet and duet work."

CECIL FANNING TO GIVE RECITAL IN CHICAGO

One of the most eagerly awaited of fall events is the song recital of Cecil Fanning announced by F. Wight Neumann at Kimball Hall on the evening of November 6.

Mr. Fanning has appeared throughout the United States (with H. B. Turpin at the piano) with unbounded success, but his Chicago appearances have been all too infrequent to satisfy the demand of those who have once heard him and desire more frequent opportunity.

The program selected is a fine one and unusual as it is fine, one of its features being a group of songs by American composers, all of the texts of which were written by Mr. Fanning himself.

Santa Monica—In the concert series to be managed by Arne Nordskog at Santa Monica, Calif., many well known artists will appear, among them Cecil Fanning, Charles Wakefield Cadman and Mme. Schumann-Heink.

Craven—Carl Craven, tenor, has been engaged to sing for the Southern Woman's Club at the Blackstone Theater, on November 13, in conjunction with Lela Lowe Pierson, violinist, and Ella Smith, pianist.

SERGEI PROKOFIEFF

Prokofieff, the new and sensational Russian pianist, who was heard last Sunday afternoon at Kimball Hall, may well be called "the man with the new message," for there is no doubt that he brings a vital message and one which is very well constructed and planned, think what we may of its value or purport. He comes, not as a man who is still in the dark as to his own meaning, but as a genius who has seen the vision and interprets it clearly and fearlessly in his own idiom. He is a pianist of the first order, and as a pianist he obeys all the laws of dynamics and the requirements of beautiful expression. His music is perfectly understandable from the technical standpoint, and his interpretation of the old masters rarely beautiful.

His own compositions present, under scrutiny, much complexity as a difference in point of view and a difference in idiom. Compare them with the literary products of some of our modern Russian authors like Tchekoff and Maxim Gorky. The qualities of their "raison d'etre" have much the same tinge of the bizarre and the sensitive, the same persistent inquiry into the realms of the obscure and the gloomy.

But, strangely enough (you may say), Mr. Prokofieff left us in a decidedly receptive frame of mind—with a desire to hear more and to inquire deeper into the altogether unique recesses of his creative art. His sonata, which opened the program, was broad in scope and pulsing with strong rhythms, as was indeed all his work. The Toccata, which closed the program, was scholarly and disclosed a masterful adherence to the basic outlines of musical form. The "Visions Fugitive" were short, fantastic moods, full of angles and prismatic in color. We are told that they were inspired by the lines of Balmont, most beloved of the modern Russian poets, in which he says, "In every fugitive moment I see entire worlds sparkling with beauty and myriad rainbow-colored lights," and the suite tells a story true to its inspiration.

Mr. Prokofieff is a man of big brain, thorough knowledge and original genius, and deserves to be listened to with an open mind. He is an artist to be reckoned with.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

NAMARA GIVES AN INTERESTING THEATER PARTY

Marguerite Namara, the fascinating prima donna of the Chicago Opera Company, delights in giving theater parties, and particularly delights in giving them when her clever husband, Guy Bolston, has one or more of his plays in town. It was an interesting musical group spied in a New York theater at the performance of "Adam and Eva," one of Mr. Bolton's recent successes, consisting of Ethel Leginska, the famous short-haired pianist; Mischa Levitzki, equally famous as a pianist, and likewise short-haired; Mme. Niessen Stone, the well-known vocal teacher, with whom the charming prima donna hostess of the occasion is studying, and Lieut. "Pat" Stone, a distinguished member of the English navy, home on a furlough. After the play the party was discovered at the Cascades in the Hotel Biltmore, where dancing was in order and "a good time enjoyed by all."

"BELGIUM REDEEMED"

Mr. Newman, at Orchestra Hall, last week, gave a beautiful talk and showed wonderful pictures of Belgium, under the title of "Belgium Redeemed."

He put into fine contrast the charm of those parts of the country which were not touched by war desolation (and there is considerable such territory) with that part in which the very earth was torn up and every vestige of life extinguished.

The estate of a baron, which had formerly been a beautifully wooded and cultivated tract, with twenty houses and a colony of dependents and retainers, was shown after being turned into absolute chaos, with not even a vestige of vegetation of any sort left upon it.

The terrible destruction wrought in Ypres and other points was shown in detail and no one in the audience could fail to feel a glow of just pleasure when the retaliatory destruction of the German works at Zeebrugge was pictured.

Not all of the lecture and the pictures dealt with war, however, and there was much interest in the bucolic scenes at points away from the path of destruction, and even in the big cities which had been war-ridden the quick recovery was noted and the gala occasions of the visits of President and Mrs. Wilson, as well as of the King and Queen of Belgium, were graphically shown.

One of the most touching (as well as inspiring) moments of the evening was that covering the funeral of Edith Cavell, the English girl, who was one of the early martyrs of the war.

This week a wonderful picture of Poland is being exhibited and next week will show "France Victorious," which closes the current season. C. E. W.

AT CENTRAL MUSIC HALL

Central Music Hall is an ideal place for plays of intimate and delicate aspect, for its acoustics are perfect and the size is just right.

True, the stage is not large, but it is well proportioned, well equipped, and on last Thursday night for "The Dream Song," it was admirably managed.

As you will remember, Edward Locke wrote a very remarkable play about musicians some years ago which he called "The Climax," and which had a long run.

The music was by Joseph Carl Breil and one song especially, "The Song of the Soul," had an immense vogue.

And so last winter Mr. Locke bethought himself that it was time to write another Climax, and after much thought and work he finally evolved "The Dream Song," and without any fear of successful contradiction, this writer is bold to say that the newer play is absolutely superior in every way to the older one.

But music was necessary for this play just as in "The Climax," and in order to make sure that it would be good, Mr. Locke called for the expert assistance of Victor Herbert.

But in some way Mr. Herbert was not equally inspired with Mr. Locke, and while the music he gave to "The Dream Song" has much to recommend it, one must yet declare that it is not good enough for its subject.

In "The Dream Song" there are three moments when all the action leads up to "the big song," which is talked about until anticipation is on tip-toe, but when it comes, it proves to be just an ordinary song after all.

Perhaps Mr. Herbert will write another song which may be better, but whether he does or not, "The Dream Song" will remain considerable of a success, and this will result not alone from the splendid story evolved by Mr. Locke, but also because of the excellent acting accorded the piece by the small cast chosen to present it at Central Music Hall.

Walter Wilson makes a fine study of the stubborn "Dunstan Kirke father," Joseph Pulaski, and proves, incidentally, that he is a good musician, for, like every member of the cast, he has to sing a little and play a little during the course of the story.

Ferike Boros, playing the part of his wife, is splendid; the moment of silent weeping she does at the beginning of the last act is something entirely beyond the ordinary achievement.

Antonio Salerino plays Toni Petronini very intelligently and George Stuart Christie looks and acts Ivan to a fine finish.

Hubert Wilke, an impresario, and Edward Foster, a grand opera singer, both sketch their parts delightfully and the action of the play throws to them much smart talk.

For instance, "Oh you needn't be so great," says the manager to the tenor, "I can sing, too." "Well, why don't you?" innocently asks the conceited tenor. "Because," replies the other, "I have too much brains. An opera singer hasn't any brains; he has in the place where they ought to be only artistic temperament, and that, my friend, is only another name for a rotten disposition."

And all these parts are, after all, but the setting for the central figure, Marie Pulaski, and it is small wonder therefore than on Thursday night Margaret Owens, who played this wonderful part, was given a big ovation.

This was from two causes: (1) Because she deserved it, and (2) because she is a Chicago girl and had scores of friends in the audience.

It would be easy to say that more passion could be put into the part and more emotionalism, but after all those are not the necessary points of the character.

Marie, although a grand opera singer, is but an unsophisticated young girl after all, and to this writer, it seemed that Miss Owens sensed the part perfectly and played it delightfully.

And she certainly sang the Herbert music to the very fullest of its value and made it seem indeed twice as good as it really is.

Mr. Herbert should, in fact, be so pleased with the wonders she accomplished with the music he has provided her that he will at once set to work and write something worthy of her and of the Locke play—something as good as "The Song of the Soul," for instance.

AT THE GARRICK

It would indeed be difficult to imagine any one person dominating any performance more completely than does William Kent as Sam Benton in "Somebody's Sweetheart."

Not that he is the least bit officious or that he makes any special effort to get into the center of the stage, but his talent is so remarkable and his playing so absolutely unique that he simply absorbs attention whenever he is in sight.

It is to be hoped that such statements will not spoil him, for it is his very simplicity of method, his utter absence of "strut" or pretense, that makes him so charming.

And to be just, the entire cast is a really fine one. Every member is well chosen for his allotted task and the ensemble is, at all times, definitely clear and agreeable.

Never has a better dressed or prettier musical comedy been seen on the local stage.

There is nothing sensational and absolutely nothing loud or vulgar about it, but on the contrary it is just a pleasant combination of light and music, dancing and singing, character drawing and fooling, an altogether delightful pastime.

It is unnecessary at this late day to tell the plot or to detail the characters, but, entirely in place here to say that, musically, it is much above the average and histrionically it is a delight.

"Somebody's Sweetheart" has been current at the Garrick for some weeks and has registered a continuous success, and it will continue to be witnessed by large and enthusiastic audiences so long as it may remain there, for every one who sees it tells all his friends, "You ought to see 'Somebody's Sweethart.'"

HUGO RIESENFELD ON THE SCREEN

Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theaters, New York, walked into the projection room of the Rialto today and saw on the screen a little conductor waving a tiny baton. The motions, gestures and get-up reminded him of somebody he knew. The cartoon sped along a bit, and Mr. Riesenfeld's laugh stopped as he looked upon himself caricatured in his favorite role of orchestra conductor.

Joe La Rose sat behind the director and chuckled. He had arranged for the cartoon, but didn't know what kind of a reception it might get.

"Put it on," said the director. "It ought to be good for Comedy Week."

So, Mr. Riesenfeld, as conductor of the Rialto orchestra, is conducting the music incidental to the presentation of Movie-star Riesenfeld for this week at the Rialto.

SAMOILOFF PUPILS SING

Nina Tarasova, after her enormous success in Carnegie Hall on September 13, gave a recital on October 19, and will give a special recital on November 22 in Carnegie Hall, on November 19 in Philadelphia, and twenty other recitals during the next three months throughout the United States.

Jean Barondess, after her success in the Stadium with the Volpe Symphony Orchestra, was engaged to sing for the Evening Telegram concert in the Casino Theater on Broadway. Jean Barondess' recital of old and modern songs will be given at Aeolian Hall on December 23.

Fortune Gallo, the director of the San Carlo Opera Company, writes to Mr. Samoiloff that he was delighted to hear the beautiful, masterly placed voice of Jean Barondess.

AT THE MAC BURNEY STUDIOS

The resumption of the Monday Evening Song Recitals at the MacBurney Studios was marked on October 27 by a fine program and an unusually large and appreciative audience.

Miss Belle Lowney was the singer of this program and she proved entirely worthy of the occasion.

She has a very nice, sincere manner and excellent concert style, and her voice is one which is even and clear and is touched also with lusciousness of unusual degree.

In line with the thought of the day that Americanism in song is the dominant factor and that this can only be brought out through exact and definite enunciation, it is a pleasure to record that all her English text songs were very well done and that the Negro Spirituals were especially so.

This genre of works, so much in vogue just now, requires not alone an absolutely clean speaking of the words, properly tinged with a dialect, of course, but also a sensing of the real meanings involved, and when it is said that Miss Lowney showed a genuine flair for the songs and a real inspiration in disclosing their meanings, genuine praise is intended.

Doubtless Miss Lowney can sing many of the Spirituals, but at this time she contented herself with "I Stood on the Ribber Jordan," "By and By," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," and "De' ol' Ark's a-Moverin,'" all well done, but "Swing Low" being, in my opinion, the best.

In the next group "Longing," an intense song by Ferrari, was invested with very rich and attractive tonal quality by Miss Lowney and "Tranquillity" by Arthur Foote, in the simple, straightforward style given it was the gem of all the numbers heard.

Whelpley's "A Forest Song," more or less new, is not so good at first hearing, at least, as some of the better known numbers by this writer, but it rises to genuine emotionalism at the close and is truly an effective song thereby.

Any recital which begins with so sweetly flowing a melody as the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria" and closes with the alluring "Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms," is bound to be a popular one and Miss Lowney was wise in these choices for, after all, a recital should be for pleasure-giving and who does not love these simple melodies?

Miss Lowney, however, gave a taste of her erudition as well as her bent toward the most modern of the French school in the use of works by Holmes, Leroux, Weckerlin and Debussy, "Green" by the latter being especially well done.

Accompaniments at once animated, pervasive and deftly enveloping were played by Harold B. Simonds. C. E. W.

DEARBORN SCHOOL OF LYCEUM ARTS

Lovers of the opera will welcome the announcement by the Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts of a series of Opera Interpretation Evenings, presided over by Miss Florence Cathcart. Three of the standard operas and two of the novelties will comprise the course, and there will be interpretations of the various arias and characteristic themes by prominent Chicago artists.

Miss Cathcart has appeared before a number of prominent clubs, presenting her opera evenings with great success.

The course will begin on November 18 with "La Boheme" by Puccini, followed by "Madame Butterfly," in costume, on December 3.

Other operas to be presented are "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo, and the new Puccini "Trilogy."

All of the performances will be given in Recital Hall, sixth floor, Fine Arts Building, where the Dearborn School has its studios.

LUCIE LENOX STUDIOS

Miss Frances Coates, costume song interpreter, with Miss Florence M. Grandland, accompanist, gives "Musical Etchings"—Old English, Scotch, Dutch and Oriental—this (Friday) afternoon at the Evanston Woman's Club, and two groups, Old English and Scotch, at Fullerton Hall next Sunday afternoon, November 2, at 3 and 4:15 o'clock. Mrs. Lenox has booked Miss Coates for Austin Woman's Club December 15 and Hamilton Park Woman's Club January 20.

NEW FIRST CHOIRS

The choir activities of New First Church Choirs, Ashland and Washington Boulevards, have begun, and two of the thirty-seven concerts scheduled for our 1919 and 1920 program have been given. Our first concert was given on October 10 by our own church choir soloists, and on October 16 we had the Fisk JubileeSingers. Our next recital will take place in Carpenter Chapel on November 6, when Mme. Gilderoy Scott, contralto; Ethel Murray, cellist, and Violet Holmes Tidy, pianist, will be the artists of the evening. November 18 and 20 had been scheduled for "The Swan and Skylark" by Thomas, as had also November 21 and 23, "The Creation" by Haydn. These concerts have been postponed owing to the illness of Professor George Tenney, Director of New First Choirs. Mr. Tenney has undergone a serious operation and is now in the Presbyterian Hospital, but is rapidly recovering.

December 4 the men's chorus will give a concert in Carpenter Chapel and December 16 and 19 Handel's "Messiah" will be presented in the church auditorium by the united choirs, assisted by Elsa Harthan Arendt, soprano; Lucy J. Hartman, contralto; John B. Miller, tenor; Frank H. Collins, bass; Philip Manuel, organist. December 18 and 21 the Christmas Pageant will be given, assisted by Adelaide B. Tenney, soprano; Lucy Hartman, contralto; Dr. Leon Jones, tenor; Rollin Pease, bass.

AGNES LEIST BEEBE PRESENTS PUPILS IN SONG RECITAL

Agnes Leist Beebe is herself the personification of good concert style, with an approach to the operatic, and every function at her studio is, therefore, invariably well dressed and well presented in every way.

Not that there was any lack of cordiality at the function of last Tuesday in the Kimball Hall studio, for on the contrary it was imbued with the very essence of hospitality, but everything was done in a high grade way and every detail of both management and music was just what one would expect at a big public event.

Two pupils were presented, Miss Rubi Gonder, soprano, and Mr. Arthur Schneider, tenor, and although the former is much more advanced than the latter it is yet true that the work of both was exact, true, full of musicianship and musical feeling, and altogether attractive from the interpretative standpoint.

Miss Gonder has a very beautiful voice—full, clear and expressive. She has remarkable enunciation and absolute musicianship. She is, moreover, a very pretty girl and has the most charming of stage manners.

Her old Italian and old English songs were quaintly charming—the more modern Italian was exquisitely done and her English text songs call for nothing but the most sincere praise.

If every young singer pronounced and enunciated as well as she does and at the same time imbued her work with the same intelligence of interpretation as is the case with this young singer, we should have no more statements to the effect that the foreign languages are "superior" for singing purposes.

The aria "Leiti Signor" ("The Huguenots") was also a fine piece of work—full of authority and style.

Mr. Schneider has a pleasant voice and good musical understanding and his program was excellently chosen to show his abilities to the fullest extent.

All his songs were in English (Ross, D'Hardelot, Puccini, Ronald, Squire, Coleridge Taylor and Salter), and he too has excellent enunciation.

Ronald's "Down in the Forest" was unusually clear and musical, "Deep River" sung with fine musical feeling and "To the West Wind" (Salter) a real gem.

The accompaniments were done by Harry T. Polk, and one would have to seek far before finding a superior accompanist.

Mr. Polk is not alone a fine pianist, with limpid tone and absolute musicianship, but he is also sympathetic to the degree that each phrase, every tone even, is anticipated, balanced and given a background entirely in consonance with the requirements and very superior in effect.

Anderson—Earle K. Anderson, baritone, who was absent from the music field of Chicago for a year while in service in the navy, has again taken up his work here and is busy fulfilling engagements with the Apollo Male Quartet, of which he is a member. Mr. Anderson was soloist at St. James' Episcopal Church for a number of years and became a great favorite with that congregation.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

It is as interesting to study the character of music as of musicians. Some music comes into the horizon, reels its pleasant way along, makes its little bow and smile of exit—and you don't care if you never meet it again. What you feel is not indifference to possible merit, nor criticism of its futilities. It is just that in spite of all legitimate and worthy endeavor there is a failure to warm, to stir. So it was with the first half of the current concert of the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Stock and his men did everything the notes and phrases asked for to the Gretry Overture and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy," and then added superlative finesse, taste, elaborate care and vivid virtuosity to lift the works into vitality. And it was all pleasant and agreeable and interesting, as every item is that Mr. Stock prepares. But few will fret if they do not encounter the numbers again. Perhaps Berlioz and Byron do not make a good team. And a lot of us think Harold was artificially, not artistically, wicked!

There are those who will carry the above comments over to the Debussy items on the same program, but this reviewer is not of the number. "The Sea" is a cluster of exquisite tone pictures of thrilling fibre. And under Mr. Stock's senses of repression and unleashing the water swirled or dimpled or swept on in glorious masses. The first of the "Old Flemish Songs" is of the stuff of which musical joy is made. It could have lasted for hours, and no one asked for surcease. And how glad one will be to hear it again!

SHERWOOD MUSIC SCHOOL

A packed house heard the faculty recital of the Sherwood Music School in Fine Arts Recital Hall last Thursday evening. The program was most skillfully varied and ran as follows:

Espana (for two pianos) ..... Chabrier
George Ralf Kurtz and Georgia Kober
Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me? ..... Handel
Irish Folk Song ..... Foote
To a Messenger ..... La Forge
Else Harthan Arendt
(Tina Mae Haines at the piano)
Concerto, A minor (first movement) ..... MacDowell
Meta Kummer and Miss Kober
Romance ..... Rubinstein-Wieniawski
Fanfare Orientale ..... Paulsen
Reverie ..... Paulsen
Hungarian Rhapsodie ..... Hauser
P. Marinus Paulsen
(Arthur Charles Becker at the piano)
Conseils a Nina ..... Wekerlin
September ..... Lucina Jewell
Hymn to the Sun (Miarka) ..... Georges
Mme. Arendt
Etude, C minor
Nocturne, F sharp major
Mazurka, B minor
Scherzo, B minor
..... Chopin
Miss Kober
Concertstuck, C sharp minor ..... Chaminade
Miss Kober and Miss Kummer

George Rolf Kurtz and Georgia Kober were bizarre in the Chabrier duo, but we "take it" that they were meant to be, so the comment may be considered rather complimentary than the reverse. That both were splendid pianists was easily discernible, and Miss Kober later proved her "reason to be famous" in a solo group.

ARTHUR C. BECKER

Mme. Else Harthan Arendt was heard in a group of exquisitely done numbers. Her soft high tones were rarely beautiful, and her shading a delight. Adding to the delicacy of nuance and fineness of artistry were the accompaniments of Tina Mae Haines, who was, as always, above criticism.

P. Marinus Paulsen, the new head of the violin department, made a very good impression in a varied group, including two of his own distinctive compositions. He was accompanied very beautifully by Arthur C. Becker.

Miss Meta Kummer, a younger member of the faculty and graduate pupil of Miss Kober, played twice, the first movement of the MacDowell A Minor Concerto and the Chaminade Concertstuck (C Sharp Minor). Heard only in the first of these, she gave the impression of an artist of great polish, feminine refinement and taste, though not without abundant technic, good tone and plenty of power.

MAC DERMID AND GRANQUIST RECITAL

Another one of the most promising of the MacDermid pupils is Doris Doe, who possesses not only a very fine contralto organ, but the ability to use this organ with unusual discretion and artistic taste. Miss Doe is already an interpretative artist, and while her voice will no doubt grow larger in proportions and more flexible as to contrasts, her ability to convey expression and mood, her attention to phrasing, and her breath control are those of the finished artist and one who has, unmistakably, a large share of poetic insight.

Mr. Granquist presented Miss Norma Brown, who proved herself a young pianist of great promise. She evinced energy and fire as well as adequate technic and good poise. The Mendelssohn "Prelude and Fugue" was done with special authority and care, although we should say that numbers with more abandon lie more naturally in Miss Brown's sphere.

Both teachers have good reason to take great pride in the outcome of last Friday's performance. We should like to hear these results repeated in more studios than we do.

ROBERT LOREN QUAIT, Tenor Concert, Oratorio Recitals
Exclusive Management, WALTER ANDERSON, 62 W. 45, New York

MILWAUKEE

Miss Alma Peterson, soprano, of the Chicago Opera Association, and a resident of Milwaukee, was heard in recital recently with Ralph Rowland, violinist, assisting. Miss Peterson's voice is of operatic proportions, being full and round, and bordering on the mezzo quality. Her first group consisted of "Caro mio ben," by Giordani; "Goline Gialle (Brogi), and "Elegy," by Massenet, with obligato in the latter by Mr. Rowland. Then followed "The Ballatella," from "Pagliacci"; "A Memory" (Burleigh), "Four Years Old" (Lohr), "Love's Ecstasy" (Protheroe). Miss Peterson is very much at home in opera excerpts, as one expects, but in the last three mentioned songs she was a real delight. All calling for different interpretative ability, she brought out each and every shade. The Burleigh song is unusually good and will be heard on many programs, no doubt. Also "The Mother," by MacFadyen, which followed, is one of his best. Miss Peterson has a most imposing stage presence and was strikingly groomed, which, together with her fine voice, should make her a popular recital as well as an opera artist. Mr. Rowland played the "Rondo Capriccioso" (Saint-Saens) and "Carmen Fantasie" (Hubay) in his splendid manner.

Miss Alma Hahn, soprano, will be heard at the Civic Music Association Saturday evening. Mrs. Olive Atwood, pianist, who has again taken up her residence in Milwaukee, will give a group as well.

Miss Pearl Van Vliet, pianist, and Ethel Brenk, soprano, gave the first musical of the year at the Art Institute last Sunday afternoon. Miss Van Vliet has made fine progress in her work since last being heard. She is pursuing her work under Mme. Zeisler. Miss Brenk also shows more poise and a broadening along artistic lines which, together with her always exceptional quality of voice, makes her a desirable adjunct to any program. Her rendition of Herbert Hyde's "Beautiful Art Thou, My Love," was delightfully given, and the "Tosca" aria served to show her brilliancy of voice.

Bernhard Bronson, baritone, assisted by Frederik Frederiksen, violinist, gave a recital at the Athenæum on Thursday evening, with Hans Bruening, accompanist, all from the faculty of the Wisconsin College of Music. Mr. Bruening, as an artist, stands for the best in his line, and he has done so for a great many years. Mr. Bronson's style is of the somber character, though at all times impressing with his sincerity. Mr. Frederiksen is scholarly and at home in whatever he undertakes.

Mrs. Iva Bigelow Weaver, soprano, will be heard in a group of songs at the Wisconsin State Teachers' meeting in November.

LECTURE ON ASTRONOMY

Harold B. Maryott of the Chicago Musical College will give his illustrated lecture, "Among the Stars," on Thursday evening, November 6, at the Woodlawn Baptist Church, 62nd Street and University Avenue.

This lecture on descriptive astronomy has proved popular in various departments of the Y. M. C. A. and in army and navy camps, where it has been given many times.

There will be no charge for admission on Thursday night, but an offering will be taken, the proceeds to be used for the music fund of the church choir, of which Mr. Maryott is director.

OPERA IN MINIATURE

The Scotti Opera Company, on a tour of one-night stands, but with adequate Orchestra and Director, if only a meagre chorus and a small star cast, came to the Auditorium last Sunday afternoon and gave a taste of the greater operatic delights soon to follow.

Scotti, long since past his prime as a grand opera singer, retains a very satisfactory sense of routine and operatic emotionalism and therefore his assumption of a crafty, villainous Chinaman, in "L'Oracolo" (as shown at Ravinia last summer), still remains fascinating to those who like to study gruesome operatic pictures.

Wisely he has surrounded himself with singers who are satisfactory in the double sense of dramatic appeal and vocal charm, for the most part.

Marie Sundelius as Ah-Yoe in the Leoni work was fair to look upon and pleasant as to vocal effects. Adamo Didur as Win-Shee sang with correct style and acted excellently. Louis D'Angelo repeated the big success he made in the opera at Ravinia, and Orville Harrold was again the Win-San-Luy.

Mary Kent sang the moribund part of Hus-Quee as well as it deserves.

In "Cavalleria" which followed special commendation should go to Peroni, who conducted it with skill and musical effect.

Chanlee, a newcomer, proved himself a fine tenor in Turridu and Frances Peralto lived up to that expectation she gave us year before last when she did some parts in the Chicago Opera season so delightfully.

Jeanne Gordon was the usual Lola and Millo Picco again presented his untamed, brilliant and thoroughly convincing picture of Alfio, a part he invests with much more than the usual degree of effectiveness and into whose mouth, in the one big solo of the part, he puts extremely good vocalization.

CLARICE BALAS

Clarice Balas, the noted Cleveland pianist, will open her studio the first week in November. Miss Balas is opening a novel and interesting contest to her students—a contest in the playing of a MacDowell Sonata, the prize for which is to be a term of lessons with the pianist, who is herself so superb an interpreter of MacDowell. Further details of the contest will be given later. The concert season for Miss Balas is rapidly filling up with important engagements, one of the most recent of which is with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra on January 4.

LESTER GROOM PROGRAM STUDY CLASS

Lots of people go to hear the orchestra programs just for entertainment, and a few there are who already know something about the general repertoire, so that they listen with sympathy and understanding.

But—the vast majority do not delve below the surface and have no idea at all of the deeper, somewhat hidden meanings in the numbers which are played.

If this class could but realize how vastly they would be helped toward complete understanding by attendance each week at a good program study class there would be a sudden rush of attendance at that held by Lester Groom every Saturday afternoon which would pack a much larger place than the one he now uses.

Mr. Groom makes no display either of oratory or of pianistic skill, and yet, on Saturday last, his exposition of the big piece of "program music," "Harold in Italy" (Berlioz), was positively delightful.

He had a tremendous fund of knowledge on his subject, and this he told us in convincing language and with fine illustration at the piano.

Program music, such as the piece by Berlioz, may be deadly dull unless one has a complete key to the intended picture—but, when the whole scheme is cleared up and lightened in the way that Mr. Groom showed us last Saturday then indeed it becomes delightful, and the hearing of the orchestra performance after such an exposition of the music is pleasure unalloyed.

At this particular session of the class of Mr. Groom he had the assistance of the talented young violinist, Bertha Kribben, who gave some highly illuminative illustrations of the technic and the varied tone of the violin and (with the expert accompaniment of Mr. Groom) closed the hour with an artistic and wholly fine reading of the Concerto by Mendelssohn.

TRACY KINGMAN CONCERT COMPANY

Tracy Jay Kingman, Chicago baritone, with his associates, Edna Wheeler Ballard, harpist, and Charlotte Bergh, soprano (pupil of Louise St. John Westevelt), is touring Canada, and glowing reports of success have been received by Music News office.

At two concerts at the Belleville High School on Friday each of the artists scored, one report stating that "Mrs. Ballard had ovation after ovation."

An appearance at the Prince of Wales Theater in Kingston on Saturday night and another concert on Sunday were each highly successful also.

Miller—The Columbia Stellar Male Quartette, the personnel of which includes Reed Miller, tenor, is on tour singing a very attractive program ranging all the way from Mendelssohn's "If With All Your Hearts," sung by Mr. Miller to "Values," and "I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby" (Vanderpool), sung by Mr. Arnold.

Effa Ellis Perfield—Effa Ellis Perfield, who has opened fine new studios at 58 West Fortieth street, New York, began classes there on last Monday.

STUMPF PIANO RECITAL

A demonstration of keyboard harmony was given recently by pupils of Mrs. L. C. Stumpf and Miss Aimee Stumpf that is worthy of very special mention.

Every pupil showed clear knowledge of the necessary foundation of all piano playing—that is, scale work in all its forms. Arpeggios, chords and broken chords, staccato and non legato, were played with astonishing ease and rapidity for pupils as young as those taking part, and also disclosed such firm tone work and clear pedaling as to make a lot of older players long to have had such good instruction at the beginning.

And this splendid foundation which Mrs. Stumpf and Miss Stumpf are giving these young people will bring forth pianists who will amount to something worth while in the musical world.

B. L. T.

Kimbell—Grant Kimbell, the popular Chicago tenor, who recently removed to New York, has been substituting for Paul Althouse in church services (singing a part of "Elijah" last Sunday), but will now accept the regular appointment at St. Matthew's Episcopal Church. On November 2 Mr. Kimbell will be soloist in "Stabat Mater" (Rossini) at the Church of the Ascension. On October 26 he sang in "Jephtha" at the Pilgrim Church in Brooklyn.

Columbia, S. C.—Recital No. 33 of the Students' Series at Columbia College Conservatory of Music (Frank M. Church director), will be given on November 3.

THE CENTRALIZING SCHOOL OF MUSIC

To perceive a great need and to supply that need so efficiently that it ceases to exist is the process that makes for all progress in the world.

The Centralizing School of Music stands as a monument of progressive fulfillment. Its founder and president, Gertrude Radle-Paradis, came to Chicago and entered the professional field unknown. Today she is recognized as one of the foremost educators in the United States.

Early in her professional experience she observed that the graduates of all musical institutions suffered from the same weaknesses, viz., the inability to dignify their profession by earning a good living, or to take their places with other educators of the community, or, in other words, to build a successful and profitable business. She realized the fact that many girls were employed in the commercial world running typewriters and adding machines and doing various other kinds of work whose hearts and souls were really wrapped up in music, but who, because of their inability to make it a paying profession, had to abandon their careers for something that would at least pay them a living.

The result of such wholesale failure has been most disastrous to the furtherance of the art as well as disastrous to the ambitious student. The theory of freakish exclusiveness as an essential mark of great musical talent has become obsolete, and today every one realizes that above all things his great desire is to be a success, professionally and financially.

The method established by Mrs. Paradis—the method used in the Centralizing School of Music—assures success.

The familiar picture of the music teacher going from house to house to give a lesson for a pittance of 50 cents or $1 is not experienced by Centralizing graduates. Because every graduate not only knows his art and how to teach his art, but he knows also the science of practical business building. He knows how to get students, he knows how to hold students, and he knows that he must have a place in which to do business, therefore all graduates do their teaching in studios.

Every student of the institution is studied as an individual and is developed according to the rule "know thyself"—for self-mastery is the keynote of success. He must know how to control mind and body. He must be able to relax consciously to conserve energy, and be must understand mental processes to become confident. This combination spells success.

The Centralizing School of Music announces a dinner-dance for its students, friends and faculty Saturday evening, November 1, at the Hotel Randolph. The committee in charge—Misses Irene Skinner, Mary Morgan and Ruth Wilsey of the school faculty—makes the special announcement that the affair is to be entirely informal and a general good time is anticipated.

The students' recital for Saturday afternoon, November 8, is to be an armistice program, carrying out the plan this year of having one unique program each month in addition to the regular recitals.

NELLE BRYANT SINGS IN KANSAS

Nelle Bryant, soprano, a former resident of Chicago and well known throughout the country, is now a member of the faculty of Bethany College at Lindsborg, Kan.

On October 16, with Arvid Wallin at the piano, she gave a very successful song recital at the College Chapel, the program being as follows:

Jeunes Fillettes, XVIII Century
Arranged by.....Weckerlin
J'ai pleuré en Reve.....Hüe
Boujour Suzon.....Pessard
Ariette.....Vidal
Lungi dal caro bene.....Secchi
May Night.....Richard Hageman
Nightingales of Lincoln's Inn
(From Songs of Old London).....Oliver
Lilacs.....Rachmaninoff
Hopak.....Moussorgsky
Adieu Forets (from Jeanne d'Arc).....Tschaikowsky
The Muleteer.....di Nogero
Pysche.....Paladilhe
Carnival.....Fourdrain
The Sheep and the Lambs.....Homer
Ecstasy.....Rummel

To comment on this appearance the Bethany Messenger devoted a column and said, among other things: "Lindsborg expected something unusually good and was rewarded by hearing Miss Bryant interpret a masterly program of choice selections, varied in style and of a nature to bring out the resources of the artist both as to vocal perfection and interpretative ability. Her voice is a large, clear soprano, vibrant with life and pleasing in quality, lending itself admirably to the various styles."

Vera Brady Shipman of the Salina (Kan.) Daily Union wrote as follows: "Miss Bryant's program opened with a French group, which were gems of vocal beauty. The Cossack song was full of abandon and perhaps the best thing, dramatically, on the program. Songs in English were beautifully given, the Rachmaninoff number was very dramatic, 'Carnival' (Fourdrain) was a French gem, Homer's 'Sheep and Lambs' was artistically calm, and 'Ecstasy' was showy and triumphant."

CLARA EDMUNDS HEMINGWAY

Composer-Contralto

Additions to the October 17 list of Chicago and New York teachers who are teaching a Hemingway song called "Twilight" are the following:

Oscar Saenger, New York (guest teacher at the Chicago Musical College this summer), Sibyl Sammis MacDermid, Fine Arts Building, and John Rankel, also of Fine Arts Building.

Ben Claire Crow, formerly of the American Conservatory, but now of New York, has added "Twilight" to his concert repertoire. Mr. Crow recently returned from a western tour in which he won new laurels.

Charles Edward Clarke of the Lyceum Arts Conservatory has sung and taught this song and will also present three manuscript songs by this composer this season. The first of these is to be dedicated to Mr. Clarke. It has a fine violin obligato, which will be played by Rachel Steinman Clarke, also of this conservatory. The numbers are especially well suited to Mr. Clarke's voice, and his interpretation of "Night," "Her Patsy O!" and "I'm Thinkin' o' You" (Scotch) will be a treat.

As to Our Directory Columns

The name of every Musician in the United States—every Composer, every Manager, every Publisher, every Teacher, every School, and every Manufacturer of Music Instruments, should be in the Classified Directory Columns of THE MUSIC NEWS.

It is a fact today that Managers, Directors of Schools, Program Committees, Festival Directors, Lyceum Promoters—in fact, everybody who has to do with Musicians, has formed the habit, when the address of a Musician is wanted, of looking in our Directory Columns for it.

We have been told again and again,

"Your Directory Is the Most Useful List Published in the United States"

Even if you have no intention of doing more public work—even though you are located where no change seems possible—it is still advisable to have your name in our columns in order that your friends, the managers, the publishers and the public at large may have a ready means of finding your address.

And—if you ARE in the field for increased engagements or activities of any kind you will find no medium so useful as this.

We have Classifications for every Instrument, for the Voice, for Publishers, Manufacturers, Composers, Directors, Ensembles, Theory Teachers, Dancing, Dramatic Art, Clubs, Choir Boy Training, Pageantry, Community Singing Directors, Managers, Accompanists, Public School Music Teachers, and others.

If we have not your Classification we will create a Department for you.

The cost of this service is only fifteen dollars a year, but the service itself is invaluable.

During the last season we carried in the Classified Columns hundreds of names. We want to carry additional hundreds this season, and expect to make the list as near complete as we possibly can.

Payment for this service can be made Annually, Semi-Annually or Quarterly—and, as we send THE MUSIC NEWS to each one whose name is in these columns, you need have no further expense for subscription.

Display Advertising in MUSIC NEWS is considered today the most useful in America, and you will—eventually—be in the field for that. But, meantime, you should not delay one week in having your name in our Classified Directory Columns, for this is AN INVALUABLE SERVICE.

DICIE HOWELL

Dicie Howell, who gives her recital at Aeolian Hall, New York, Wednesday afternoon, November 5, has had a most interesting career despite her youth. She was born in Tarboro, N. C., and received most of her early education in Salem College, the well-known Moravian School of the south. Salem College is a branch of the main settlement in Bethlehem, Pa., and is one of only two Moravian schools in the United States. It is interesting to know that the Moravians were one of a Christian sect founded by the disciples of John Huss, the Bohemian Reformer of the fifteenth century, who regarded the Bible as the only source of Christian doctrine. They were especially active in missionary work.

Miss Howell received not only her elementary studies in the regular curriculm at Salem, but her early musical education was likewise obtained there. She studied both violin and piano for two years, but gave up her instrumental studies, devoting the last two years of college, 1910-11, to vocal work exclusively. She then went to Boston and continued voice study at the New England Conservatory for two years, 1911-12, under the direction of Charles White. She came to New York in 1914, obtaining a church position less than a month after her arrival, as soloist in the Mount Morris Baptist Church on Fifth avenue, under the direction of A. Y. Cornell. Subsequently she became the soprano soloist in the First Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn under the direction of the well-known director, Huntington Woodman. Her New York vocal studies were first under the direction of Theodore van Yorx, and then with Herbert Witherspoon, with whom she is still studying. Although the soprano is only making her New York debut, she has had nearly two years of concertizing, having sung many interesting recitals, oratorio works and orchestral concerts. She has appeared with the New Haven Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Horatio Parker, also with the Volpe Orchestra and various times under the direction of Walter Henry Hall with the Columbia Orchestra.

CENTRALIZING SCHOOL OF MUSIC

On last Saturday afternoon some of the children of the Centralizing School entertained in a "Make Believe" of the most wholesome, delightful kind, written by Florence Crocker Comfort and given under the direction of Miss Irene Skinner of the dramatic art department. Miss Skinner is always clever and tasteful in the things she does, and this was put on with special care and a genuine regard for the simple and childlike in the effects produced. The play, which was interspersed very skillfully with music, was entitled "The Magic Voice," and was allegorical, having to do with the desire for more accurate speech and more expressive music in America to produce better citizenship. The children seemed to enter heartily into the spirit of it, as children usually do into things symbolical, and both in diction and histrionically were well drilled, clear and expressive.

The musical numbers were played for the most part by pupils of Helene Scott, who competed for the opportunity with twenty other students of the school. They were likewise well prepared and earnest. It was a memorable children's entertainment and well worth while.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

PLEASURE VS. DRUDGERY IN THE MUSIC PERIOD—PUBLIC SCHOOL OPPORTUNITIES AND LIMITATIONS

How many of us can look back to the music period in school with thoughts of anything but utter weariness at our earliest attempts at singing scales, and with recollections of moments of hopeless agony while notes of all kinds seemed to jump up and down before our eyes? Is it small wonder that only a few whose thirst for music was insatiable survived the ordeal and in later life continued the study under more favorable conditions?

Song tends to bring out the beauties of nature and lends itself as a vehicle for the child's imagination, and at the same time it is an outlet for the innate buoyancy which may so easily be stifled by too much abstract drill. Is it therefore not wiser for the teacher to localize her efforts upon holding the children's interest and keeping their love for music in preference to training them from a purely technical viewpoint?

The modern music lesson would be a revelation to the old-time teacher. Through carefully chosen art and observation songs the child learns all pitch and rhythmic problems, which may, if necessary, be isolated from their contexts and form the basis for brisk, concrete drills of rhythmic patterns and of interval and diatonic figures, thereby relating all tones of the scale with the tonic, or key tone. In this way, teaching through song, the child's interest is held, while the teacher's work is a constant pleasure. When the child realizes the wonderful satisfaction over a certain accomplished task he begins to feel a secret joy in that accomplishment, and it ceases to be a task. The thing which a child is capable of doing well gives him his keenest pleasure, and if he constantly desires pleasure from the work while it is being done, in a way which is being demonstrated today in many a music class, his enjoyment of that class may be readily imagined.

The music supervisor is often handicapped by the large numbers of children with whom she comes in contact, and in many instances she fails because it is quite impossible for her to "know" the children as interesting individual bits of humanity in the same way in which the departmental teacher has an opportunity of knowing them. The time is not far distant when the departmental teacher of music will be as necessary as the teacher of history. If one departmental teacher carried the music in two schools, or one supervisor provided for the music in five schools, and each held to the outline of the head of the department, the work throughout a city could be held at an even grade. Is it not too much to expect an upper grade teacher to spend the necessary time upon the preparation and presentation of the music lesson for which she is often not properly equipped, in addition to the other subjects which the adolescent child has in his curriculum? A problem presented in a haphazard way the first time will always be hazy in the child mind. One clear, logical presentation will accomplish more than weeks of continued drill can do, and much needless talking may be spared the teacher if she uses technical terms from the start, giving brisk, concise explanation and demonstration, thereafter using the technical names until the child learns them with no apparent effort.

There are many seemingly artificial stimulants which upon closer inspection prove to be vital. A glee club composed of carefully selected voices is one way to gain the interest in music for the growing child, and with a supervisor who is alert and really interested herself many things can be done to retain that interest. Also much is being done in class work which never before has been thought possible. In Boston teaching violin in classes held after school was so successful that with three years' trial it was authorized as a regular study, the lessons being given during school hours. At Shorewood, Wis., there are now twenty-five in the two violin classes, which will probably be the nucleus of an orchestra before the year is completed. The children of the sixth, seventh and eighth grades are very enthusiastic and very impressionable, and class work appeals to the "gang" spirit which means so much to the adolescent child. If a child shows special talent the conscientious supervisor will send him to some capable instructor for further work, as the finer points can only be given by individual instruction. If he wishes to professionalize in any one branch, individual instruction is greatly to be encouraged, for he then has the undivided attention of the intructor and he is brought into closer and more beneficial contact with him.

ERNA DICHMANN,
Teacher of Public School Music at the Wisconsin Conservatory, Milwaukee, and Music Supervisor at Shorewood, Wis.

Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso (Saint-Saens), Romance (Wieniawski), Minuet (Hochstein), and "Tambourine Chinois" (Kreisler). Miss Ruth Bradley will be the accompanist.

THE OCTAVE CLUB

Norristown, Pa.

It is pleasant news to inform our readers, as well as it is a pride to Norristown, that our Octave Club has decided to join the National Federation of Clubs of America. It will enable the organization to offer its music lovers entertainments which will break the monotony of a town of some twenty thousand souls. The indefatigable Mrs. Nelson C. Cressman, who is president of the club, organized at the Ersine Club house on October 15, a soiree of instrumental and vocal music. The evening was christened as "Italian Music." After some introductory remarks of Mrs. Cressman, the evening opened with the National Anthem of Italy, sung by Peter Volpe and Paul Gugliemo, assisted by Mrs. Wright at the piano. Peter Volpe is a baritone of many excellences, which he demonstrated in his rendition of "Eri tu," from "Un Ballo in Maschera" (Verdi), an aria by Donizetti seldom heard in our concert halls. "Raggio D'Amore" confirmed the baritone's abilities as a vocalist and the sympathetic quality of his timbre. Mrs. Wright gave commendable accompaniment at the keyboard.

Mrs. Charles S. Harper, soprano, followed her colleague with "Beauty's Eyes" (Tosti), "If Flowers Could Speak" (Lucca), and "The Radiance of Your Eyes" (Novello). She disclosed an agreeable timbre and made her songs the more pleasurable by the intelligent interpretations and the feeling put into the singing. She was ably assisted at the piano by Mrs. Hatfield.

Signor Paul Gugliemo, tenor, gave much pleasure when he sang "Non e Ver" (Tito Mattei) and the popular "O Sole Mio" (Di Capua). William Solodar, a pupil pianist of the Sternberg School of Music, rendered Friml's "Russian Romance" and MacDowell's "Concert Etude." He was a credit to the school, and if he continues to study zealously his career is assured.

The second part was opened with a piano quartet by Rossini (from "William Tell"), and it would have been difficult to detach the best of the artists. They all contributed to an excellent rendition. Sufficient to mention Mrs. Warren Latimore Irish, Mrs. Roy Alexander Hatfield, Mrs. Henry C. Welker and Miss Ella H. Potts. Mr. Gugliemo returned to the platform to sing "Per La Gloria" (Buonocini) and "Romanza" (Donizetti), followed by Signor Volpe in the signing of "O Monumento," from Ponchielli's "La Gioconda," and "Nina," by Perolesi. Mrs. Harper closed the program with Del Riego's "Dry Those Tears," "Whisper, and I Shall Hear" (Piccolomini), and "Preghiera," by Tosti. Our readers will note that the program was a pretentious one.

With the establishment of peace, our Red Cross entertainments will be substituted with professional events. The Community Chorus must also be mentioned, and if the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" provoked enthusiasm, it is not only for patriotic reasons, but also for the efficient intuitions made possible by the excellent director of the Octave Club Chorus, Miss Marion G. Spangler.

THELMA RUSSELL CRAWFORD.

THE WITMARK BLACK AND WHITE SERIES

AT THE WHITNEY TEW STUDIOS

At the very beginning of the season it is not possible to expect such advanced technic nor such finished work from the members of any class as will naturally be in evidence later in the season, and yet at the Tew Studios on last Sunday afternoon there was an astonishing amount of talent shown and a thoroughly satisfactory advancement on the part of students who—in deference to the few months they have been studying, Mr. Tew called his "infants."

As a matter of fact, a complete mastery of the system taught by Mr. Tew requires something like five years, and the most interesting of his pupils are therefore those who have been with him two years or more, for these are, of course, well on their way.

As has been so often told in these columns, Mr. Tew specializes on the "long scale," and all his pupils—beginners as well as advanced, present songs which cover an unusual range, for he does not, in any case, recognize a restricted one, insisting that all voices are low and high and that definite classifications and limitations are unnecessary.

Therefore, even with those pupils who have not yet a thoroughly developed tone in any part of the scale, there is already that very satisfactory ability to sing both high and low with ease.

The program heard on last Sunday afternoon by a studio full of people was as follows:

Rondo Zapfedicciosa.....Mendelssohn
Miss Harriet Cartwright
Trio—Rest Here on Thy Mossy Pillow
Misses Del Barrios, Grieves and Fredeen
Celeste Aida (Aida).....Verdi
Mr. C. B. Emmert
Spring .....Chaminade
Shadows.....Del Riego
Miss Del Barrios (Debut)
I Love Thee.....Grieg
If No One Ever Marries Me.....Lehmann
Miss Yashow (Debut)
Rose Softly Blooming.....Spohr
Miss Grieves (Debut)
Duet—I Heard a Voice in the Tranquil Night .....Glover
Mrs. Loomis and Mr. Iles
My Heart at Thy Dear Voice
(Samson and Delilah).....Saint-Saens
I Love You.....Cadman
Mrs. Loomis (Debut)
Polonaise (Mignon).....Thomas
Mrs. C. B. Emmert
Good-bye—Bass key.....Tosti
Eleonore—Tenor key.....Colridge-Taylor
Edwin Iles
When You and I (Contralto)
(In a Persian Garden).....Lehmann
I Sent My Soul (Soprano)
(In a Persian Garden).....Lehmann
Mrs. Colbran-Melius
Prayer—Heischütz .....Weber
Miss Frances Rheinhold
Sadas Wos Aria—Bass key—Possenli Numi
(Magic Flute).....Mozart
Queen of the Night (Soprano key)
(Magic Flute).....Mozart
Miss Emma Berg
Song of the Shepherd Leht
(Contralto) .....Rimsky-Korsakoff
Ditayrs (Hamlet) .....Ambroise Thomas
Mlle. Adrienne de Vere
Mad Scene (Hamlet).....Ambroise Thomas
Miss Hazel Renninger
Duet—A Book of Verses.....Lehmann
Miss Gladys Scrimgeour and Edwin Iles
Waltz Song .....Gounod
Hesperida .....Massenet
Mlle. Yseult Trevecoeur
Bell Song (Lakme).....Delibes
Miss Gladys Scrimgeour
When the Heart Is Young.....Buck
Miss Maybelle Clemenson
Charmant Oiseau .....David
Miss Wanda Alexandiovna Tzalla

Of the singers represented at this time the Misses Del Barrios, Yashow and Grieves and Mrs. Loomis were absolute debutantes, each of them showing both voice and budding style as well as very considerable facility.

The others ranged from a few months of study up to two years, and each in his or her own way gave pleasure and promise of still better things to come.

Mr. Emmert has a pleasing voice and style, Mrs. Emmert shows growing facility, Mr. Iles has genuine operatic voice and style and sang with fervor as well as musical values; Mme. Melius, the possessor of a beautiful voice, shows steady gain from month to month; Miss Berg, the possessor of delightful personality as well as lovely voice, gave much pleasure; Mlle. De Vere was fine in her smaller song, and not only she, but Miss Renninger, Mlle. Trevecoeur and Miss Scrimgeour were brilliant in the big operatic arias offered.

The ensemble numbers were charming, and the accompaniments of Miss Cartwright (as also her solo) and Miss Lucy Levy were ideal.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

Harold Henry in Duluth

"Harold Henry played before an enthusiastic audience last evening," says the Duluth Herald of October 18. "The young American pianist came to Duluth," it continues, "with most flattering notices. All that had been said of Mr. Henry's freshness and vigor and brilliancy of technic was proven. It was refreshing to see his freedom from mannerisms and affectations. Mr. Henry's playing was flawless. He approached the Bach from the emotional side, giving the music a warmth and human note which much Bach playing lacks. The minuet in particular was an exquisite piece of work. In the second group the biggest number was the Fantasia quasi sonata by Liszt. As usual with this composer, this number gave scope for virtuoso technical skill, for brilliant runs and for tremendous dynamics. Mr. Henry's complete mastery of his instrument was evidenced in this. Especially noteworthy in this group was the Debussy 'Reflections in the Water.' Mr. Henry brought out admirably the flitting lights and figures which it suggests, and its enchantment was felt at once. To the Chopin numbers the pianist gave the necessary perfection of technic, and the clear singing tone to the melodies. In the Keltic sonata by MacDowell, Mr. Henry seemed in command of his best powers. Mr. Henry is gifted with a charming, straightforward personality which made his appearance last evening doubly enjoyable."

Konecny at Staunton, Va.

Josef Konecny, the Bohemian violin virtuoso, was at the Y. M. C. A. yesterday evening in concert. The evening's program was a pronounced success and an appreciative audience applauded the various numbers rendered. Konecny is a violinist of note, a master of the technique of the king of musical instruments. His interpretation of compositions by such masters as Rubinstein, Paganini, Sarasate and Sevick places him on a plane, if not above it, with the world's violin masters. However, the question arises, was Konecny's technique of a character understood and rightly appreciated by his audience?—Staunton Daily News.

Press Comment on Idelle Patterson

The soloists with the orchestra (Minneapolis Symphony) were worthy of the organization's lofty standard. Miss Idelle Patterson scored a triumph. She sang the aria, "Ah fors e lui" from "La Traviata" with verve and fire. Her coloratura work was fine and her brilliant execution aroused great enthusiasm in the appreciative audience.—St. Joseph, Mo.

Miss Patterson has great personal charm and magnetism, and a beautiful voice.—Daily Times, Los Angeles, Cal.

Miss Patterson had a triumph. Better coloratura work than was displayed by this girl has not been heard for a long time.—Decatur Herald, Decatur, Ill.

Miss Patterson looked so young and inexperienced that it seemed cruel to expect her to sing the big Traviata aria. But the little lady astonished everybody by completely routing its vocal difficulties, coming out with flying colors from a perfect riot of arpeggii, trills, scales and staccati phrases, to the great delight of her audience.—Transcript, Peoria, Ill.

Miss Patterson is personally gracious and fascinating. Her pure, well schooled soprano voice earned for her no small share of the evening's honors.—Winnipeg Telegram, Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Her voice possesses a rare quality seldom heard except in grand opera.—Oakland Enquirer, Oakland, Cal.

Miss Patterson is a highly trained soprano with a voice of great beauty.—Winnipeg Tribune, Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Comments Upon "Twilight" (Hemingway)

It is excellent.—Oscar Saenger.

Hope you will have success with it.—Charles Wakefield Cadman.

Looks delightful and I am looking forward to hearing it soon. With all good wishes for its success.—Sara Teasdale.

Best wishes.—Anna Priscilla Risher.

Well done piece of work in wondrous harmony with the poem.—Harold Hamilton Hall.

Received your song and consider it very lovely.—Ben Claire Crow.

Very effective little song.—D. A. Clippinger.

Will use it in my studio when possible.—Elizabeth Foresman Bagg.

Shall be glad to use "Twilight" for teaching. It is ideal for that purpose.—Mary Highsmith Lyding.

It is a gem.—Mrs. A. J. Baumgartner.

Wish you every success.—Rose Lutiger Gannon.

Will use it whenever possible.—Charles Edward Clarke.

Congratulate you upon your song "Twilight."—Carl E. Craven.

Best wishes for your song.—Ida Geer Weller.

Sincere good wishes.—Seneca Pierce.

Fine for contralto.—John R. Rankel.

New York School of Music and Arts

A short time ago the editor of The Musician, during a visit to New York, spent a very enjoyable hour at the new home of the New York School of Music and Arts, 95th Street and Central Park West, Ralfe Leech Sterner, director.

When parents are considering the question of sending a daughter away from home for music study they must think of the conditions under which the girl is to live. Shall she go into a boarding house of the usual city type, rent a furnished room and take her meals in restaurants? Shall she join several other girls and rent a flat, with a maid to serve meals and look after the rooms? Is she to be left alone and unsupported by the company and advice of those more experienced in the life of a great city? And these problems are also serious ones to the woman of maturer age and greater experience who comes to the city for music education. She wants comfort, companionship, cheerful surroundings, and freedom from the annoyances and dangers due to designing men and women.

The New York School of Music and Arts has met this problem by offering home life to the women students who come there for instruction. And the first thought of the visitor is that he is entering a household, and not an institution. The school occupies two buildings, one on the corner, the other adjoining on Central Park West, both overlooking the expanse of the park, a view of great beauty summer or winter, and insuring pure, fresh air at all seasons of the year. The corner building is used for offices, reception rooms, studios, and lecture halls, the other for a students' home.

The school quarters are in a house formerly occupied by one of New York's millionaires, and is munificently decorated, especially in the main rooms, the entrance being through grilled doors, set in marble portals, the reception hall having an inlaid mosaic floor, the walls elegantly decorated. A beautiful stairway ascends to the second floor where one finds large studios, with magnificent stained glass windows set in copper; cut glass chandeliers, etc., making a most artistic setting.

We have purposely emphasized the home idea in the New York School of Music and Arts, as worked out by Mr. Sterner, but we must not omit mention of the courses of study offered which cover a thorough musical education. The vocal department is under the care of Mr. Sterner, who has a long list of professional pupils to his credit. In the piano department is an artist of international reputation, Arthur Friedheim, a pupil of Liszt.

Sturkow-Ryder at Flint

The pianist, Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, who gave a recital on October 9 at St. Paul's Parish House, and a lecture-recital at St. Cecilia Club Rooms on the afternoon of October 10, proved herself a musician of rarely combined attributes.

Her genius is the result of natural talent, carefully trained by constant study and practice, and by the application of her whole self to her art. The technic she employs is flawless; the interpretation she gives to her selections proves her appreciation of the composer's intention. Notes and phrases are thoughts and action. Everything means something. Her sense of humor, likewise her sympathy with every phase of life, influences her playing, and her shading was unique.

That a pianist, playing a whole program herself, should receive five encores is remarkable.

The audience responded to her every mood and enjoyed the feast of music.

The arrangement of the program was excellent, beginning with Handel's Air and Variations in D minor, followed by Siciliano and Capriccio, by Scarlatti, and encored from Chopin.

Mme. Ryder gave a thrilling reading of Liszt's Sonata, quasi fantasie; it was filled with charm and interpretative skill. She played for encore "Consolation" (Liszt).

Interest was paramount when she began her own composition, "Fantasie Pastoral." This descriptive story arose from memories of childhood with her father in Lincoln Park, Chicago, and covered the interesting features of attraction with rhythms, contrasting movements, melodies and liquid cadences.

Critics proclaim this composition will rank with Schumann's "Scenes of Childhood," placing Mme. Ryder among the leading composers of America. For encore she gave her own composition, "Imps."

The latter part of her program was Russian: "Polichinelle" (Rachmaninoff), "The Lark" (Glinka Balakirew), "The Musical Snuffbox" (Liadow), and Tschaikowsky's Waltzes, with two encores in closing.

It was an evening of real merit and pleasure to Flint musical people.

The lecture-recital on the following afternoon at St. Cecilia Society was extremely delightful, entertaining and instructive. Mme. Ryder's subject was "Color in Music," and although it is not an exhaustive subject, yet her handling of it was so replete with ideas and worth-while pointers on color that her hour and more of speaking and playing created a lively interest that was unusual.

It is hoped that Mme. Ryder will come to Flint again some time.

There is a welcome addition to Flint musical circles in the residence here of A. G. Gill, talented soloist, who came to Flint from Pittsburgh. Mr. Gill held many enviable positions as church soloist in the east. They include positions at the Highland Presbyterian Church, Shadyside United Presbyterian Church and East Liberty Presbyterian Church, all of Pittsburgh. Mr. Gill now is associated with the personal service department at the Buick Motor Company.—Flint (Mich.) Saturday Night.

Florence Macbeth at Minneapolis

Invading Minnesota again on her Middle States tour, Miss Macbeth even surpassed her splendid triumph of a few weeks ago at St. Paul, this time at Minneapolis, and what the important journals of this go-ahead city said in consequence is of much interest. One of them, the Tribune, under date of October 20, 1919, wrote:

It was a fortunate coincidence—if, indeed, it was a coincidence—that gave Florence Macbeth to Minneapolis on the day that the city welcomed back her orchestra. The family reunion was complete. Though Miss Macbeth is not exactly a daughter of Minneapolis, she is at any rate a niece, and the bond is exceedingly close. The "Bell Song" from "Lakme" by Delibes seemed written especially with her voice in mind, and its flute-like quality and astonishing flexibilities and resiliences were afforded ample opportunity for demonstration. More effective was the encore she used after her Rimsky-Korsakow aria —an old English song by Bishop entitled "Lo! Here the Gentle Lark." The agility with which that coloratura voice of hers swept its winging flight through various cadenzas, dipping, soaring, and twisting about in Immelman turns, provoked from the audience a savage refusal to let her leave the stage. She was called back repeatedly until she finally placated her hearers with "Annie Laurie" which, by the way, she did most artistically. So closely and uniquely does Miss Macbeth trespass upon the province of the birds that, should the birds ever organize and insist upon a closed shop, the head of the Minneapolis Nightingale will be the first demanded.

No less enthusiastic was the Minneapolis Journal of the same date, which commented as follows:

The delightful soloist who had strongly helped to fill the house to overflowing was Florence Macbeth, the Minnesota diva of the Chicago grand opera forces. Miss Macbeth's voice seemed to have gained its power without losing its girl-like timbre, while her skill of coloratura singing once more asserted its excellence in the Hindu "Bell Song" from Delibes' "Lakme" and the hymn to the sun from "The Golden Cock" by Rimsky-Korsakow. Miss Macbeth made a positive hit in Bishop's "Lo! Here the Gentle Lark," which Shakespearean poem in a setting of Mozartian purity of form was enhanced by a flute obligato beautifully played by Anthony Linden. Frank Gray's "Dreams" was enhanced, too, by a lovely closing note in altissimo, followed by "Annie Laurie," which Miss Macbeth sang endearingly to the harp accompaniment of Henry J. Williams.

The remaining papers of the city all add their praises, the Daily News saying, amongst other eulogistic comment:

At her second appearance with the orchestra as soloist Florence Macbeth won a notable success, singing with all the beauty of voice and facility of execution that has made her one of the most acceptable vocalists. She sang with delightful and refreshing enthusiasm.

Max Rosen Makes First Appearance in Grand Rapids

The appearance of Max Rosen has been anticipated with a tinge of curiosity on account of the comparison (an odious word) between him and Heifetz. And after young Rosen's work last night it can be said the path of the sun-stretch seems short for him.

Contrasting these young men, Rosen seems more human, more appealing and so satisfying. His bowing is so alive with all the varied nuances of the violin touch and his tone liquid, clear and sweet. The well known concerto in D Minor, by Wieniawski, was doubtly interesting on account of the originality of interpretation. In fact, each number could have been repeated without fatigue to the audience.—Grand Rapids Herald, October 17, 1919.

Bertha Ann Cooper

Some recent press comment:

Miss Cooper is a soprano of real merit. Her voice is remarkable for its richness, especially in the high tones, which were displayed to great advantage in the solos of the Stabat Mater.—Ripon (Wis.) Commonwealth.

Miss Bertha Cooper brought before her audience a soprano voice that seldom falls to the lot of even steady concert goers.

Added to her power as a coloratura singer was a certain subtle dramatic quality which singers of this type seldom possess.—Joliet (Ill.) Daily News.

Miss Cooper's voice is a pure soprano of the highest range, sweetness and power, such as are only at occasional periods discovered and developed.—Charlotte (Mich.) Leader.

Miss Cooper's clear, pure tone is the proper vehicle for the Messiah solos. Her former successes in this role were surpassed last evening in freedom and authority, both vocally and temperamentally all of her work was pleasing, but her "Come Unto Him" was pre-eminent in artistic finish.—Press and Dakotan, Yankton, S. D.

Miss Cooper was a delight to her audience. She possesses a rich coloratura soprano voice that has been exceptionally well trained, and her conception of the soprano role in the Messiah is both broad and accurate.—Pierre (South Dakota) Messenger.

New York Notices of Carol Robinson

Carol Robinson made a favorable impression at the Comedy Theater, where yesterday afternoon she gave her first New York recital. She showed ability and taste in the rendering of an interesting and well chosen program, and she received many plaudits. The scherzo and presto rondo of the Schumann Sonata were delightfully played, and she showed no small amount of skill in the difficult passages.—The New York Morning Telegram, November 21, 1916.

Miss Robinson, who came on from Chicago, brought with her a well developed technic and an evident and gratifying sense of beauty.—New York Globe, November 21, 1916.

Carol Robinson gave a piano recital in the Comedy Theater. Her principal numbers were Cesar Franck's Prelude, Choral and Fugue, and Schumann's G Minor Sonata, Opus 22. Miss Robinson displayed an excellent tone and skill in the use of the pedals. Her finger work was clean and her playing had much smoothness.—New York Sun, November 21, 1916.

Grace Brune-Marcusson

Mme. Marcusson has a high soprano voice of great purity. Her notes were sweet and clear. She was enthusiastically received by the Topeko audience.—Topeka (Kan.) State Journal.

Grace Brune-Marcusson, the popular artist of Chicago, sang the soprano role of Eve with clearness of tone and excellent musical judgment. Her voice has a wide range and is exceptionally pleasing.—Albion (Mich.) Recorder.

Mme. Grace Brune-Marcusson gave a delightful recital Thursday afternoon in the auditorium of the Jacksonville Woman's Club before a large and enthusiastic audience. Unheralded, the Chicago singer came to Jacksonville and in a varied program her voice, which is a pure lyric soprano, proved a delightful surprise and she entirely captivated her hearers.—Times Union, Jacksonville, Fla.

Mrs. Marcusson has a lovely voice and a most gracious personality; indeed, it would be difficult to name a singer who can more deftly and logically interpret a widely ranging program, nor are there many who have such charming voices or such control of their resources.—Music News, Chicago, Ill.

One of the most enjoyable musical treats of the year was the recital by Mme. Brune-Marcusson, who has a voice of great delicacy and wonderful range. Mme. Marcusson's variety in her program was one of the charming features of the evening and her voice was one of unusual beauty.—University News, Atlanta, Ga.

Cook's Orchestra Captures Wichita

Wichita heard Will Marion Cook's Syncopated Orchestra for the first time Monday night, and capitulated before the seductive harmony dispensed by the aggregation of dusky musicians. Ragtime jazz, plantation melodies and songs of the south have been heard here before, but never as they were presented by Cook's performers in Arcadia. Opening with America, the double quartet followed with "Swing Along," one of Cook's own compositions, and the applause which followed this number was thunderous. It is hard to say which number scored the biggest hit. William Dover set a mark for all other trombonists to shoot at, and Archie Bell proved that he is the last word in drummers. James A. Lillard's rendition of "Mammy" was exquisite and called for an encore. To show its versatility the orchestra ran the gamut from Dvorak's "Humoresque" to the latest dance music. The Negro Sermon by J. William Coleman, accompanied by the voices of the orchestra, was one of the cleverest things heard in this city in years.—Wichita Eagle, Tuesday, September 30, 1919.

Community Singing in Houston

It was estimated that 4,000 voices rose in song at Hermann Park last night under the leadership of Roscoe Snyder of the War Camp Community Service. Mass singing, judging from the interest shown at the Labor Day celebration, is an established institution in Houston now. It came in with the war and often found people too choked with tears and anxiety to do their best, but with the passing of the shadow there has come an exultant note and a bouyancy into the community singing of the people which signifies that it is enjoyed and that it will become a custom at last.

Organized labor's recognition of the pleasure to be had from mass singing at its Labor Day celebration proved one of the most popular things on the program.

"Did they sing?" W. E. Carroll was asked, and he replied: "Did they sing? Well, they certainly sounded as if they were singing. They made the woods ring."

The band led, of course, and Roscoe Snyder's assistants passed leaflets through the crowd with the words printed on them. Just at first there was a little hesitancy in the manner of the crowds, but Roscoe Snyder made them sing, all 4,000 of them, and it was estimated that at least that many persons were grouped about the leader's stand. It is not likely that Mr. Snyder has had a more severe test put on his ability as a leader of public singing than when he faced that crowd of picnickers at Hermann Park last night. And seldom has he found greater inspiration. He rose to the occasion with the sang froid of a born song leader and the crowd met him honestly and squarely half way.

They sang at Hermann Park last night as no crowd has ever sung in Houston before and hereafter it will be no difficult matter to promote mass singing in this city. Who knows but this may be the forerunner of artistic pageantry and al fresco operettas at Hermann Park, where the setting is so suitable for such events?—Houston (Tex.) Chronicle.

ALTHOUSE TELLS OF DIFFICULTIES CONFRONTING YOUNG ARTISTS AT METROPOLITAN

In the course of a recent interview Paul Althouse, the only American tenor who has sung leading roles at the Metropolitan Opera House without previous experience abroad, was asked what his personal impressions were of the treatment that young American artists receive at the Metropolitan. So much rot has been written on this subject that it is illuminating to read the opinion of one who knows as quoted here: "The young artist who has had no routine work is greatly hampered in going on at the Metropolitan, but through no fault of the management. It is tremendously difficult to enter the field with experienced artists, to challenge comparison with those who have been schooled in the operatic atmosphere for years, people who have tradition. Yet the young artist who seeks to appear at the Metropolitan naturally challenges such comparison. And the great trouble with most of our young singers is that they are not content to work patiently in obscure parts until they have acquired a background. They are too much inclined to run to Mr. Gatti-Casazza with complaints that they are not being fairly treated. When I went on at the Metropolitan first I had the good fortune to have Mr. Toscanini as my conductor in 'Boris.' And any one who has learned a role under Mr. Toscanini's baton has had a liberal education. But it took work of the hardest kind, desperately hard, to fill the gaps in my operatic education which were there through lack of routine work in opera. That is why I say that the young artist would much better content himself with working in small companies before he aspires to a Metropolitan appearance. Too many young singers are inclined to think that a Metropolitan engagement 'makes them.' It doesn't. Nothing makes a singer but brains, a good voice, good musicianship and hard work."

"SHANEWIS" GIVEN BY GERTRUDE POLK AT AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

Recognizing the fact that the opera, "Shanewis," by Charles Wakefield Cadman, is not only a beautiful work in itself, but also that it is highly significant as to place in the development of music in America—and further, that it is bound to have a big vogue in the immediate future, Miss Gertrude Jeanette Polk of the American Conservatory faculty has taken the trouble to prepare an operalogue arrangement of it, and, with the collaboration of her brother, Henry Polk, a very expert and musical pianist, she presents this in a way to give unalloyed delight to all hearers. Her style is definitely of the salon rather than the big concert hall, but she was, on last Saturday afternoon, thoroughly satisfactory in Kimball Hall, where she appeared before a large audience under the auspices of the American Conservatory.

Miss Polk has thoroughly familiarized herself with the story and the text and has made a combination of them for reading purposes which holds the audience to close attention throughout the hour of reading and leaves each member of it with a very definite idea of what the opera really is and with as definite a decision to hear the work in entirety at the first opportunity.

The story, as Music News readers have been told before, is thoroughly American and is as exhilarating as it is colorful.

To the attractive monologuing of this story Henry Polk adds the charm of a thoroughly delightful and wholly authentic piano background.

Not often has any one been able to so completely assimilate an opera and to coordinate its music with the speaking voice as Mr. Polk has done in this case.

The whole idea is delightful, and the entire presentment of it by the Polks equally so.

Between the two scenes on Saturday afternoon Bernice Schalker, contralto, came forward and presented the two big arias belonging to the part of Shanewis (one of them being the "Spring Song of the Robin Woman") with splendid vocal effect and a complete understanding of musical and dramatic values.

Miss Schalker has fine personality and a most unusual voice and her assistance in this fine program was thoroughly admirable.

A HUMOROUS EPISODE IN SCHUMANN-HEINK'S CONCERT TOUR

Frank La Forge, the well-known composer of so many beautiful songs, who also acts as accompanist for Mme. Schumann-Heink, has many amusing incidents to relate in connection with their joint concert tours. "One of the funniest things I remember," related Mr. La Forge to a representative of the New York Morning Telegraph, "took place in Twin Falls. Madame was giving a recital, and we were on the platform, all ready to begin, when she signaled to an attendant to bring a chair. Was she tired? Did she want it to lean on? Was she going to sit down? No, she was not going to sit down. She carried the chair to the edge of the platform and signaled to a woman who sat in the front row beneath, her enraptured face peering from between two solemn babies who nearly smothered her. When this woman finally understood madame's kindly intent, the chair was set in the aisle and, with the plump babies enthroned thereon, the concert proceeded without further interruption."

KATE DRAPER OPENS A STUDIO IN OKLAHOMA CITY

Miss Kate Draper, teacher of voice, has opened a studio at Oklahoma City, Okla.

Miss Draper has every qualification for great success, and her preparation for her work has been exceptionally thorough.

She is a graduate of Knox Conservatory, at Galesburg, Ill., has done normal study in Chicago and, in New York, has studied with Oscar Saenger and Romualdo Sapio, a former conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Kratt — Theodore Kratt, baritone, who was a church singer in Portland, Ore., and had a successful voice studio there the past year, is now in Chicago studying with Burton Thatcher at the Chicago Musical College. Mr. Kratt studied, previous to his Portland residence, with Dr. Fery Lulek in the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. He has been appointed soloist and director of music at the Humboldt Park Baptist Church, and has, in that vicinity, already secured a large class of vocal students.

proving the erection of Memorial Buildings in honor of the men who fell in the World War, for which the War Camp Community Service is campaigning. The organization as a body expressed particular approval of the plans to incorporate in every Memorial House built special provisions for musical entertainments.

Fully six hundred organizations are affiliated with the Federation with a total membership of over 200,000. The Federation is one of the thirty-one bodies which make up the National Council of Women, and as the resolution will be passed, it will reach approximately ten millions of women.

The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas, memorial clubhouses containing an auditorium for music have received official indorsement by all of the great organizations of the women of America, therefore be it

Resolved, That the National Federation of Music Clubs heartily approves these plans and expresses its earnest desire that so worthy a movement be furthered in every way.

According to a statement by Walter Story, who is traveling about the country showing various plans and drawings for model Community Houses, one hundred and forty-one cities of the United States have asked for Memorial Buildings and will soon start erection of these. And in every one of the plans submitted for community approval there is a large auditorium or music room with the proper acoustic properties for musical programs. "The trend of the times and the desire of the general public," according to Mr. Story, "is for a memorial that shall be of value to the living and the avoidance of the crop of such memorials as sprang up all over the country after the Civil War. The result of the patriotic impulse to honor the hero dead was a tidal wave of cemetery monuments all over the land, somewhat enlarged and furnished with artillery and proper ammunition."

The monument is passe now and the memorial idea is for a practical building that honors the boys and carries their memory by giving pleasure to the living; a building where the community may gather for play, recreation or study, in that common democracy that our hero dead died to save.

Knowing through experience that there is a great scarcity of students for the unusual orchestra instruments such as the oboe, Walter Damrosch has established in New York three Oboe Scholarships and in explanation of his action has written the following letter:

During the thirty-four years that I have been Musical Director of the New York Symphony Orchestra nearly all of our first-class wind instrument players have been men of foreign birth and education. This has not been because our American boys are musically less talented than Europeans, but because European governments have for generations intelligently fostered the study of orchestral instruments by not only giving talented students their tuition free under the best masters but by even subsidizing the best of them in giving them an annual stipend toward their living expenses while studying.

Students in America have had no such governmental assistance and have therefore in many instances been compelled by bread necessity to break off these studies and to begin to earn their living before they had attained the highest artistry and technical proficiency.

The time has come when, from patriotic reasons, we ought to equalize these conditions, and as our government has no department of fine arts and no funds for such purposes, it remains for intelligent private initiative to bring about better conditions.

We have today twelve subsidized symphony orchestras in this country. There should be one hundred; but we have hardly at present enough first-class musicians to properly furnish all those already in existence. This is especially true of the oboe and other wood-wind instruments.

In order to make a beginning and encourage those financially better equipped than I to "go and do likewise," I herewith offer to endow three oboe scholarships for three years.

From Harmony, Ill., the Rev. Max Stommel writes as follows:

Music News: The success of our churches is in their leading us into better realizations, so that I trust you may allow my views—also considering that I have had some musical experience abroad as well as at home—on the All-American Exposition you very aptly criticize, although I think the German day had little to do with its failure, but that lack of public interest indicated confidence of Americanization in that direction. Rather ascribe the failure to neglect to "Chicagoize" this type of Americanization.

In juxtaposition to your timely words is a brief by Mr. Schaefer, which reminds me of my having lived in his neighborhood when he was designing and managing a vacant lot recreation that the authorities made reference to for extension throughout the city. Here Mr. Schaefer introduced New England games, costuming and suitable songs, by his sole initiative overcoming with orderly control the juvenile rowdyism that was occasioning opposition to children playing so freely about. Also consider the Autumn carnivals of our business people. Chicago is full of material like this, which the All-American Exposition should have brought together in a splendid climax. Instead it only presents a few dances and football games that may be found on every hand, even in our Sunday schools, and presents only a few gingerly music selections where music of all kinds should have been continuous.

The underlying fault seems to be that professional artists are advocating a reserve of their abilities in the absence of due importance, trifles for opportunities they underestimate.

I wish to impress that, on the contrary, the artist, orator or musician who puts his best efforts into every occasion, no matter how insignificant, though he hold forth to an empty barn, is steadily building up powers for that day when nature will confirm them, an inevitable turning point, after which he will command his support instead of being at its whimsical beck and call, or resorting to various tricks to secure just dues.

A paper of your influence can do incalculable good in spurring on the talent that falters because it is not seen how near the goal of attainment really is.

(Signed) REV. MAX STOMMEL.

The War Camp Community Service of New York (1 Madison Avenue) sends us the following account of an experiment in musical appreciation which was tried out successfully in connection with the New York school for training volunteer song leaders:

When Cecil Fanning gave his recent recital in New York the War Camp Community Service arranged to have the members of its New York training school for volunteer song leaders attend the recital in a body as a mark of respect to the baritone, who served the organization for a year as a volunteer in the capacity of entertainment and singing director at Columbus, Ohio. Previous to the recital the members of the class were given a talk on the composers represented on Mr. Fanning's program and on the different styles of composition. They were asked to record their impressions as to the recital that they might compare notes at the next meeting.

At this time there was an exchange of views, not only as to which numbers had been sung the best by Mr. Fanning, but as to the compositions themselves, not only from the point of melodic beauty but from that of the fidelity with which the composers had reflected the moods of the various texts. Distinction was made between the numbers which were ballads and those that were true art songs. The experience was of value not only as an aid to musical appreciation but in that it re-enforced the critical faculty with which the future community singing leaders could judge the songs submitted to them for performance.

And, for the final letter, just a quotation from a personal note received from Elizabeth Battle Bintliff, A. M., of Ripon, Wis.:

I find every week many items in Music News which are very interesting, and your sentiments expressed in your editorials about "something for nothing" and the Americanization of music in this country meet with my hearty approbation.

VOTICHENKO TO PLAY AT OPENING CONCERT OF MATINEE MUSICAL CLUB OF PHILADELPHIA

The Matinee Musical Club of Philadelphia will present a series of unusually attractive programs for this, the twenty-fifth year of its club life. The opening concert will be given on Tuesday, November 4, at 2:30 o'clock in the ballroom of the Bellevue-Stratford. Sasha Votichenko will present a program of Russian music on the tympanon, of which he is the only master. The program will include old Russian music and selections from Votichenko's own compositions which will be given in costume and with Russian settings. Albert Gregorovich Janpolski, the eminent Russian baritone, will sing a number of characteristic Russian folk songs, some of which date back to the time of Peter the Great and Mlle. Louis Le Cai will conclude the program with a quaint Russian character dance.

A UNIQUE COMPOSITION

"Of a Certain Green-Eyed Monster," a short jealousy song by Lynnel Reed, is rapidly becoming known among singers as a successful encore number, being indorsed and sung by Edna de Lima and Cecil Arden, the Methopolitan artists, while Agnes Kountz Dederich, a Toledo soprano on tour through the East, is using it on all her programs.

"In a Bedouin Camp," for violin, of which the Musical Courier said, "It is so oriental in its harmonic and rhythmic details that it might have been smuggled into America with a sack of Arabian spice," is being played by Zetta Gay Whitson of Chicago, Charlotte Dennett Williams of Oberlin, and by Florence Austin.

FARIBAULT, MINN.

Carol Robinson, Chicago pianist, gave the following beautiful program, with great success, on October 6 at St. Mary's Hall:

SERGE PROKOFIEFF'S NEW OPERA, "THE LOVE FOR THREE ORANGES," TO BE GIVEN WORLD PREMIERE EARLY IN THE CHICAGO OPERA SEASON

As there has been much speculation in regard to Serge Prokofieff's new opera, "L'Amour des Trois Oranges" (The Love for Three Oranges), which will be given a world premiere early in this season, the Chicago Opera Association has issued a summary of its fantastic story, which is given below:

In the belief that the opera will prove a sensation, everything possible has been done to make it a success. Boris Annisfeld, fantastic Russian painter, is to provide the scenery and costumes, and Adolf Bolm, master extraordinary of Russian choreographic art, who first came to this country with the Diaghileff ballet, is to look after the stage management. These three Russians have been in constant communication and believe that this production will prove artistically and scenically one of the greatest operas ever performed.

SERGE PROKOFIEFF

The opera is in four acts and ten scenes and has a prologue. The words are by Serge Prokofieff, from an old Spanish play by Carlo Gozzi. The French translation is by Mlle. Vera Janacapulos and the author. In brief, it is a fantastic and picturesque portrayal of an imaginary fairy tale which takes place in an imaginary kingdom, with the aid of the Magician Tchelio, protector of the King, and Fata Morganna, sorceress and protector of Leandre, the Minister of State. Leandre aspires to the throne, with the connivance of Clarice, the King's niece, and is therefore seeking the overthrow of the hypochondriac Prince.

In the prologue, a herald enters and proclaims that "The King of Clubs" is in despair. His son and beloved child is suffering from an incurable hypochondria.

At the opening of the first act the King is surrounded by an army of doctors armed with all manner of instruments. He asks them to explain just what is the matter with his son, and they reply that he has every conceivable illness—headaches, indigestion, nervous troubles, neuralgia, insomnia, enfeebled eyesight. They declare that laughter can alone cure his son. And the story which follows deals with the efforts of Trouffaldino, the court clown, to make him laugh by means of weird dancing, grotesque pageants and entertainments; a mysterious cabalistic game of cards played below ground, where Fata Morganna and the Magician Tchelio deal the cards of Fate and the sorceress wins, exultingly, the right to dispose of the Prince; the secret plottings of Leandre and Clarice; Fata Morganna's interference with the success of Trouffaldino's efforts to make the Prince laugh; her bewitching of the Prince, whom she sends in search of "The Three Oranges"; his travels with Trouffaldino through lonely desert regions; their encounter with the giant Cook, guardian of "The Three Oranges" at Creonte's palace; their escape with "The Three Oranges"; their desperate thirst as they return through the desert; the mystery of "The Three Oranges," which grow and grow, and which are found to contain three princesses; the last minute effort of Fata Morganna to foil all by turning the newly found Princess Ninetta into a rat; the fury of Tchelio at this miserable trick; the anger of the King; a last effort on the part of Fata Morganna, and then the final triumph of the Prince. In brief, a fairy tale like which none other in grand opera.

One novelty introduced by Prokofieff is one group of Tragics and Comics and Lyrics, who come running on to the stage at critical moments to extol, each in turn, the merits of their respective arts. They are kept in order by the "Ridicules," an amusing group, representative of the People of the Theater, who are well intrenched in two towers on either side of the stage, from which they can view all proceedings and from which they can emerge to sweep away the Tragics, the Comics and the Lyrics. At times they even emerge to come to the rescue of our Prince himself, as, for example, in the desert scene when the Princess is dying of thirst and they rush on with a pail of water and so save the situation.

LILLIAN WIESIKE

Mme. Wiesike, who has just been added to the faculty of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, is a soprano of beautiful voice.

Her prestige as an artist is the resultant of a comprehensive and illuminating home and foreign training and a just and generous acknowledgment by European and American audiences of her possession and full command of such qualities of voice, interpretation and intelligent musical sense which go to make a finished and routined artist.

As a singer Mme. Wiesike has proven herself a highly creditable exponent of such vocal educators as Mme. A. E. Schoen-Rine, acknowledged the leading exponent of the far-famed Viardot-Garcia method; Coenraad V. Bas, Bernhard, Irrgang, and Frank Rumpel. In dramatic action she received her training from Felix Dahn.

Liszt Anniversary Recital

"The first of this season's morning recitals in Ziegfeld Theater was given yesterday. The offering was a program of piano music presented by Dai Buell, a young player who comes from Boston and who, noting the fact of October 22 being the anniversary of Liszt's birth, arranged her selections in manner designed to honor the memory of the great Hungarian. She chose for performance the B minor Sonata and the Thirteenth Hungarian Rhapsody, the Liapounow 'Elegy in Memory of Franz Liszt,' the Schumann 'Papillons,' and the Intermezzo and Finale from 'The Carnival Jest.' Miss Buell is a pianist of good abilities. Her fingers are well trained and are swift and sure; her pedaling is neat and judicious; she has appreciation and taste in the employment of dynamic contrasts, and her interpretations disclose careful study and preparatory thought."—W. L. Hubbard, Chicago Tribune.

"Dai Buell, the poetic American pianist, opened the Wednesday morning recitals at the Ziegfeld Theater, given under the direction of Carl D. Kinsey, yesterday morning with a commemorative piano recital. Her program, given on the anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt, was made up of compositions of the great Hungarian composer and of his contemporary, Robert Schumann, and as a tribute to Liszt, the Russian author Liapounow was also represented with an 'Elegie en Memoire de Francois Liszt.' Since the days when Arthur Friedheim, one of the greatest of Liszt's pupils, first performed the big B minor Sonata by Liszt in Chicago this work has become one of the more important pieces in the repertory of piano virtuosos, and Miss Buell's interpretation of it was marked quite individually, so as to bring forth its poetic points more than the larger dramatic sweep which was accented by Friedheim. Miss Buell has all the accomplishments and qualities of a very fine pianist. She has imagination, poetic insight, and a technic which is adequate to do justice to the important pieces which she performs. Her playing of the Schumann 'Papillons' and an Intermezzo and Finale from the same composer's 'Carnival Jest from Vienna,' were given with lightness and grace, and contrasted with the deeper musical message of the Liszt Sonata. The Hungarian Rhapsody No. 13 closed the recital."—Maurice Rosenfeld, Chicago Daily News.

"One hardly expects dimples in a Boston pianist, but Dai Buell has them, and right where a pianist needs them the most—in her elbows. She gave Liszt a very charming birthday party yesterday, when she opened the Carl Kinsey Wednesday morning series of concerts. This was Miss Buell's second appearance in Chicago, and this time she essayed to show us something about the stupendous B minor Sonata of Liszt. It is an open question whether this should ever be attempted by a woman—it is so essentially masculine. But Miss Buell invested it with considerable beauty."—Henriette Weber, Chicago Herald-Examiner.

"The new season of Carl D. Kinsey recitals was begun yesterday morning at the Ziegfeld Theater by Dai Buell, an earnest pianist who has visited Chicago variously in the past. Miss Buell is not only earnest, but industrious and talented. It is a feat calculated to test not only musical intelligence but memory and muscle as well, to learn the B minor Sonata. Some may question whether the Sonata has enough in it to make it worth the trouble, but, at any rate, the performer is entitled to the credit of having performed a difficult deed."—Edward C. Moore, Chicago Daily Journal.

"The Carl Kinsey recitals at Ziegfeld Theater usually have the raison d'etre of offering something worth while. The enterprise checked off its sixtieth reason to be yesterday, when Miss Dai Buell, who was heard here about two years ago under the same auspices, gave us a program to convince us that our remembrance of certain qualities had not been at fault. Miss Buell is indeed the possessor of feminine pianistic talents which leave her hearers pleasantly impressed. She charms more than satisfies, and that is the secret of her success. Therefore all music requiring grace and elegance of execution, daintiness and velvety smoothness of touch found her thoroughly equipped, as in parts of Schumann's 'Papillons.'"—Herman Devries, Chicago Evening American.

THEODORE SPIERING, A DISTINGUISHED ARTIST

Theodore Spiering is internationally recognized as violinist, conductor and pedagogue of the highest distinction. As a boy protege, his first appearances were in his native city of St. Louis. After preliminary training with his father, and later with Henry Schradieck at Cincinnati, four years were spent in Berlin under the celebrated Joachim at the Royal Hochschule. The lad, now twenty-one, returned to the United States, bearing with him a highly complimentary letter of introduction from Joachim to Theodore Thomas, then conductor of the orchestra bearing his name in Chicago. Spiering became a member of that organization, making his first solo appearance in 1893, in Chicago, playing the seldom-heard Schumann Fantasia. About the same time he founded the Spiering Quartet, an organization which for twelve seasons was one of the most important factors contributing to the entire West. His indefatigable energy found a further outlet in his pedagogic work. He was a member of that brilliant Chicago group of that time which included Bendix, Jacobson and Listemann. It is well known that Spiering has since become one of the most renowned and sought-for teachers in the musical world today.

In 1902 he won his first recognition as conductor in a series of six festivals in important cities adjacent to Chicago, and in the same year saved from abandonment two performances of the Savage Grand Opera Company, whose conductor had been suddenly taken ill. "Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" were thus conducted by Spiering without preparation and with but an hour's notice.

A signal honor from the French Government was bestowed upon Mr. Spiering in 1905, when the decoration of "Officer d' Academio" was conferred upon him for his work in introducing French music, notably chamber music, in the United States. Mr. Spiering transferred his further activities to Europe that year, making Berlin his headquarters. Extended concert tours through Germany, Holland and England followed. He won high distinction as a violinist, and it was especially his sincerity of interpretation, aside from his extraordinary technical ability, that commended him.

In 1909 the late Gustav Mahler engaged him, while in Vienna, as concertmaster for the New York Philharmonic Society. It is well known how, during the illness of Mahler, Mr. Spiering conducted the final seventeen concerts of the season of 1910-1911. Although he won signal success and was enthusiastically acclaimed, apparently he was not eligible, because of his nativity, when the post was made vacant by the death of Mr. Mahler. Consequently Mr. Spiering again expatriated himself in order to enjoy the greater opportunities beyond the Atlantic. During the seasons which followed (immediately preceding the outbreak of the war), his series of concerts with the Philharmonic and Bluethner orchestras in Berlin were acknowledged important institutions by the entire Berlin press. The list of first performances under his baton included such works as the symphonies by Enesco, Ducas and Graener, and other symphonic works by Delius, Reger, V. Hausegger, Dohnanyi, Reznicek, Casella, Hadley and others. During this same period Mr. Spiering was also associated as artistic adviser with the People's Stage in Berlin.

Last season Mr. Spiering was especially engaged by Winthrop Ames to conduct Erie De Lamarter's music for the New York production of Maeterlinck's "The Betrothal."

THEODORE VAN HEMERT, DISTINGUISHED DUTCH BARITONE AND IMPRESARIO

Theodore Van Hemert, the distinguished Dutch baritone and impresario, who has delighted New York audiences in the past years with his beautiful voice and interesting interpretation of French songs, which he sings with exquisite diction and the proper delivery, unfortunately so rare nowadays in the rendition of French songs, and who is equally at home in Italian or Spanish arias, as well as in the German lied, announces the debut recital in Aeolian Hall of Josephine Lucchese, a soprano of San Antonio, Texas. Miss Lucchese will sing an ambitious program of Italian, French, Spanish and American songs, and several operatic arias with flute obligato. Mr. Van Hemert predicts a glorious future for Miss Lucchese, who, he claims, will rival some of the celebrated stars of a past age, of which Patti was the last. Although Mr. Van Hemert is in the managerial field, he has by no means given up his own art, and our New York representative informs us that Mr. Van Hemert contemplates giving in the near future a series of recitals of some of the old classical masters, such as Schubert and Schumann and some of the modern French Composers, among which Mr. Van Hemert considers Debussy to be without a peer. His New York friends are looking forward with interest towards these recitals, the dates and programs of which will be announced within the near future.

Arnold Volpe and His Symphony at the Hippodrome

The same orchestra appeared last summer at the Stadium under the leadership of Arnold Volpe. Through the generosity of several wealthy patrons of art the masses, or, rather, the music lovers, will be afforded opportunity to listen to concerts at popular prices, the highest not exceeding a dollar. And when exorbitant prices are eliminated the musical events will always succeed in attracting comfortable numbers of music lovers—witness the audience of Sunday afternoon, October 19, at the Hippodrome. The musicians are recruited from the Metropolitan, Philharmonic and Symphony Society of New York. Mr. Volpe, it must be admitted, always assembles good forces, and as for the offerings, he knows what the masses like. If the above qualities could be combined with the knowledge of directing the compositions, no doubt he would be ranked among the good conductors. He seems to be able to control the strings, but he permits the brass instruments to play louder than the score requires, and at times the rhythm is faulty. "Anitra's Dance" and "In the Home of the Mountain King," from "Peer Gynt" Suite by Grieg, were much applauded. The numbers consisted of "Oberon," overture by Weber; "Les Preludes," by Liszt, and overture, "1812," by Tchaikowsky.

Sascha Jacobsen, violinist, and Amparito Farrar were the soloists. The violinist played Bruch's "Concerto" in G Minor with the accompaniment of the orchestra.

In lyric passages Mr. Jacobsen disclosed a beautiful and clear tone; in fact, an improvement over the former seasons. His technic, though efficient, leaves yet something to desire. He employs some effort in difficult passages, but he is worthy of attention and deserves more credit than many of the heralded violinists.

Amparito Farrar was heard by the writer for the first time, and he is glad to record that this American soprano is one who should be given more generous support from our leading musical organizations. She possesses an excellent lyric voice; especially the medium is commendable, while the upper, if not powerful, is of excellent quality. She sings with intelligence, and in her rendition of the "Jewel Song" from "Faust" she also gave proof of an excellent French enunciation. I do not believe that Miss Farrar is adapted for dramatic arias like the one from "Manon Lescaut" (Puccini), which she gave as an encore.

There was applause for everybody, and these popular concerts will prove interesting and worthy of patronage if the standard is not cheapened. The low prices should be a stimulus.

Gabriella Besanzoni Breaks Contract and Must Pay $13,000

According to the foreign press, Besanzoni, the famous contralto, who is to appear next month at the Metropolitan, must pay her impresario, Mocchi, $13,000 for failure to fulfill an engagement. The civil courts of Rome awarded Mr. Mocchi this amount because the temperamental singer preferred to appear at the Iris Theater of Mexico instead of the Lolises of Buenos Aires. This news is to be credited to Lo Spettacolo, a daily musical journal of Rome.

Roda Marzio Achieves Success at Elizabeth, N. J.

The New Jersey papers are speaking enthusiastically about Miss Marzio's appearance at Elizabeth, N. J., on Sunday, October 19, when the Lyric Federation of New York featured her in a performance of "Cavalleria." The young singer interpreted her role of Santuzza with unusual success. It was expected especially by those who heard her recently at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, when she appeared in the same part.

This young singer is a lyric dramatic soprano and has studied with Mr. Buzzi Peccia, and notwithstanding that she has received all her training in New York she is very efficient in her interpretations. She is the possessor of an excellent soprano voice and is an intelligent actress.

"Geisha" at the Park Theater

The American Society of Singers revived "Geisha" on the evening of October 24. A large audience applauded and made the principals repeat the charming airs by Sidney Jones. Geisha was interpreted by Lady Tsen Mei with satisfactory results. Frank Moulan was Wun-Hi, and it may be added that he was the star of the evening in his splendid impersonation of the Chinese. The chorus was adequate, and Mr. John McGhie made the music worthy of being revived. This conductor has proven his versatility not only in Gilbert and Sullivan, but in other light operas. With his baton he compensates often the shortcomings of the cast. The lighting ought to be improved, but the scenery is adequate.

Music at the Rialto

The week ending October 26 the musical program consisted of excerpts from "La Traviata," played by the orchestra with much effect under the versatile leader, Mr. Hugo Riesenfeld. I never heard a cello sound so white as that of Mr. Paulo Gruppe in the execution of Popper's "Vito," and this much to my surprise, as Mr. Gruppe is an excellent musician and cellist, usually.

Judson Howes, tenor, displayed more throatiness than voice in his singing of Guy D'Hardelot's "Because."

Mr. Depew played on the organ "Vox Angelica," by C. W. Henrich.

Opening of the Star Opera Company Causes Riot

New York's national conscience always awakens at the psychological moment. Two hours before the doors of the Lexington Opera House were opened masses of soldiers, sailors and civilians assembled near by and hissed every ticket buyer and the taxis stopping at the opera house. Fearing rioting, the Mayor provided police protection. For several blocks mounted police and whole platoons of policemen were on the lookout for those who might cause disturbance. Many battles were recorded. Civilians and all who resented the presentations in the German language displayed their sentiments openly. When the police attempted to scatter the crowds the latter threw glass and stones at them. No passerby was allowed to cross the roads to the Lexington Opera House without the identification card of a newspaper or a ticket of admission. Music News having taken a stand against the performances in German, has not been deprived of admission. It must be admitted that the writer was courteously granted the usual press seats.

Naturally, inside the house besides the leading figures on the stage many were talking in German. I noted in the audience many of the German-American teachers who cry in your presence, "Long live America," but behind your back they show their contempt. I stayed only a few minutes, and found the leading lady to be the possessor of an agreeable voice, while the tenor sang throaty and employed head tones. They sang "A Night in Granada." I should have liked to see Mr. Theodore Spiering conducting, as he is recognized as an able leader.

By the time this appears in print the Lexington plus the Star Opera Company may be closed. Mayor Hylan disapproved of the performances, therefore they were given without his consent. Action was deferred because of the Mayor's inability to reach the Corporation Counsel. One thing must not be overlooked—save for the critics no American entered the Lexington Opera House. Vox Populi must win in the end. Those who have defied us by presenting German operas in the original thought that it is not too premature to have them performed in America in a language which reminds of a little corner in Prussia. They were wrong in counting on a lack of national conscience.

EWARD JOHNSON, AMERICAN TENOR, BECOMES ITALIAN IDOL. HE WILL SING IN FIRST PRODUCTION OF "LA NAVE" IN AMERICA. HE PRAISES WORK OF TITA SCHIPA

The now famous American tenor of the Chicago Opera Association, Edward Johnson, better known in Italy as Eduardo di Giovanni, slipped into New York a day or two ago with a modesty unusual in tenors. He had arrived at Boston on Sunday—on Columbus Day—by the Canopic, and had succeeded in evading the interviewers, so that his arrival at New York was unheralded and unrecorded.

He is a young, alert, well-set-up man, with a strong, agreeable face, and might be anything but a singer—say, a senator or a man of affairs. A seven years' residence in Italy, during which he has become, perhaps, the best known and most popular tenor in the peninsula, has not altered his American ideals or point of view, for, although born in Canada, he had become thoroughly Americanized by a long residence in the United States prior to his departure for Europe.

After studying under Lombardi and other teachers, who were unanimous in praising the fine quality of his voice, his strong musical instinct and rare dramatic capability, he appeared at La Scala, Milan, rather more than five years ago, in "Parsifal," and made an instantaneous and remarkable success, one which gave him an unequivocal position as an operatic artist of the first rank. From that position he has not lapsed, but, on the contrary, has gone on from strength to strength.

Edward Johnson created the part of Marco Gratico in Montemezzi's "La Nave," at La Scala, Milan, last November, and received not only the enthusiastic encomiums of the audience, but also the congratulations and thanks of the composer and the librettist, D'Annunzio.

It is a rare and refreshing thing to hear one operatic artist praising the work of another, but Edward Johnson waxes enthusiastic with reference to his colleague in the Chicago Opera Association, Tita Schipa, who is expected shortly to arrive from Italy, where he may be said to divide or share popularity with the American tenor. Schipa sings not only with exquisite taste and refinement, says Johnson, but he can perform tricks or stunts with his voice which compel the astonishment and admiration of even the best trained singers, such as swelling and diminishing again and again on his highest notes without a suggestion of effort, and leaving his hearers with the impression that he has still a great deal in reserve.

In a city such as New York, where the recitals come thick and fast, it is impossible to look after the entire list of announced recitals, and we urge again that recital givers, especially Chicagoans appearing in New York, will make it a point to see that announcements, programs and tickets are sent to this office invariably.

Hall, and, as is always the case here, this splendid pianist drew a capacity audience and was greeted with unbounded enthusiasm.

His program was a fine one and was held to fine technical and interpretative values throughout. The daily press was loud in commendation of this popular pianist.

Cecil Burleigh Plays His Own Compositions at Aeolian Hall

If my memory does not fail me, this was Mr. Burleigh's debut in New York as a violinist. It must have been ingratiating to the player to see himself cheered and applauded not only as a violinist but as a composer also by a packed house on the evening of October 24 at Aeolian Hall. That an audience can be so stirred by an American program is one of the significant facts of this recital. Mr. Burleigh for the greater part of his program played his own compositions, and if his colleagues of the violin world will more generally consider these splendid compositions written by Cecil Burleigh, some foreign compositions would not find such generous place on the programs. All the Burleigh short works were encored because of the public's spontaneous applause. "Coloring," "At the Brookside," "Hills," and "The North Wind" were redemanded not because they emanate from an American pen, but for the reason that they are all worthy pieces, musically speaking. To analyze each and every one would be a difficult task after one hearing only, but one with a musical ear must reckon in them the music of a man who has talent for melody, gift for technical construction, and original ideas. They are worthy of being on the program of every performer. The writer entered the hall when Mr. Burleigh was playing his own "Second Concerto," with piano (Francis Moore). This work must be reheard for more analytical comments. And as to his playing Mr. Burleigh has an inspirational tone and a large one, too. Mr. Burleigh plays with repose, and his technic leaves little to be desired. The best work was accomplished in his own compositions, which enlisted also "Old Bruin," "Halloween," "Autumn," and "The Huskers."

He opened his recital with Haendel's Sonata in D Major, and on the third group Bach was featured with a rendition of the "Air." Mr. Burleigh was given a genuine reception—perhaps largely for his gifts as a composer, but as a violinist he will not fail to place himself among the elect.

That American works were for once loudly approved thus may be a good omen for the beginning of a new era of American music.

Hans Hess in Recital

After a chain of recitals and concerts of vocalists, pianists, and violinists, the cello and its player came in for a good share of success. From Chicago to New York is a long way, but when a musician of Mr. Hess' caliber invades the precincts of Aeolian Hall it is worth while to abandon other plans and listen to his instrument. Unfortunately our audiences do not yet appreciate the cello and its manipulator, no matter how big one chances to be. The cello is a celestial instrument; it draws out the music, when handled artistically, of divinity and unknown lands and beauties. I heard Mr. Hess play the Lalo Concerto, D Minor, and it was also my first opportunity to listen to this Chicago musician. The intonation was so admirable for its clarity and beauty that I regretted my inability to listen to more playing. Mr. Hess draws a tone which is large and in fact it went further than the Aeolian Hall's capacity. His tone was smooth, and there were no scratches or dissonant notes characteristic of some cellists. His technic is that of a virtuoso, the agility of going through difficult passages is perhaps secondary to the production of a pure tone, a large and broad intonation. Lalo was not imbued wtih geniality or especial inspiration in the Concerto, but Mr. Hess made the composition more interesting through his musicianly interpretation. The applause of a fair audience surpassed the enthusiasm of—let us say a crowd of five thousand. Following the reception accorded to this able cellist, the "Dream" by Schumann was played as an encore. The cellist opened his program with Marcello's "Sonata" No. 4, followed by Boellman's "Variations Symphoniques," "Kol Nidrei" (Bruch), "Rondo" (Boccherini), "Adaggietto," dedicated by the composer, Loomis, to Mr. Hess, and Popper's "French Village Song." Miss Juul Rosine gave artistic support at the piano.

Jacques Thibaud Plays With the New Symphony Orchestra

Having not received the press courtesy from the management of the New Symphony Orchestra, we are not in a position to comment on Mr. Tribaud's playing on the evening of October 23, when he was the soloist with the New Symphony Orchestra. From reports the French violinist seems to have created a favorable impression at the concert given in Carnegie Hall.

Winifred Byrd Playing Now in California

The brilliant American pianist is filling engagements throughout the State of California. Reports from the coast tend to prove that she is meeting with unusual success. Her appearances this season are numerous and they consist of engagements through the eastern states, South and the coast. On November 9 she has appearance at San Francisco, followed by one on November 13 at Hollywood (Los Angeles). A return engagement will see her again playing at San Francisco on November 18. On November 21 she is to appear at Oakland. The third San Francisco engagement in the lapse of two weeks will be on November 28, when Miss Byrd will appear at San Francisco as soloist with the orchestra of that city. This appearance is set for November 28. During the month of October she created a furor when appearing at the Winthrop College of Rockhill, North Carolina, and at the Queen's College of Charlotte, North Carolina. Some time during the season Miss Byrd will appear as soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. These engagements are proof that the American public is awakening to the fact that our native talents deserve as much encouragement as any of the imported artists because their qualifications, if they do not surpass those of their foreign colleagues, stand just as high in the minds of discriminative audiences.

The Capitol, a new movie house featuring Arthur Pryor's band, soloist, and novel reviews, was inaugurated on the evening of October 24. This house, considered by the

Josephine Lucchese and Theodore Van Hemert Sing for the Universal League

Aware of Miss Lucchese's coming recital of November 23 at Aeolian Hall, I went out of curiosity's sake to listen to her, and can easily predict a successful debut at the Forty-third street concert hall. Advice should not be confused with malicious criticism. Miss Lucchese should have refrained from any appearance until her Aeolian debut, not because of her inferiority, for inferior she is not, but for the simple reason that her November appearance is in all a more important event. I will not analyze Miss Lucchese's voice just now; I will leave that to Mr. De Valdor, but I can speak only in enthusiastic terms of her voice, artistry and personality. There are many singers who express happiness in song because they feel the music. Miss Lucchese is one happy soul who plunges herself into an aria with abandon from the love for music. She delighted a large audience at the Isabella House (190th street and Amsterdam avenue) in a rendition of "Queen of the Night," from Mozart's "Magic Flute." She also sang "Charmant Oiseau," from "The Pearl of Brazil" (Felicien David). Mr. Heidelberg, a flutist, gave the obligato.

The aria from "Sonnambula," by Bellini, plus some ensemble work, viz., "Trio From Lombardi," by Verdi; "Duo From Mireille," by Gounod, and the "Quartet From Rigoletto," by Verdi. Where Mr. Van Hemert, baritone, was cast for the ensemble support he accomplished good results. He also displayed an excellent and agreeable voice in his solo, "Le Cor," by Flegier, better adapted for a basso cantante. The program was a lengthy one and it featured other singers—Frederick Burgy, tenor; Virginia Colemboti, mezzo-contralto; Joan Solger, dancer; Harry William Mahneke, violinist, and Max Liebling, accompanist. This concert was given on Saturday evening, October 25. Other composers featured: Bizet, Diaz, Saint-Saens, Drdla, Nessler, Strauss and Grieg. Do not forget to attend Miss Lucchese's recital.

Giovanni Martinelli and Pasquale Amato Return

It was erroneously announced that the excellent baritone of the Metropolitan Opera House arrived in this country from Italy a month ago, for his actual landing in New York occurred on Saturday afternoon, October 25. On the steamer Verdi also arrived Giovanni Martinelli, the tenor of the Metropolitan. The latter returned after some brilliant appearances at Covent Garden. Both artists are in splendid trim.

Jascha Heifetz, violinist, gave his first recital of the season at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, October 25, before a capacity house, which included some on the platform.

Theaters

"The Dancer," by Edward Locke.

At the Harris Theater Messrs. Lee and J. Shubert present a comedy drama by Edward Locke. The comedy was nil. An incognito admirer pursues, sincerely, a "dancer." They meet (the meeting is the weakest scene of the play), and their marriage follows. You expect that from their meeting. The husband is a Puritan, whose head is filled with prejudice about dancers and their associates. He suspects the dancer's manager to be an ill-thought man, in spite of the fact that the dancing master loved his pupil with the same ardent and honest love as the husband himself. The Puritan's family seems to dislike their relative dancer, "but all is well on the stage." Peace comes by explanation and happiness thereafter. The manager sticks valiantly to his shattered hope that his dancer would separate from the Puritan, but when the latter allows his prejudice to vanish and reconciliation follows Mr. Locke philosophises: "The world is a comedy to those who know, a tragedy to those who feel." He makes the manager utter these words when shaking the hands of the lovers. The first act is weak and rubbish in sentimentality. The second is melodramatic, but more interesting, the denouement is speaking movie scene. The moral of the play? You decide it for yourself. Miss Isabelle Lowe's (as the "dancer") acting was that of a baby, but she had her lucid moments. Mr. Jose Ruben was excellent as the manager. Miriam Elliott, as Elvira, gave us the genuine accent of the Russian girl, and the balance of the cast, if not up to the requirements, at least was adequate.

Leon Rothier and Others Sing for the King and Queen of Belgium

A gala concert was given at the Metropolitan Opera House on the evening of October 25 in honor of the King and Queen of Belgium. Leon Rothier, the popular basso, sang the "Brabanconne" and the royal party applauded enthusiastically. Others who contributed to the musical program: Sergei Rachmaninoff, pianist; Jascha Heifetz, violinist, and Mabel Garrison and Rosa Ponselle, sopranos. The orchestra of the Metropolitan Opera House also rendered several compositions. The house was filled with political and social personalities.

FLORENCE EASTON AN ALL-THE-YEAR-ROUND OPERATIC ARTIST

Consider the case of Florence Easton, prima donna soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, if ever the thought comes that really worth-while artists are not appreciated in this country. To paraphrase the ancient saying, it surely is not a long time between operatic engagements for this gifted diva, for no sooner does she get through with one than another is waiting for her. Scarcely more than a week after the Metropolitan opera season closed last spring, Madame Easton went on tour with the Scotti Opera Company and the moment that closed was on her way to Ravinia Park, Chicago, to sing in the summer season here. And hardly had the echoes of her triumphant "Tosca" and her beautiful "Butterfly" died away when she was back in New York again preparing for a fall tour with the Scotti Opera Company. No sooner does this close than the indefatigable artist will rejoin the Metropolitan for her third season, and thus complete her distinction of an "all-the-year-round operatic singer."

MACBETH RECORDS IN GREAT DEMAND

So great is the demand for Florence Macbeth records that the Columbia Company found it necessary to call her back to New York in the midst of her fall tour to make more. She rushed post haste from Minneapolis, made records, sang at concerts in Reading, Pa., and New York, and then jumped on the next train for Denver, which she reached just in time to appear in recital before a great house.

We have a number of desirable vacancies for young Men and Women with high grade AMERICAN TRAINING. Pianists-Vocalists-Violinists. Teachers must be able to meet keen competition, willing to do more than is ordinarily called for—in short people who are "on the job." These opportunities offer splendid salaries and are altogether exceptional.

The Elderly Person

Said the College Man: "When I went back for commencement and Alumni reunion of my college I brought away something which I hold jubilantly close. I am past the mode of celebrations which inhere in younger men, but I do not quarrel with them. I enjoyed watching the class of 19— going about in kilts, fox-brush, bare knees and bonnets and the older men who paraded as young Jackies. If I sought quieter things it was with an impartial spirit and no censure.

"Someway I longed to get back once more and sit in my old seat in chapel. It will be easy for anyone to smile at such a desire, although I believe more men remember chapel gratefully than otherwise. We had to go twice a day and because of that didn't always want to go, didn't always heed the service, absorb the music, note the beauty and majesty of color and architecture or catch the purpose of it all. Only too often we talked while Prexy read or the hymns were sung. When I saw a lad impatiently twirling his cap, another deliberately studying, and any number not joining in the hymn "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee" of the last chapel service of the term, I knew that some things were as of old. Just the same, the chapel put something into every one of us—certain lines in hymns, certain strains of music, certain texts often spoken, certain subjects in the windows, all associate themselves with the hours, many of them unwilling, spent under those arches when the bell in the gothic tower called us. When I go back I can hear the Prexy of my day saying over and over again what my life experience has proven to me to be true.

"This first morning I went into the building to be alone and surrender to the feeling I've hinted at. Just to whisper to the sanctity hovering about that its precious influence, given so freely, was not lost, did not fall on indifferent shoulders. What I wanted to express might be termed a species of penance, although there was so much affection in my heart that there was more exaltation than prostration in my self-reproach.

"As I rested repentantly in the lovely shades, two gentlemen came into the choir One was the college organist, the other enough like him to be a brother. After a little visit, the latter sat down to the organ and began to play, and his comrade left him there, promising to return soon.

"The music was just what I needed to fill my cup full. Only it soon went beyond me and into something so personal that it left me far in the background. For a man—believing himself alone—poured out his very secret soul in the tones which came from the instrument. His dreams were there—his hardships, his battles, his rise, his helps, his loves, his reverses, his longings, his aspirations, his strain, his anxieties, his hesitations, his impediments, his successes, his perplexities, his visions, his nagging toil, his hopes, his joys, his courage, his faith, his endeavors—but always with an undercurrent of gratitude, as if all of these were equal, all needful in the summing-up and review of his life. I forgot all about myself as the music carried me along with its surge or ebb, flowing with no set form to its rhythm, but embodying truly the emotions which pulsed through the man's mind as he let his hands give utterance to his thoughts.

"Somehow I knew, without being told, that he was no alumnus, was not even a college man at all, but one whose life had been his school and given him insight into the values which made him the kind of a man the music said he was. If he had put it into words, I know he would be saying how he had longed for what the college could have given him of enrichment, how he felt that there was something lacking which remained a thin barrier between him and his complete enjoyment of esthetic pleasure. There wasn't any whine in it, only that tinge of regret for something which could be acquired in but one way, and he had missed.

"I saw him look at and beyond the window above my head, where John La Farge had pictured the Angel of Death leading the Scholar towards inexhaustible light. The window is a memorial to a statesman who was once an humble chap hungering for an education, who taught in a little red schoolhouse not far from this, his college, and who was shot down in the midst of the highest honors his country could crown him with. He was the man who did not doubt when Lincoln was assassinated, but cried out: 'God reigns, and the government at Washington still survives.' The music at the organ caught the heroism of such a spirit and took to itself that sense of companionship which knits the souls of the unafraid. There is no presumption in such association—men know that they have a communion with the knightly when they face life and its problems courageously.

"From this window he turned to its companion, a tribute to the previous president of the college. In this moment of rare loveliness, a blue sky of night is studded with many stars. And David, the King, in his royal robes and crown, sits with head upraised rapturously, as he sings to his harp: 'They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever.' It concentrates all that I have felt since I left college—how exalted ideals in those placed as leaders unmistakably leave their impress on time, place and people. The music thrilled with this mood, saying repeatedly that there were big returns for every well-meant endeavor. Almost as if the man said he had never done a decent thing in his life but that he received tenfold recognition for it in some way, even while insisting that decent things are not done for reward. That living and working and hoping and praying are royal prerogatives to be grasped and held with enthusiastic but firm hands and used not only with personal satisfaction in mind, but the deeper chord of hope that in some way a well-lived life will help other lives with which it contacts. Not alone that, but will sweeten the world by the arch of beauty it unconsciously constructs about itself.

"This was monumental—as if the man had learned through deprivation and discipline to see keenly the value and importance of what was near at hand and sought to weld it all into beauty. As if he could not feel himself ready for wide expansion until he had fully absorbed and beautified his common, daily things—tasks, play, duties. And, thus finding, sharpened and strengthened himself for any new form of beauty, however exalted, which he sought, or which came into his ken with the years or opportunity.

"The playing had that tinge in it—as if it were the outlet of feeling rather than the technical efficiency of the expert. But it did not lack skill and it carried authority. As if it were done with the absolute fidelity to all which a capable man would apply to all he had part in. I easily understood that the player was a business man to whom his music was a safety valve rather than an automobile or golf.

"As I felt that surcharged aroma and what it must have cost to secure it, it seemed to me as if the music became detached from the very organ itself and stole out into the spaces as a sort of wraith, to touch with reverent finger every detail of architecture and decoration. As it lingered with sensitive approval on the grace of each arch, each groin, each graven word, each carved symbol, each marble panel, each modeled flower, each bracing girder, each signet and seal of purpose. It breathed the very air of the lofty spaces of nave and transept, altar and choir, caressing the gilding of the pipes, the carving of the case of the organ, its frame, console and the speaking keys. But longest it hovered about the windows, examples of the purest English coloring. The basis is a silver-like radiance, and against this sheen the figures and designs stand out in effulgent glory and shapely symmetry. A long line of heroes and heroines fill the panels, not at all confined to mortals, not all confined to saints. There is even a wee bit of humor in the presence of Adam and Abel. Since Darwin's day it has been pretty hard for me to pin myself down to a definite Adam as the beginning of things, and I had a sort of shock in seeing him standing there so positively and all alone. The royal list of those who had courage included King Arthur, Charlemagne, Constantine and Saint Cecelia, as well as Galahad and others who are but fiction at best, save as their deeds and souls live in inspiration. About these figures the music wove its presence, confessing an intimacy which made them all part of the man's makeup. There was benediction, too, at the window and tablet memorial for the man whose life had incited the building itself.

"About the chancel the music circled, to salute and mingle with the cherubs in the rounded oriels, these playing on viol, trumpet, saxophone, cymbal and cello—a processional of Fra Angelicos industriously occupied with the tasks in hand and in this way announcing the necessity of each member of the orchestra being stiffly at work and doing a full moiety towards making the harmony complete.

"Later, the music at the organ glided into quieter measures and more caressing airs, as if all the glory and the search for beauty and culture, led by aspiration, led to one simple purpose—to make the intimacies of life the better because the soul had sought to commune with the higher harmonies. It spoke lovingly of home and children, of laughter and cheerful intercourse, of good nature in life's little rubs and patience in the big ones, of gentle words and kindly looks, of consideration and forbearance, of sacrifices cheerfully made, of the joy of rooms filled with books and music and pictures, of flowers in a garden and birds in a tree, of walks in the aisles of the woods, of the radiance of sea and sky, of a love for the good things of the earth, of food and fruit, of the delights of friendship, the purity of companionship with children. The airs were clear, fervent and sweet. They emanated purity of life and thought, a wholesome sincerity and a gladness which cemented everything. As if it found life good and in the love of the day's work the keynote of happiness, in the joys of home a lasting recompense, and knew that love and work were blessed portions foretelling a future which need not be feared, even while unseen—unknown.

"When I left the place it was with a new contentment. I felt as if I had shared in answers to many questions which had been made to the player and that he was completely satisfied with them. The last chord he sounded was full, rich, round, solid, undoubting, confident, grateful, mellow and triumphant."

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

A GALA OCCASION FOR JOHN McCORMACK IN NEW YORK

John McCormack will hold a celebration "all his own" at the New York Hippodrome Sunday night, November 9. He will give his first concert of the season in New York City and will celebrate the tenth anniversary of his American debut, which occurred at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, on the 10th of November, 1909, when he appeared with Madame Tetrazzini in "Traviata." Incidentally this will be his 100th appearance in the Metropolis.

This record is doubly remarkable when it is recorded that Mr. McCormack has never disappointed an audience in this city and such a thing as a vacant seat at any of his concerts has been unknown.

Elaborate arrangements are being made for a fitting celebration of the double event and judging by "past performances," it is expected that quite a number of John's friends and admirers will attend.

Cole—The Rossetter G. Cole Sonata, Op. 8 for piano and violin, was played by Mrs. Rossetter G. Cole and Miss Zetta Gay Whitson before the Musicians' Club of Women on October 27. The accompanist of the afternoon was Miss Alma Birmingham.

Editorial

PASSING COMMENT

There is no review of the concert of the Vatican Choirs, which was given in the Auditorium on Monday evening, in this issue of Music News for the simple reason that this seemed inappropriate.

When the editor was in New York he was told by M. H. Hanson, promoter of the enterprise, that the tour of the choirs was purely for purposes of the church, and that it was not to be regarded as a musical event at all.

No tickets were sent to Music News for the concert, and we have Mr. Hanson's word for it that none were sent to any music paper in any city.

Nevertheless, the event was an interesting one musically, although, as Mr. Hubbard, in the Tribune, remarked in the Sunday's issue, "It would be unduly credulous to believe that they are the choir that sings in the Sistine Chapel."

Every now and again some singer or player from the East puts on a recital in Chicago without sufficient local advertising, secure in the belief that his advertisement in the New York musical journals is sufficient to carry him through the ordeal.

Nothing could be more fallacious. Chicago is a very big musical center; it is intensely independent, and it cares not a hoot what New York or any other Eastern city says of an artist.

Chicago must be told in a direct manner just what it is desired that it should know.

This may be accomplished in three ways, which are here given in order of importance.

(1) Through advertising in the local music papers; (2) Through advertising in the daily press, and (3) through circularizing, window cards, billboards, etc.

A good combination of all three of these things is desirable, but for anyone to come here and depend upon the mere announcement in the reading columns of the newspapers for success in any sort of recital is so absurd that no one would think it possible that it could ever be done.

But it is done, as we said before, every once in a while. But the same person never tries it a second time.

The prospectus of the University Concerts at Cornell is at hand, and we note that the Philadelphia Orchestra is announced for one attraction, and that the other three are all foreigners, and that at least one of the three has been accused of pro-Germanism.

This is exactly as it should not be. Every course announced in America should have at least one-half American artists, and more than that per cent, if possible.

Cornell is preparing a Spring Festival, but no soloists are yet announced.

Will this representative university redeem itself at that time by using a preponderance of American artists?

And—while we are about it—let's use more American composition. Why, for instance, must every violin recital be burdened to the limit with the short pieces of any foreign composer, to the exclusion of the American works of proven value?

Why Kreisler, for instance, when Cecil Burleigh writes just as well?

It has just come to the attention of Music News that Heifetz played Mr. Burleigh's "Moto Perpetuo" in his New York recital, with distinguished success, and that Jules Falk used the Second Concerto (Burleigh) in his Aeolian Hall recital.

If these foreign players find the American compositions so good, why should not all Americans use not only Cecil Burleigh's, but also all other American compositions freely and not wait—as is too often the case—for a foreigner to discover their worth?

Little Jimmy, aged six, had heard the expression, "I should worry," for the first time one morning, and had been repeating it all day whenever the occasion presented itself. That night, when he knelt down to say his prayers, he got it tangled up in them, and his mother was startled to hear this new version:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I should worry!"—Exchange.

From a private letter, received from Oklahoma City, we reproduce the following:

The season of opera in Oklahoma City by the Chicago Opera Association comprised three performances on October 24 and 25—"Aida," "Madame Butterfly" and "La Tosca." Rosa Raisa, as Aida, held her audience almost breathless with her rich, warm, liquid tones and her dramatic power, while she was well supported by Sophie Braslau as the haughty Amneris, by Dolci, whose clear tenor made a charming Radames, by Lazzari as Ramphis, and Rimini with his dramatic voice and wild interpretation of Amonasro. Miura as Madame Butterfly charmed the audience with her quaint and winsome ways, her personality appealing to many quite as much as her melodious voice. Emmy Destinn in Tosca was a disappointment to many who had anticipated hearing the voice of Alma Gluck in "La Boheme." While Destinn's high soft tones were clear and pure, her medium tones showed a decided harshness and lack of color. Dolci, who took the place of Bonci as Cavarodossi, seemed stiff and ill at ease, lacking the perfect control of the previous evening. Baklanoff, however, saved the day, easily reaching the greatest climax of the evening. It is unfortunate for Oklahoma City that the sensuous opera of Tosca should have been the last of the three, and that the voice of Emmy Destinn should have come to stay as the last lingering memory in the hearts of those who will wait another long year for the annual tour of the Chicago Opera Company. But their thoughts will revert to the first performance, to the beautiful strains of Aida, and to the dramatic and rich voiced Raisa. May Rosa Raisa be with us next year and for many years to come.

Music

Servant and master am I: servant of those dead and master of those living. I am the incense upon which prayers float to heaven. I am the smoke which falls over the fields where men lie dying with me on their lips. I am close to the marriage altar, and when the grave opens I stand near by. One I serve as I serve all, and the king I make my slave as easily as I subject his slave. I speak through the birds of the air, the insects of the field, the crash of waters on rock-ribbed shores, the sighing of wind in the trees, and I am even heard by the soul that knows me in the clatter of wheels on city streets. I know no brother, yet all men are my brothers; I am the father of the best that is in them, and they are fathers of the best that is in me; I am of them and they are of me. I am Music!

—Reprinted from program of Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

From another letter, this one from a prominent organist in St. Louis, we quote the following:

"I do want to commend the editor of the Music News on the fearless and outspoken manner of his criticism of concerts, etc. It is quite a relief from the usual run of criticism."

A Story About Three Young Chicago Artists

Last Sunday evening an apartment-full of us heard a remarkable impromptu musicale (of which you shall be told more next week), and at the close there was an especial treat in the presentation of the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria," by Rosemary Pfaff, soprano; Lorraine Earnest, violin (each about fifteen), and Barton Bachmann, pianist.

And there is a story about the preparation of this number that is inspirational!

Some time ago, Miss Rosemary sang at the little Belgian Church of St. John's, and was so exceedingly well liked that it was decided at once that when Cardinal Mercier came to Chicago he should be given an opportunity to hear her.

And so a great banquet at the Blackstone was planned, and among the artists who were to appear Rosemary Pfaff was to have prime place.

But, for one reason or another, the banquet was abandoned, and in its place a peculiarly solemn and impressive service was given at the aforementioned St. John's Church.

Rosemary was asked to sing the "Ave Maria," which was not in her repertoire, but it chances to be the case that she is remarkably quick at study and that she is also an inimitable imitator of style.

So she secured a Melba record of the song, and in one day became letter perfect in both text and music, although she has no knowledge whatever of Latin.

Her very talented and splendidly gifted little friend, Lorraine (pupil of Sametini), was impressed into service to play the wonderful violin part, and Mr. Bachmann, the constant accompanist for both girls, was chosen to play the accompaniment.

Lyon & Healy sent out a piano, and so, preparation being complete, at the service the song was rendered in splendid style, and it was, unquestionably, one of the most distinctive and beautiful features of a very distinguished and beautiful occasion.

It is estimated that for this service twenty-five thousand people came to the church and could not find admission, and so for blocks the streets were full of people, intent only on being somewhere in the neighborhood of an epochal event.

And Rosemary, and Lorraine, and Barton inside the church, did full credit to American talent and art!

CENTRALIZING SCHOOL

The Centralizing School of Music held a banquet and dance last Saturday evening. Features of the evening were dramatic readings by Mme. Antoinette Skinner and William Owen, and the singing of the school song, which is printed below:

"Centralize"

Tune, "Illinois"

From the day when first we hear it
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
Till the normal classes cheer it
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
It becomes our very blood
And it sweeps us like a flood
And we know that we shall always
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
And we know that we shall always
CENTRALIZE.

When recital troubles flay us
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
And our feelings false would play us
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
When we think we'll lose our head
Nor regain it till we're dead
Comes the strength that won't betray us
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
Comes the strength that won't betray us
CENTRALIZE.

To our hearts it gives full measure
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
Of the "Center" that we treasure
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
'Tis the greatest joy to give
This great principle we live
After we have learned just how to
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
After we have learned just how to
CENTRALIZE.

By the watchword that we cherish
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
By the faith that shall not perish
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
Each contributed of his best
To the efforts of the rest
In our unity we flourish
CENTRALIZE, CENTRALIZE
In our unity we flourish
CENTRALIZE.

THE APOLLO CLUB IN "ELIJAH"

The Apollo Club has sung "Elijah" times past remembering and has opened many seasons with this standard and thoroughly satisfactory work—but never, at the opening of the season or otherwise, has Mendelssohn received so fine a presentation at these hands as was the case on last Monday evening at Orchestra Hall, when the Choral Season for Chicago was inaugurated at Orchestra Hall by the Apollo Club, and when the soloists were Lois M. Johnston, Anna S. Imig, Robert Loren Quait and Theodore Harrison.

The Apollo Club revels in the "Elijah" music, and it is an open question whether any organization in the country could equal the fine effects made with the noble old work.

The personnel of the club this season is unusually good, the balance of parts is fine, and the response to the artistic demands of Harrison Wild at this concert was so good as to insure the fact that each of the concerts of the season will be exceptional in tonal qualities and interpretative content.

The glory of the big choral numbers which abound in "Elijah" was put into telling contrast to the lighter work, and the purely conversational items were done with superb intelligence.

"Lift Thine Eyes," usually sung as a trio, was presented at this time with full women's chorus, and the effect was beautiful to the last extreme.

The orchestra played unusually well, the organ manipulation of Edgar Nelson was at that splendid point of reliability and musical value he always insures, and Mr. Wild was in absolute and effective control of all the forces.

The soloists attracted unusual attention for various reasons, and their work came up to the very high expectation which had been aroused by knowledge of their previous activities.

Theodore Harrison, a superb vocal artist and known as one of the most successful of teachers as well as a singer with a long and enviable career, has lately come to Chicago to identify his work with this rapidly growing center, and with him have come many artist pupils who have studied with him for a long time.

Not only did Mr. Harrison give his finished and very remarkable reading of the "Elijah" music at this performance, but, also, he was flanked on the one side by his pupil, Anna S. Imig, contralto, and on the other by the brilliant young soprano who under his tutelage has already made important successes in the Ann Arbor Festivals and with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Harrison gave a most telling reading to the bass score, and presented every bit of the "Elijah" music with a finesse it does not often receive as well as with such dramatic force as carried it to resounding success.

Miss Johnston showed herself anew to be the possessor of one of the very finest soprano voices now resident in Chicago and at the same time disclosed a charming personality and a distinctly intelligent musicianship.

Her singing of "Hear Ye, Israel" was a piece of work which placed her at once very high in the estimation of every intelligent listener in the audience.

Mrs. Imig, also most attractive as to personality and in musical achievement, has a voice which ranges over the mezzo and the contralto solos of the "Elijah" score with perfect ease and shows beautiful quality throughout.

Her singing of "O Rest in the Lord" was particularly fine.

Robert L. Quait, a Chicago singer with scores of friends here, but now residing in New York, appeared for the first time in Chicago this season and renewed the excellent impression of last year.

ROBERT LOREN QUAIT

His style is broad and his voice of telling quality and quantity. He sings Oratorio with convincing sincerity, and his musical feeling is always of the very best quality.

Personally, I did not like the blend of the quartet made by these four singers (in evidence only once, however), but that was due, probably, to lack of ensemble rehearsal.

There was a very large audience present—larger, in fact, than any Apollo audience of the past season, and there was splendid enthusiasm for the work of each soloist and for the efforts of the club and of Mr. Wild.

HELEN BOYLE HAWORTH IN GREAT DEMAND

Helen Boyle Haworth, contralto, is singing all of this week in duo with Victor Downer at the Vista Theater.

With Helen Rockwell, soprano, Mr. Downer, tenor, and John Rankel, bass, she appeared at the Bankers' Club banquet on Saturday and at the Chicago Athletic Club on Sunday.

On Sunday afternoon the Grant Hadley Quartet, comprising besides Mrs. Haworth, Miss Hazel Silver, soprano; Mr. Kanberg, tenor, and Grant Hadley, baritone, was the feature of the opening concert of the season at the North Side Turner Hall.

Helen Boyle Haworth has been engaged as soloist at the Playhouse to appear through a week very shortly.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE SATURDAY CONCERT

The program of the Chicago Musical College last Saturday morning was not a very long one, but was fraught with interest and pleasure to those who heard, a theater full.

One point of especial interest was the grouping of "The Hills" by Cecil Burleigh with "Tambourin Chinois" by Kreisler and the showing, through this juxtaposition, that the work of the American composer has nothing whatever to fear even in such position and proved in fact to be so well adapted to the fine technic and musical feeling of Glen Halik, a pupil of Leon Sametini, as to constitute itself one of the real gems of the program and a brilliant success.

The "Allegro Brillant" (Ten Have) was also played splendidly by Dorothy Turek, pupil of Max Fischel, these two representing the violin department of the college most creditably.

The ending of the program was a particularly brilliant bit of piano playing; the C Sharp Minor Scherzo of Chopin, presented with deep understanding and very suave as well as sufficiently impassioned style by Mrs. Helen Spindler Brahm, a pupil of Alexander Raab.

Ralph Ambrose, pupil of Rudolph Reuter, did himself much credit in a group of Rachmaninoff and MacDowell.

In this instance it was the "Scotch Poem" of the American composer and a royally good piano piece it is too, the same composer being represented in the next group by "Thy Beaming Eyes," suavely sung by J. Edwin Martin, an artist pupil of Burton Thatcher.

James Durham sang one of the numbers from Lehmann's "Persian Garden" and Esther Thistleton was particularly facile with "Il Bacio" (Arditi).

Zitta Allen, an advanced pupil of C. Gordon Wedertz, played the "Sposalizio" of Liszt with good technic and nice interpretation.

Maryott—The Music Department of the Hamilton Park Woman's Club engaged Mrs. Harold B. Maryott to give a course in Musical Appreciation during the current season. The course consists of four morning talks, with illustrations, on the general subject of "Form in Music." Mrs. Maryott uses the piano to illustrate. The topics for the four mornings are as follows:

"Early Dance Forms and their Relation to Modern Music."

"The Development of the Sonata: Analysis of Beethoven's Sonata Pathetique."

"The Modern Orchestra: Analysis of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony."

"Smaller Musical Forms and the Expression of Nationality in Music."

RECITAL AT THE WELGE SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Before an audience which overflowed the studio rooms and which gave earnest appreciation of their effort, pupils of the Welge School of Music gave a recital Tuesday night. The program included piano, violin, reading and vocal numbers, which in scope and in rendition more than fulfilled the expectation of friends of Mr. Welge and Miss Gladys Welge and the faculty and put an immediate stamp of success upon their effort. Though less than one year old, the Welge School has forced its way into the front ranks in Austin music circles and is in fact drawing pupils from beyond its immediate range of activity, and the success of Tuesday evening guarantees its future. The work of the pupils evidenced the careful, thorough efforts of the teachers and was indeed a matter of congratulation for both. —Dalinghaus, with Herald and Examiner.

Zygman—Mme. Flora Zygman is now in New York, preparing for her piano recital at Aeolian Hall, in that city, on November 13. This promises to be a splendid success, and a great many seats have already been taken. Mme. AMERICAN SYNCOPATED ORCHESTRA

An almost sold out house greeted the American Syncopated Orchestra at Orchestra Hall on Tuesday evening of last week, and there was again in the air that feeling of "unusualness" which last year made this unique body the talk of the town for weeks.

Will Marion Cook, the composer, whose "Rain Song" has made him famous, and whose services in elevating the standard of music among his people has been invaluable, has not yet returned from Europe, but the organization is fortunate in having two conductors and at this time the work of George Edmund Dulf, his alternate, proved that in this serious looking young man the Orchestra has another conductor who well knows what he is about and who is able to conserve the abilities of the Orchestra and the singers to much effect.

Besides the orchestra numbers, which remained at much the same status as last year and which included a great many jazz and other popular forms of writing, there was a performance of the "Hungarian Dance No. 5" (Brahms), which was notable in tonal qualities and musical values. Any orchestra that can play this number so well as was done at this time is much more than a mere ephemeral body of "jazzers" or "syncopated" (sublimated name for "rag") players, and can justly claim the title of real art musicians, as well as that of popular entertainers.

There were present two male quartets and when employed as an octet the effect was strikingly good; when, however, divided into quartets that which sang last on the program was greatly superior to the first.

Both of these bodies sang Spirituals and popular songs and No. 2 especially was greeted with vociferous applause.

As before, the solo drummer was a "whole show" in himself and not only in all the ensembles but also in his individual number proved himself dexterous and remarkably alert in technic.

James A. Lillard in a tenor solo was unnecessarily lugubrious; he should brighten up a bit, but his tonal quality was excellent and his musical feeling fine.

Clarence Lee in a violin solo disclosed remarkably pure and emotional tonal quality. He has a gift so far beyond the ordinary that it would pay him to learn some real violin repertoire.

J. P. Bryant in a baritone solo showed the best musicianship of any solo singer of the evening. He was, however, improperly placed, for had he been nearer the assisting ensemble the little deviations from pitch would not have occurred.

The printed program was more than doubled through the constant demand for encores and there were in the audience lots of people who were thrilled by the specifically syncopated numbers as they are thrilled but seldom by anything else, while the "Spirituals" and the "Folk Songs" also held many in satisfied thrall.

The Syncopated is out for a long, important tour and the country at large has a very great as well as thoroughly unusual treat in prospect.

As a matter of reference for these out-of-town audiences, we here reproduce the program in full as given at Orchestra Hall:

CHARLES MITCHELL MIXER

Young American Violinist

Mr. Charles Mitchell Mixer, who will appear in recital at Edgewater Beach Hotel next Sunday afternoon, is a young Chicago violinist whose success has been marked. He is a member of the faculty of the American Conservatory of Music, from which institution he was post-graduated several years ago under the distinguished violinist, Mr. Herbert Butler. Mr. Mixer is also a pupil of Josef Vilim and of the celebrated violin master, Leopold Auer.

CHARLES MITCHELL MIXER

Mr. Mixer has become widely known in Chicago and throughout the country for his fine personality and his artistic playing. He has made several tours, the most recent one covering many eastern states, in which Mr. Mixer appeared as soloist in 154 concerts. His services in Chicago and vicinity are always in demand for recitals, concerts and clubs, and he has made many such dates for the coming season. Among Mr. Mixer's dates last season were the Edgewater Beach Hotel musicals, Hyde Park Hotel series (with return engagement), and in the Sunday concerts at the Chicago Beach Hotel; recital, Hedding College; recital, Valparaiso University; recital, La Porte, Ind.; Sorosis Club, Oak Park; St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Evanston, Easter service; banquet Sherman House, and many others. His October dates include Union League Club, Chicago; Hamilton Club, Chicago, and a recital at Kimball Hall.

Press Comment

Galesburg Mail—"The big outstanding quality in Mr. Mixer's playing is his complete abandon and poise, which combine with his beautiful tone and his exceptional technical resources to make him an unusually satisfying performer."

Galesburg Republican—"Mr. Mixer shows a remarkable mastery of that wonderful instrument, the violin. With wonderful technic and tone control, he made the instrument live with melody and expression."

Music News—"Charles Mixer, a young violinist with great talent and much skill, played a 'Little Song' of D'Ambrosio and 'Deep River' with beautiful tonal quality, and in a 'Village Dance' (Cecil Burleigh) and the 'Spanish Dance' No. 8 (Sarasate), disclosed a very real virtuosity of technic and interpretation. Nothing daintier than his playing of the 'Bird as Prophet' could be imagined, and the song quality of the Charpentier 'Melodie' was cello-like in its intensity and breadth."

The Oak Parker—"The first artist to appear was Charles Mitchell Mixer, the violinist. . . . Much might be said of this splendid violinist's technic, his 'shading' and 'tone,' for does he not come under the catagory of 'artist,' which is all-inclusive of the method that makes perfection?"

Music News—"Mr. Mixer, always dependable, facile and artistic, played a number of singing melodies with beautiful legato flow and wtih a constant play of light and shade that made them fine indeed. In such works as the 'Guitarre' of Moszkowski he disclosed a crispness of technic and a purity of intonation which was delightful."

Galesburg Register—"Mr. Mixer pleased the audience immensely, and he was compelled to add several numbers to the program. Mixer is rather young looking to be so advanced in his profession. He has a tone of much beauty and technic, which might be the envy of many violinists."

North Shore Weekly, Chicago—"The playing of Charles Mixer, violinist, proved to be an especial feature. His tone is virile and warm, and both the selections and his interpretation of them were of such compelling interest that the audience was loath to part with him."

THE PERSIAN GARDEN AT ELLEN KINSMAN MANN STUDIO

Sunday afternoon Mrs. Ellen Kinsman Mann gave the first of this season's musicales at Fine Arts Building. The concert was sung by people from her class, and the work was excellent. Mrs. Mann is without a doubt one of the best teachers, who believes in results, and it is a pleasure to record the artistic and musicianly work of Sunday, November 2.

The quartet giving the Persian Garden was Genevieve Cadle, soprano; Doris Nelson, contralto; Leonard Allen, tenor; Richard Mann, baritone, and Beulah Taylor Porter, accompanist, who gave support at the piano that was orchestral in its breadth and of refined artistic worth.

Miss Cadle, soprano, of lovely voice and personality, did excellent work.

Mrs. Nelson, contralto, should be heard from. Her work was fine both in the Garden solos and in other numbers. She has a voice of appealing quality, well used.

Mr. Mann, whose business is not singing, did the bass score well with his fine natural baritone voice.

Mr. Allen made much of the tenor part. His splendid voice met the requirements of the score well, and he sang in a manner worthy of praise.

In fact, the writer has heard public performances that could not approach the delightful work of this quartet.

Sherwood School—On November 6 Lulu Bell Howard read "Romance" at the Sherwood Music School Recital Hall. She is a pupil of the dramatic department.

AT THE WHITNEY TEW STUDIOS

A very fine personality is Mme. Elise Colbran-Melius, and she is also the possessor of one of the most satisfactory voices heard at the Whitney Tew studlios.

She is one of the most advanced of the Tew students, and has been heard to good effect throughout the past year.

Mr. Tew presented her in song recital at the studios on last Monday evening, and, such is her popularity, she drew one of the largest audiences ever seen there and one which was just as enthusiastic as it was large.

Miss Lucy Levy was at the piano, and in this fact there was added charm as well as a solid musical background for the entire program.

Miss Levy is one of the best of the many good accompanists in Chicago, and her work will—unquestionably, be heard in many environments.

Mme. Colbran-Melius is listed as contralto-soprano, and she effectively covers the indicated range, with a better quality in the alto than the upper scale.

Her program on Monday was given with great musical intelligence and correct feeling, splendidly well considered enunciatory values, and a general excellence of interpretative detail.

She sang Old Classics, Goring Thomas' "Nadeschda" aria, a group of Lisa Lehmann, and one including the three Americans—Edward MacDowell, Ethelbert Nevin and Dudley Buck—besides a well chosen group of Schubert songs (in English, of course), the latter being the only number heard by this writer at this time, although he has observed the finish of Mme. Melius' work in many of the other numbers on other occasions.

The "Journey to Hades" in this group proved novel (it is rarely heard indeed) and fine for the Melius voice—the "Serenade" was presented with delightful tonal quality, "Hedge Roses" was unusually dainty in design, "Omnipotence" splendidly big and virile, and the "Earl King" was done with fine dramatic effect.

MUSICIANS' CLUB OF WOMEN PRESENTS MR. ALEXANDER

The polite patter of the Musicians' Club of Women was heard again in the beautiful Blackstone Theater on last Monday afternoon, the occasion being the presentation by this progressive but distinctly reserved club of the first artist recital of the season.

The chosen artist was that greatest of all one-man combinations, Arthur Alexander, who is a tenor of fine parts and an accompanist par excellence.

That one man can do two things so well is almost uncanny, but of a truth, the two are not equal in value, really, for, unquestionably Mr. Alexander is a better player than he is singer and in saying this there is no reflection on his singing ability either, for, of a truth, he sings better than ninety out of each hundred singers one might name.

The only fault to be found on Monday was in his program numbers.

There is, it seems to me, decidedly too great a leaning toward French songs on the American concert platform, especially the smaller, lighter ones, and Mr. Alexander fell, naturally perhaps, into an error which made for monotony.

In other words he sang, as the program printed in Music News of last week will show, far too many small French songs.

It is true that most of them were agreeable and that a few were adorable as given by him—but, after all, they were monotonous.

The last group therefore was much the most interesting. It contained "The Yellow Dusk" (Horseman), "The Crying of Waters" (Campbell-Tipton), "Retreat" (La Forge) and "The Eagle" (Busch) and was thus almost 100 per cent American. One says "almost" because of the fact that Campbell-Tipton is now a resident of England.

These were more vital than the other groups and contained much variety as well as a continuous flow of good values, musically and textually.

Mr. Alexander sensed their meanings too, very definitely, but, he should know also that his enunciation did not carry in the Blackstone and that "The Eagle," which is so well known, was the only one of the four in which the text carried at all definitely to the back of the theater.

The Horseman song is beautiful, that by Campbell-Tipton painfully emotional, the La Forge is fine from every viewpoint and Mr. Busch's idea of "The Eagle" is impressive though not the best setting we have had.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY CONCERT

At the American Conservatory Concert at Kimball Hall on last Saturday afternoon a capacity house generously applauded every number of the following program:

Valse—A Flat ..... Chopin
Ruth Freeman
Ideal ..... Tosti
Without Thee ..... D'Hardelot
John Ham
Variations—A Major ..... Paderewski
Elsie Klotzenbucher
Calling Me Home ..... Dorel
April Morn ..... Batten
Esther Bourk
Fantasie—F Minor ..... Chopin
Marion Tukey
Violin—Nocturno ..... Chopin-Sarasate
La Capricceuse ..... Elgar
Samuel Frankel
The Mother Heart ..... Stickles
Twilight Whisperings ..... Sibella
Hazel Burns-Holcomb
Scherzo—E Flat Minor ..... Brahms
Florence Burke
Pleurez mes Yeux (Le Cid) ..... Massenet
Mae Norton
Legend of St. Francis Walking on the Waves ..... Liszt
Erwin Brunn

A press of other engagements made it possible to hear only the last four numbers.

Hazel Burns-Holcomb has a light but very beautiful voice and gave good reading to her numbers.

Florence Burke was very definite in the "Scherzo," delivering the canonic passages with clarity and holding to good tonal qualities always.

Mae Norton, decidedly an artist, is the possessor of a voice of great volume and beauty, which is imbued with a thoroughly appealing quality.

Her interpretative sense has been highly developed and this, combined with fine enunciation and good stage presence, made her appearance a notable one.

Erwin Brunn played the turgid Liszt piece with great power and a constant surety. He kept the melodic line as well to the front as the immense mass of tone provided by Liszt would allow.

MENDELSSOHN CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

On Saturday afternoon last, very good piano playing was heard at the Mendelssohn Conservatory, in McClurg Building, the young artist being Margaret Anderson, a pupil of Miss Carrie Scott and a member of the faculty.

Miss Anderson has a natural talent of unusual kind, and her training has evidently been along the most careful of lines. She plays with precision, skill and fine tone.

"On the Mountains" (Grieg) made a good opening number, and the "Prelude Dramatique" (Ketilby) was put into fine contrast with two of the Hungarian Dances (Brahms) in the next group.

The Liszt "Liebestraume" was played with much legato flow and an unusually musical quality, and some Mendelssohn at the end (Scherzo and Rondo Capriccio) was clean, clear and sparkling.

Marion—At Marion, Ind., the Scotti Grand Opera Company appeared on October 27. Jascha Heifetz will play November 9, Mme. Schumann-Heink will sing on November 23, and Josef Hofmann will give a piano recital on November 30.

EBBA SUNDSTROM AND HELEN DANIEL APPEAR AT BUSH CONSERVATORY

A very attractive recital was given before a large audience at the Bush Conservatory on Saturday afternoon by Helen Hovey Daniel, soprano, and Ebba Sundstrom, violinist, with Ruth Bradley at the piano.

The program was as follows:

Robin, Robin, Sing Me a Song.....Spross
The First Violet.....Mendelssohn
Songs My Mother Taught Me.....Dvorak
The Snowflake.....Gretchaninoff
Miss Daniel
Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso.....Saint-Saens
Miss Sundstrom
Aria, Suicidio, from La Gioconda.....Ponchielli
Miss Daniel
Romance.....Wienawski
Minuet.....Hochstein
Tambourin Chinois.....Kreisler
Miss Sundstrom
Les Anges Pleurent.....Bemberg
Le Soir.....Thomas
Chant Venitien.....Bemberg
Miss Daniel

Samoiloff—Vivian Holt and Lillian Rosedale, both pupils of Samoiloff, are with the "Hello Alexander" production, and the critics gave a very sensational criticism of them.

A UNIQUE ENTERTAINMENT

A very unusual entertainment, and one which gave pleasure to all who witnessed it as well as to the special class for which it was prepared, was a program of pantomimes presented by the pupils of the Chicago School of Expression in their own little theater in Fine Arts Building on last Friday evening under the direction of Gertrude Polk.

This was under the auspices of the Chicago League for the Hard of Hearing and the program consisted entirely of action, with no spoken word whatever.

Two plays were given, each attractive, the total of skill and finish shown throughout being very marked.

The program was as follows:

THE HAUGHTY PRINCESS

(Adapted from Irish Fairy Tales. Compiled by W. B. Yeats)

The Princess.....Jane Remington
The King, her father.....Ada Wanberg
Ladies in Waiting.....Marjorie Hawkins, Vera Teplitz, Edna Mabie
An Earl.....La Von Rall
The Noble Suitors—
A Duke.....Ellen Woodmansee
A Prince.....Bernice Evans
King Whiskers.....Olive Reed
The Attendants.....Marion McCarthy, Grace Ohman, Teloir Hendren
The Premier Danseuse of the Court.....Dorothy Gnaedinger
The Priest.....Gladys Brown
The Herald.....Joan Clement

THE LAND OF HEART'S DESIRE

By W. B. Yeats. (Adapted from the Play)

Maurteen Bruin.....Ruth Bartholomew
Shawn Bruin, his son.....Jane Chunn
Father Hart.....Marian Gordon
Bridget Bruin.....Jessie Braman Daggett
Marie Bruin, Shawn's Wife.....Dorothy Estabrook
A Faery Child.....Constance Penney

A NEW CHORAL CLUB

A new choral club has come into being. It is known as the Chicago Woman's Chorus and that it will prove worthy of its name is assured by the fact that it has as its conductor Harrison M. Wild, the conductor of the Apollo Musical Club and the Mendelssohn Club.

The Board of Directors is constituted as follows: President, Mrs. J. M. Bach; Vice President, Mrs. Harold B. Maryott; Secretary-Treasurer, Florine De Hart Westerman; Chairman of Music Committee, Mrs. T. R. Toohey; Chairman of Social Committee, Mrs. Frank W. Pennebaker.

Maude N. Rea is business manager. Rehearsals are being held every Wednesday afternoon from 2 to 4 in Lyon & Healy Building. The membership is nearly full, but there is still room for a few more good voices, especially altos. Application for membership should be made to Florine De Hart Westerman, Secretary, care Chicago Woman's Chorus, Lyon & Healy, 243 South Wabash Avenue.

The new organization enters upon a field that is practically untrodden in Chicago, the field of choral music for female voices only. Such music has a distinctive charm, unlike that of music written for male or for mixed voices.

The Chicago Woman's Chorus will give a series of concerts, with assisting soloists, but the dates are yet to be announced.

MILON R. HARRIS CHOIR

A musical service of ambitious proportions and impressive in sincerity and effect was given last Sunday evening at Calvary Presbyterian Church, with Milon R. Harris director and Bessie M. McAllister organist.

The service was given as a memorial to Mrs. Frederick Tice (wife of Dr. Tice, one of Chicago's well-known consulting physicians), who died a year ago while in active service for her country. She was founder and director of the department of instruction for the Chicago Chapter of the Red Cross. Many members of the church and congregation knew Mrs. Tice.

The service was planned with discretion and taste and in the devotional spirit necessary to a memorial service. The choir of fifty voices, with solo quartet, responded admirably in ensemble and dynamic variety to the controlling hand of Mr. Harris and sang with breadth and sincerity. The program began with the inspired "Soft Floating on the Evening Air" of Root and was built up consistently through the Gounod "Sanctus" and "The Lord Is My Light" (Buck) to Woodward's setting of "Crossing the Bar." Following this were numbers of a more triumphant character—"I Will Exalt Thee" (Huhn), done in solo by Mrs. Laura E. Hamblen, and the beautiful Dickinson anthem, "Bow Down Thine Ear." Gounod's "Gallia," in all its tragic pathos and dramatic power, sounded the highest and final note of the service, and in it the choir did its best, most concerted work. The rest of the quartet, including Mr. Harry Slater, Mrs. Russell B. Griess and Mr. J. G. Grabou, were in excellent voice and sang with an earnestness which we should always like to be able to attribute to church singers.

Mr. Harris was musicianly and well poised in his conducting, and Miss McAllister proved a beautiful accompanist at all times.

CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY

Sunday evening, November 2, Dr. Francis Hemington gave another of his interesting organ recitals at Epiphany Church. J. Burlington Rigg, baritone, assisted and gave the "Elijah" solo and Prindle Scott's "Repent Ye." His voice is good and he should do well in his new location.

Dr. Hemington always gives a program of exceptional musical worth and variety in arrangement. He did some brilliant playing on Sunday evening and showed great skill in registration. There is a sincerity about his work that makes a definite appeal and counts for success.

KNUPFER STUDIOS

Walter Knupfer announces the first of a series of pupils' recitals to be given in the school at Annex 400, Fine Arts Building, on four consecutive Friday evenings, commencing November 21. Programs will be rendered by members of the children's junior, advanced and artists' classes.

As to Our Directory Columns

The name of every Musician in the United States—every Composer, every Manager, every Publisher, every Teacher, every School, and every Manufacturer of Music Instruments, should be in the Classified Directory Columns of THE MUSIC NEWS.

It is a fact today that Managers, Directors of Schools, Program Committees, Festival Directors, Lyceum Promoters—in fact, everybody who has to do with Musicians, has formed the habit, when the address of a Musician is wanted, of looking in our Directory Columns for it.

We have been told again and again,

"Your Directory Is the Most Useful List Published in the United States"

Even if you have no intention of doing more public work—even though you are located where no change seems possible—it is still advisable to have your name in our columns in order that your friends, the managers, the publishers and the public at large may have a ready means of finding your address.

And—if you ARE in the field for increased engagements or activities of any kind you will find no medium so useful as this.

We have Classifications for every Instrument, for the Voice, for Publishers, Manufacturers, Composers, Directors, Ensembles, Theory Teachers, Dancing, Dramatic Art, Clubs, Choir Boy Training, Pageantry, Community Singing Directors, Managers, Accompanists, Public School Music Teachers, and others.

If we have not your Classification we will create a Department for you.

The cost of this service is only fifteen dollars a year, but the service itself is invaluable.

During the last season we carried in the Classified Columns hundreds of names. We want to carry additional hundreds this season, and expect to make the list as near complete as we possibly can.

Payment for this service can be made Annually, Semi-Annually or Quarterly—and, as we send THE MUSIC NEWS to each one whose name is in these columns, you need have no further expense for subscription.

Display Advertising in MUSIC NEWS is considered today the most useful in America, and you will—eventually—be in the field for that. But, meantime, you should not delay one week in having your name in our Classified Directory Columns, for this is AN INVALUABLE SERVICE.

summer with the Ver Haar Concert Company, to filling a great list of engagements in and around Chicago.

Mme. Lighthall has been engaged for the Edgewater Beach musicales to appear some time in December, also re-engaged for the Playhouse. An appearance in Milwaukee was very successful. She was soloist last Sunday at Oak Park Presbyterian Church, replacing Margery Maxwell.

Mme. Lighthall has been offered the tour with the All-American Opera Company.

CHICAGO CONCERT ENSEMBLE

In line with all other musical functions in Chicago this season, and especially those given adjacent to the loop, the concerts at Fullerton Hall are attracting absolutely full houses each Sunday.

On November 2 the roomy place was filled to the last seat for both the 3:00 and the 4:15 o'clock events and there was an appreciation and enthusiasm of like kind.

FRANCES COATES

The Ensemble, with its eight good men and proven artists, proclaimed itself a musical joy.

The "Ruy Blas" (Mendelssohn) Overture, the Suite "L'Arlesienne" (Bizet) and the big "Pomp and Circumstance" (Elgar) were each true to form and full of delight.

The "Andante" (Tschaikowsky) and the Menuet (Boccherini), played in quartet form by George Dasch (Director of the Ensemble), Fritz Itte, Mr. Roehrbach and Mr. Felber, were interpretative and musical delights.

There was a special soloist on Sunday too, Miss Frances Coates, an artist pupil of Mrs. Lucie Lenox.

Miss Coates is well on her wey to distinction and her work is thoroughly agreeable. Poise she has and artistry, and if, as yet, she lacks somewhat in power, that too will come in time.

Her special flair is the singing of songs in costume, and her choice, both of numbers and dresses, is unimpeachable.

On Sunday she sang a group of Old English very well indeed, her dress was particularly fine and she had, definitely, the correct manner.

The second group was one devoted to Scotch songs and costume, and this, too, won for her much appreciation from the audience.

The program for next Sunday is as follows:

Overture—The Marriage of Figaro.....Mozart
Larghetto from Quintet for Clarinet and Strings (by request).....Mozart
Messrs. Meyer, Itte, Roehrbach, Dasch and Felber
Suite—From the South.....Nicode Legend
Moorish Dance Song
In the Tavern
Dreams.....Wagner
Anitra's Dance, from Peer Gynt (by request).....Grieg
Spanish Serenade.....Friml
Waltz from Eugen Onegin.....Tschaikowsky

RALPH LEO

A newcomer to Chicago and possessor of a baritone voice of much warmth and color is Ralph Leo, a young artist who has met with singular success in the few weeks since his location here. As the foremost credit to his ability, perhaps, comes his affiliation with the vocal faculty of Bush Conservatory, where he will be closely associated wtih his former teacher, Charles W. Clark.

Mr. Leo comes recently from three years in New York, where he was a scholarship student of the Institute of Musical Art. That he has been splendidly schooled and that he combines this schooling with a naturally beautiful voice, musical intelligence and a personality at once winning and convincing is evident on first hearing. The writer enjoyed a few moments of an informal program given recently at the Columbia School. Mr. Leo was heard in "It Is Enough," from "Elijah," which he did with maturity and distinction of reading, and which he followed by some Negro Spirituals of his own arrangement and with his own accompaniment. This is sufficient to suggest that the scope of Mr. Leo's talent is very wide, which is not surprising when we consider his heritage. Mr. Leo's father, Ernest Leo, is a musician of rare ability and a composer of note. Therefore it is quite natural that the young baritone should be "to the manner born."

Mr. Leo sang recently at a musical at the home of Mrs. Ralph Van Vechten and will sing on November 11 at the residence of Max Adler, 4939 Greenwood avenue. At the Playhouse he appeared recently in "Danny Deever," with orchestral accompaniment, and during the last week in October sang at the Alhambra in Milwaukee with signal success. Mr. Leo bids fair to enjoy great popularity in the Chicago musical field, and we wish him all the prominence that he deserves.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Hess—Elizabeth Ferguson-Hess has accepted the position of choir director at St. Paul's M. E. Church and has also organized there a Young Woman's Chorus.

EMMANUEL CHURCH, LA GRANGE

Emmanuel Choir of La Grange, sixty boys and men, under the leadership of William Ripley Dorr, gave a musical service in Trinity Episcopal Church, Wheaton, last Sunday night, before an audience which packed the church to its utmost capacity, many being turned away. The soloists were David Meyers and David Linn, boy sopranos, Arthur C. Youngberg, tenor, and Frank Dunford, basso-cantante. The choir drove from La Grange to Wheaton in a long caravan of automobiles, and were served with a bountiful supper afterward by the ladies of Trinity Church.

An unusual feature of the service was the singing of two unaccompanied anthems in succession, the pitch being given only at the beginning of the first, the choir maintaining it perfectly through both numbers.

The program follows:

Preludes—
Spring Song.....Hollins
In Summer.....Stebbins
Anthem—The Lord Is Exalted.....J. E. West
Duet for soprano and tenor—Love Divine.....Stainer
David Meyers and Mr. Youngberg
Anthem—Veni Jesu, amor mi.....Cherubini (1760
Solo—I Think when I Read that Sweet Story.....J. A. West
David Meyers
Two Russian anthems, sung unaccompanied—
A Legend of the Christ Child.....Tschaikowsky
O Light Divine.....Kastalsky
Baritone solo—It Is Enough (Elijah).....Mendelssohn
Reid Hilliard
Anthem—Sanctus (St. Cecilia).....Gounod
(With solo by Mr. Youngberg)
Offertory anthem—Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem.....Maunder
(With solo by David Linn)
Postlude—Gothic Suite (second movement)..Boellmann

There will be a special musical service by the vested choir of sixty boys and men of Emmanuel Church, La Grange, Sunday afternoon, November 9, at 5 p. m. Among the anthems to be sung are Tschaikowsky's "Legend" and Kastalsky's "O Light Divine," both of which will be rendered a capella. La Grange can be reached in time for the service on the 4:00 p. m. Burlington suburban train from the Union Station, or by the trolley from the end of the West 22nd street line.

The choir will give a musical service in the Episcopal Church in Downers Grove on November 16.

POLAND RESTORED

Mr. Newman, instead of showing the gruesomeness and the deadly poverty which we have learned to think inseparable from Poland, gave us, last week, at Orchestra Hall, a perfectly thrilling account of the resourcefulness and the fine military and civic spirit of the courageous little country on which today rests some of the most important questions in the world-readjustment program.

Most striking of the pictures, undoubtedly, were those depicting scenes in the prison pens where tens of thousands of Bolsheviki are confined.

"If you can see any high ideals or any possibility of real 'reforms' in these faces, you can do more than I was able to do," was his preface to the showing of hundreds of sodden, vicious and altogether unattractive people—men and women.

The evening closed with some wonderful pictures of the new Premier—Paderewski, and the last line of the address was the message which the one-time great pianist sent by Mr. Newman to America:

"I should love to play again in my beloved America," he said, "but my work now is here in Poland, and will be until conditions are thoroughly stable."

The lectures of Mr. Newman this year have been wonderful from every standpoint, and that of this week—"France Victorious"—is not the least so by any means.

CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The concert of the Orchestra last week was marked by the appearance of Josef Lhevinne in the Tschaikowsky B Flat Minor pinaforte Concerto, this constituting both the most important item on the program and the most significant playing.

Mr. Lhevinne, in spite of a more or less sketchy accompaniment from the Orchestra, gave a glorious reading of the splendid work and proved himself anew a master.

He has been interned in Germany for the past four years but, very evidently, he had a good grand piano at hand for not only is his fine musical sense unimpaired but his technic is, if that be possible, even better than when he last played in Chicago.

The program otherwise contained the Brahms Symphony No. 1, a massive work, very long and, for the most part, musically significant, the Overture to "Tannhauser," so long unheard that it seemed like a new piece and very agreeable, and "La Queste de Diu" by d'Indy, a solemn, querulous piece, attractive from the standpoint of novelty and decidedly fine in musical values.

The program for the current week is as follows:

Suite No. 2—B Minor.....Bach
(For Strings and Flutes)
Overture
Rondo
Sarabande
Bourree I—Bouree II
Polonaise—Double
Minuet
Badinerie
(Flute obligatos by Alfred Quensel)
Fantasie .....Ropartz
Concerto for Violoncello—D Minor.....Lalo
Prelude: Lento—Allegro Maestoso
Intermezzo: Andante con Moto
Rondo: Andante—Allegro Vivace
Joseph Malkin
Symphonic Poem No. 2—Tasso: Lamento e Trionfo ..... Liszt

BIOGRAPHY OF MALKIN

(From the Program Book)

Mr. Joseph Malkin was born at Odessa, Russia. He first took lessons of Ladislas Alois on the violoncello. At the suggestion of Anton Rubinstein he went to Paris and in 1895 entered the Paris Conservatory. In 1898 he was unanimously awarded first prize. Only one first prize was awarded that year.

In 1899 Mr. Malkin made his debut in Berlin. For three years he toured France, the Scandinavian countries and Germany. In 1902 he was appointed first violoncellist of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Berlin, Arthur Nikisch, conductor. He remained in this position six years. From 1908 to 1914 he devoted himself exclusively to concert work, making tours in Germany, Austria, England, Denmark, Russia, Mexico and the United States.

Mr. Malkin's first appearance in this country was in December, 1909, at a concert of the New York Symphony Society, conducted by Walter Damrosch. In the fall of 1914 he was engaged as first cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which position he held until joining the Chicago Symphony Orchestra this fall in a similar capacity.

Apres Minuit ..... Ganz
Waltz ..... Ed. Collins
Waldesrauschen ..... Liszt
Polonaise, E major ..... Liszt

Miss Anne Gulick, pianist, of Boston, will give a recital Wednesday, November 19, at 11 o'clock in Zeigfeld theater under the management of Carl D. Kinsey. This will be Miss Gulick's first appearance in Chicago.

Mr. Louis Cornell, pianist, of New York, will give a recital Wednesday, November 26, in Ziegfeld Theater, at 11 o'clock, under the management of Carl D. Kinsey.

STAUNTON, VA.

Josef Konecny, the splendid Bohemian violinist, made his first appearance before a Staunton audience at the Y. M. C. A. Friday evening. The previous notices of his playing fall far short of what it really is, and the music lovers and musicians who heard him enjoyed a treat. The Rubinstein Sonata in G and the Concerto in D of Paganini established his splendid technic, fire and energy of expression. The Danse Espagnole of Sarasate was a charming ensemble of melody, while the last, but certainly not the least, was the unusually beautiful arrangement of Schubert's "Ave Maria" for violin and piano, given as an encore.—From the Staunton Leader.

Montgomery-Harpster—The Montgomery-Harpster Duo will sing for the Parent-Teacher Association, Oglesby School, on November 6, and will do the solo work in the "Stabat Mater" at a sacred concert at St. Sevina's Church November 16.

RUTH ANN WILSEY

Miss Wilsey of the Centralizing School of Music and assistant piano teacher at the Starrett School for Girls, is a very popular personality with both classes.

She is a fine musician and a very conscientious and successful pedagogue.

A CORRECTION

Elsa Kressman, dramatic soprano, and Grace Grove, accompanist, did NOT appear at the opening musicale at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, as announced. Miss Kressman, who is under the exclusive management of Jessie B. Hall, was announced to open the season, but when Miss Hall withdrew from the management of the Twilight Musicales, which she inaugurated two years ago, her artists were automatically withdrawn also, and will appear in a more pretentious Sunday afternoon series to be given later in the season in a better-known hotel and in a more artistic manner.

MME. GRACE BRUNE-MARCUSSON AN AMERICAN SINGER

From a circular we quote the following:

"She is pre-eminently 'An American Singer,' having demonstrated by studies with American teachers only that it is not necessary to go abroad in order to be able to sing.

"Her Americanism has also manifested itself in the fact that she has been her own manager for several years and has booked successful tours for herself from coast to coast.

"The broadness of her education and experience is evidenced by the scholarly method which she employs in program building."

Edgewater Beach—Miller, Resseguie & Tufts announce the Edgewater Beach Twilight Musicale Sunday, November 9, will be given by Jane MacConnell, contralto; Charles Mitchell Mixer, violinist, and Mrs. Charles Orchard, accompanist.

Johnston—Lois M. Johnston, soprano, will sing with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra on November 23, and in Detroit and on tour the 24th, 25th and 26th.

FRANCES PELTON-JONES PLAYS THE HARPSICHORD

"Wouldn't it be maddening to a modern pianist to try to play on the Harpsichord?" said a young player sitting by me at the Ziegfeld Theater last Tuesday morning during the Harpsichord Recital of Frances Pelton-Jones.

"It would, indeed," was my reply; "just as it would be maddening to a modern youth to step out of his limousine and into an old-fashioned 'buggy' with a single horse attachment, and to try, with this equipment, to make the same engagements he can keep with the car."

But this does not change the fact that the auto would not be an appropriate figure in a picture of life one hundred years ago, and neither does it change the fact that the music written in the Harpsichord period sounds much better on the Harpsichord than it does on the piano, regardless of the fact that a modern pianist would not be able to play that instrument short of a great deal of painful practice.

For the touch of the modern pianist has grown into a very muscular manipulation of almost the entire body, and with some it is more like chopping wood than the playing of such a delicate musical instrument, and the ear of the modern has become dull toward the absolute purity and clarity of tone through being filled so constantly with a mass of overtones which result from the constant use of the damper pedal in all modern piano playing.

And so, just as a lesson in sweetness, clarity, daintiness and purity, the hearing of a Harpsichord Recital now and again might be a great help to all modern pianists even though none of us would really want them to go back to the Harpsichord period permanently any more than we would choose to give up the modern automobile for the outgrown "horse and buggy."

Miss Pelton-Jones, however, seems to have been born to play the Harpsichord. She looks the part, her manners are of the gentle, gracious type indigenous to the period and her musical feeling is as true and fine as the instrument itself.

Miss Pelton-Jones is a pupil of Arnold Dolmetsch, who is responsible for the resuscitation of the Harpsichord after it had been silent for something like a hundred years, and who gave most loving care and thought to selection of a repertoire for the rehabilitated instrument.

On Tuesday at the Ziegfeld Miss Pelton-Jones told all about the ancient instrument, who wrote for it, what it meant musically and also about its current revival.

She was thoroughly entertaining and instructive, and the few of us who were at the Ziegfeld at this time may well feel that we have a decided advantage over the rest of Chicago and a knowledge which is at once pleasant and very unique, for who else really knows anything about the Harpsichord?

And then Miss Pelton-Jones played a beautiful program and the capture of our hearts became complete.

For she is facile as to the necessary technic; she senses exactly the right speed for each little piece; she knows how to use the grading possibilities of the instrument to the fullest possibility of tone coloring and shading and her ear is so sensitive to the possible purity of tone that she never for a moment goes beyond that possibility but keeps the current always at positive beauty and charm.

And the program itself was delightful. There was a group of Bach (Johann Sebastian and Phillip Emmanuel), coupled with Haydn and Mozart in their more fragile moods, some most exquisite Scarlatti as well as a miniature Sonata of Dr. Arne which was a gem and (most delightful of all, as well as most droll), the "Dead March" from "Saul" (Handel), which in the tinkle of the Harpsichord sounded as though it were intended for a doll's funeral but which nevertheless was sedate and even solemn to the limit.

Then there were "descriptive pieces" by Dandrieu, Daquin, Couperin and Rameau, and, coming down the line a little, some "Dances" by Martini, Laeillet and Dr. John Bull, and even more nearly home, the famous "Menuet" of Paderewski, which proved itself very much of the Harpsichord genre, and as played by Miss Pelton-Jones, perfectly delightful.

Altogether the recital was a unique as well as a positive joy, and I have but to advise you, should Pelton-Jones come your way again, do not do what you did this week but go and hear her.

MAUD POWELL

An interesting anecdote is told of Maud Powell, who will appear at the Medinah Temple on Tuesday evening, November 11, under the auspices of the Central Concert Company.

As a chilld the budding violinist had her first dozen or more lessons of "Billy" Fickenscher, the foreign language teacher in the public schools of Aurora, Ill. Mr. Fickenscher made no pretense as a violinist, but agreed to teach the child how to hold the fiddle and the bow and get her started in the first position.

A former teacher of the Central School in Aurora relates that as he was passing the door of the room where the violin lesson was being given he heard the teacher illustrating some point, when a girlish voice said: "Yes, but you didn't play that right." A few days after that Mr. Fickenscher made arrangements to take Maud to Chicago to have an audition with William Lewis, who predicted that she would become a great violinist, and straightway took her under his musical wing for four years, before sending her abroad. In fact, it was also Mr. Lewis who brought about a hearing with Theodore Thomas on the return from study abroad. To Theodore Thomas, in turn, she owed everything in those early years, for he recognized her talent at once, giving her opportunity to develop through experience in playing with orchestra, thus laying the foundation of her future brilliant career.

Wyrick—Mr. Ambrose Wyrick, the Chicago tenor, appeared at the Y. M. C. A. Convention, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, November 6 and 7. He used Arthur Penn's "Smilin' Through," Victor Herbert's "Molly," Ernest Ball's "Dear Little Boy of Mine," and "Let the Rest of the World Go By," and Rupert Ganvoort's "Golden Crown."

ALBERT BORROFF IN SONG RECITAL

On last Thursday evening Albert Borroff invited a studio full of people to hear him give a song recital, and each one of this selected audience may well feel himself to have been a thoroughly privileged character, for the program was delightful in every sense of the word.

Mr. Borroff long ago proved himself a master of vocal qualities and of enunciatory items as well as the possessor of an interpretative ability many per cent beyond the average.

This ability covers every genre of song, and while he can sing and interpret beautifully the most serious of oratorio or operatic arias in any of the accepted song languages, he is particularly felicitous also in works of light or fantastic aspect, and in these his pronunciation of the English text is so fine as to leave absolutely nothing to be desired.

Arias from an old, forgotten opera of Verdi and from Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Ivanhoe" proved novel and fine, as well as high-grade songs of Foote, Maude Valerie White and some of the Weckerlin "Bergerettes." Some of the Crist "Chinese Mother Goose Melodies" were screamingly funny as presented by Mr. Borroff; the "Smuggler's Song" (Kernochan) was again given in that incomparable way he has with it; "Had a Horse" (Korbay) was amply dramatic, and two or three of those recitations to music in which Mr. Borroff excels were used to bring the program to a most happy close.

Exceptional accompaniments were played by Herbert Carlin, a talented young pianist studying this season with Mrs. Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler. C. E. W.

A FINE CONCERT

On Thursday evening of last week a splendid program was given by Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, Mme. Jane English and Charles Lagourgue. Dowerth Prosser, accompanist, was capable in his piano work. Mme. Ryder was in fine form and gave a varied list of works with artistry and finish: D'Albert, Liszt and Tschaikowsky, in three groups of delightful music. Mr. Lagourgue, clarinetist, is an artist and a musician of intelligence. He makes the music for clarinet something worth while hearing and does so with ease. Works by Sturkow-Ryder, Debussy, Lagourgue, Saint-Saens and Verdi won the enthusiastic approval of the large audience.

Mme. English, charming and gracious as always, made a good impression. Her voice is of fine quality and she sings easily and with poise. Mozart was given with good style and the "Aria" by Offenbach was brilliant. A group by Tosti, Cadman, Parker and Rinsky-Korsakow were choice things musically. Mme. English has found the worth in Chanson Indoue and made it tell. The Cadman number and "Love in May" were made to glow with musical charm.

Berkshire—The Berkshire String Quartet will give its first concert of the season in Aeolian Hall, New York, Tuesday evening, November 18. It will also serve to introduce here Ernest Block's prize sonata for piano and viola, the solo parts being performed by Mr. Harold Bauer and Mr. Emilie Ferir, who is playing in this concert by courtesy of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association.

RUTH ANN WILSEY

Miss Ruth Ann Wilsey, of the faculty of the Centralizing School of Music, has been chosen to assist Miss Helene L. Scott of the pianoforte department of the same school in her work at the Starrett School for Girls. Miss Wilsey is an earnest and convincing teacher. She is unusually well equipped from the pedagogical as well as the psychological side of her profession. and is possessed of a rare and determining personality that evokes enthusiasm and splendid efforts from her students. The Starrett School is to be congratulated upon its selection.

A pupils' concert of the University School of Music, given on October 21, had this program:

Polonaise ..... MacDowell
Miss Catalina Davis

EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD

MOTHER'S CREATIVE MUSIC COURSE

Based on the MUSIC OF BIRDS, ANIMALS, AND FLOWERS and presented by the EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD PEDAGOGY of "INNER-FEELING," "REASONING" and "DRILLS," through EAR, EYE, AND TOUCH

This Course contains 45 Songs—words and music by Effa Ellis Perfield. Songs about BIRDS, ANIMALS, and FLOWERS.

FIVE of these SONGS have appeared in the following issues of MUSIC NEWS:

"THE CLOCK SONG," presented October 3, 1919
"BOB WHITE'S SONG," presented October 10, 1919
"THE ALPHABET SONG," presented October 17, 1919
"THE CAT SONG," presented October 24, 1919
"THE BLUE-BELL SONG," presented October 31, 1919

The SONGS were composed with the idea of stressing strict form, poetically and rhythmically

There are no melismatic notes—each verse scans perfectly, and the melodies follow the "tune" of the speaking voice

The SONG BOOK contains 20 Bird Calls and different Animal Calls

In addition to the SONG BOOK of 28 Pages, there is a TEXT BOOK of 42 Pages, which shows how to present 24 Exercises, and also how and when to present 20 Bird Stories and Bird Poems—how to present the pictures of 30 Birds, and how to present the "Calls"

Mothers and Teachers may easily take this Course by Mail

PRICE of this COURSE is: Cash with Application $25.00, or $35.00 in Three Payments—$15.00 Down, balance in TWO Monthly Payments.

FREDERICK

Gunster's

New York Recital

Oct. 16th, 1919

POST: It speaks well for the taste of a vocalist as well as for his ability to guess what the public wants, to have him sing four Grieg songs, as Frederick Gunster did at Aeolian Hall last night. They were not only Grieg—they were of Grieg's very best. "Monte Princio" has not been heard here since Clara Clemens sang it several years ago. There are reasons why most singers avoid it. Mr. Gunster fortunately had the equipment needed for mastering its difficulties and he thoroughly entered into its spirit as he did into that of the other three Norwegian numbers. He has a good voice and knows how to use it, as he has had occasion to demonstrate heretofore.

(H. T. Finck)

TRIBUNE: Frederick Gunster, who gave a recital in New York last season, appeared again last night at Aeolian Hall and before a large audience deepened the impression he had left last year. Mr. Gunster is an artist to whom it is a pleasure to listen. He possesses that rare trinity of virtues, taste, intelligence and temperament. He knows how to make a song interesting by tone color and by varied nuance of expression. He can spin out a tone to a mere wraith of sound and yet make it tell; in short, he is an unusual artist. His voice is pleasing in quality and he produces it with rare ease and flexibility. Mr. Gunster received the applause that was his due.

(Grenville Vernon)

TIMES: When an artist appears in Aeolian Hall with some ideas, some feeling for music, something of style, some well controlled means of expressing them all, an added cheer is given to the early days of the oncoming musical season. Frederick Gunster made his contribution to it last evening in these particulars. His voice is agreeable in quality and what he does is musical, finished as if in miniature; often elegant and has sincerity. His Grieg songs were sung with taste and poetical feeling. Here and elsewhere Mr. Gunster's phrasing was excellent and made itself felt as growing naturally out of the musical substance of the songs, and his enunciation was commendably clear.

(Richard Aldrich)

SUN: Frederick Gunster delivered his list of songs with intelligence and a clear diction. His singing was marked by musical feeling and taste.

(W. J. Henderson)

AMERICAN: He proved anew his musicianliness and taste. Mr. Gunster possesses a tenor voice of sympathetic and pleasing quality. He sang with great charm, good style and an artistic appreciation of dramatic values.

HERALD: There was charm in his singing of a group of French songs. All were sung with a light, delicate touch, and all were well interpreted.

MAIL: Mr. Gunster's voice is of fine, sympathetic quality. Last evening he was wholly artistic. He captured his audience completely.

TELEGRAPH: Frederick Gunster, one of the most commendable tenors of the concert stage, pleased a large audience with his scholarly, sincere and sympathetic singing. His voice has every evidence of careful training and intelligent handling. His stage manner is dignified and graceful and his success with his audience was emphatic and well merited.

Aeolian Hall New York

CHARLES CARVER

The phenomenal basso-profundo voice of Charles Carver, artist pupil of Frank La Forge, will be heard in recital in Aeolian Hall, New York, December 22. Mr. Carver has aroused the greatest interest of those who heard him on the Schumann-Heink tour last year and in his independent appearances since that time.

Mr. Carver is to sing a program consisting of Italian classics, some German master songs with English translations, a group of French and Russian songs, and will conclude with a group written expressly for his unusual voice by several American composers of note. Mr. Carver is an athletic youth of twenty-one, six foot four in his stocking feet, and is descended from Governor Carver, the first governor of the Plymouth Colony. Frank La Forge, his teacher, will be at the piano for Mr. Carver, and many notables, including Mme. Sembrich, have expressed their intention of being in the audience.

CHARLES CARVER

ELGIN, ILL.

At the last vesper service held in the Universalist Church on Sunday, October 19, we again had the pleasure of hearing Alice Brown Stout in a choice program of modern and classic songs.

Mrs. Stout's fine soprano voice has developed much in power since we last heard her, and she gave convincing evidence of her artistic ability as a singer, composer and accompanist. Steady progress has been hers.

Among her many beautiful songs the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria" was especially noteworthy, the splendid breadth and dignity of her style being well supported by organ and piano accompaniment. Her own composition, "Spring Delight," was given with dash and spirit. She accompanied herself in this song, the brilliant piano part adding much to this very taking number.

The entire program of fourteen songs was thoroughly enjoyed.

MARC D. YARWOOD.

MacDermid—Sibyl Sammis MacDermid, soprano, assisted by Gavin Williamson, pianist, will give a recital in Streator, Ill., November 10.

WESTERN CONSERVATORY

A piano recital by advanced pupils of President E. H. Scott was given in the parlors of the Western Conservatory last Wednesday evening, before an audience of one hundred and fifty, which quite filled the spacious and pleasant rooms. An excellent program, rendered entirely from memory, was presented in keeping with the usual high-grade work of this well-known institution.

A very important element of memory work with young musicians is to memorize all fine points of interpretation and not simply the notes and rhythm. In this respect the pupils on the above occasion displayed remarkable training. Melody shading, cadences, pauses, climaxes, tone color and pedaling were all observed to a splendid degree.

Vocal pupils of Miss Dahlstrom supplied interpolated numbers, with fine effect, fully sustaining the high reputation of their teacher for thorough voice development and artistic coaching. The program follows:

Rhapsody in G Minor, Op. 79, No. 2.....Brahms
Adaline Eriksen
Lohengrin (Fantasia transcription) Op. 39.....Wagner
Wendell Lundell
Grand Polka de Concert, Op. 1.....Bartlett
Arthur Kirkham
Vocal—Sing On.....Denza
Gladys Figenbaum
Butterfly.....Grieg
Witches Dance.....MacDowell

Lyceum Arts Conservatory—A Students' Recital was given at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory on October 28, introducing Rosell Bass and Geraldine Osmun, piano pupils of Marguerite Kelpsch; Anna Fama Harrell and Mae Berland, pupils of the dramatic department, the former being also a vocal student with Ora Padget-Langer and singing at this time a group of songs.

Stevenson—The Geralin Trio, composed of students of Lucille Stevenson, will appear in the Men's Fall Festival Concert at Orchestra Hall on Friday evening, November 14.

AT THE HOME OF THE TOLLEFSEN TRIO

Sometimes one wishes to escape the whirlwind and too active life of New York. Naturally Brooklyn is not the place for a distinctly reposeful hour, but by all means it is preferable to the metropolis, in spite of the inconvenient transportation.

I was told that the Tollefsens inhabit a house which equals the best of the New York "artistic apartments." And when I went there I convinced myself "de visu." I have waited to publish my impressions until a few days before their Aeolian Hall recital, which is to take place November 8.

Mr. Tollefsen and his charming wife possess one of the most attractive studios I ever chanced to enter, and they live in Brooklyn on President street, a spot most comfortable and tranquil. A lover of artistic objects, Mr. Tollefsen showed me a Brahman head which dates from the sixteenth century. The inevitable musical portraits adorn the walls of his apartment, and not mere portraits, but also paintings from the brushes of famous artists; and his musical library would be the envy of any musician.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Tollefsen are congenial and hospitable people, a rarity with easterners, and they united in the most natural way to make my visit agreeable. This was not an interview, but one cannot but discuss music in the presence of such earnest artists as Carl Tollefsen and his spouse. With Michael Penha, who not long ago returned to America, they form that celebrated Tollefsen Trio of Chamber Music.

Without a backing the trio of violinist, pianist and cellist have succeeded in making themselves felt wherever they chance to make an appearance, and when they go to any particular town the "S. O. S." of a return engagement is always flashed. This is the best proof of what impressions they leave behind.

Chamber music is, unfortunately, one of the neglected arts in our country, and it is a pity that our inhabitants have not yet awakened to the importance of this musical branch, for it ranks in quality with the symphonic organizations. Wherever the Tollefsen Trio have made an appearance their object was to emphasize the high meaning of chamber music, and, as said, they are always requested to come back. They expect to tour the country after Christmas. Meanwhile New Yorkers will enjoy their Aeolian Hall concert, which is to take place in November.

ANDREW C. GRANT

Andrew C. Grant, a pupil of H. W. Owens of Chicago, who sang the tenor solos in "Creation" at Winona Lake, Ind., last summer very successfully, has just taken the directorship of the music at the Bethany Presbyterian Church and is planning a busy musical season there with special programs the fourth Sunday evening of each month throughout the winter.

Mr. Grant has just resigned from a similar position at the Edison Park M. E. Church, and previous to that was assistant director at the M. E. Church of Austin, besides being the organizer of two other choirs in that suburb.

Mr. Grant also directed the Haydn Choral Society at Winona and was, further, one of the prize winners of the Eisteddvod there in August.

RAYMOND WILSON AT ZIEGFELD THEATRE

Raymond Wilson, pianist, came from Rochester last Wednesday and gave a piano recital of artistic worth at Ziegfeld Theater. His playing has refinement as well as brilliance, his technic is sure and responds without the striving so often encountered by those wishing to make big effects. Mr. Wilson's program was of excellent worth, embracing the classic Mozart, Chopin and MacDowell, to Pugno, Liapounow and Glinka-Balakirew, as well as two numbers dedicated to Mr. Wilson, a Prelude and a Gavotte by Berwald and Frey. The small audience was enthusiastic, and should Mr. Wilson choose to return at a future date, he will be greeted cordially. Some day artists from the East will learn that publicity is necessary if success in Chicago is wanted.

Barnum—Mrs. Amy Wolfle, a pupil of Letitia Barnum in the Chicago School of Expression and Dramatic Art in the Fine Arts Building, will read "In Lilac Time" in the large hall at the State-Lake Theater Building on November 12 at 2 o'clock.

SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The quartet at Second Presbyterian Church is one of the best in Chicago at the present time. A. F. McCarrell is the organist, Orpha Holstman soprano, Louise Slade contralto, Arthur Boardman tenor and Herbert Gould basso cantante. They are all solo artists of high character, and they give to the people a feast in the best things musically. Sunday morning, in addition to the usual music of the service, "Praise Ye the Lord," by Randegger, came in for a lovely reading. The special music programs at Second Presbyterian should be a pleasure indeed.

WHY THE BABY CHILD SHOULD HAVE MUSIC LESSONS BEFORE IT GOES TO SCHOOL

By Effa Ellis Perfield

It is a well-known fact that the baby receives impressions through its eye before its ear becomes susceptible to sounds.

The baby is charmed with a bright light and is fascinated with anything that is red.

Babies have been known to respond to rhythmic sounds as early as the tenth day after birth. The baby responds to LIGHT impressions earlier than to SOUND impressions.

The body response is perceptible, but the baby cannot direct and focus its motions on a certain point for many months after it directs its eye and ear.

To the pedagog who believes in a well-balanced unfoldment of the child these facts point out the pathway he is to follow in guiding the child to SUCCESS.

What do the above facts prove? That the eye naturally begins its work before the ear and the touch. Hence, the mother and teacher should give special attention to ear and touch work in order to balance the three educational senses—EAR, EYE and TOUCH—and establish the "Trinity."

Light waves travel faster than sound waves.

We follow the line of least resistance and use the eye to the detriment of the ear. We all use the eye more than the ear.

How shall the mother and teacher proceed to sensitize and refine the ear?

1. The mother and teacher will refine their own ears so that no sounds are "hidden" in their spoken words. They will notice the lack of the closing "g" sound when they hear "goin'" and "comin'." They will eliminate the "peacock" quality of tone in their speech. They will speak with inflection and melody.

2. They will in every way and on every occasion stress the hearing by calling attention to beautiful sounds, melodious tones, and kind words.

3. They will begin in the nursery to give the child a repertoire of "sentence songs" that it may use in an inspired moment for self-expression.

4. They will present all branches of education through the ear first, then bring in the eye and touch associatively.

5. They will base all branches of education on the Trinity Principle, and classify all material into a group of three.

Examples—Geography deals with things in the soil, on the surface, and in the air.

Reading deals with words, their combination with other words, and their final meaning.

Arithmetic deals with a number, its combination with other numbers, and the result.

Spelling deals with the word, its spelling, and its meaning.

Writing deals with the letter, its combination with other letters, and the meaning.

History deals with the event, its cause, and its effect.

Children should be taught to be neat "mental housekeepers," so that they may recall and use knowledge any moment.

The time to establish "orderly mentality" is when the child begins to use the Ear, Eye and Touch," otherwise one sense grows beyond "hailing distance" of the other two.

Does the kindergarten apparatus give the child the material needed for a well-balanced unfoldment? No, the eye and touch "run away" from the ear and it gives up in despair and ceases to cognize anything but an ordinary sound.

The only way to refine the ear is to use music which the child loves, and through it recall and enlarge impressions made by associations with pets, pictures, birds, stories, colors and flowers.

Music gives freedom to self-expression. The child expresses and thus develops CREATIVE ability The one objective point of the teacher should be, "Keep the channels of expression open."

The child hears, sees, and touches in a normal way when there is no stoppage in the "channel of self-expression."

Select songs about birds, animals, and flowers which follow the speech melody, are perfect in form, and which are only four or, at most, eight measures long.

Show pictures of birds, animals, and flowers and recall them through music.

Tell stories of birds, animals, and flowers and through them arouse self-expression in the child.

Begin constructive work with the child before it goes to school and start an INWARD growth that enables it to keep its "channel of expression" open throughout its life.

CINCINNATI SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

THE CINCINNATI SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN THE FRANK MORGAN EXTENSION SERIES

Last year the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra played to a half house in Orchestra Hall, and this year hundreds were turned away—but, let not the Cincinnati management lay the flattering unction to its soul that this was because of increased interest in the orchestra itself.

On the contrary, it was directly and wholly the result of the fact that the orchestra was so fortunate as to be booked in the Morgan Extension Series.

These concerts, both in the outlying places and downtown, are wonderfully successful this year, and Mr. Morgan has, in his second year, proven that he has a remarkable idea in his head and that he has all the knowledge and skill to bring it to successful completion.

The consensus of opinion among Chicago critics in regard to Eugene Ysaye was just that given in Music News after the last May Festival at Cincinnati, where he conducted.

He is a profound musician—a wonderful soloist, and a fine figure of a man, but, unfortunately, he is not a skillful nor effective conductor of large bodies of men, although it must be confessed that he does much more with the orchestra alone than he was able to do with such masses of musicians as are brought together in a May festival.

The program of last Thursday was more or less unfortunate.

The "Fantasie Wallonne" (Theophile Ysaye) was distinctly novel and interesting, and the No. 1, from the Bizet Suite, "L'Arlisienne," proved to be a riot of color as presented, but the other orchestra numbers were more or less perfunctory and uninteresting.

This left the main interest—easily, in the Liszt E Flat Concerto, which was played with great skill, much musical value and decidedly telling effects by Harold Henry in spite of the very indifferent accompaniment accorded by the orchestra.

Mr. Henry is a player of the finest sort of sensibility, he has an abundance of musicianship and technic, and is, altogether, in such position as that in which he found himself last Thursday, admirable, and the audience of that time found him so and applauded his work enthusiastically.

C. E. W.

Here follow parts of two criticisms from the daily press:

Eugene Ysaye's first visit to Chicago last year, at the head of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, held something of the thrill and delight of a sensation—that exhilarating, stimulating thrill that is the greatest homage civilization pays to genius.

Ysaye in his, to us, new role of conductor, after having already earned for himself the perennial laurels of a great violin virtuoso, came among us to face the sophisticated, critical Chicago audience that possesses a Frederick Stock. Ysaye won from press and public the most enthusiastic recognition of his newly disclosed gift as leader of an orchestra. I threw reserve to the winds and hailed Ysaye among the big men of the baton.

Undoubtedly the program had a good deal to do with the impression of last year. There was the undying Cesar Franck symphony, magnificently read, the exquisite little Sylvia ballet of Delibes and other things of equal interest.

Last night there was no such keen enjoyment, and I believe it to have been chiefly the fault of the program, which no amount of zeal could electrify.

Saint-Saens' overture to "Les Barbares" was barbarous only in its effect on the tired mind of the listener. It is tedious, long drawn out, barren of any vital ideas, and not worth the willingly spent energies of the men and their leader.

Second came the Schumann Symphony in C Major No. 2, and this, too, is another uninspired work of a great composer, with interminable repetitions of unimportant themes.—Herman Devries in Chicago American.

The Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra attracted to Orchestra Hall last evening an audience which filled the house and lavished liberal applause upon the visiting organization and its celebrated conductor, Eugene Ysaye. The program contained two novelties—the Overture to Saint-Saens' opera, "The Barbarians," and the "Walloon Fantasy," by Theophile Ysaye, a brother of the conductor. The Overture is a loosely constructed, diffuse work containing several melodic episodes that are ingratiating, but the composition as a whole seems lacking in solidity and definiteness. If the opera to which it served as introduction is as long and as invertebrate there is no cause for wonderment that it has never been heard outside of France.

The Fantasy is builded on a popular Walloon song which the program notes state is known as the "Cramignon" and which proved a merry peasant song melody which lends itself easily to effective orchestral treatment. Contrasted with it in the latter part of the work is a theme of broader sustained character which makes possible the securing of a telling climax. The workmanship displayed by the composer is good and the composition in its entirety is effective and well worth hearing again. Two other orchestral selections completed the musical schedule for the visitors—the Schumann second Symphony and the first "L'Arlesienne" Suite of Bizet. To these were added the Liszt E Flat Concerto, the solo part in which was in the capable hands of Harold Henry.

The work of the orchestra can but suffer in Chicago ears by involuntary comparison with that of our own band. We have become accustomed to such precision in attack, such technical neatness, and such unanimity in shading and reading that the raggedness, the want of finish, and the frequent unsteadiness of the visiting organization detract from pleasure and enjoyment. Mr. Ysaye is a violinist and soloist of supreme powers, but he conducts an orchestra not as a conductor, but as a soloist. He sees and hears only the solo melodies as they swim to the surface of the instrumental stream, and, watching their motion and progress and admiring their beauty and charm, he forgets to lend attention to the clarity and the flow of the stream itself.—W. L. Hubbard in Chicago Tribune.

GEORGE MILTON LIPSCHULTZ

Splendid accounts of the Symphony Orchestra at Alhambra Theater, Milwaukee, under the direction of George Milton Lipschultz. A recent program includes the "William Tell" and "Flying Dutchman" overtures, "Serenade," by Rubinstein, and Symphony No. 4, Tschaikowsky. The Alhambra management is fortunate indeed in holding Mr. Lipschultz as musical director and conductor of one of the best small orchestras to be heard.

Hans Hess

Won the following Tributes in CELLO RECITAL

in NEW YORK at AEOLIAN HALL

HANS HESS HEARD IN AEOLIAN HALL RECITAL
By Max Smith

Hans Hess made his first public appearance in New York yesterday afternoon in Aeolian Hall. He was assisted at the piano by Juul Rosine. MODEST IN HIS DEMEANOR, FRANK AND STRAIGHTFORWARD IN HIS STYLE OF PLAYING, MR. HESS SHOWED AT THE VERY OUTSET, WHEN HE PRESENTED FOR HEARING THE FOURTH OF BENEDETTO MARCELLO'S CELLO SONATAS, OPUS 1, THAT HE IS A MUSICIAN TO THE CORE, SINCERE, SERIOUS, THOUGHTFUL, CULTIVATED. HIS TECHNIQUE IS EXCELLENT, HIS FINGERS ARE WELL TRAINED AND THOROUGHLY RELIABLE MESSENGERS OF HIS WILL, AND THROUGH HIS FINELY BALANCED AND STEADY USE OF THE BOW HE INVITES ADMIRATION. Never does Mr. Hess force inordinately the dynamics of his instrument in cantilena, and THE TONE HE DRAWS IS AS PURE AND EXPRESSIVE IN A DELICATELY SPUN PIANISSIMO, when the bow is poised lightly between his fingers, as when he puts greater pressure to bear on the strings. A little more vigor and intensity would have been welcome in Boellman's familiar "Variations Symphonique." Bruch's "Kol Nidrei," however, Mr. Hess gave in a manner DISTINGUISHED BY BEAUTY OF TONE, REFINEMENT OF PHRASING AND WARMTH OF EXPRESSION. Other numbers on the program were Boccherini's "Rondo," an effective Adagietto by Loomis, dedicated to the player; Popper's "French Village Song," and Lalo's Concerto in D minor. In Juul Rosine the cellist had an accomplished and very sympathetic accompanist.—New York American, Oct. 23, 1919.

HANS HESS' NEW YORK DEBUT

Hans Hess, a cellist OF MANY GOOD ATTRIBUTES, was introduced yesterday afternoon to a New York audience. He had chosen a program of balance and MUSICIANLY CHARM, and THROUGHOUT IT HE USED A CLEAR, GENUINE TONE AND A TECHNIQUE MORE THAN CAPABLE. For all its pleading voice, the cello remains the most thankless of solo instruments. It is nothing unless inspired. Mr. Hess frequently succeeded—in the faithful old "Kol Nidrei," for example—in lifting his work out of that vacuity.—The Sun, Oct. 23, 1919.

Hans Hess, a cellist from Chicago, gave a recital at Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon. He proved to be an earnest musician in all that he played. An adagietto by Loomis, dedicated to Mr. Hess, proved a pleasing bit of composition and in it Mr. Hess was at his best. The program held a sonata by Marcello and Lalo's concert in D minor.—The Evening World, Oct. 23, 1919.

CHICAGO CELLIST IS HEARD BY FRIENDLY AUDIENCE

Hans Hess, a cellist of musical taste as well as technical equipment, appeared yesterday afternoon at Aeolian Hall, assisted by Juul Rosine, in a recital of music ranging from a sonata of old Marcello to a concerto almost equally unfamiliar by Lalo. His performance throughout DISCLOSED SERIOUSNESS AND MUSICIANSHIP. He was heard by a friendly audience. —The Times, Oct. 23, 1919.

DICIE HOWELL

Dicie Howell, whose excellent recital work has been acclaimed in many of our prominent Concert Halls, has been chosen by the largest colleges and educational institutions in the United States to demonstrate not only a well produced voice and excellent diction, but a catholic selection of songs and programs. Last season, the young soprano sang at many prominent universities and earned re-engagements which warranted another protracted southern tour this coming season.

Following her New York recital at Aeolian Hall November 5, Miss Howell will wend her way south, stopping for a joint recital with Theodore Van Yorx November 22. Her southern tour brings her in recital to Salem College, Winston Salem, N. C.; Winthrop College, Rock Hill, S. D.; Coker College, Hartsdale, S. C.; Fasserfern College, Hendersonville, N. C.; Flora McDonald College, N. C., also in Charlotte and Greensboro, N. C. After the recital in Greensboro, Miss Howell will remain over two days to sing the soprano role in the "Holy City."

Lowe-Pierson—Lela Lowe-Pierson of the faculty of the Auditorium School Conservatory of Music was soloist (violin) at a concert at the La Salle Hotel on November 10, given by the Daughters of the American Revolution, and on November 11 before the Woodlawn Woman's Club. On November 13 she will be joint soloist with Carl Craven in a program given for the Southern Woman's Club.

DAVID HOCHSTEIN'S VIOLIN A FRIEDRICH & BRO. SALE

A beautiful Stradivarius violin was the one used by David Hochstein prior to his departure from America's shores with the American army. How this prominent artist lost his life in the Argonne Forest is now a well-known story in America, and the fact that his precious violin is offered for sale at the present time should prove of great interest to American violin lovers.

This Stradivarius is one of those which was made in the best period of the great Luthiers' life, namely, in the year 1715. It is in beauty one of the handsomest specimens extant. The wood of the back is of a strongly marked, even curl, which is well set off by the beautiful reddish varnish. "Red" Strads are among those most sought for by connoisseurs, and this is a typical example. The tone quality of the instrument is most beautiful in all registers, perfectly even in balance and so responsive that the faintest touch of the bow brings forth a tone of surpassing beauty.

The violin, prior to the time that it was obtained by Mr. Hochstein, belonged to a well-known violinist of Boston, Mr. Nowell, who married a daughter of the former Governor, Oliver Ames of Massachusetts. It was in his possession for many years and was personally selected for him in Berlin by the great violinist, Joseph Joachim, and it is one of the few Stradivarius violins which can be traced back for a generation. More lately the violin has been the property of a wealthy Boston violin lover, who has found it necessary to part with the instrument on account of financial reasons.

Many celebrated artists will come to play on and admire the violin, to whom the joy of drawing the bow will be boundless.

This violin is but one of many similar rare examples illustrated in the booklet of John Friedrich & Bro. of New York, others being some of the works of Antonius Stradivarius, dating from 1694 to 1725, as well as many instruments by the renowned Italian Luthiers. Many of these fine examples have lately passed into the hands of wealthy amateurs, and, while it might be more satisfactory from a musical standpoint to have these fine violins in the hands of our public performers, the fact that many now belong to private collectors will help to keep the instruments in their present condition for a longer period of time—a violin in constant use by a traveling artist is apt to occasionally suffer from accidents which cannot befall them as long as they remain in the loving care of amateur performers and collectors.

Lovers of the violin are asking for copies of "Rare Old Violins."

VOTICHENKO RECEIVES A VISIT FROM KING ALBERT

Late Friday afternoon, October 24, Sasha Votichenko, the Russian composer and sole exponent of the tympanon, received the announcement that King Albert would pay him a visit at the Hotel des Artiestes.

In a short time the news became known, and many people gathered to see the beloved ruler of the Belgians.

In speaking of the visit of the king Mr. Votichenko said:

"I was taken entirely by surprise, but was, of course, delighted to have the honor to receive King Albert. He had first heard of my instrument in 1916, when I appeared before Queen Alexandra at Marlborough House, and was interested to see my collection of royal portraits, documents and antiques. The king was especially interested in the relics of English royalty and in the reconstructed throne of Catherine the Great."

This throne, which occupies a prominent part of the museum-studio, contains the jeweled dome and many of the original ornaments which once adorned the throne of this famous empress. The missing parts have been duplicated as well as possible, to give the complete effect of the throne as it appeared at the time of Catherine the Great.

On being asked to give his impression of Belgium's great hero and king, Mr. Votichenko, who has met many celebrities during his travels, having played for some of the royal families abroad, said:

"I have never met a more charming personality. King Albert impressed me as being gentle, yet firm, and sincerely democratic in spirit, which is, I think, the unfailing mark of the true aristocrat."

Owing to the great crowds in the halls Mrs. Votichenko, who arrived late and had not been informed of the king's visit, had difficulty in gaining entrance to the studio.

"Imagine my surprise," she said laughingly, "on being introduced to his majesty, the King of Belgium. It was indeed a great pleasure to meet King Albert in such a delightfully informal way. His majesty seemed very interested in the collection, admiring the gifts, signatures and relics when his escort appeared at the door, announcing solemnly and with great importance:

"Your majesty, we got-ter hustle, the car's outside."

King Albert thanked us graciously for our hospitality, explaining as he left the studio that he had numerous engagements to fulfill in a very limited time, but that he hoped to have the pleasure of hearing Mr. Votichenko play the tympanon at some future time.

AMERICAN PUBLICATIONS ON PROGRAMS IN ENGLAND

As is perhaps not generally known, the house of J. Fischer & Bro., New York, has operated since 1912 an office of their own in Birmingham, England.

Word has just reached here from England that Arthur Hinton's "Sleep," a part song for mixed voices, has been accepted for the next Manx Competitive Festival. The same composer's "Summer Pilgrimage in the White Mountains," a cycle for piano, was recently played at Aeolian Hall, London, by a prominent young pianist, Dorothy Griffiths, a pupil of I. Philipp of Paris.

Arthur Hinton's three scenes for orchestra, also published by J. Fischer & Bro., was again heard at the Promenade Concerts in London, this time under direction of the composer. "Endymion" has been played in several cities of the United States, and no doubt will frequently appear on American programs.

Arthur Hinton also is the composer of a string quintet which was given a rendition by the London String Quartet, assisted by Katharine Goodson, the prominent pianist, who will after January, 1920, tour the United States.

CHRISTINE LANGENHAN ON THE PACIFIC COAST

That Christine Langenhan, soprano, has been very successful on the Pacific Coast is shown in the following notices which have been culled from our exchanges:

It is long since Los Angeles audiences have heard a voice so tremendous in quantity, of such beautiful quality and unbounded vitality as that of Mme. Christine Langenhan, who sang last night at Blanchard Hall. This visiting artist gave, with the assistance of Claude Gotthelf at the piano, a brilliant program last evening. A large audience assembled to enjoy the musical novelties which the artist presented, her program including numbers in Russian, Bohemian, French and a group of recent American compositions by well known Californians. Mme. Langenhan excelled in the Dvorak and Tschaikowsky groups, although her interpretation of Saint-Saens' "Guitares et Mandolines" was charming, and an encore to the French numbers, as well as that which followed the Russian group, proved of much beauty. The artist sings after the manner frequently noted in continental training. Her upper register is of good quality and the frequent fortissimo on her higher notes lends a decided dramatic effect to her work. Her cantabile is excellent and her pianissimos of delightful lyric quality. Some of her best-known numbers included the Recitative and Lia's Air from Debussy's "L'Enfant Prodigue," Tschaikowsky's "String of Coral Beads," and Dvorak's "Songs My Mother Taught Me," and "Gypsy Song"; the finale group presented two Cadman songs, "Dream-Tryst" and "Birds of Flame"; a recent composition by Harold Webster, one by Mary Green Payson, well-known composer of San Diego, and one by A. Walter Kramer.—Los Angeles Examiner.

Christine Langenhan, dramatic soprano of wide reputation and indubitable ability, sang last evening at Blanchard Hall. Her voice is powerful and of wide range, and she sings with genuine feeling of her text. Her low notes are rich and full of sympathy, her high tones are clear and sweet, and she has a strong dramatic sense, which she puts to intelligent use. She sang a variable program, beginning with a Tschaikowsky group, of which "After the Ball" was very charming. The songs were sung in Russian, and the singer interpreted the text before singing. A French group was interesting, containing songs of Debussy, Fourdrain and Saint-Saens, whose "Guitares et Mandolines" was very delightful, with a Massenet for encore. A group of Dvorak, including the ever-popular "Songs My Mother Taught Me," was evidently keenly to the singer's taste and was wholly free and spontaneous. There were several American songs, among which a Cadman and a Webster song were most appreciated by the audience, as they were particularly well sung.—Los Angeles Times, August 26, 1919.

Fourteen thousand persons gathered in the Stadium for the last and best concert of a notable summer series.

Christine Langenhan, soprano soloist, was given a warm reception by her audience and responded graciously with encores. "To Norway," sung in Norwegian, as the encore after her first group, was perhaps one of the sweetest numbers of her program, though she was at her best, her voice clear and powerful enough to reach to the top tier of the Stadium and her interpretation charming in Grieg's "Tak for Did Raad."—Tacoma Sunday Ledger.

The first appearance of the soloist, Christine Langenhan, soprano, won her beautiful floral tributes and encores, which ended only when she sang "The Rosary." She sang, besides many English and Norwegian numbers, several Italian selections, which were received with acclaim.—The Tacoma News Tribune, September 1, 1919.

Mme. Langenhan's singing of Norwegian numbers by Grieg and Kjerulf and many encores like "Rosary" pleased her appreciative audience. Although the audience which packed the Tacoma Theater to its doors Sunday was not as large as that which greeted the soloist at the Stadium Saturday night, it was none the less enthusiastic.—The Tacoma Times, September 1, 1919.

Mme. Christine Langenhan, the dramatic soprano, who appeared last night at the Loring Theater, under the auspices of the Junior College, is winning a place for herself as a true artist in the musical world. She gave a program of such unusual variety as to make her coming an event.

It was in the Bohemian number, "Songs My Mother Taught Me," that she charmed the most. For an encore Mme. Langenhan gave the English translation, which does not spoil the fairylike rhythm of the song, as translations so often do.

In her French selections Mme. Langenhan was especially pleasing in a fantastic bit by Saint-Saens, "Guitares and Mandolines." Her singing of Massenet's "Elegie" was exquisite, too. The Italian number, an aria from Gioconda, contained a good deal of sustained recitative which was artistically done.

Of her English numbers the classical selections of Handel and Haydn, with which she opened the program, gave her splendid opportunity to display her excellent technic. Vanderpool's "I Did Not Know" was probably one of the most popular numbers of the evening, and Cadman's "Land of the Sky Blue Water" was, as always, a favorite.

Mana-Zucca's "Star of Gold," a brilliant piece of coloratura, closed the program with a display of pyrotechnics. The ever popular "Annie Laurie" was one of the many encores of the singer, whose graciousness induced her to respond to the enthusiasm of her hearers.—Riverside (Calif.) Enterprise.

Mme. Christine Langenhan appeared last evening in the Loring Theater.

The splendid singer gave out her best in a varied program of songs which ran the gamut of composition from the classic measures of Haydn and Handel to weird Scandinavian folk tunes and modern French and English songs.

Her voice is big and brilliant and these qualities were used to advantage in an aria from "Gioconda" and in a Tschaikowsky number which she sang in Russian. "Songs My Mother Taught Me," by Dvorak, she rendered in the original Bohemian, following with an English version of the same song.

French numbers from Victor Staub, Saint-Saens and Massenet were effective, and the English and American songs, all chosen with a view to lightening the program, were extremely pleasing.

The singer graciously acceded to the demands of the audience on several occasions and gave encore numbers or repeated a song the people especially liked.—Riverside (Calif.) Daily Press.

HERBERT J. WRIGHTSON'S "NIGHT SONG"

Herbert J. Wrightson's "Night Song" was played by Clarence Eddy in Minneapolis with success.

The Minneapolis Tribune said: "'A Night Song,' by Herbert J. Wrightson, was couched in beautiful colors by Mr. Eddy," and the Journal speaks of it as "a composition which made a deep impression, holding the exotic note of the modern Englishman in music, and yet it was of the sound appeal of the scholarly composition."

Josef Konecny in Virginia

Delightful in every detail of its fairly complete program was the concert at the Academy of Music last night, featuring Josef Konecny, the widely popular Bohemian violinist. The offering was under the auspices of the local organization of the Knights of Columbus, and adds one more achievement to the credit of the "Kasy" band. The audience was large as compared with those attending some more widely heralded concerts, and there was noticeable discrimination of taste.

Mr. Konecny, in addition to being a virtuoso, is a soldier of the American Legion, and perhaps therein lies partially the source of a marked air of maturity in his tonal style. That he is thoroughly musical and a thorough musician goes without saying. A unique characteristic of his execution is what appears at first sight to be a disconcerting uncertainty which dissolves as the mists of a spring morning when the pure tones and perfect balance thereof leap out from the magic violin.—Roanoke Times.

Walter Zimmerman in Dubuque

St. Luke's Church was filled with the music-lovers of the city Tuesday evening to hear the organ recital given by Walter P. Zimmerman of Chicago. Having attained a high standing in the Chicago musical colony as an organist of the first rank and as a composer of remarkable promise, Mr. Zimmerman came back to his home town with much to offer, and the audience Tuesday night was a flattering one both in numbers and quality. Having been organist of St. Luke's before going to Chicago, Mr. Zimmerman was thoroughly at home with the splendid instrument, and there was not one moment of delay or uncertainty in registration.

The program was exceptionally rich in variety and generous in length. The B minor Prelude by Bach was an offering of pure gold, clear-cut in phrasing, faultless in technic and full of the poise and exuberance of the strong man who rejoices to run a race. The lighter numbers, mostly from the French school, were played with rare lightness and grace of treatment seldom realized in organ music. Especially charming was the group of three pieces from Bonnet, the "Lied des Chrysanthemes," "Elves" and "Romance sans Paroles." His playing was marked by unusual clearness and sureness of touch.

A number of special interest was the Suite recently composed by Eric De Lamarter and dedicated to Walter P. Zimmerman. The four movements are replete with startling musical ideas, combined with the highest skill, but so complicated that only well-versed musicians can appreciate them at first hearing.

The recital closed with two compositions by Mr. Zimmerman himself, which demonstrated his vein of original musical wealth and revealed his scholarly instinct. These were "Legende" and "Grand Chorus."—Dubuque (Ia.) Daily News.

Wrightson's "Night Song" Pleases Press

Clarence Eddy's recent organ recital in Minneapolis included Herbert Wrightson's "Night Song." The following comment occurred in two of the local dailies:

"A composition that made a deep impression was 'Night Song,' by Herbert J. Wrightson, an Englishborn organist of Chicago. It held the exotic note of the modern Englishman in music and yet was of the sound appeal of the truly scholarly composition."—Minneapolis Journal, Oct. 29.

Macbeth-Linden—Minneapolis Orchestra

Several things contributed to make the opening popular concert of the present season at the Auditorium yesterday afternoon a very gratifying success. In the first place, every seat in the hall was occupied and very many were turned away—1,500, we were credibly informed—because of the capacity audience. In the second place, one of the new additions to the orchestra made his first appearance, true only in minor role, that of obligato flutist in one of Miss Macbeth's songs, but his admission into the hearts of a Minneapolis audience as a prime favorite was immediate and spontaneous.

If the abilities of all the new men are to be measured by those of Anthony Linden, solo flutist, the orchestra this year should make still further progress toward perfection of ensemble.

The novelty on the program, "Naiad's Idyl," from "The Hamadryads," by William J. McCoy, is precisely what the title indicates. It presents no startling innovations, but is purely a woodland idyl expressed in musical terms, and Mr. McCoy has succeeded in writing a piece of music which embodies those elements the pagan world interpreted into the phenomena of nature, without distorting his picture by radical and unnatural innovations.

At her second appearance with the orchestra as soloist Florence Macbeth won a notable success, singing with all the beauty of voice and facility of execution that have made her one of the most acceptable vocalists appearing in this city.

She sang the Bell Song from "Lakme" with delightful and refreshing ease and did full justice to a song new at these concerts, "Hymn to the Sun," from Rimsky-Korsakow's "The Golden Cock"; but the song has few innate qualities to commend it, just missing the vital spark at all its points. The compensation of a series of encores made amends, however, for the shortcomings of the programmed number and showed Miss Macbeth at her delightful best as a capable and painstaking artist.—Minneapolis Daily News.

Opera at Oklahoma City

Balance is as necessary in a grand opera as in a jeweler's scales. "Aida," produced at the Fair Grounds Auditorium last night by the Chicago Grand Opera Company, was as nicely balanced as the mainspring of a watch. Scenery, costumes, orchestration, music, lighting effects, singing—every detail dovetailed to make one of the most enjoyable operas ever heard in Oklahoma City.

Without doubt the outstanding feature was the singing of Rosa Raisa, dramatic soprano, who assumed the title role of Aida, captured Ethiopian princess and slave to Amneris, Egyptian princess. Miss Raisa demonstrated, too, that not only is she a wonderful singer but a wonderful actress as well. It is exceedingly difficult for an opera singer to convey emotion by facial expression, but the prima donna last night startled her audience by the plasticity not only of her facial muscles but of her body. She is a consummate actress.

Sophie Braslau, who played Amneris, the Egyptian princess, gave a pleasing performance, although she did not impress the audience as favorably as Miss Raisa.

Vittorio Arimondi as the Egyptian king was impressive, and Giacomo Rimini as the captured Ethiopian king demonstrated that he is nearly as wonderful an actor as the prima donna.

Alessandro Dolci as Rhadames, captain of the guard, gave the impression to many that he was not expending his best efforts on the role. At times, however, his tenor voice was used to splendid advantage.

No review of last night's performance would be complete without mention of the wonderful work of Anna Ludmila, premier danseuse, and her corps de ballet. Their dancing was fully equal in quality to the remainder of the production.—Daily Oklahoman.

Opera in Omaha

In the presentation of "The Masked Ball" by Verdi, at the Auditorium on Tuesday evening, the Chicago Opera Association scored another artistic success. In point of appreciation from the audience, the spotaneity of the applause, the number of recalls and the fact that one of the numbers was repeated, the opera can easily be judged as having been more popular with those who attended than on the first evening.

Notwithstanding the fact that the music is woven around a villainous plot, introducing conspiracies and treacherous situations, it has a sparkling and inspirational character that at once appeals to the listener. In the midst of the tragic scenes, a humorous element or a bewitching melody is often introduced which makes the opera delightfully interesting.

While not so many opportunities were given for the staging, the settings were nevertheless elaborate or appropriate, and put on with careful attention to details.

Madame Emma Destinova, the renowned soprano, heard for the first time in Omaha, was Amelia, and, although the part has not many solos, it is important throughout. It gave Madame Destinova every chance to show all the possibilities of a dramatic voice of great power, wide range and carefully trained and placed. Madame Destinova's tones are at all times satisfactory, and her ease of delivery is a lesson in itself.

Her great solo in Act II, when she is searching for the magic herb which will cure her of her love for Richard, was dramatic in the extreme and a fine example of vocal execution. Her rendering of her second solo before her husband's "Morro ma prima in grazia," was particularly well done. Her glorious voice rang brilliantly in all the ensembles and all deserve notice, but exceedingly beautiful was the love duo with Richard in Act II, "M'ami, M'ami."

Alessandro Bonci, gifted tenor, gathered sheaves of well merited laurels in the impersonation of Richard, the governor. He infused the part with delightful animation, gaiety and wit throughout; it was nothing short of perfection. His lovely voice, coupled with his great dramatic talent, compelled admiration from beginning to end. Ovations were given him after every thing he did, and especially his laughing solo, which had to be repeated.

The success of the evening was made greater by the fascinating little page, Oscar, who was Miss Myrna Sharlow, pretty and dainty to look at and exquisite to hear, so caressing were the pearly notes of her fresh pure voice.

George Baklanoff, baritone, was Reinhart, Amelia's husband, who came in for honors, especially in his sorrowful aria "O Dolcezzo Perdute." It brought into full light a very musical voice.

The other parts were taken with credit by Miss Eubanks as the gypsy; Arimondi and Nicolay, as the enemies of the governor, completing an excellent cast.

Interesting diversion was again furnished by the ballet under the direction of Pavley and Ourainsky. The chorus work was also noticeable for its good balance of power and fine tonal coloring, and the support of the orchestra was wholly satisfactory. Signor De Angelis proved himself a conductor with masterly qualifications and resourcefulness, and shared with the other stars the approval of the audience.—A. M. Borglum in Omaha World-Herald.

Charles W. Clark

Press notices following Mr. Charles W. Clark's appearance with the Buffalo Orpheus at their Jubilee Concert in Buffalo, N. Y., October 6:

"It is a delight to hear an artist like Mr. Clark who never mars the dignity of his art by technical trickery, yet who neglects no detail of fine interpretation. He can take a very little song and make it a polished miniature of vocal utterance by his art."—Buffalo Express.

"Mr. Clark's 'The Devil's Love Song,' by Gilberte, was a magnificent offering, in which his command of sustained phrases and authority in declamatory singing were notable. The other selections were gems of artistry.—Buffalo Courier.

Prokofieff

I know of no pianist now before the public who sits so quietly at the instrument as does this young Russian. And yet there is no effect or dynamic climax impossible to him. He has tremendous force in his hands, and the left is fully as marvelous as is the right. Technical difficulties seem not to exist for him and he overcomes them with a quietness and ease that verge on the uncanny. Few players that the present or the past generation of concert goers have heard have distinguished and articulated the musical phrase with such clarity and precision; few have been able to make a melody set for the left hand ring out with as close similarity to the one the right hand has just voiced as he does. This exceptional clarity of phrase is perhaps the most striking characteristic of Mr. Prokofieff's playing—that and the absolutely impersonal nature of his interpretations.

He is ever objective in his readings and yet they are never wanting in warmth and sympathy. He is never for an instant the dry analysist of musical compositions. But he grasps them so completely, so in mass as well as in detail, that he impresses as standing wholly above and outside of them, and when he presents them presenting them as a recreating of the work as its composer created it. It is a skill and an art as admirable as unique and contracting it means unusual and deep enjoyment for the music lover.—W. L. Hubbard in the Tribune.

Chicago Opera Company at Peoria

Peoria Journal, October 16—"Raisa's wonderful voice, incomparably rich and thrilling of tone, her impassioned dramatic style and her all-conquering charm of personality captured the house from her very first appearance, and the end of every act brought her an ovation. In the great third act her singing was unforgettable.

"Mr. Dolci's Radames is a big fellow fitly embodying the warrior type of that period. His singing gained measurably in power and sureness as he proceeded, and he sang the difficult music of the third act admirably, his high C, which, prolonged as it is, has been a stumbling block for tenors for half a century, ringing out like a golden trumpet.

"Miss Eubanks also sang better as she advanced. She makes a fleshy looking Amneris and in her gorgeous costumes adds to the effectiveness of the stage pictures.

"Mr. Lazzari's beautiful bass voice and excellent singing make the part of the High Priest an important one.

"There is an astonishingly large chorus which sings spiritedly and too much cannot be said for the orchestra, under the direction of Mr. De Angelis."

Peoria Journal, October 17—"Alessandro Bonci had not been on the stage more than a few moments before the audience realized that it was in the presence of an artist incomparably great. From that moment of realization to the close, the evening was one of ovations for the tenor.

"Mme. Destinn arose brilliantly to the demands of the score, and in the big scenes which mark the later acts of the opera she sang and acted with poise and charm.

"Unusual interest attended the first appearance here of Georges Baklanoff. A man of great distinction and dignity of bearing and the fortunate possessor of a rich and mellow voice, this singer added measurably to the artistic value of the performance.

"Nothing more sheerly perfect than the chorus work could possibly be asked for, and Mr. De Angelis again gave a delightful rendition of the orchestral score. The ball scene was quite gorgeous, and in that act the corps de ballet, led by the enrapturing Miss Ludmila, was an enjoyable feature."

Clarence Eddy at Beloit

Clarence Eddy, world organ celebrity, played before a sincerely appreciative audience at Beloit College Chapel last evening. The large auditorium was not entirely filled, which is a matter of regret to record, for the public is not often given the opportunity to hear a master of this instrument who has so profound an understanding of its possibilities. Under his touch it expressed such delicate nuances, such subtle and fleeting beauty so exquisitely interpreted, that many of his hearers carried away an entirely new conception of the pipe organ.

It is possible that Beloit is fortunate in having heard Mr. Eddy at this period of his musical career, for he brings to the keyboard the mature development and breadth of musical expression accruing from a lifetime of devotion to a noble gift. He is an artist in every sense of the word, and little can be said of his playing that has not been said countless times before. First of all he has a poet's understanding. Then to it he brings a flawless technique and a use of the pedal which he has reduced to an art.

His phrasing is clean and lovely; his notes of bell-like quality of tone and he is quite unapproachable in the beauty and smoothness of his legato passages. He attempts no spectacular mannerisms and invests his playing with dignity and serenity. He achieves pianissimo effects.—Minnie McIntyre Wallace, Beloit Daily News.

May Peterson at Raleigh

Before a goodly audience of music lovers Miss May Peterson made her second bow before a Raleigh audience. Her delightful concert of last season was still fresh in the memory of our concert goers, raising their expectations to a high pitch. Coupled to Miss Peterson's art was Mr. Salvatore de Stefano's as harpist.

To many this proved a delightful novelty, for the harp as a solo instrument has not been heard in Raleigh, the only appearance of harp music having been limited to its function as an orchestral instrument. It was therefore in the twofold sense of a novelty and a musical treat that Mr. de Stefano's appearance was anticipated.

Being one of the oldest instruments, appearing in the decorative arts of the earliest Egyptians, it is rather strange that the harp has only recently come into favor as a solo and an orchestral instrument. With artists like de Stefano and Salzedo to popularize the instrument, we may look forward to hearing this splendid solo instrument oftener.

Of Miss Peterson's voice and vocal art little can be added to what was already known to her many admirers. With her lovely appearance and her gracious stage presence, Miss Peterson can always count on a splendid reception from her Raleigh friends.

There were several changes in the program which were explained by the singer, who also interpreted several of the French and Spanish songs. It was hoped that the program would include at least one operatic aria, which would have revealed even greater powers and beauty; however, the program was well received, especially the "Hallelujah" from the "Seventh Mass" by Mozart, which was a request number. Miss Peterson had to respond with many encores which were well received.—Gustav Hagedorn in Raleigh, N. C., News and Observer.

May Peterson in Virginia

That Miss May Peterson has captured the Petersburg music-loving public is an obvious fact. The large audience that filled the high school auditorium last night proved it very plainly. It should be remembered that this is Miss Peterson's third appearance in this city within a period of less than six months.

It is superfluous to even attempt to render in words the enthusiasm that prevailed throughout the entire concert.

The program included the following, which excited the greatest interest and applause:

Aria, "Depius le Jour" from "Louise".....Charpenter
Voici noel petits Enfant.....Weckerlin
Cradle Song (from Pskovityanka)....Rimsky-Korsakoff
La Partida.....Alvarez

The intervals for intermission were filled with presentations of flowers, and several encores, upon which the public insisted almost violently. Amidst the great outbursts of applause and cheerings, the singer was surprised with the presentation of a large birthday cake with several candles (some people say seventeen). For a few minutes Miss Peterson could not cease laughing from great surprise.

"Carry Me Back to Old Virginny," "To a Messenger," "Songs My Mother Taught Me," and the "Cuckoo Song" are few of the many encores that will never be forgotten by the large attendance. A great part of the large audience remained for a good while after the concert to express, at least, a few more words of cheerings and appreciation.

Mr. Stewart Ross, who is an accompanist of rare abilities, shared greatly in the general success of the evening.—Evening Progress, Petersburg, Va.

Frank La Forge

And let it be added that at the piano Frank La Forge proved himself to be, in his domain, as great an artist as the singer (Mme. Sembrich) in hers.—Henderson in New York Sun.

The accompaniments which Frank La Forge provided were wholly worthy, which means that they, too, were perfect.—Krehbiel in New York Tribune.

Frank La Forge's accompaniments, all played from memory, were in themselves works of art.—Richard Aldrich in New York Times.

At the piano sat Frank La Forge. Everything is said when one calls this genuine artist the "Sembrich of the accompanists."—Halperson in New York Staats Zeitung.

As an accompanist we consider Frank La Forge without a peer, and we make this statement without reserve.—Alfred Metzger in Pacific Coast Musical Review.

"ELIJAH" IN OAK PARK

The First Congregational Church of Oak Park presents the first of this season's series of oratorios this Sunday evening at 7:15, when Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be given. A chorus of selected voices from the Apollo Musical Club will render the oratorio together with the following soloists: Mme. Else Harthan Arendt, soprano; Mme. Permelia Gale, contralto; Rollin Pease, bass-barritone; the tenor soloist to be announced. The oratorio will be conducted from the great organ of the church by Edwin Stanley Seder, F. A. G. O., organist and director of music.

This church expects this year to present more of the larger choral works than were given last year, when a notable record was made by the rendition of the following oratorios and cantatas: "Messiah," "Elijah," "Stabat Mater" (Rossini), "Seven Last Words" (Dubois), "Death and Life" (Shelley), and "The Holy City" (Gaul).

During October the following musical attractions were featured at the evening service by the music committee, William H. Shuey chairman:

October 5—Frederica Gerhardt Downing, contralto.

October 12—Arthur Kraft, tenor.

October 19—Birmingham Jubilee Quartet.

October 26—Ethel Benedict, soprano.

These special features are always in addition to the work of the church choir. It is the intention to continue this plan of presenting strong musical programs throughout the season.

DECATUR, ILL.

Millikin Conservatory of Music, Decatur, Ill., opened its seventeenth year September 15 with a very heavy enrollment. At the end of the sixth week the enrollment was 721 against 756, the record enrollment of the institution in 1918-19. The musical kindergarten, the most unique organization, at present has an enrollment of 98, ranging in age from 3½ years to 7 years. The complete conservatory faculty, including kindergarten, consists of an able group of twenty-five teachers. The Conservatory is fortunate in possessing a most convenient and artistic building of thirty-two rooms.

This season an oratorio chorus of 250 voices will present one of the big choral works in conjunction with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. The Spring Festival will consist of three orchestra programs.

The Millikin Conservatory of Music Artists' Series of 1919-20 is as follows:

Richard Czerwonky, violinist, December 2, 1919.

Percy Grainger, pianist, January 8, 1920.

French Society of Ancient Instruments, February 6, 1920.

Mary Kent, contralto, March 9, 1920.

Tollefsen—The Tollefsen Trio played at the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences on November 5, the program including the Trios, Op. 90 (Dvorak), and Op. 54 (Schutt), besides solos by Michel Penha, cello; Augusta Tollefsen, piano, and Carl Tollefsen, violin.

Axman—Gladys Axman of the Metropolitan Opera Company sang for the United Federation of Jewish Charities Thursday night, October 30, using on her program "Golden Crown," "The Heart Call," and "Values."

MILWAUKEE

The first meeting of the Civic Music Association took place as usual at the Art Institute. Miss Ella Smith opened with a talk on "Memorizing," which was interesting in the extreme, although it occasioned much discussion, as no doubt was intended. She is one of the brainy and conscientious pianists of the city. Miss Alma Hahn, soprano, sang a group of songs, with Miss Erna Villmow at the piano. Miss Hahn is a very attractive young person to look at and one of the promising younger singers. She is soloist at Grand Avenue Congregational Church with the chorus choir and on this occasion, while possibly immature for opera selections, did "Chanson Norvegienne" by Fourdrain with fine style. Mrs. Olive Atwood was heard in a piano group, "Reverie Nocturne" (Decrens), "Lotus Land" (Scott), "Etude" (Arenskey).

Marquette Conservatory presents its pianist, Mr. Adams Buell, in a recital at the Pabst Theater at least once every season, barring "wars," and while the Milwaukee public is not prone to overestimate its own artists, there is always a clamoring for seats to hear Mr. Buell. His latest recital occurred October 27 after an omission of a season, and for unalloyed pleasure I, as a concert reviewer, can go back many seasons without recalling a pianist who gave me more or as much.

Not being a "virtuoso" pianist myself, perhaps there is an "nth" degree I miss in comparing him to any of the world's best, but I sincerely hope the time is not far distant when his activities may be put to the test in broader fields and let a larger public decide. Miss Lucille Stevenson, soprano, as assisting artist, is not a stranger, as she was a "Messiah" soloist with the Arion Club for several successive seasons. At present she spends one day each week at the Conservatory and evidently is devoting much of her time to teaching. Her first group of French songs were interpreted in a scholarly manner, such as especially Debussy demands. The Negro Spirituals were especially atmospheric and suited to her voice.

The Conservatory can be congratulated on being able to present a like recital.

The Grand Avenue Congregational Choir under Carl Mueller's direction will give "St. Paul" by Mendelssohn next Sunday evening with Beecher Burton, tenor; Alma Hahn, soprano, Elsa Bloedel, alto; George Russell, baritone. J. B. W.

Wagner—Miss Grace Wagner, soprano, who is a niece of Charles L. Wagner, the manager of John McCormack, Galli-Curci and other noted artists, made her operatic debut at the Park Theater, with the Society of American Singers, as Marguerite in "Faust" on Thursday evening, October 30. Miss Wagner is an American girl and comes from the west. Her musical studies have been pursued in the United States under well known teachers. While her experience has been limited in a musical sense, never having attempted before so important a role as Marguerite, Miss Wagner, nevertheless, has been a close student of operatic affairs and the traditions of the musical stage.

Society of American Singers Presents "Faust"

Departing, temporarily, from the light operas Mr. William Wade Hinshaw offered grand opera on the evening of October 28. "Faust" was the bill and naturally it was sung in English. The Society of American Singers wishes to make no pretense of presenting operas a la Broadway or Lexington Opera House. Its aim is to familiarize the public at large with the Franco-Latin operatic works in the vernacular. Any company, whether high class or otherwise, will be handicapped with such mediocre English librettos as that of Faust. A text minus the florid language and the poetical verse will never impress, be it sung in any language. The "Faust" libretto used by the American Society of Singers was a piece of unsingable text and with it the cast labored valiantly, but rarely did one phrase ring poetically. Elaborate scenery, adequate ballet, reinforced orchestra and other details are inexorable factors to make a "Faust" worthy of presentation. A chorus and a good cast is necessary to make Gounod's work an enjoyable presentation. "Faust" was collectively below the standard, individually it had its merits. The attempt of giving operas in English is laudable and let the organization continue the plan and it will impose itself upon the audiences. Francis Maclennan impersonated the philosopher. The American tenor should have been chosen to sing "Parsifal" in English at the Metropolitan, but the management gives preference to a Latin tenor. Well, let us not discuss that. Mr. Maclennan was heard last by the writer the season of 1915-16 with the Chicago opera in his famous interpretation of Sigfried. Since, I heard him in 1917 at the Maxine Elliott Theater in a recital. "Faust" in the hands of a non-experienced tenor would have been a disaster, especially when sung with a poor English text. Mr. Maclennan in the lyric passages and in the mezzo voice exhibited many admirable points. He acted with skill and looked the part. Marcella Craft is a clever manipulator of voice and an artistic impersonation of Marguerite saved the evening. Henri Scott as Mephistopheles in the absence of a basso cantante quality made the part at times unsatisfactory. But, he too, had inspiriting moments and by clever histrionism he elevated the performance to a better standard. Bertram Peacock was totally inadequate as Valentine. As Siebel Cora Tracy could not conceal her "dark" contralto voice but was on the threshold of a singer who attempts to please without doing any conspicuous work. The ensemble showed signs of unpreparedness. John McGhie with a limited orchestra accomplished superb results. A mediocre conductor would have thrown chaos in the performance, but his vivacity and musicianship, his knowledge of the score and conscientious direction contributed to a pleasurable orchestral reading.

Titta Ruffo Sings in Spain

The celebrated baritone of the Chicago Opera Company appeared during the month of September at the Real of Madrid. A curious incident occurred when "Andrea Chenier" by Giordano was announced. The conservative and aristocratic circles who frequent the Real objected to the revolutionary tendency of the opera. After many debates in the press and interference by a certain class of opera lovers, it was decided to present the opera mutilating the satirical songs of the "Andrea Chenier" epoch.

Titta Ruffo also appeared as "Falstaff," but the latter had only one performance on account of the lukewarm reception. The Spaniards no doubt have a queer taste for masterpieces.

women in New York. Notwithstanding that she has large classes of pupils and giving without respite piano lessons, she still has time to devote to compositions and to the publication of her piano studies. This season the demand for her works has increased enormously; in fact the sale of her publications exceeds any other season. This may be due to the reconstruction of the musical life of America and to the authoritative books on piano which Mrs. Virgil is constantly producing from her pen. The house of Theodore Presser of Philadelphia has just ordered 5,000 piano pieces written by Mrs. A. M. Virgil. We believe that no composer in America has ever received such a single order. The piano conservatory was opened October 1 with an increased number of pupils. Mrs. Virgil teaches classes and individual pupils. We note that her classes consist of future pianists coming from all parts of the country. One of her star pupils is to appear during the month of November at a concert to be given in some Connecticut town, but more details about this recital will follow.

The Capitol Theater

In our last issue announcement was made of the opening of a new theater to be christened "The Capitol" and located at 51st and Broadway. I went to this show place and on my entering the house I could not doubt the statement of the management that it is the largest "movie" house in the world. Not only its size is to be admired, its beauty too, is one of the important factors, and certainly the pride of Broadway will grow with the appearance of a new show place. The most comfortable seats are provided for its patrons, and one can easily find more pleasure sitting on one of the plush chairs than in any of the New York theaters. The walls are nicely decorated with tasty paintings. What a wonderful house for the genuine dramatic arts; what a splendid theater for the legitimate and classical dramas. Alas, the public refuses to be nourished with the high arts. Naturally the management followed the public's taste for movies and vaudeville. And this theater is to be devoted only to such entertainments. And to come to the show. We had Ned Wayburn's Revue and truly I cannot commend any of the acts or the actors. He or she who was allotted to sing a song had no voice. The scenery was beautiful, the costumes were showy, but the acts were of the antiquated nature. We were offered acrobatic acts, dances and the usual revue chorus singing. I believe in a good joke, good comedy is a tonic for a constant reviewer of shows, concerts, recitals, operas, etc., but there was none of the comedy, and if a streak of a joke leaped out it was of the vulgar school. Perhaps the future will improve the quality of the revue. The most attractive act was the Capitol Tower, indeed an elaborate piece of artistic arrangement. Miss Chalifant was acceptable in her light songs, but hardly efficient in the singing of the "Mireille" waltz by Gounod. And then she Lucianized the Aria by introducing new coloratura stunts written by Donizetti and never dreamed by the French composer. We were entertained by Arthur Pryor's band, but it is rather questionable whether a military band would be effective in a theater.

The organist's work was delightful. The house was packed, and the last number enlisted "Douglas" Fairbanks in "His Majesty, the American"; yes, a movie. Surely there is enough room for one more theater, but the "Capitol" as a structure is unique.

Lotta Madden in Recital

The western soprano made her reappearance for the season at the Aeolian Hall on the evening of October 27, being assisted at the piano by Mr. Francis Moore. This was the second recital of the day at the same hall and very seldom do two musical events attract more than a passing attention, either from the public or the professional critics, but Miss Madden's recital, if not perfect from every point of view, had the distinction of being different in quality from many other similar events. The writer found her at home in the French group, which consisted of "Le Soir" (Thomas), "La Cigale" (Paladilhe) and "La Pluie" (Alexandre Georges), and she sang them all exquisitely. Miss Madden exhibited a French enunciation which only few recitalists are capable. Many a singer features American songs, but very few show a clear and intelligible diction. Brahms' songs, if not rendered with a proper atmosphere, at least were distinctively understood. Miss Madden's voice has improved in quality, especially in the upper register. Her appearance was welcomed by a large audience and admirers proved their delight by presenting her some glorious floral tributes. Her program consisted of songs by Lully, Haydn, Caldara, Veracini, Duparc and the English group by John Alden Carpenter, Mable Wood Hill, Seneca Pierce and H. H. A. Beach.

PIETRO YON

Pietro A. Yon, the organ virtuoso, has returned from his first extended concert tour of the season. After a brilliant recital at Dallas, Texas, under the auspices of the Texas branch of the American Guild of Organists, by whom he was made an honorary member, he later received a public decoration of the American Legion. He is to return to Texas and Oklahoma later in the season as he returns from his Pacific Coast engagements, and will complete the tour which he was obliged to defer to meet eastern engagements. .

During his Texas engagements he appeared before Kidd-Key College and Conservatory of Music at Sherman, Tex., and here played upon the smallest concert organ in existence. It was a veritable "half-portion," but the program did not suffer from this diminutive size.

Mr. Yon is to appear at Lancaster, York and other Pennsylvania cities next week, and thereafter in New York. He has featured on his program two of his most notable recent contributions, "The American Phantasy" and "Christmas in Sicily" as his contribution to the propaganda for closer artistic and commercial relations between the two countries.

WARFORD SONGS FEATURED

Twenty-four of Claude Warford's songs were featured by three well known artists from the Warford Studios at the Wanamaker Auditorium, New York, on Saturday afternoon, October 25. The composer was at the piano. Edna Wolverton, soprano, made an especial appeal with "Pieta," perhaps the best Art-Song this composer has produced, but she also scored in "Approach of Night" and "In My Garden," two new numbers. Lola Gillies, contralto, gave real pleasure with her excellent rendition of "Dream Song," "Rhapsody" and "Down the Lane," while Carl Rupprecht, baritone, received prolonged applause after both of his song groups, which contained the now popular "Earth Is Enough" and "Waiting" (Japanese Sword Song). Rumor says that this sterling baritone is leaving New York for Chicago. If this is true Mr. Rupprecht should receive a warm welcome when he sings in the "Windy City," as he has made a definite place for his art in New York, always reflecting great credit upon Mr. Warford's teaching, under whom he has worked for the past six years.

LETTER RECEIVED BY FREDERICK VANDERPOOL

I was interested in reading your circular letter of June 21 just a short time ago. This letter was addressed to me at Kokomo, Ind., and has been following me around for some time.

Yes, I have been using "Values," and I am sure that I agree to every word of the review in the Chicago Examiner. I would say that their review was, if anything, too mild in its praise. I think the song is splendid, and I am glad to see that you have had such success with it.

"Ma Little Sunflower, Good Night" is a delightful song and I have enjoyed using it in my work.

PANCRAZI'S RESTAURANT A RENDEZVOUS FOR ARTISTS

What a relief when you enter a restaurant and find no "jazz band" to amuse you. In the so-called fashionable dining rooms the strains of an orchestra (nearly an orchestra) contribute not to a wholesome meal but to the complete wrecking of pleasure. Genuine gastronomy and wholesome culinary need no music, at least for the time your stomach is being relieved of hunger. That Mr. Pancrazi knows his clientele the proof is "no music," but in exchange he exhibits the art of cooking. His clientele consists of artists and musicians. The two professions are apt to be more critical, perhaps hypercritical, with that which a restaurant has to offer as meals than with their own voices or whatever instrument they may chance to play. You may wish to call on an artist or musician; chances are you will not find them in, or they will be too busy to receive you. And your best hope often is Pancrazi. There you meet them, week days or otherwise. Ever since I made my home in the metropolis, Pancrazi has been my favorite dining room because he knows how to satisfy. Courtesy is one of his attributes and one of the principal factors of success with the well mannered folks. I never saw such a large gathering of artists and musicians as on one October evening when I went there because of a little dinner arranged to celebrate my admission as citizen of the United States of America. In entering the restaurant William Brady, the vocal teacher, Carolina Lazzari of the Metropolitan with her fiance, Mr. Larney, were the first ones to greet me. At the next table the eminent violin pedagogue, P. A. Tirindelli, was enjoying his dinner. And among many others were: Maestro Gennaro, Mario Curci and his brother (husband of the Diva). Alfredo Martino, the vocal teacher, was entertaining another Martino, not a relative, but a basso of the Metropolitan. Then we came across Signor Scotto, representative of Ginlio Crimi, and Evelyn Scotney. Mario Salvini and Louis Simmions were also conspicuous figures. Pancrazi is a favorite meeting place of the Metropolitan artists. We often meet there De Segurola, Anna Fitziu, Astolfo Pescia, Alga Carrara, Salvatore Fucito, Caruso's accompanist; Signor Giulio Gatti-Casazza. And not long ago we came across Titta Ruffo and his brother, Maestro Polacco and Edith Mason. It would take too much space to enumerate all the artists, but if the musical profession is congenial to you, you will always find some of them at Pancrazi's.

Evening Telegram and Globe

Margaret Cameron and Florence Abot will appear shortly for the Evening Telegram and Globe concerts. These musical entertainments are arranged, respectively, by Messrs. Mischa Appelbaum and Charles D. It is predicted that the young ladies will meet with success, owing to their excellent voices and the efficient training given to them by their teacher, Chevalier Astolfo Pescia.

Vera Yanacopoulos in Recital

A debutante of last season, Vera Yanacopoulos, soprano, made her first bow of the season on Saturday afternoon, November 1, at Aeolian Hall. Miss Yanacopoulos was born in South America of Greek-French parentage. On this occasion she proved to be a linguist, for her French, English and Russian diction was flawless. When a singer can bring out every word of the different languages with clarity and a proper pronunciation, she is bound to make every verse and every stanza felt. I am not familiar with the Russian idiom, but I know some of the Slavic words, and when the soprano sang the Russian songs I could comprehend every word. Over here we indulge in comparisons, and sometimes one can strike the right chord, even though "comparisons are odious." The voice resembles in quality that of Yvonne Gall of the Chicago Opera. Miss Yanacopoulos' voice is of distinctive beauty, powerful and dramatic in the upper register. The medium is lyric and the lower agreeable. She may turn into a genuine dramatic soprano. Her method of singing leaves something for improvement. Her emission is faulty, at times, but when Miss Yanacopoulos emits well she is delightful. The cultivation of the mezzo voce should not be neglected.

Her voice is perfectly adapted for operas, and with her striking personality her future on the operatic stage is assured if she remedies her vocalization.

In her opening group she was nervous. Therefore the old French "chansonnes" were not vocally satisfactory. The interpretations were superb, the atmosphere and the vein of the medieval era songs was not absent, and the correct diction was also a factor in this group. They were: "Margoton" (fifteenth century), harmonized by Perilho; "Plainte de celle qui n'est pas Aimee" (fourteenth century), harmonized by Tiersot; "Non, je n'irai pas au bois," harmonized by Weckerlin; "There Was a Jolly Miller" (seventeenth century), arranged by Granville Bantock, exquisitely sung and with clear English enunciation, and "Lord Rendal," arranged by Bantock. Other duties called me elsewhere, but I returned to hear the Russian group. Nina Tarasova interprets the Russian folk lore, but Vera Yanacopoulos features the Russian classics, full of satire, humor and atmosphere. The soprano, in this group, can be called a genuine Yvette Guilbert, Jr., of the Russian songs. Miss Yanacopoulos is an artist, a true interpreter, and possesses in abundance the temperament.

The encores, "Tell Me, Nana" and "The Prayer" (featured by request), both by Moussorgsky. The dramatic temperament was employed in the "Lullaby," from the songs and dances of death by the same composer. The Russian group enlisted also Rachmaninoff's "The Songs of Grusia," and the last number was Moussorgsky's "Gathering Mushrooms." To prove her versatility she sang Schumann's "Fanfare," "Nocturne" and "J'ai pardonne." The third group was a Spanish one; El Mirar de la Maja" (Granados), "Caterpillar" (Albeniz), "Chinoiserie" and "Seguedille," by Manuel de Falla.

The Aeolian was packed, encores were granted, and the applause was enthusiastic. Mdlle. Chalet at the piano.

Rudolph Reuter in Recital

The manipulators of the keyboard are invading constantly the precincts of Aeolian Hall. I don't know whether lovers of piano care to hear so many pianoforte recitals, because the majority of those who make their appearance in this hall (not counting other smaller halls) very seldom find cause to enjoy either the program or the interpreter. So far, since the beginning of the season, very few pianists left lasting impressions, but Rudolph Reuter, hailing from the Windy City, was welcomed by a large audience on Friday afternoon, October 31, and was heard with delight.

His future appearances will also be a source of pleasure to his new admirers, to professionals and to students. He is young, and with his youth he brings the virility which very few pianists can boast of. He is vivacious, energetic, thoughtful, keen, studious and he reveres his instrument and the composition he plays. At this recital he was heard in the Sonata, Opus 2, No. 3, by Beethoven, and with a lesser pianist the great composer would have been thrown into insignificance. Mr. Reuter played with dash, vivacity and a bravura at this time which I have not noticed in many pianists. His technic was superb, his reading was fluent, his touch was limpid and admirable for its clarity. The adagio gave him the opportunity to exhibit a soft tone and a well-conceived reading of the great Beethoven.

Mr. Reuter proved that New York is to be one of the places certain of conquests, and his return will be watched with great interest. The audience has begun to realize the power that lies in the Chicago pianist, and gave him one of the most cordial receptions ever given to an American musician. His program was a generous one, and consisted of:

Barcarole, Op. 60 ..... Chopin
Intermezzo, Op. 119, No. 3
Romanze, Op. 118, No. 5
Rhapsodie, Op. 119, No. 4 ..... Brahms

EMORY GALLUP IN RECITAL

One of the best of our Chicago organists was heard last Sunday afternoon in recital at St. Chrysostom's Church. It is one of the highest commendations possible from the pen of this writer to say that his playing was more suggestive of that of our own Palmer Christian than has been that of any other organist heard in many months. And this statement presupposes a great deal. It implies poise, dignity, clear and decisive technique, an unusual capacity for detail and a keen ear for orchestral effect. Mr. Gallup evinced all of these qualities in large degree in spite of the rather limited resources of his organ. These restrictions served only to make more estimable the utmost time and care which he had used in employing whatever expedients in the best possible way. For instance, in the great Bach G Minor Fugue, there was not a single statement which did not stand out in perfect clarity by contrast of registration. The reading was most astutely planned and rendered with absolute authority in tempo as well, another "Christian" characteristic.

In the two small Bonnet numbers, the "Poeme du Soir" and "Romance sans Paroles," the organist showed skill in the production of delicate and small effects. The "Romance" savored of an old-fashioned Christmas carol in content and interpretation. Widor's "Toccata" from the "Fifth Symphony" was vigorous and pithy in conclusion and left us with a uniform assurance of Mr. Gallup's thorough musicianship and artistry.

PUBLIC SCHOOL MUSIC

By LYRAVINE VOTAW

"YOUNG AMERICA"

Shall we mean only the boys when we say "Young America"? Let us concede it to include, instead, all the youth in the public schools of our country. The boys shall be citizens to make the laws—yes, but they shall also be the fathers of the coming generation. The girls shall be women of power in the communities; their influence unlimited—yes, but they shall also be the mothers of the coming generation.

These home-makers of our country shall determine whether America is to be a musical nation.

We are proud of the progress our country has made in the past four years in its aspiration toward stronger nationality in music in America. We are proud of the increase in the number of American artists to be heard in concert, recital and opera. We are simply ecstatic over the fact that our great symphony orchestra has made such enormous strides in giving us for the first time the Children's Concerts and the composers' "try-outs." That is wonderful! Oh, yes! we are on the way.

We must not underestimate the value of the negro folk-song, it has meant much to us as a stepping stone to something better. We certainly do not wish it to stand, for generations to come, as the only American folk-song. Some way I cannot be content to think of it as such. We do not believe it sufficiently representative of the American home. Since the folk-song is created in the home, among the common people, it is really then to them that we must look for improvement and final creation of the lasting, representative American music.

Young America carries with it these unbounded possibilities. Can we as teachers ever gain this broad, far-reaching view of why we are teaching music in the schools? Can we each day keep this before us, and put into the lives of young America those musical ideas and influences which shall generate the right kind of stuff? After all it is not to put into as much as to draw out. It is above all as a means of self-expression that it should become a part of every child. No surface polish, no general culture will answer, it must be ingrained in his very being, a part of his very soul. Music as a cultural study only, as an attraction in society, as a commercial thing to be bought and sold, will never make a people who deserve to be called musical.

As "The Printer of Udell's" puts it: "and so music found its way out of the boy's soul." Every child has it in his soul—but oh, how some of it is buried by generations of neglect! How can children dig it up from such an abyss and learn to express themselves through such a medium, when the homes ignore and smother every instinct toward such expression!

The talking machine has helped a little, but only a little, for with no musical taste in selection of records, the children hear trash ten times to one good one, and they are learning to express themselves in the same proportion of good and bad. Shall I say that the present generation of parents are totally depraved in their musical tastes? No, but we do want the coming generation to be greatly improved in that respect, and that is why we are optimistic toward the future. Right now, we have the opportunity in making of young America what we will.

That a child may play the piano well, or may become a violin virtuoso, or a vocalist of note is not the aim. That is acquiring the wherewithal to give joy to the listener, whereas, our aim as teachers should be to give the child every possible avenue by which he may express his musical being. If he has but one means of expressing it, that is good; if two, better; if many, best yet. He would express himself, were not a soul but himself upon this mundane sphere.

Many times have I found among large groups of teachers those who have with the deepest earnestness said that they would give thousands of dollars if they could sing. Among the men especially, in the teaching profession, as heads of city schools they realize what they have missed and are missing in life. It is difficult, I know, to associate "thousands of dollars" with those who make education their life work, but it sometimes comes from other sources than the school treasurer.

Poorly paid school teachers? Certainly they are. I did not intend saying a word about this. No one who really serves the people with a truly philanthropic spirit can ever be paid what he deserves, for his labor is too valuable to put into terms of money.

To be sure, a teacher does like to eat as well and to dress as well as the janitor of the school building, or the laundress or the miner, who has not spent thousands of dollars upon preparation; but recompense is more than food and raiment and he can at least sleep with a clear conscience.

To watch growth, to see new lights dawning, to realize that new means of expression are inspired—this is the joy of the true teacher, and then if we have the real vision we can see a future—a future in which our young America will become the real founder of the nationality which shall characterize the music of America.

MINNIE LANG

At the Hippodrome last Saturday Minnie Lang offered up her voice in song for about the twentieth time in a week without a note to betray fatigue or ennui. She sang the Faust Waltz with verve, Vanderpool's "Values" with dramatic fervor, and "Wonderful Mother o' Mine" with touching sentiment. "The Americans Come" served as a rousing climax, supplemented by Mme. Sturkow-Ryder's "Old Fashioned Flowers" for an "encore picturesque." Miss Lang left a good impression and pleasant memories of an act of song behind her.

SHAKESPEARE AT THE OLYMPIC

When Robert Mantell and his capable company appeared at the Auditorium last year in classic repertoire, they were confronted by the difficulty of adapting ordinary scenery to their special needs, and the vast reaches of the stage fitted very poorly into their usual plan of action.

The Auditorium is for pageantry, spectacle, grand opera and big mass effects generally, and Shakespeare would do well there only in festival productions, with big crowds of people and massive scenery.

These were not supplied last year and the season was not a success.

At the Olympic, however, all is changed and the performances given this week have been marked not only by refinement of acting but also by most beautiful scenic investure, splendid lighting effects and a general excellence of mise-en-scene very seldom approached in any theater.

Mantell is a magnificent Richelieu, a grewsomely effective Macbeth and an appealing Richard Third.

His company is well chosen and excellently dressed, but nearly all of them follow Mr. Mantell in an indistinctness of enunciation which leaves much to be desired.

On Tuesday evening, for instance, this writer sat about two-thirds of the way back in the main floor and could not catch more than half the words either of "I see a dagger" or of the sleep walking scene of Lady Macbeth.

The engagement continues through next week and will draw heavily no doubt, as Chicago is genuinely hungry for Shakespeare, especially when so well presented as this at the Olympic. C. E. W.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

Mr. William B. Colson, organist and choir director at the old stone Presbyterian School, gave the last of his series of Twilight Organ Recitals Monday afternoon. Mr. Fred S. True, a newcomer in Cleveland, and bass soloist of the choir, was the soloist. These recitals have indeed been a source of great pleasure to many, and it is earnestly hoped Mr. Colson will continue the recitals.

On Monday evening Mr. Edwin Arthur Krajl gave the first of his series of eight evening organ recitals at Trinity Cathedral.

One number on Mr. Krajl's program was doubly appreciated by the writer, Mr. Rossetter G. Cole's Rhapsody.

At the studio of Mr. Milan S. Blanchet the writer spent a very pleasant informal evening.

Four of Mr. Blanchet's pupils played; also his assistant, Miss Millicent H. Scott.

Miss Ruth Richey, one of his very talented pupils, has a future before her and is a great credit to the training of Mr. Blanchet. She is to give a program at the Woman's Club November 29.

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra opened the Symphony Concert season in Cleveland on Wednesday evening with a splendid program. Albert Spalding, violinist, was the soloist, and much to the disappointment of his audience, did not play an encore though he was called back many times.

MOUNT UNION CONSERVATORY

Mount Union College, situated at Alliance, Ohio, is planning a great future for the Conservatory of Music which for years has been connected with that institution. The enrollment is already gratifying, being close to the hundred mark, and with the present faculty of well known and successful instructors, the importance of Mount Union Conservatory is obviously going to increase.

Monthly student recitals are held throughout the school year, and frequent public recitals are also given. A number of musical organizations exist, both for men and for women, to complete the broad musical education possible at Mount Union.

The College urges conservatory students to "avail themselves of the opportunity offered through affiliation of the Conservatory and the College to combine one or more academic studies with their musical studies." This combination is an excellent one for young students and its reciprocal, which is the interpolation of a number of musical courses into an academic curriculum, will appeal to many students.

The proximity of Mount Union College to such concert centers as Canton and Cleveland makes it possible to hear the internationally known artists from time to time during the season, and Alliance itself affords frequent artist recitals of merit and interest. The delightful atmosphere of the old Ohio Colleges is undeniable, and Mount Union especially is rich in friends and alumnae who count no labor too great when the welfare and progress of the College are at stake. Recent endowments and bequeathals have assured some splendid additions to conservatory equipment and the retention of more instructors under the able direction of Edwin Laurence Allen, A. B. Mus. B.

KINGMAN CONCERT COMPANY

The Kingman Concert Company (Tracy Kingman, baritone), after scoring a pronounced success at several points in Canada, was compelled to cancel all the engagements of the last half of last week through the illness of Charlotte Bergh, soprano.

Mr. Kingman was in Chicago on Saturday but left on Sunday for Canada, as it was expected that Miss Bergh would have recovered sufficiently by Tuesday to resume the exceedingly successful tour.

Following are the press comments on Mr. O'Sullivan's singing:

"John O'Sullivan gave a concert in Carnegie Hall. His voice is altogether exceptional, both in the purity of its timbre and in its great upward range, and this voice is the instrument of a cultivated intelligence. Mr. O'Sullivan chose to begin the concert with a fine classical air from Mehul's 'Joseph,' his delivery of which in diction and style was a model. He also sang very beautifully the 'Phydile' of Duparc, and his delivery of the opening measure of the familiar 'O, Paradiso' from 'L'Africaine,' was as exquisite in its legato and poised phrasing as in its quality of tone. Later in the inevitable arioso from 'Pagliacci,' Mr. O'Sullivan showed that he has assimilated perfectly the exuberant Italian manner so dearly beloved of audiences in the operatic works of what was once called 'Young Italy.' The accomplished tenor sang a number of other pieces, among them several of the songs of his native Ireland. His diction in these, as in the French composition, was masterly, and the Italian of the 'Pagliacci' could not have been clearer."—Pitts Sanborn, New York Globe, November 3.

Captures New York Audiences

At His

Recital of November 2nd, at Carnegie Hall

"John O'Sullivan, who appeared at the Lexington Theater last season with the Chicago Opera Company, gave a recital at Carnegie Hall, at which he really appeared to advantage."—Henry T. Finck, New York Evening Post, November 3.

"His Voice is better than it was at the Lexington last year. It was large and ringing in his aria from Mehul's 'Joseph.' "—Gabriel, New York Evening Sun, November 3.

"Mr. O'Sullivan has a fine, fresh, well trained voice. His diction, too, is to be commended."—New York World, November 3.

"The rare natural beauty of the singer's voice was far more in evidence yesterday."—Max Smith, New York American, November 3.

"Mr. O'Sullivan's audience showed real enthusiasm for his offerings. He put intensity into every number. Mr. O'Sullivan's voice has a large range and sufficient power. It is of fine quality." —New York Herald, November 3.

"With a voice of splendid quality and broad range, his interpretation contained abundance of dramatic power and dignity of feeling."—W. J. Handerson, New York Sun, November 3.

"Mr. O'Sullivan is a singer trained in the French Operatic School, who knows the value of diction. His voice is an admirable one. In 'The West Is Awake' he must have warmed the heart of any Sinn Feiners present. He gave it with spirit, and the Mehul air with a fine musical sense."—New York Tribune, November 3.

"John O'Sullivan, the handsome and romantic young operatic tenor of the Chicago Opera Company, made what must go for his debut in recital in New York at Carnegie Hall with an artistic success, though it fell short of the vernacular appeal which nowadays counts for so much at the box office, and which is one of the paramount problems, with the be-mused program makers of our growing army of high water recitalists. O'Sullivan began with an aira from Mehul's 'Joseph,' a far cry into musical antiquities, but one which satisfied at least the supposedly 'knowing ones' of his hearers. Better far was his second and happily adventurous excursion among the romanzas and Irish ballads of Dunare, Carpenter and Holmes; for John O'Sullivan is imbued with the minstrel sense, and the sentiment that goes with it, and he will go far and fast with his future American audiences when he lays aside his habitual 'operatic style' and sets free the romantic lyric genius that tugged last evening at the taut leashes of his scholastic habits.

"He sang the 'Pagliacci' aria splendidly and Lalo's aria from 'Le Roi d'Ys' with consummate artistry, but his audience, not an essentially musical one, loved him in his slashing and gallantly romantic singing of 'O'Donnel Aboo' and the ancient Celtic airs, all of them of singular and inherent beauty, with which he concluded his program."—John H. Raftery, New York Morning Telegraph, November 3.

"Mr. O'Sullivan's voice is an excellent organ and he did enough striking singing to gain him much hearty applause and numerous recalls."—New York Journal, November 3.

Vol. 11 Chicago, November 14, 1919 No. 46

AMERICA FIRST

German Opera was attempted in New York last month—in the German language—and it was found impossible to carry it on because of the resentment of the public.

In Chicago German plays have been given at Bush Theater. Kreisler, an Austrian army officer, was allowed to play a recital at the Auditorium.

The German Club at the Chicago University, suspended during the actual period of the war, has been reassembled, and at the first meeting a law was passed that anyone speaking anything else than the German language is liable to fine.

All this does not prove that Chicago is essentially less patriotic than New York, but it does go to show that we are extremely careless as to our patriotism.

But, after all, the greatest and most effective show of patriotism will not—in the future months—consist in showing resentment at everything German, much as some of us dislike it, but rather in the more firm adoption and the more constant attention to the idea of AMERICA FIRST.

We have long accepted the German classics as a standard and a model, and we have—likewise—leaned very strongly to the belief that Italian Opera was far better than anything we could do here, and that French songs were superior to ours.

We have even gone so far afield as to make a fetich of Russian music, and wherever in the world there has been any chance we have taken up foreign music and cultivated it and have given it propaganda far in excess of anything we have ever bestowed upon our own.

This applies both to Compositions and to Artists of all kinds.

But today there are thousands of us who have grown to a realization that since America rules the world in Science, War, Art, Literature, and Business, there is no logical reason why we should not do this in Music also.

And—the only way in which we can do it is to continually foster our own music and our own artists, placing them FIRST always and giving all foreigners—German, French, Italian, Spanish, Russian, and all the rest—an honored but distinctly second place.

There are still a lot of foreign-born and foreign-educated musicians in this country who do not believe the thing is possible, and the public at large is still, very distinctly, groping in the dark, awaiting the lead of the profession itself.

But during war times we discovered that our own resources in music were infinitely greater than we had supposed before, and that we had a lot of development that we had not previously fully sensed.

The time is now ripe to go on, step by step, searching for this talent and development, and having found it, the patronizing of it—the developing of it to the full.

Neither France, Italy nor Germany became great music countries through fostering the music of other countries, but on the contrary they are great (musically) today because they developed their own resources—they recognized always their own FIRST.

America can lead the world in music—and it will do so—but first we must learn the necessary lesson of AMERICANIZATION OF MUSIC, for only through this process can we really begin to develop the best that is in us.

We must, therefore, do we desire a great music history in the future, continue to use American Compositions. We must sing understandable English in our song recitals. We must listen to every American opera that is propounded and give it support to the full of its values. When the Chicago Opera Association sings, this year, an opera in English, we should pack the Auditorium.

We should go to hear all the young American artists, and we should insist always and everywhere that they are as worthy of attention and good pay as are any foreigners who have ever come over to us or who may ever come over in the future.

Editorial

NOTHING FOR NOTHING

All the readers of Music News at least know about the "Nothing for Nothing" propaganda, and by far the greater number of them believe in it implicitly.

There are today in Chicago a great many young artists who regard themselves too highly and consider their work far too important to ever appear anywhere except for suitable pay.

And this is a stand that should be taken by every professional musician everywhere.

And unless a musician wishes to take this stand he should be driven out of all professional engagements, no matter how skillful he may be.

Society women who want the applause, doctors, lawyers and other sorts of professional men who love to play the organ on Sunday, should insist that whatever they do in this line must be paid for at as good an average per hour as they can make at their other work, and if they do not wish to do this they should not accept the music work at all, for, if they do it for nothing or for too little payment, they are prejudicing the cause of their brother musicians who have no other means of livelihood.

Christine Miller-Clemson told me that after her marriage (to a very wealthy man) she would not accept engagements either for pay or for free appearances.

"For," said she, "if I accept pay engagement I take them away from others who need them more than I, and if I sing for nothing, I ruin the market for all musicians."

And Mrs. Clemson, an adorable artist, is right in this statement, for music, art though it be, and the wonderful means of solace and uplift which it can be made, is still, and irrevocably, the profession (the business rather) of hundreds of people, and since these must make their living by it, it should never, at any time or place, be considered something that is not worthy of good money payment.

The music papers throughout the country have applauded, generally, the idea that "nothing for nothing" must become the universal slogan of the musician and (for instance) the very last issue of the Pacific Coast Musician says, editorially:

"The musician who wishes to prove to the public and to concert givers and managers that his services are worth nothing should charge—nothing.

"They all rate a musician by what he charges."

But the endorsement of the daily press is another matter and it is distinctly important, for the daily goes directly to that class which is constantly imposing upon the musician.

The editorial which appeared in the Chicago Evening Post one day last week is, therefore, exceedingly timely and it is also very gratifying and encouraging to the musician at large.

So important is this that we here reproduce it in full, with thanks to the Post for its royal championship:

WORTHY OF THEIR HIRE

A young woman who sings tossed aside with a look of impatience a note just received. "I wish," she said, "that people would understand that musicians are not, as a rule, in the profession for their health, but that they must meet the high cost of living like everybody else and cannot afford to be forever giving their services. That note is from the secretary of a club which is preparing for some sort of a 'day' and asks me to sing on the occasion. 'We are unable to pay a fee, but feel sure that you will be willing to come to us, anyway,' she says. 'There will be a good many guests and it will be such a fine advertisement for you. The committee all voted for you.' There is hardly a day that I do not get something like that," the girl went on, "and the writers all take the same patronizing tone—as if the favor were to me instead of them and that the privilege of singing for them ought to be sufficient reward."

Musicians, no doubt, have much cause for complaint in this line. They are constantly asked to sing or play, free of charge, for some local organization in which they have not the slightest personal interest. Sometimes the invitation comes in a way that makes it difficult to refuse; sometimes they dislike to offend persons who pose as their friends and make compliance with the request a favor to themselves. Too often they weakly yield, and the "advertising" consists in dissemination of the fact that they have appeared without charge and will doubtless obligingly do so for other applicants.

People do not ask young doctors to treat them for nothing, or young lawyers to appear for them in court without a fee; if an artist paints a picture they like they do not expect him to give it to them. But musicians seem to be their prey. Doubtless those who ask for free music are thoughtless and do not realize that they are taking a great liberty when they make requests of the kind and are indulging in a distinct and inexcusable imposition. If a singer or pianist or violinist is considered sufficiently well equipped to entertain a company the services are worth paying for. The direct way to remedy the abuse is for each young artist firmly to decline such invitations and leave free entertainment to amateurs.

Truth is the shattered mirror strewn
In myriad bits, while each one thinks
His little bit the whole to own.
—The Kasidah.

THEN SPEAK

If you like me a little
Or love me,
If you loathe me a little,
Or hate:
Then speak, for the truth makes us stronger,
If you like me or loathe me, why wait?

Oh, loving is liking
Grown stronger,
And hating is loathing
Grown weak,
And truth is possession of knowledge,
If you love me or hate me, then speak.

—Cecil Fanning.

Walton Pyre, an expert teacher of dramatic art, has been associated with the Chicago Musical College only eight weeks, and yet he was able, on last Saturday morning, to present at the Ziegfeld Theater, under the auspices of the college, a play which for completeness of preparation and ease of performance has rarely been equaled in student annals of the city.

The play was "Between Two Loves," a rousing comedy in which Mr. Pyre himself was seen in the leading male part, and in which the many and finely graduated women's parts were expertly and artistically acted by his pupils.

SALON CONCERT

"Blue Bird Bungalow," the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Hoit, was the rendezvous for a musicale on November 1.

The artists participating were Jane English, coloratura soprano; Ann Hathaway, violinist; Charles Lagourgue, clarinettist, and Iowerth Prosser, accompanist.

The program consisted of eighteenth century songs, done by Mrs. English in costume, also modern songs, and the Doll's Aria from "The Tales of Hoffman." Mrs. English greatly pleased her audience and was obliged to add encores.

Mrs. Hathaway played, with great feeling, "To Spring," by Grieg, and three numbers by Borowski.

Mr. Lagourgue, in his usual brilliant style, played an interesting composition of his own, "Tales of a Grandmother," also "The Song of the Nightingale," by Saint-Saens, and two Debussy numbers.

Mr. Prosser, a pianist, composer and choral conductor of repute in the East, a recent comer to Chicago, is in every way an excellent accompanist.

The Hoit home is splendidly adapted to affairs of this kind, as there is a stage across the end of the long drawing room.

The program was announced by Mrs. Hoit, who, in her own happy fashion, makes an irresistible hostess.

In pursuance of the plan of presenting notable musical programs at the Oak Park First Congregational Church, on next Sunday evening Mme. Else Harthan Arendt, for several years the popular soprano of the church, will be featured in solo and ensemble numbers. Mme. Arendt has won a deserved success by reason of her voice, personality and splendid insight in interpretation. She will sing Gounod's "O Divine Redeemer" and the obligato solos in Mendelssohn's "Hear My Prayer," and Randegger's "Praise Ye the Lord."

The service begins at 7:15, Mr. Stanley Seder playing on the great organ J. H. Rogers' "Second Suite" as the sixth in a series of suites by American composers which have been played since the beginning of the evening services in October.

SWIFT & CO. CHORUS

On Thursday evening, November 6, an unusually attractive program was presented by artists and the combined choruses of Swift & Co. at the Swift Club.

The choruses, composed entirely of Swift employes, made a remarkable showing. Not only were they well trained under the skillful direction of D. A. Clippinger, but their tonal quality and even balance were of high order. Particularly noticeable was the eager and enthusiastic response to the leader. There was a tendency of oversinging the fortissimo, and a lack of color in the combined chorus numbers. Worthy of special mention is the men's chorus in the numbers: "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," by Westendorf, and "Maiden Fair," by Haydn. Guy C. Latchaw and Adalbert Huguelet were the soloists of the evening.

Mr. Latchaw sang with understanding and authority. His program, which was well chosen, was a thankful one. It gave him ample opportunity to display his clear enunciation and histrionic ability. All of us enjoy a smile, and Mr. Latchaw has a winning one. "Twilight Dreams," by Sibella, and "The Mad Dog," by Lehman, were well-sung numbers.

Adalbert Huguelet, besides accompanying the men's chorus, played "Eroica," by Liszt. His fine artistry and modest personality made a fine impression upon the audience. He was greatly handicapped by having a poor instrument to perform upon.

Swift & Co. are to be congratulated in maintaining this excellent organization. It is indeed well worth the while.

The program:

Hail to Our Native Land.....Verdi
The combined choruses
Turn Ye to Me.....Old Scotch

RUDOLPH REUTER

Last Friday week Rudolph Reuter gave his third annual recital in Aeolian Hall, New York City, a report of which by the correspondent of Music News, Mr. De Valdor, was published in last week's issue. This was Mr. Reuter's fourth appearance in the metropolis this year so far—his other three, with Tarasova at Carnegie Hall, at the Nyack Country Club, and with the Stadium Symphony Orchestra last summer, having already served to demonstrate to the New York public the qualities of his art.

In commenting on his playing, there was hardly a phase of pianism or musicianship that did not come in for praise at the hands of the critics of the daily papers, most of them including both the Beethoven sonata, with which he began the program, as well as the Dohnanyi numbers, with which he ended, in their reviews. It is unnecessary to say that the poor jaded critic in New York does not usually stay for any length of time at an ordinary concert, and Mr. Reuter's was already the seventh piano recital in that one week. All spoke warmly of Mr. Reuter's exceptionally interesting program—a matter of comment at nearly all of his recitals. As always, a number of compositions by Americans was included, two excellent things by native New Yorkers, Griffes' Scherzo and Marion Bauer's "The Tide" being novelties. New to New York were also two sketches by Dohnanyi, "To Ada" and "Boisterous Party," in modern contrapuntal style. Infrequently played shorter numbers by Brahms were also included, as well as the better known Barcarole by Chopin and the Beethoven Sonata. It is but necessary to append the comment of Max Smith, the well-known critic on the American: "Rudolph Reuter gave an exceptionally interesting recital yesterday afternoon. Mr. Reuter's fine training is conspicuous in his manipulation of the keyboard. Without any show or parade, he disclosed yesterday not only excellent technical equipment, but genuine musicianship and a most comprehensive memory. He plays in a straightforward, clean-cut, virile style. Robust, vigorous, manly, quiet without mannerisms, he combines assurance with repose, and never shows any tendency to inlulge in exaggerated sentiment." That Mr. Reuter allows no phase of music-making to remain untouched is to be seen from his plans to give two-piano recitals with Edward Collins, the first of which takes place in La Crosse, Wis., on November 24, and his series of chamber-music concerts with Messrs. Brueckner and Becker, to open in Davenport on December 7. His frequent appearances with the Kneisels are still remembered oy Chicagoans.

OLIVE JUNE LACEY

Olive June Lacey sang November 11 for the Woodlawn Women's Club. Among her numbers were "Caro Nome" (Rigoletto), "The Americans Come" (Foster), and a new song by Beatrice McGowan Scott called "Wood Song." This proved to be a most interesting number.

This evening (Friday) Miss Lacey sings the leading role in an operetta by Paul Bliss called "The Feast of the Little Lanterns."

It is to be given by the Music Study Class of Wilmette.

Cameo Salon—The Cameo Salon will meet on November 16 at 8 o'clock, those appearing on the program being Mme. Hanah Butler, Mrs. Edward Miller, Charles E. Watt, Dora Hardner, Olive Johnson and Cleveland Bohnet, as also two Indian girls.

STEVENSON STUDIOS

Miss Gertrude Farrell has been engaged as soprano in the choir of the Oak Park Second Presbyterian Church. She sang at the Persian Garden in Greencastle, Ind., October 24.

The Geranlen Trio, composed of Miss Farrell, Helen Mueller and Anna Braun, will be the assisting artists at the concert of the Men's Fall Chorus at Orchestra Hall November 14.

Miss Stevenson sang in recital in Milwaukee October 27.

She will sing the "Messiah" in Akron, Ohio, November 23.

Raymond Harmon is singing a series of recitals in California.

Miss Honor Winer, soprano, has returned from the tour of the Scotti Grand Opera Company.

Miss Braun sang Cadman Indian songs in costume before the Co-educational Club October 30.

Miss Braun sang at the New England Congregational Church Sunday, November 2nd.

Miss Mueller is singing at the Ravenswood Presbyterian Church.

"COX AND BOX" AT EVANSTON

The comic operetta, "Cox and Box," for which Sir Arthur Sullivan wrote the music, and which had a tremendous vogue in England even before "Pinafore" was written, has never had many presentations in this country.

But, it is especially adaptable to Sinfonia uses, and very especially to the chapter in Evanston—for, are not Rollin Pease and Charles Lutton members, and who does not know that these two are (besides being fine singers) inimitable comedians?

There are but three characters in the play, and (with the addition of J. Chesla White in the least important role) it was given at the Evanston Woman's Club on last Monday night to a fine audience and great enthusiasm.

There was an orchestra, skillfully directed by Osbourne McConathy, and the efficient stage manager was G. A. Grant-Schafer.

The music, as a matter of course, was splendidly given, and it is, of a truth—very delightful music.

The comedy of Mr. Pease and Mr. Lutton was exceedingly fine, and the whole performance a credit as well as a delight to Sinfonia.

CHARLOTTE SILVERSON FOREMAN

Charlotte Silverson Foreman, pianist, entertained in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Frantz Proschowsky, at her home, 5411 Blackstone avenue, Sunday afternoon, November 9.

The Proschowskys were located in Berlin previous to the war, and through some technicality were unable to leave Germany until two months before the armistice, when they were allowed to go into Denmark.

Mrs. Proschowsky is the posessor of a glorious mezzo voice and received all her training under the tutelage of her husband. On Sunday she sang two groups of songs in the Scandinavian language, with Mrs. Foreman at the piano.

Mrs. Foreman played a group of modern compositions for piano, among them several by Rojartz and Erik Satu.

HARVEST FESTIVAL AT THE SOUTH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

An extraordinary amount of taste and perception entered into Mr. Albert Cotsworth's composite idea of what constitutes a genuinely good "Harvest Festival," and an army of workers had patiently and efficiently toiled in the working out of that big idea. Many of the attractive qualities which enter into the operatic art-form were there—appeal to the eye, the ear, the mind and the spirit. A joyous riot of color—all the riches of autumn foliage, fruit and flower greeted the eye of the attendant at the Harvest Festival staged at the South Congregational Church last Friday evening.

Mr. Cotsworth's poetic sense of beauty—so strongly evidenced in his writing—had guided the willing hands that completed the artistic arrangement of autumn's glories. One would go far to find a finer setting for the pageant and concert that made up the program. The cleverly arranged and well prepared pageant that constituted the first half hour of the evening's entertainment enlisted the aid of allegory, pictorial representation, poetry and music. Ten general subjects were chosen for representation, such as "America the Beautiful," "Summer Rain," "Springtime," "Waving of the Corn," "Labor," "Time," etc. These subjects were impersonated by appropriately garbed characters, who made their entries accompanied by appropriate music tastefully played by Mr. Cotsworth at the organ. They were individually introduced by the reading of finely selected illustrative poems, well read by Mrs. Kate Pentzer Stokes.

The whole idea was immensely attractive and found great favor with the large audience.

Part 2 was devoted to the presentation of J. H. Maunder's "A Song of Thanksgiving," a cantata, which enjoys wide popularity by reason of its attractive melodic quality and its not-too-complicated harmonic structure.

The church quartet, but recently assembled, is composed of Lois Hostetter, soprano; Florence Boydston, contralto; Charles R. Hall, tenor, and De Witt Cleland, baritone, an ensemble particularly good in the delivery of the quieter passages of the cantata.

There was abundant evidence of careful and conscientious preparation, and many details, such as diction, deliberation in delivery, general accuracy and hearty, wholesome effort, came into evidence as the Cantata proceeded.

Mr. Cotsworth presided at the organ and Mrs. W. W. Chandler at the piano.

The pastor of the church, Rev. T. Y. Williams, in a brief speech paid grateful tribute to the "army of workers" and its guiding genius and expressed the hope that the South Congregational Church might come to be a "community center" for its immediate environs.

Mr. Cotsworth is to be warmly praised for the endless "labor of love" and the enthusiasm he has expended in this initial carrying out of his fine plans for the season. His generous outpouring of endeavor should be met by an equally generous spirit of co-operation on the part of his church.

Doubtless a chorus will soon be added to strengthen the quartet of young singers necessarily somewhat inadequate for the presentation of pretentious works.

GILDEROY SCOTT AND HOLMES TIDY AT CARPENTER CHAPEL

It was a pretty bad night Thursday and a small audience greeted the artists selected for the current concert in the Carpenter Chapel series fostered by Dr. George L. Tenney. The dampness lent a chill even to the cheerfulness of this ideal place for intimate concerts.

But the enthusiasm and abandon with which Madame Gilderoy Scott entered into her large share of the task soon nullified all outside influence and the evening was a series of thoroughly delightful incidents. She has a superb organ, the best of tradition in all her interpretation and she certainly selected numbers inviting in their supply of melody and agreeable text. English text has no alarms for those who know how to utter it, and one factor in Madame Scott's values is the clear and lucid text. Even in the unfamiliar subject material used in Holmes-Tidy's cycle, "Life's Journey," there was no loss of each phase of the song story. Perhaps in this novelty the high light of the evening rested, although it must be chronicled that the familiar "Nadeshda" aria of Goring-Thomas has seldom had more graphic presentation. The tone was opulent, the phrasing and cohesion of the finest sort. In the "duets" shared with the cello player, Ethel Murray, some charming effects were secured, notably in the glorious "Summer Night" of Goring-Thomas, and the Lieurance song used as encore. And the "Annie Laurie" treatment was novel and absorbing.

Violet Holmes Tidy gave adequate and subjective support to all ensemble and was felicitious in the part she had in her own song cycle, recently reviewed in these columns. The work is brave with melody easily uttered and contrasted and working steadily and surely to an attractive climax. Miss Murray's solo numbers were good and found their fullest appeal in a very graphic "Angelus" written by Charles Lagourge. It vibrates with emotion, tells its story effectively and contains beautiful material excellently well welded. It became one of the marked successes of the concert.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH

The eighty-fifth anniversary of St. James' Episcopal Church, Chicago, will be celebrated on Sunday morning, November 16, when the Cathedral Chimes (new) will be used for the first time, and there will be in addition to the regular choir and organ work under the direction of John W. Norton, an accompaniment of trumpets, trombones and tympani.

On Tuesday evening, November 8, the choir (on the occasion of its thirty-fifth anniversary), rendered Gade's "Zion."

MANAGERS AND ARTISTS

(Contributed)

A good deal of space and many hours of precious time have been wasted in writing and talking about managers of artists and the stand that should be taken by both. Very little has come of it and perhaps it will be some time yet before a fair working basis is established. There are so many points to discuss and adjust one scarcely knows where to begin, but one of the most unfair arrangements made with artists by nearly all managers is the percentage business. Now a definite percent of the fee received by the artist is all very well, but what may be called the fee? Why should an artist pay a commission to a manager on money he does not receive? That is what practically all of them are doing under the present system. I know whereof I speak, that it is very poor business policy to pay a manager or agent commission upon railroad fares, window cards, rental of orchestra parts, etc. A manager excuses himself or herself, as the case may be, with the well-known remark, "we need the money, and the artists are crazy for an engagement. See the expense, office rent, telephone, telegrams, postage, light, stationery, etc., and we must live." I believe, and know, that the artist's debit sheet for the year will exceed that of his representative. Most of the artists are liberal; the fees for singing have increased very little, and the general feeling is that this one item of unfair charging should be made a vital point in the business end of the artistic world.

INTER-STATE SYSTEM

The "Inter-State Branch Studio System" of the Western Conservatory, of which President E. H. Scott is founder, has been in successful operation throughout the United States for twenty-six years, and has grown to large proportions.

A number of new branches have been opened with the beginning of this school year in September. One at Dodge City, Kan., has an initial enrollment of one hundred. Another at Providence, R. I., with nearly fifty. Also at Seattle, Wash.; Dallas, Tex.; Steubenville, Ohio; Minot, N. D., and other places.

The object of the System is to stimulate more pupils to more serious and systematic study of music at home, and eventually, of course, many of these pupils attend the Western Conservatory here in Chicago or other large music schools for more advanced study, who might otherwise have never done so.

Altogether, the Western Conservatory, with its many branches, must be considered one of the most extensive and widely useful institutions of musical education in America.

THIBAUD

THE CELEBRATED

French—Appeared at the Aeolian Hall on November 4th.

Violinist—At the first concert of the Beethoven Association.

The following are some of the press comments:

It would be hard to imagine the Romance in F better than Mr. Thibaud played it.—Pitts Sanborn in the New York Globe, November 5.

Mr. Thibaud's playing of the Romance was one of the most admirable achievements he has put to his credit in New York. There was an unwonted depth of tone and feeling in it, while in finish it was exquisite.—W. J. Henderson, New York Sun, November 5.

Mr. Thibaud played Beethoven's Romance in F with great purity and dignity of style and a remarkable warmth of feeling.—Richard Aldrich, New York Times, November 5.

RUTH RAY

Violinist

Makes a Successful Debut at Carnegie Hall, New York, on November 4

MISS RUTH RAY PLAYS

In the evening Ruth Ray, a Chicago violinist, a pupil of Auer, gave her first recital here. Miss Ray made her debut in her home city in 1904 at the age of 6 years. Last night her performance made a distinctly pleasing impression. In her chief numbers, the G minor sonata of Tartini and Lalo's "Symphonic Espagnole," she disclosed an admirably schooled violin technic and much taste. Her tone is not large but in intonation it was always true. Her bowing was good and her rhythm adequate. Her playing was noteworthy for accuracy and her general style showed much ease and intelligence. She is evidently a serious young artist and ought to go far in her art.—The Sun, November 5.

RUTH RAY MAKES SUCCESSFUL DEBUT AT CARNEGIE HALL

Miss Ruth Ray, a young American girl, and the latest of Leopold Auer's pupils, made her debut last night at Carnegie Hall before a large and interested audience.

In a program which included the Tartini G minor sonata and Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole" she gave notice that she will be heard from in the future. Her technique is remarkably clean, her tone warm, large and pure, her bowing broad and elastic, her intonation true. Indeed, in her playing there was the assurance and poise of the artist who already has arrived, without any of the languor or exaggerations which so afflict some of our virtuosi. Her program did not, of course, give her the opportunity to sound the deeper poetic notes nor to soar upon imaginative wings, but what she did attempt she succeeded in accomplishing to a perfection which is rare at any debut. In the shorter numbers, in Grasse's "Waves at Play," in Debussy's "La Plus que Lente," in the Chopin-Auer E minor nocturne, she again showed her charm and skill. Miss Ray is without doubt a young woman whose performance is already rich and rare.—H. E. Krehbiel in New York Tribune, November 5, 1919.

RUTH RAY, VIOLINIST

Vastly few are good women violinists. The best of American musical traditions have been wrapped up, as a matter of fact, in just one woman who can play the violin excellently well. It was that much more of a surprise, therefore, to hear a young newcomer in Carnegie Hall last night and to realize that, against the torrent of boyish fiddlers who have lately deluged the platforms, her playing stands as a firm rock—high, too, above the common waters. This was one Ruth Ray, and her performance, more than pleasurable, classes her among the really good ones now before the public.

A tone fine and eloquently sweet; a decisiveness which began and ended phrases with a will; a clean-cut, easy technique—these things are there, and yet are almost neglible compared to the faculty Miss Ray possesses of throwing a brainy, often humorous, often luminous temperament into her bow. Bigness she has not, but there is none of the mincing of a miniature there, either—and her style flows up to proportions sizable and utterance most fluent. Of that school where, with many of the popular violinists, she learned her lessons she could have been no slighted member.—Evening Sun, November 5.

RUTH RAY WINS PRAISE AT VIOLIN RECITAL

Ruth Ray, young, ambitious and promising, gave a recital of violin works at Carnegie Hall last night. Her programme was one that would test the ability and attainments of a more mature musician. Nevertheless Miss Ray's grasp of the difficulties and demands of her chosen vocation deserves both praise and encouragement.

The program consisted of Tartini's G minor sonata; Lalo's symphony Espagnole; Auer's transcription of the E minor nocturne by Chopin; Grasse's picturesque "Waves at Play"; "La Plus que Lente" by Debussy, which, by the way, is included in so many violin programs this year; the Moszkowski Sarasate "Guitarre"; poems by Fibich, and Wieniawski's polonaise brilliante.—New York American.

RUTH RAY'S VIOLIN RECITAL

Some well-founded rumors of the prowess of Ruth Ray, a young violinist, who made her recital debut at Carnegie Hall in the evening, must have preceded her among the devotees of that instrument for a very large and fashionable, as well as musically experienced, audience faced her when she began the salutatory number of what proved to be a remarkably successful debut. Miss Ray, I am given to understand, is a pupil of Auer, and if she proceeds as she began last evening, she is certain to add new laurels to that great teacher's renown, and to make some of her masculine colleagues of the Auer halo look to their sometimes wabbly eminences.

Miss Ray played with the poise and suavity of a veteran and, although she is yet in her teens, with an intensity of feeling and those indications of power in reserve, which are seldom shown by older violinists of either sex. For the most part her tones of velvet smoothness and shining clarity, unleashed without hesitance, but often with a sort of loving reluctance which had, I thought, the feminine quality rather than any denotement of weakness. Her bowing is a glory to behold and her rhythmic instinct as unfailing as I have heard from any of the mroe blatantly blazoned newcomers or "prodigies" of recent years.

Tartini's G minor sonata, her first number, came as a pleasant surprise to those who knew nothing of her schooling or of her progress until now. In Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnol," another selection well within her metier, she clinched the splendid impression of her introductory, and in the nocturne E minor, by Chopin-Auer, all doubts of her extraordinary and unexpected virtuosity disappeared. In port and presence this young woman is grace itself. She plays with confidence and without ostentation, with a kind of agile ease that veils but does not minimize the potency of her tones or the celerity of her nimble arm and fingers.

Both in the making of her program and in its projection there was none of the presumption in selection nor the bravado in execution which at once mar and magnify the initial essays of so many over-assertive and (I think) unduly ambitious young violinists. Conrad V. Bos, at the piano, accompanied the remarkable girl with the finest discretion and musical understanding, and the success of the recital was emphatic and of enduring worth.—John H. Raftery in Morning Telegraph, November 5.

RUTH RAY MAKES DEBUT

Ruth Ray's attitude toward her art is extremely serious; she disregarded stanchly all the debutante accessories, the deluge of applause and flowers, attending strictly to the business of playing her first violin recital in Carnegie Hall last night.

With a tone of no very great depth, she avoided the youthful inclination to force it, getting her larger effects by the applied vitality and warmth of the nature behind the tone. The freshness and spontaneity of her own individuality made some much-used concert numbers seem almost new.—Evening Mail, November 5.

Elements in Playing That Speak For Future Greatness of Young Artist

Not in years has so promising a new woman violinist appeared here as Miss Ruth Ray, who gave a recital in Carnegie Hall last night before a large audience. She is an American girl, about twenty years old, who spent her childhood in Chicago, and who recently has been a pupil of Leopold Auer, who taught Mischa Elman and Jascha Heifetz.

She played an exacting program, starting with Tartini's sonata in G major, the last movement of which she played with extraordinary charm and with the poise and assurance of a virtuoso. Her tone at the back of Carnegie Hall sounded small, though its quality is fine. Nearer the stage it was fuller and richer. Little refinements of style and rhythm such as only are found in soloists of the first rank were at times noted in her playing.

Lalo's Symphonie Espagnol, which followed the sonata, is in some respects beyond her, for the present. Yet nothing could have brought out her temperament, which is that of a real artist, better than this most Spanish of French violin works. Her high notes, harmonics and all, are full and beautiful.

But it was the dash and the rhythmic skill, which were brought out most surely in the final movement, and her feeling for all that is truly musical that caught the fancy of the audience.

Her debut was under the most favorable conditions possible. She had an admirable accompanist, Conrad Bos, and a large audience.—New York Herald, November 5.

The Elderly Person

In the picture gallery a tall, wiry, rather bent elderly man went about scrutinizing the pictures closely and with accurate eye. His head was small, his hair sparse, his eyes narrowly half closed, his face lined and seamed above his grey beard, his mouth grim to hardness. But the lines which age so often uses to soften and sweeten austerities were, somehow, misapplied, for it was a sour, dour face in the few moments it passed in and out of the Elderly Person's consciousness. A hint that it was Joseph Pennell's face did not arouse a desire to meet it again. Yet Pennell is a great authority on art and has made the world very rich by what he has contributed with pen, pencil and etcher's tools to its summary. Back in the 80s and 90s illustrated articles by Mr. and Mrs. Pennell were eagerly sought by magazines, pleasing many readers. The Elderly Person confesses a reaction when he read of their journey to the Hebrides. This they took as following footsteps and example of Dr. Johnson, who found voluminous material to record his satisfactions. But the Pennells made their chronicle one round of complaint at the rainy weather (which they must have known they would encounter in the Hebrides, because all Scotch weather comes from there) and the poor inns. The habit of complaint may have been formed at that time. They have rather kept it up since so that, with other serious political reasons to assist, Mr. Pennell found himself excused from membership in a Philadelphia club not long ago.

In a recent number of the "Century" James Huneker contributes a resume of the New York musical season. For a long, long time his articles on musical matters were the very cream of exposition. Unlimited was the fund of information stored away in his brain, brilliant and racy was his style, felicitous his touch. His infusion of the first person was virtually ideal in its neat balance of reserve and freedom. With the accumulating years he was a man to look up to by all tokens if birthright, talent, training and fitness. A musical world needed him. The men who know music and its companion arts intimately and can write advisedly, surely and with canny perspicacety are few and far between.

In his later years, however, a something foreign to the earlier Huneker crept into his pages, shadowing their charm. A new face looked up from the lines. It wasn't as genial, as kindly, as squarely outspoken. Its utterance grew sharp, cruel, placed value on biting words which hurt by their innuendo. It found no sermons in stones or good in anything much. The pages lost their fascination because the personality had lost its true hold on itself—the reserve giving way to an assuming ego which pushed itself foremost and saw not much beyond. Almost incredibly the lovable Huneker is become the exponent of the swift, sure strokes which cut and bruise and which laughs at the hurts if the cleverness of the thrust is noticed. Of Labouchere it was said that he would sacrifice his best friend for an epigram. He set a bad pace for others. Those who follow those ways seldom remember that pure cleverness writes a man's name in water.

Mr. Huneker's "Century" article is one long exegis of how bored he was at most of the music he was obliged to submit to during the arduous winter. He says he is "not a music critic, never was though he 'opes to be." Then he launches out in a mass of interesting matter, so excellent and varied in its quality that if he just wouldn't be over critical, over deft, over biting and smiting one could obtain a fascinating glimpse of what the season could do for one man in bringing him pleasure, gratification, impulse, fervor, enjoyment and, in their train, the larger and inevitable element of wider vision, broader, sweeter and purer interest in life, its opportunities and compensations. In any analysis of values surely such factors do congregate or there is no satisfaction in existence. It cannot be, when a man is old, that he regards his life as just fit for diversion and a round of trivial excitements for occupation. If a winter of musical intimacy in New York leaves a man with a bad taste in his mouth and only a very, very few breaths of the nectar stowed away, the inference has to be that there is something wrong with the man.

He winds up his reflections with a plea to certain gods that he "may be spared another such a musical season as the one past." Great heavens, man, that's easy enough. Get another job.

While he applauds occasional names on his general list, his severest quips are reserved for the Chicago opera, which he dubs "a fly by night company" so-called. He was "nailed to his seat each night" "working overtime" "listening for something worth while—and in vain." When he comes to Galli-Curci his spleen is pernicious. Then he absurdly confesses, "notwithstanding my critical strictures, I enjoy listening to Amelita with the Renaissance face and mid-Victorian curls"!

Always and by natural sequence the fellows of the sharp pen wind up with a dab at the Victorian era. They are sure of their target and never fail to strike hard. The free verse poets diatribe at it. The advanced musical composers lambast what it supported, the bolsheviks of thought decry the philosophy unfolded. The awful impressionists, cubists and colorists flaunt at a vision which painted only what it saw, and the emancipated men and women scout at the purity of life and sacredness of marriage vow associated with that most domestic of queens who created the British matron and refused to receive at court divorcees.

And yet any dribbling aspirant today would sell his small soul if he could write a lyric like Longfellow's "Arrow and Song" or Tennyson's "In Memoriam" or Browning's "Ben Ezra," or such music as Mendelssohn's "Elijah" or "Hymn of Praise," or a novel approximating by a few yards "Henry Esmond," "David Copperfield," "Vanity Fair" or "John Halifax," or supplement what Darwin or Spencer made simple in altering the course of thinking for all time, or approach the "Beata Beatrix" of Rossetti, a canvas of Leighton or Millais. And long before they have solved the sex problem men and women know that Victoria set her seal on the best of man's heritages when she marked approval of pure home life and made a virtue of domestic happiness.

Trouble with Mr. Huneker and Mr. Pennell is that they have not known how to grow old without showing their age. One is dour and sour, the other worn and blase—each subject to abnormal blood pressure. The homely old saying about a man being as old as he feels does not always apply, but at times it fits neatly. In youth and middle life the barnacles of prejudice and half truths attach themselves and have so much to do with words and actions that much time has to be spent afterward in regrets, coupled with impatience, that one could ever have been so many different kinds of a—well, idiot! But elderliness can look back good naturedly and see how the wrong things led to better ones by assimilation and readjustment and then shed the barnacles and regrets at the same time. There are too many things that are good about living to find any fault with it in the abstract. People dour enjoy sour or conceited old gentlemen however able and clever. Only too quickly is a good record spoiled by failure to live up to it. The world likes old people to be serene and cheerful and is not slow to estimate the trait and give it honor.

There is one sure way, and it is important, too, of finding out how one stands with himself. As he faces the sunset light he should readily say that he has found life so well worth while that he would gladly live it over again.

"I tell you," says Sam, the barber, as he clips away at the beard, "I got to be cheerful in my business. Nobody don't want to hear about my grouches. It makes 'em tired. Laugh and the world smiles wid you, I say. If you want to cry you got to go off and do it by yourself. Ain't that so?"

Pretty nearly, Sam.

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

WILLIAM RIPLEY DORR AND EMANUEL, LA GRANGE

A pleasant task (which lost all semblance of duty in the pleasure encountered) fell to the writer when he went to La Grange on Sunday to learn what that impulsive enthusiast, William Ripley Dorr, was doing with the music at Emanuel Church. The building is a stately Gothic pile of stone, spacious, handsome, inviting. A good Moeller organ serves admirably, and Mr. Dorr uses it with deft surety and complete understanding of values. He colors his numbers with refinement of phrasing and the exact shade of registration, and then turns around and puts vigorous authority into accompaniments which carry on without intrusion of means used. Dubois' "Nuptial Song" had lovely qualities in its flow, and William Lester's exquisite "Ebon Lute" sang its strains with a dominant intensity of feeling.

The occasion was a strictly musical service of such inviting content that it magnetically attracted an audience which filled the church. The ways of trains and evening service prevented hearing more than half of the program. But a before-hand visit—which included a delightfully intimate glimpse into the household of a newly and very happily married pair and introduction to the handsome setter whose approval is essential to all new acquaintances—brought some light on results that were compensatory. Watching the choirmaster handle the boys it was readily seen why the soprano section ran soon from six to thirty-five and a waiting list of fifteen. Mr. Dorr is simple, manly, direct, positive, kindly, good-natured and knows what he wants to do and how to go about it. He may easily be humble in realizing that something implanted in him draws the lads to him. It is a great gift, and he has it. It explains part of his success. His training under Father Finn supplies the rest—for boy choir material is ample if the right man goes after it. The half hour in the choir room revealed to the writer the reasons for the lovely work done afterward in the chancel. Inserted in the program was an old hymn, sung with its Latin text. That and the extempore prayer of the rector were two marked innovations in an Episcopal church. The way Mr. Dorr and his cohorts put over this bit of fragile classic and the "Legende" of Tschaikowsky call for admiration. Such delicate, floating, ethereal tones and appreciation of text values are so rare as to be phenomenal and the youngsters sang the numbers with as much apparent enjoyment as they did Maunder's more obvious "Praise the Lord," the other anthem heard. Such effects as Mr. Dorr wins from his choir are the very essence of pure music and yield a permanent influence in addition to their charm. The solos were well done, and Stainer's "Love Divine," given by Arthur Youngberg and David Meyers, worked its old spell. I think, however, Mr. Dorr would like to know that the singers persistently said "deevine."

Reluctantly the remainder of a fine list of numbers was forfeited. But nothing can eradicate the genuine pleasure secured from the delectable ensemble effects of this choir.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

EDISON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

On Thursday last the regular monthly concert of the Edison Symphony Orchestra took place in Orchestra Hall, graced by a goody audience which was most enthusiastic in spite of the inclement weather. The orchestra has improved over last season, and did spirited and finished work in the ballet music from "Faust" and the selection from "Tosca." The light and fantastic numbers of the second half of the program were also done with grace and facility.

The soloist was Dwight Edrus Cook, a local artist of excellent reputation. Mr. Cook possesses a telling tenor voice, rich and robust in timbre, and used with an artistry that bespeaks experience and a love for his work. His bearing on the stage is dignified and ingratiating, while in the aria, "Celeste Aida," he rose to dramatic heights of great power and eloquence. His phrasing was good and his climatic effects well considered.

The Rossini overture, "Italians in Algeria," brought the program to a brilliant conclusion.

ADOLPH BOLM HERE TO STAGE JOHN ALDEN CARPENTER'S BALLET AND SERGE PROKOFIEFF'S NEW RUSSIAN OPERA, "THE LOVE FOR THREE ORANGES"

Adolph Bolm, the noted Russian dancer, whose brilliant productions have also won him fame, reached Chicago last week. He announced that he had come here to stage two new productions for the Chicago Opera Association.

"I am delighted to be here," said Mr. Bolm. "For several years I have watched the spirit of the Chicago Opera Association, and it has made me wish to express my art in Chicago. I shall remain here till Christmas, and I shall start rehearsals immediately.

"I have two big and interesting tasks ahead of me. I am to stage 'The Birthday of the Infanta,' by John Alden Carpenter, the Chicago composer, and I shall also appear myself as Pedro, the fantastic and deformed, made so well known by Oscar Wilde's tale. I shall also have entire charge of the production for 'The Love for Three Oranges,' the new opera by Serge Prokofieff, the Russian composer."

Mr. Bolm also mentioned the fact that he has brought ten dancers with him from New York, all his own pupils, who have appeared with him at the Metropolitan Opera House, and his own ballet, "Intime."

It appears that Mr. Bolm was last seen in Chicago when the Diaghileff ballet first came to this city in 1916. He appeared as the slave in "Sheherazade" and other important roles, and at the same time was stage director for that famous organization.

"Every step of those ballets was rehearsed under my direction," he explained. "Of course, many of them had been created by Fokine, but owing to the great war I had to find many new artists, and I had to rehearse them six months in order to bring our Russian ballet again to life.

"Nijinsky was a prisoner in Budapest and Fokine was at Petrograd, because the Imperial Theater would not give him leave of absence. I was under contract to appear at the Coliseum Theater, London, with my ballet, 'Intime,' but Diaghileff persuaded me to come to America when he signed his contract with the Metropolitan Opera Company. Stavinsky and Bakst, whose productions were at stake, urged me. I am very glad indeed, as it has caused my remaining in this country, and has given me an opportunity to work for all that is new and fantastic in Russian art."

A constant fervor possesses Mr. Bolm when he speaks of his work.

"'The Love for Three Oranges,'" he said, "is extremely technical in action and music. It affords tremendous possibilities for plastic and mimic display and gorgeous scenic effects.

"'The Birthday of the Infanta,' the new ballet by Mr. Carpenter, will be equally interesting. I was invited to stage it before the Chicago Opera Company ever decided to produce it. The subject is so beautiful. It has every possibility for modern staging and suggestive plastic expression. It will be the first time the costumes of the beautiful Velasquez style will be seen in a ballet. Not only was I moved by the touching story and the music—I was carried away by the noblesse and style of the ballet.

"The principal role in Oscar Wilde's tale is, of course, a dwarf. I could not see myself as the dwarf. But Mr. Carpenter insisted upon my appearing, and said he did not want the ballet given if I did not perform in it. I was much depressed at the thought that such a beautiful musical masterpiece was not to be given on my account, especially in the noble and beautiful settings by the American painter, Robert Edmond Jones. I therefore decided to give the role of the deformed man, as a grotesque. And when I rehearsed I was tremendously moved by this pathetic role, and I can freely and honestly say that this part will be my most difficult and one of the most interesting of my artistic career. I shall certainly have to make an effort to perform perfectly what I feel. I am eighteen minutes on the stage during the second part of the ballet, and I must so express the feeling of the story that the audience will not feel the length of time."

CECIL FANNING SINGS A RECITAL IN CHICAGO, THE FIRST IN SEVERAL YEARS, AND SCORES COMPLETE SUCCESS

Cecil Fanning, whose many appearances in New York have caused him to become a standard favorite in that city and whose appearances throughout the country have made him known to the best clubs and societies from Maine to California, has, in the past year or two, appeared in Chicago under private auspices only, but on last Tuesday evening, when F. Wight Neumann presented him in public recital, there was evidence a-plenty that this public wishes more appearances from him.

CECIL FANNING AND H. B. TURPIN

There was a very large attendance, and the enthusiasm throughout was such as is witnessed in this city very seldom indeed.

Mr. Fanning is a very remarkable artist, and, besides being talented in various ways himself, he is most fortunate in his collaboration with H. B. Turpin (who indeed is his teacher also), and the work of the two artists is at a point of perfection very rarely attained by any two, and quite impossible short of years of associated study.

Mr. Fanning has a presence and a mentality which at once attract and which color everything he presents to such advantage that he holds his audiences as but few singers can.

And he has also, and very emphatically, a most beautiful voice.

It is rich, full and round and is capable of the most varied coloring and amenable to every possible demand in the way of flexibility or stress.

But—the co-operation of Mr. Turpin at the piano and the splendid natural qualities of the voice, as well as its superb technical training, are but small matters in a Fanning program, the real charm and delight lying, unquestionably, in an interpretative ability which has but few parallels and no superiors.

Mr. Fanning is a poet himself and he is a man of the keenest intelligence, so that all texts lie open to him as a book; and with his magnificent vocal equipment he is able to color and shade in such a way as to bring out degrees and shades of meaning in all his songs which make them fascinating.

As has been said repeatedly, the absolute ability to project words in such way that none is lost is one of the very strongest means of appeal in any song program, and Mr. Fanning has this ability to perfection.

Except in those rare moments when a stray word was swallowed up in power or stress of tone he left absolutely nothing to the imagination in the matter, but spoke each phrase so beautifully, so roundly and so clearly that nothing was lost.

If anyone could hear his "Last Leaf," for instance, and contend that it was anything short of perfection in the enunciatory aspect, that person must be either deaf or so prejudiced that nothing could arouse his approval.

Mr. Fanning and Mr. Turpin have most carefully and accurately sensed that very definite desire of the modern public for directness and simplicity in song moods, and so their program is alive with pieces which are direct and forceful "stories"—absolutely "operas in miniature."

Chief of these, of course, on last Thursday evening was "Archibald Douglas," a wonderful (though long) song-poem by Loewe, which was rewarded with a tremendous burst of approval at its conclusion. In this, as in other difficult numbers, the piano accompaniment of Mr. Turpin was such that no improvement could be suggested.

Three old French numbers, to open, gave clear, sedate "atmosphere," and three of the more modern trend proved pure delight, the "Noel des enfants qui n'ont plus de maisons" (Debussy) being most striking.

"Gesu Bambino," a new Christmas song, by Pietro Yon, proved itself a delight, and it will, unquestionably, find its place on many of the coming Christmas programs.

The melody and rhythm of this song are beautiful, the introduction of "Adestes Fideles" is done most deftly, and the counterpoint in the accompaniment is skillful to the final degree.

"The Time for Making Songs Has Come" (Rogers), as well as "Springtide" (Grieg), the latter being used as an encore number, proved—in the Fanning reading and vocalization—to be songs of intense emotionality and beautiful to the extreme, while "March Call" (another of the Fanning "dedications"), at the end of the program, was a piece of glittering virtuosity both in itself and in the wonderful reading accorded it by the singer.

An interesting item of the program consisted of four of the Fanning poems set to music by Cadman, Beach, Vanderpool and O'Hara, respectively, the whole constituting an interesting American group.

All these are love songs, but the group is far from being monotonous, for Cadman has employed his usual American Indian idiom, Mrs. Beach and Mr. O'Hara are both strongly dramatic in what they have written, and Mr. Vanderpool is again, as always, beautifully lyric.

The quality of the poems may be judged by the complete reproduction on another page of this issue of Music News of one of them.

For encores Mr. Fanning used (besides the Grieg number) "The Kerry Dance" and "The Sands of Dee," and in so doing immensely pleased at least that proportion of the audience which had memories for songs of twenty years ago and was delighted to hear this revival of two such beautiful old favorites.

And, just as in "The Last Leaf" (Homer), so in "The Kerry Dance" Mr. Fanning told a complete and a very beautiful story, and in so doing gave rare pleasure.

MENDELSSOHN CONSERVATORY

At the Mendelssohn Conservatory in the McClurg Building on last Saturday afternoon an attractive piano recital was given by Clara Andersen, a talented young pianist, member of the faculty.

Miss Andersen has musical feeling and good technic, and if at times she allows her enthusiasm to carry her into too much speed, which in turn begets a little inaccuracy, she still maintains, always, a good melody line and a nice musical balance between the various voices of whatever composition she has in hand.

She will, with continued careful study and practice, become a fine concert artist.

Her program on Saturday was well selected and included a Liszt Rhapsodie, as well as the very popular "Rigoletto" Paraphrase, four good pieces of Grieg, and a splendid Etude for left hand alone by Willmers, this latter proving Miss Andersen to have a finely developed left hand as well as musical feeling which is unfailing.

Miss Carrie Scott, the teacher of Miss Andersen, has studied the Grieg repertoire with a direct descendant of the composer, and her pupils—Miss Andersen included—play this music with unusual interpretative authority.

SOUTH SHORE MUSIC CLUB

The South Shore Music Club met on Monday evening, October 27, at the home of Mrs. Lesch and the following appeared: Master Harry Kent, reader; Mrs. Fairman, paper on "Romantic Music"; Miss Lois Marie Cook, vocalist; Mrs. McWhorter, reader; Mrs. B. Halloway, vocalist, and Miss Mona Redman, pianist.

GALESBURG, ILL.

A Return Visit to a Much-Loved City—Old Friends and New—A Host of Music Lovers and Enthusiasts—A Cordial Welcome

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS

A second visit to Galesburg was a veritable return to old friends made and old haunts visited last spring. The town was beautiful in the brilliant coloring of the autumn foliage, and musically it was fairly teeming with interest in spite of the fact that the Schumann-Heink concert, to which every one was looking forward, and for which Mrs. Bryant had expended so much time and energy in preparation, was canceled.

Knox Conservatory

Knox Conservatory is having a banner year. Never in the history of the school has there been such demand for all branches of the course offered, and every member of the faculty has his schedule filled to the limit. This has perhaps a double significance—first, the expected reaction after the war, and, second, the proof of the ever-increasing efficiency of this well-known school.

NELLE JAYNE

Vocal Class Recital

The vocal class recital is a sort of trying out forum each week for the coming public recital, and each student anxiously does his best, hoping thereby to become an applicant for the larger appearance. A number of commendable points were noticed by the writer in attending Mr. Bentley's class. The work was all earnestly and sincerely done and the tone production easy and simple. Attention was given to good, clear enunciation and effective phrasing, and the pupils were freely criticized before the class. Mr. Bentley is intent upon having it a study class from which all the students may derive benefit by the example of their fellows.

Public Recital

A public recital is given by the Knox Conservatory students every Thursday afternoon. This is a feature of the musical education at Knox which is well worth mentioning and worthy of praise both in purpose and execution. The public recital is designed as a "test and experience" ground for the embryonic artist, so that from very early days in his training he learns to "face the music," so to speak, in the form of a critical audience of students and instructors. Nothing could be of more value to the young performer, and that a concrete value may also accrue to the student listener it is required of each pupil that he report a certain number of concerts during the year, with brief written comments on the numbers.

The hour last Thursday was very interesting from the standpoint of stages in growth and development, for the pupils performing were widely varied in degrees of age and progress. As space does not permit more detailed comment, suffice it to say that all of the work was indicative of intelligent instruction and most of it coupled with individual interest and talent on the part of the student.

John Winter Thompson

As the visitor was not privileged on this occasion to hear Mr. Thompson at the organ, comment on his artistry will have to be foregone. But this were perhaps superfluous in any case, for certainly no reader of Music News needs to be told of the splendid musicianship of this well-known and well beloved organist. But, on the other hand, it is, perhaps, never out of place to express one's keen appreciation of a sterling character and one's gratitude for a sincere friendship. Of these the visitor has brought away some of her most treasured memories of both visits to Galesburg. It is a lasting benediction to have felt the influence of such a personality, even for a very brief space of time.

Normal Class for Children

One of the most interesting features of the piano course at Knox is the Normal Class for Children, which is conducted by Mrs. Smith. Mrs. Smith is thoroughly schooled in the various aspects of child education and child needs. She is a master of methods and their application to the problems of technique and theoretical training, and she brings to her work the results of wide training and experience as well as individual thought. Besides these, she infuses her teaching with those very necessary qualities of energy and enthusiasm which make her classes a delight to attend (we are told) and certainly a joy to visit.

Ernest Davis Sings

One of the most delightful occurrences of the entire visit was the recital of Ernest Davis, which took place on Thursday evening, October 30, at Beecher Chapel. The chapel was well filled and the audience was most warm in its reception of this well-known singer. Mr. Davis sang the following program, accompanied most sympathetically by Mr. Bentley:

MARION WOODLEY

Recitation—
Ye People, Rend Your Hearts.....Mendelssohn
Aria—If With All Your Hearts.....Mendelssohn
From the Oratorio, "The Elijah"
"Che gelida manina".....Puccini
(Narrative, "La Boheme")
My Love's an Arbutus.....Stanford
Green Sleeves (Old English).....Unknown
Orpheus With His Lute.....Sullivan
"Cielo e mar".....Ponchielli
(Romanza, from "La Gioconda")
Thou Art So Like a Flower.....Chadwick
I Have a Rendezvous With Death.....Horsfall
(Dedicated to Mr. Davis)
Ah! Love But a Day.....Protheroe
To a Messenger.....La Forge
Celeste Aida.....Verdi
(Romanza from "Aida")

Mr. Davis was in his best voice and sang with beautiful appreciation of his songs. The oratorio number was full and rich and done in the conventional authoritative style. His operatic arias displayed splendid robusto tone and good diction, and in the groups of smaller songs he was also the fine and discriminating interpreter. It was a program which gave much pleasure and will assuredly leave a lasting impression on the minds of Galesburg music lovers.

Maude Alma Main School

Among the offspring of Knox Conservatory the Maude Alma Main School for Children is a most noticeable contingent and is exemplary of the kind of musicianship which claims filial relationship with this standard school. This is one of Galesburg's most successful studios, catering to local "hopefuls" and preparing them in a thoroughly musical way for advanced work at Knox or Lombard. Elementary harmony and musical history figure in the course, as well as study in the technical branches with teachers of preparation and experience.

Anna Groff-Bryant Studio

The Anna Groff-Bryant Studio at Lombard College is filled with as many ardent enthusiasts as ever, and Mrs. Bryant's pupils are accomplishing much. Many of them are occupying important church positions in Galesburg and others are filling concert engagements.

Hazel Meihsner

One of the Anna Groff-Bryant pupils, whom we may now pigeonhole in the professional class, is Hazel Meihsner, who possesses one of the fullest and warmest contralto voices heard in many a day. She is a young woman of intelligence besides who puts art and personality into her interpretations as well as the harvest of a technic well gleaned from the rich field of Mrs. Bryant's knowledge. Her voice is one which would be convincing in a church choir and equally authoritative in oratorio, and her sturdy physique, combined with such a magnificent organ, ought to fit her well for the operatic stage.

Marion Woodley

Miss Woodley is another product of the Groff-Bryant Studio who also possesses a contralto voice of much promise. The opportunity of hearing both Miss Meihsner and Miss Woodley served to convince that Mrs. Bryant does nothing to spoil the individuality of the voice, for the two voices are as different as is conceivable, and yet Miss Woodley's is just as pleasing in its lighter, more lyric quality. Miss Woodley does songs of the ballad type exceedingly well and has great personality in her work—personality in which is evident qualities of sentiment and a quaint sense of humor which is very delightful.

Nelle Jayne

Although the writer was not privileged to hear Miss Jayne, a soprano of the Groff-Bryant vintage, a visit with her served to give the impression of a distinctly artistic nature and a happy disposition, and if we may take others who know at their word, Miss Jayne bids fair to become a singer of distinction, for her voice is of rare quality and flexibility. Further word of Miss Jayne's work will be included at a later date.

Anna Mae Ross and Her Choir

A young singer with a voice and a personality is Anna Mae Ross, a product of the Anna Groff-Bryant Studio and the possessor of many and artistic talents. She herself sings with poise and the acumen of a well-schooled singer, but her ability is even more far-reaching than this, for she is a good and enthusiastic factor in making other people sing. Her duties as choir director of Grace Episcopal Church naturally bring her in contact with many types of voices and people. Miss Ross, with the efficient help of Mrs. Green, the organist, has been able to group and train a very successful choir, and she is also noted for her excellent taste in the use and choice of church music. In this work she is greatly beloved, and as a soprano soloist is in much demand in Galesburg musical circles. She is a young singer with an enviable future if present omens augur correctly.

That Musicians Can Be Modest

We have always looked upon musicians (as a class) as rather lacking in one particular quality, or is it a virtue? Most of them adopt the theory that "he who blows not upon his own horn will not be heard" and promptly proceed to act thereon (or blow, as the antecedent may be). But we have discovered a rare case of feminine modesty in the musical environs of Lombard College; in fact, who occupies the important position of head of the piano department and who imparts the information that she is a pupil of Glen Dillard Gunn, but who, notwithstanding all this ground for notoriety, hates to see her name in print. Yes, sincerely dislikes it. We therefore "modestly" refrain from mentioning it and content ourselves with the altogether unique task of extolling a nameless artist. Though if any one is really anxious to know her they may find her concealed in a dark corner of Music News Directory Columns.

West Side Studio

The West Side Studio, on West Main street, is a studio for children conducted by Mrs. W. J. Tyner, who is a teacher thoroughly conversant not only with music for children but with psychology for the child mind. She has the peculiar ability to understand and win a child's affection, than which there is no better foundation upon which to build any sort of an education. Mrs. Tyner uses a combination of many systems in her work, shaping it to fit the needs of the individual child. She gives her pupils many opportunities to appear in public, and her programs are of the most original and well-chosen type.

Margaret O'Connor

A young artist of recent accomplishment is Margaret O'Connor, who plays the harp with great artistry. She had distinguished success recently in a number of appearances made in Pasadena, Calif., where she was visiting.

Musicians' Club

The Musicians' Club of Galesburg is unique in its purpose. Unlike most musical clubs, it is not civic in its aim and does not attempt to conduct its activities on a large scale. There is abundant reason for this, because Galesburg, through the two college centers, brings so much music to the city that no more is needed; and, in addition to this, the local musicians themselves are so busy that what they want is not more musical attractions but a little opportunity to meet together in a social way. The following extract from the constitution will serve to show what the club purposes to do:

"Object of the Musicians' Club of Galesburg:

"To develop the musical talent of its members; to stimulate interest in and to promote the culture of musical art, and to bring together in social intercourse the members thereof."

The club's membership is about seventy-five, and the officers are as follows: President, Mrs. Eugene C. Pierce; first vice president, Everett Hinchliff; second vice president, Mrs. Louise Forrest; recording secretary, Mr. J. M. Weddell; corresponding secretary, Miss S. Burkhalter; treasurer, Mrs. Irvin Countryman.

The work for this season in the club circle is to be the study of American music.

At the Hinchliff Studios

Among the greatest pleasures of the Galesburg trip were the two visits to the studio of Nell Townsend Hinchliff. The first was an informal gathering of some of the students, who sang and read. Mrs. Hinchliff herself has been the recipient of the best vocal training under prominent Chicago teachers and has evidently used the principles of her own training to good advantage in her teaching, for her pupils sing with a freedom and poise peculiar to the Hinchliff studio. The tone was well placed and the enunciation good at all times and the evidence was distinctly that of the proper method, although of course in varying degrees of perfection. Miss Pearle Williamson, a new addition to the studio force, is a pianist of ability and played accompaniments on this occasion with rare artistry.

On the same evening the writer was delightfully entertained by Mrs. Hinchliff at dinner at the Galesburg Club and later in the week was present at a duet rehearsal of Mr. and Mrs. Hinchliff. Mr. Hinchliff has a tenor voice of lovely lyric quality which he uses well, and Mrs. Hinchliff's fine and dramatic soprano forms a fitting counterpart. The ensemble is unusual and the blend of tone all that could be desired. Mr. and Mrs. Hinchliff, as members of the same church choir, have long been accustomed to sing together and there is nothing which gives them greater joy. It is a privilege to be able to hear them.

ETHEL BENEDICT IN SONG RECITAL

A large audience came to Kimball Hall last Friday evening to hear Ethel Benedict's recital, and the enthusiasm with which she was greeted—no less than the many flowers and the insistence of recalls and encore demands—proved conclusively that she is a very popular singer.

ALICE BROWN STOUT

And this popularity has its basis and reason for being in a musicianship and artistry which are distinctly fine.

Mrs. Benedict's voice has grown steadily, as well as rapidly, and though it is now powerful and developed through a long range, it still retains all that charm and sweetness which have made it notable ever since she first displayed it to the Chicago public.

She is thoroughly fine in the making of a program, too, and the list of last Friday, although a short one, was beautiful and convincing.

Good songs of Wilson, Hook and Handel opened her program attractively and in the second group she showed much finesse in French text songs, well chosen and well contrasted.

The third group consisted of three manuscript songs by her accompanist, Alice Brown Stout, and not only did these suit the Benedict style and voice to perfection, but per se, they proved themselves to be thoroughly good songs, entirely worthy to be brought before the general public in printed form.

"Snowflakes" was of charming daintiness; "In Flanders Fields" gave an entirely new impulse to the wonderful verse, and "Spring Delight," for which Mrs. Stout has written both words and music, proved to be one of the most delightful of bravoura soprano songs heard in many months.

ETHEL BENEDICT

The accompaniments of these songs are co-equal in value with the vocal line and both artists excelled in delivery and, together, they were given an ovation after the group.

The last group opened with "In the Silent Night" (Rachmaninoff), which was, perhaps, the musical gem of the evening; this being followed by "The Lark" (Rubinstein), which is so good that one wonders that it is not oftener heard; "The Nightingale" (Ward-Stephens), the music of which always seems to me too florid for its text; "Love in Spring" (Felix Borowski), again reflecting credit on the skill and artistry of this Chicago writer; and "The Enchanted Forest," a splendidly bravoura number by Phillips, sung with very great spirit by Mrs. Benedict.

Throughout the program Mrs. Stout proved herself a thoroughly fine co-operator in musicianship and interpretative ability with Mrs. Benedict, and for one encore, the latter assumed the piano stool herself and showed us again that she is also an accompanist par excellence.

FLORA WAALKES' PUPILS

Thursday evening Miss Flora Waalkes presented pupils from her vocal class at Palmer Park Assembly Hall, ably assisted by Nola O'Neil and Martha Morris. Miss Waalkes has a soprano voice of good quality and has musicianship and style to make her work tell, so it was to be expected that her vocal pupils would display good musical taste and growing musicianship in whatever they undertook. Many pupils were young in years, but that they have learned much of value to them is beyond doubt after hearing the concert of the evening. Miss Waalkes is to be congratulated. The program was as follows:

A DELIGHTFUL MUSICALE

Every musician in Chicago has missed Lulu Jones Downing the past year or so, and not every one has known that she has been in New York, where she has been very busy completing many new songs.

She has even written an opera as well as other big works and of these more will, undoubtedly, be heard later.

Very recently Lulu Jones Downing has added to her name the word Marsh, and on last Sunday evening a musicale was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph C. Marsh (nee Lulu Jones Downing), when about sixty-five guests enjoyed superb hospitality and a thoroughly unusual musical program.

Miss Anna Nichols and Mr. and Mrs. Marsh were the hostesses and host of this function, which was planned as a welcome to Mrs. Marsh on her return to Chicago.

To mention the artists in the order of their appearance in so far as memory serves: Miss Lucille Stevenson proved herself to be absolutely at home in such a function and disclosed such artistry in her group of songs as proved to be pure delight to every one present. She was accompanied by Phyllis Fergus, who later read some of her poems with piano accompaniment and proved to be delightful in each capacity—reader, composer and pianist.

Mrs. W. B. Price read some of her beautiful little poems in that delightful way she has made so well known in Chicago, and Mrs. Frederick Haines, a very serious and effective reader (with Mrs. Marsh at the piano), again showed us the glories of the beautiful "Pipes of Pan" by that composer.

Rosemary Pfaff, as told in Music News of last week, was charming in the "Ave Maria" (Bach-Gounod), and, as usual, made a sensation in her coloratura repertoire, in which she was splendidly seconded by Barton Bachmann at the piano, the latter playing some fine piano solos, including a Sonata Heroique of his own, which is at least as good as the number of the same name by Campbell-Tipton, and which proved anew that all we need to do in order to get a plentiful supply of American compositions is to encourage our own writers a little.

Lorraine Earnest (also accompanied by Mr. Bachmann), played a beautiful obligato to the "Ave Maria" and was heard also, most charmingly, in numbers of her own, again proving herself a remarkably talented young player.

Leta Murdock, another of Chicago's distinctly talented and very effective young violinists, played also and, as usual, was most fortunate in having the superb piano assistance of her sister, Miss Mora Murdock.

Marjorie Dodge Warner, radiant in appearance, and in splendid voice, created a genuine sensation by the brilliance and style with which she invested "June" (Lulu Jones Downing), and again showed herself as among the very finest of local singers.

Miss Hamilton, a newcomer here (from Indianapolis originally, but fresh from study with Emma Thursby in New York), at once captured all hearts by the purity of her voice, the accuracy of her musicianship and the charm of her personality in "Caro Nome" and, as an encore, charmed all hearers with a delightful little "Lullaby," by her young brother.

Madison Jordon, a fine tenor, church singer in Rogers Park, I believe, showed himself the possessor of voice, brains and style and made one wonder that he had not before been heard in any important function.

Among the songs of Lulu Jones Downing-Marsh (with the composer at the piano), heard at this time, my memory recalls, "Behold I Stand at the Door," "Song of the Sea" (from the opera), and "Inspiration," sung by Mr. Jordon, "June," by Mrs. Warner, "A Burst of Melody" (dedicated to Galli-Curci), by Rosemary Pfaff, and "Pipes of Pan" and "Evening Song" (readings with music), by Mrs. Haines and Mrs. Marsh.

D. A. HIRSCHLER

Daniel Hirschler's success as a concert organist, choral conductor and teacher is an outgrowth of his splendid musicianship, convincing personality and long experience as Dean of Music Schools.

To a natural musical gift has been added the most thorough training with the best organ virtuosos, resulting in an exceptional ability to convince, hold and interest an audience in an organ recital. Technique there is ample, but not only that; a fine sense of tone color, a thorough knowledge of musical literature, and a fine gift of interpretation that does not leave the listener cold; all these add to the success of a recital by this artist.

Mr. Hirschler further knows how to build a representative program to appeal to all types of listeners, and yet employ all the resources of the instrument.

He at present holds the position as Dean of the School of Music at the College of Emporia, Kan., where he is professor of organ, theory and history of music. He further is conductor of the College Oratorio Society, performing each May in an Annual Music Festival many of the great masterpieces of choral music, with the aid of some great orchestra, which he conducts with the choral society. Orchestras such as the New York Symphony, the Minneapolis Symphony and the St. Paul Symphony, have taken part in these festivals. He also is active as organist and director of music at the First Presbyterian Church.

His powers of organization have been recognized by the Kansas State Music Teachers' Association, which body has given him many offices, among them that of president. He also has served as dean of the Kansas Chapter of the American Guild of Organists, of which body he is an associate.

The wonderful four-manual and echo organ at the College of Emporia was built to his specifications, and is one of the largest and finest electric organs of the entire west.

Russian Symphony Orchestra—The Russian Symphony Orchestra, Modest Altschuler, conductor, starts on Monday, November 10, for a five weeks' tour. Among the cities to be visited in the first two weeks are Carbondale, Lock Haven, Williamsport, Lancaster, Uniontown, East Liverpool and Erie, Pa.; Akron, New Philadelphia, Cleveland and Youngstown, Ohio; Jamestown, N. Y., and Fairmont, W. Va. During the following three weeks the orchestra will visit Georgia, Alabama, Virginia and Tennessee. Sasha Votichenko, who is said to be the sole exponent of the tympanon, will be the soloist with the orchestra on this tour.

FRANCE VICTORIOUS

In his traveltalk "France Victorious," Mr. Newman at Orchestra Hall last week showed thrilling pictures of the great Victory Celebrations at Paris the past summer, as well as actual reproductions of the signing of the peace treaty at Versailles.

This was greeted with immense enthusiasm by one of the largest audiences Mr. Newman has ever faced in Chicago.

The glory of the victory was emphasized through the showing of a series of pictures which illustrated the devastation of parts of France as no account in the newspapers could possibly do and which were realistic to the last degree.

Mr. Newman, in saying "good-bye," promised that he would spend all of the coming summer in again visiting the battle-torn countries and that he would, next fall, show us what a year could bring forth in the way of rebuilding.

He will be awaited with eagerness.

ANNA GROFF-BRYANT

Mrs Anna Groff-Bryant, concert manager of Galesburg, Ill., presented Jascha Heifetz in recital on Tuesday evening, November 11, at the Armory.

The opening recital of the season was given by Galli-Curci. Madame Schumann-Heink was obliged to cancel her concert at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the recital, October 28, which was a real calamity. The cancellation of the Schumann-Heink concert was the first cancellation Mrs. Groff-Bryant has experienced in the five years she has been engaged in the managerial business. She has received many letters of sympathy from members of the Concert Managers' Association, of which she is a member.

On last Wednesday, November 5, in the studios of Virna Harman Walker in the Lake View Building occurred the monthly dancing exhibition recital, which drew a capacity audience to her spacious studio, evidence of a large following; well deserved, however, for Miss Walker's exhibitions are of a high standard. She displayed in this one many new pupils, under her tutelage for only a few weeks, who had remarkable poise and achievement.

Miss Helene Beth is no less an artist than many much older and professional. She gave the dance of Miss Walker's composition with skill and dignity. Her facial expressions were fine. She will surely become a popular dancer.

Miss Hanna Brin, also a clever performer, danced with grace and charm. However, her hands and arms are not yet perfectly atune with her other dancing qualities, which is so necessary, but with Miss Walker's careful guidance she will acquire what is most needed.

Other dancers, solos and groups gave splendid interpretations.

Little Fredericka Moore and Meta Patock deserve special mention.

As a whole, Miss Walker's program was very enjoyable and instructive.

MARCELLE IS SUNG AT THE ARYAN GROTTO

If imitation be "the sincerest form of flattery," then, truly, P. D. De Coster is the most arrant flatterer who has ever come to the notice of the Chicago public, for his "Marcelle," for which he claims the authorship of "words and music," is so baldly a compilation from almost every known music source as to have but the slightest vestige of originality.

Nevertheless it is both skillful and effective, and although one may be shocked to hear the Sextette from "Mikado" lifted almost bodily into the "Marcelle" score, without any credit to Gilbert and Sullivan whatever, and although the Toreador Chorus in "Marcelle" is so absurdly a copy of that in "Carmen" as to make any musician smile; yet, the new, little work, is pleasing from end to end, and quite naturally, the music is especially good.

When the Service Club, Lolita Armour, president, wished to give a particularly brilliant and remunerative benefit performance this fall, they wisely chose to present an opera, and still more wisely, they induced a lot of nice society girls and boys to accept places in the chorus or the ballet for the three performances at the Aryan Grotto last week.

As a consequence, the place was packed each time and the result was splendid from every standpoint, including also that of music and dancing.

The production itself was elegantly put on; the dressing was beautiful; the play must have been rehearsed most diligently, for it went without a hitch (on Saturday night at least), and a score of parts taken by society people (including Mrs. Ames, who sang the leading role very beautifully), were done as well as could be expected from most professionals, and far better, in fact, than is the case in the majority of musical comedy performances in the regular theater.

Music News, however, is chiefly concerned with the professional musicians who appeared and these included several lesser known singers, as well as three experts, Arthur Kraft, Edwin D. Martin and Eugene Dressler.

Mr. Kraft, in glorious voice, sang some very telling music in a way to carry the honors most easily, and in some top notes in the final ensemble was positively thrilling.

Mr. Martin, the possessor of a beautifully suave baritone voice, and like Mr. Kraft, superb enunciation, was thoroughly effective in his picturesque part.

Mr. Dressler, whose fine tenor voice has not been heard so often in Chicago as it should have been, but who, undoubtedly, has a splendid artistic future, again proved his musicianship and style and, like Mr. Kraft and Mr. Martin, showed also that he is a thoroughly good actor. C. E. W.

"ELIJAH" AT OAK PARK

First praise for the tremendously successful performance of "Elijah" at the First Congregational Church in Oak Park on last Sunday night must go, properly, to William Shuey, the chairman of the music committee, who did herculean service in its preparation.

Next, S. E. Seder, the organist and choir director, must be complimented in no uncertain terms, for not only was his grasp on the whole performance a remarkable one, but also his playing of the fine organ throughout was at a point of technical perfection and intelligent musicianship, which made it nothing short of symphony-orchestral in effect.

Few organists indeed are there who could do so splendid a piece of work as that which was done by Mr. Seder last Sunday night.

Next in order for praise comes the two dozen members of the Apollo Club, who sang the chorus numbers in a way to make one think that at least fifty were in the choir and with an intelligence and finish which marked them as absolutely fine representatives of a body which is always good and which on the occasion of its presentation of "Elijah" at Orchestra Hall last week proved itself without a superior in all recollections of choral bodies.

Last, and by no means least, the quartet of solo singers must be given wholehearted praise, for, save in the one instance of the quartet number "Come, Every One That Thirsteth" (which was undoubtedly due to insufficient rehearsal), their work was at a point of excellence which measured up to the highest standard of "Elijah" excellence.

Rollin Pease was the Elijah and again did his work come up to that high standard which Music News has previously noted.

He it was who sang the role in the performance in costumes and with action given at the New First Church last year and his experiences at that time have, unquestionably, added a fullness and an authority to his singing of the part, which gave him a distinct advantage.

His enunciation is as nearly perfect as any singer can hope to attain, and his feeling for the character and his utter familiarity with it make him exceptional from every standpoint.

Else Harthan Arendt sang the soprano parts admirably; throughout her voice sounded thrilling and her interpretation of each solo was at a point of super-excellence with an especial emphasis on the superb reading of "Hear Ye, Israel."

Permelia Gale had in her safekeeping the contralto parts and did them, of course, with beautiful vocal quality and a generous display of dramatic and poetic feeling.

"Rest in the Lord" was sung with exceptional suavity and musicianship.

Arthur Kraft, remarkable in every part he undertakes—was in fine voice and found in "Elijah" an outlet for his superb artistry and finish.

With so splendid an array of solo numbers as was furnished by these four excellent artists we must emphasize the fact that it was a pity to present so badly prepared a number as the aforementioned "Come, Everyone That Thirsteth."

For Offertory, Mr. Seder—always artistic both in selection and execution, played the slow movement from the Violin Concerto and the single hymn heard was the beautiful "Consolation," also by Mendelssohn.

AMERICAN CHURCH IN PARIS

The American Church in Paris has always been an object of interest to music students, and its plans and purposes for the future will just now attract especial attention, in view of the fact that the eighteen thousand American students who were in Berlin just before the war (music and other branches) will now, almost inevitably, gravitate to Paris almost without exception.

There are already four thousand American students at the Sorbonne, and at least two thousand more architectural and music students are expected immediately.

In view of these facts the effort just now being made to build a new and much larger American Church than the old one, and the establishment of a great social center for American students in Paris, under the same auspices, is a matter of keen interest and great concern.

For this is one of the finest means at hand for the betterment of conditions and the controlling of influences.

Contributions to the necessary fund of $2,000,000 are now being solicited, and as all the church organizations are interested in the matter (the American Church in Paris being absolutely nonsectarian) it will be easy for those interested to find a way to subscribe.

ADA TILLEY

Saturday afternoon a fine program was given by Miss Ada Tilley, soprano, and Harold Triggs, pianist. Sanford Schlaussel was a good accompanist. Mr. Triggs is a good student pianist, and he was heard with pleasure. Some numbers were of his own writing, and it is well to say that he has talent worth watching. Miss Tilley made a splendid impression with a soprano voice of good quality, well used in the presentation of songs. She is gracious in her bearing and has a charming manner that is a big asset in public work. The artistic traits and vocal effects reflect well Charles W. Clark's artistry. Two groups of songs by Fourdrain, Rabey, Lehmann, La Forge and Czerwouky were lovely in interpretative style and displayed also fine musicianship.

H. W. P.

Smith—Mr. Alfred Kanberg appeared at a recital of the Arche Woman's Club Friday afternoon, October 24, and at the Austin Woman's Club Saturday afternoon, October 25. Among the numbers he used was Clay Smith's "Sorter Miss You."

CHRISTINE LANGENHAN IN SOUTH

Christine Langenhan, the distinguished dramatic soprano, who scored recently the greatest triumph on the Pacific Coast, as in Los Angeles, Riverside, Pasadena, Portland, Ore., and in Tacoma, Wash., where she sang at the Stadium for an audience of about 14,000 people as soloist at the Pacific Coast Norwegian Singers' Association Festival, returned just for a few days to New York to start on her southern tour.

Her initial appearance of the season was on October 25 at the Auditorium in Glenville, W. Va., where she has been received with acclaim. Miss Langenhan held the capacity audience under a spell with her artistic deliveries, displaying a most beautiful and sweet voice. Her enunciation was flawless and her interpretation was an outstanding feature. She was obliged to respond with many encores, as the popular "Coming Thro' the Rye," "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia," "Rosary," and many others.

Her program follows:

Oh, Had I Jubal's Lyre.....Handel
Allah.....Walter A. Kramer
To a Swallow (dedicated to Mme. Langenhan).....J. W. Metcalf
The Look.....Rosalie Housman
Aria from Mignon—Connais tu le Pays (in French).....Thomas
Bon jour, Suzon (in French).....L. Delibes
Ouvre tes yeux Bleus (in French).....Massenet
I Did Not Know.....Vanderpool
Awake! It Is the Day.....Florence N. Barbour
It Is Rainy, Little Flower.....W. Blair
The Glow of Spring.....Rungee
My Love Is a Muleteer.....F. De Nogero
Aria from Cavalleria Rusticana (in Italian).....Mascagni
Lullaby (in Russian).....Gretschaninoff
Song My Mother Taught Me (in Bohemian).....Dvorak
When I Was Seventeen (Swedish folk song).....
Paradox.....Cadman
Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen.....Burleigh
Ma Curly Headed Baby.....Clutsam
Two Loves.....W. Reddick
The Brownies.....Franco Leoni
Ring Out, Sweet Bells of Peace.....Caro Roma

Miss Langenhan was booked in the South for the following dates:

October 28—Lynchburg, Va. (re-engagement).

October 29—Louisburg, N. C.

November 3—Leesville, S. C.

November 5—Milledgeville, Ga.

November 10—Augusta, Ga. (re-engagement).

The following dates will be filled in the Middle West: November 13, Danville, Ind., and November 16 in Chicago, Ill., where she will make her debut under the auspices of Chicago Woman's Musical Club. This appearance will be followed by several recitals throughout the State of Oklahoma, as November 20, Ponca City; November 21, Norman; November 22, Holdenville; November 25, Okmulgee; November 26 in Hugo, and many others.

HELEN HAWORTH

Thursday afternoon, Helen Haworth, contralto, gave a group of songs at Recital Hall, Fine Arts Building. Mazie Odell Cardy was accompanist. Others on the program not heard at length by this writer were Dorthy Belck, Mrs. Frederick Haines, Anna Nyberg and Gwendolyn Evans.

Mrs. Haworth's voice is a beautiful one of wide range and capable of power. She made much of numbers by Cadman, Rogers and Kurspeiner from a vocal and interpretative sense. Mrs. Haworth has personality, too, and is so charming in manner that she should go far in artistic work.

"A Singer with Something Inspiring to Offer"

—New York Herald, October 28, 1919

OTTILIE SCHILLIG

New York Herald, Oct. 28, 1919

The recital of Miss Ottilie Schillig in Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon stands out prominently.

She characterized every song carefully and with a tense dramatic sense. Her recital was notable. Mozart's "Ariette" she presented with more beauty of tone than was shown in her later numbers. Yet it was no more interesting than two groups of songs in French by Franck, Fourdrain, Duparc, Georges, Gretchaninoff and others. Georges' "Hymne au Soleil" was very effectively done. Brahms' "The May Night," sung in excellent English, clearly and forcibly, was a good argument for translating German songs into English for local consumption.

The audience was enthusiastic. A singer with something inspiring to offer seldom fails to hold a New York audience, even though she be all but unknown.

The Sun, New York, Oct. 28, 1919

Miss Schillig revealed promise of unusual importance and made known also a very considerable degree of attainment.

Miss Schillig sang a program of much variety, ranging from Cesar Franck to Brahms (in English), and from Mozart to Alexandre Georges. There was also a Russian song, sung with the original text. The singer perhaps asked a little too much of her voice in undertaking the Georges "Hymn to the Sun," but otherwise her songs were well chosen.

This young woman possesses a voice of beautiful quality, naturally warm and capable of communicating emotion. Her tone production was excellent. Everything was well forward, smooth, resonant and agreeable. Even the high tones were better placed than those of many more experienced and well-known singers. Miss Schillig's scale is fairly well equalized; there are no bad breaks. The freedom of the voice, the good breath support, the musical phrasing and the clear diction were valuable items in the young singer's equipment.

The Globe, New York, Oct. 28, 1919

Miss Schillig has a soprano voice of natural power and beauty, which she uses with confidence and no little skill. She has, moreover, temperament and personality. A large and enthusiastic audience was present, and the floral tributes almost buried the piano.

The Evening Sun, Oct. 28, 1919

. . . A more propitious one has not greeted a young singer in New York for the many moons of this and last season. Her first few notes betrayed her as a soprano of rare and fine art and a member of that aristocracy where voices, however pleasant, are but the means to that end toward which the brain and heart and an unerring taste conspire.

Hers is none the less a voice of beauty; she uses it, apart from all its capable range and colorful texture, with a restrained intensity which becomes both her and her vocal material. Her style, unobtrusively foremost, has the archness, yet the subtle drama, to it. Her placing is admirable, and in her legato is an ease and grace almost rapturous to hear.

Mozart is a stylist's test. Miss Schillig did the "Ariette" as she had previously done a Gluck selection—more than prettily. She was equally successful with the modern Frenchmen she interpreted; even the fierce, short whoopings of Alexandre Georges' "Hymn to the Sun" had refulgent rays across it as she sang.

W. L. George, the English novelist, tried in his "Literary Chapters" to perfect an "Esperanto of Art," wherein all various forms of art should have a common lingo. Had he succeeded it would be easier to express the surprise and delight which surrounded the quiet, unannounced entry of Miss Schillig.

Evening Mail, New York, Oct. 28, 1919

With a combination of many gifts and a most intelligent use of them, Ottilie Schillig is carving out her own particular niche among concert singers. Voice, individuality, culture and taste are hers, with a mind which controls their application.

In arranging the program she sang at Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon Miss Schillig set for herself no small task.

A voice as altogether lovely as hers was in "Chant pour les morts," Dvorak's "Springtide" and Brahms' "May Night" should be kept that way.

The World, New York, Oct. 28, 1919

Ottilie Schillig's song recital yesterday afternoon in Aeolian Hall had some delightful features. The singer disclosed a good voice and a well-developed art that captivated her large audience. She offered a long and varied program that made exacting demands on the soloist, but Miss Schillig met all requirements.

New York Times, Oct. 28, 1919

Miss Schillig aroused and maintained interest yesterday by the beauty of her voice, by certain excellent features of her production and use of it, and by the intelligence with which she found and expressed the spirit of the songs she sang. It is evident that she has the fundamental qualities out of which artists are developed.

Her voice is a soprano of peculiarly sympathetic timbre, capable already of a considerable range of expression and emotional accent. It is well developed in the middle and upper tones; these have a power and fullness and a peculiarly searching quality that will stand her in good stead in the development of a wider emotional gamut.

Much that was praiseworthy appeared in her delivery of three songs in the older vocal style: Marcello's "Il bel mio fuoco," an aria from Gluck's "Paris and Helen," and an ariette by Mozart; and especially her understanding of the legato style and spontaneous expression. Her singing of Cesar Franck's "Processional" was an excellent piece of work, with an admirably developed climax; in the difficult "Hymne au Soleil," from Alexandre Georges' "Miarka" songs, she met with notable success, a severe test of her powers in sustained and full-throated utterance; a truly fine performance. One of the most striking of her French group was the "Chant pour les Morts," by Albert Bertelin. Her singing in Russian of Gretchaninoff's fine song, "The Siren," was so successful that she was called upon to repeat it, and bettered it the second time.

Miss Schillig quite justifiably strengthened and beautified her program by putting upon it Brahms' "May Night," in English, and singing it well.

New York Tribune, Oct. 28, 1919

Miss Ottilie Schillig, a singer new to New York audiences, appeared in recital yesterday afternoon at Aeolian Hall and disclosed a talent distinctly above the ordinary. The young woman is an artist of a fine sensibility and a singer who understands the value of style. She sang Gluck's "Spiagge Amate" and Mozart's "Ariette" with a fine command of legato.

In the French group, however, in Franck's "La Procession," in Fourdrain's "L'Oasis" and in D'Indy's "Lied Maritime" she was at her best. Here her taste, her feeling for nuance of expression, for tone color, were abundantly evident, as were the clarity of her diction and a certain rich emotional understanding. Her singing of Brahms' "The May Night," which she gave in English, was a really fine accomplishment.

Miss Schillig is, in short, an artist who may very well make a place for herself on the concert stage. She has intelligence, interpretative power, temperament.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

May Peterson at Columbia, S. C.

"The Golden Girl of the Metropolitan"—the sobriquet returns to mind as one meets May Peterson, the Metropolitan opera soprano, and talks to her, and its aptness strikes one delightfully. That's what she is called in New York. Golden in voice she will be found to be by the audience which hears her at the high school auditorium this evening; but the adjective suits her otherwise. A blonde she is; tall and slender, fair haired, and exceptionally pretty. One would use the word beautiful to describe her appearance and her engaging youthfulness did not the intimate word pretty seem better to suit her gracious friendliness and naturalness of manner.

Yesterday afternoon the Afternoon Music Club gave Miss Peterson an informal reception at the home of its President, Mrs. W. T. C. Bates, in Wales Gardens, and the members and a few outside guests—among them Mrs. Robert A. Cooper, the Governor's wife—spent an altogether delightful, intimate hour with the opera singer, talking about music and the State Fair and everything else that any other gathering of women with a sprinkling of men would talk about.

Someone commented on the pleasant surprise that is always felt at finding famous people entirely natural and unaffected and ready to enjoy the little attentions and pleasures that come their way. The remark was addressed to Miss Peterson. She smiled. "I don't believe great people are ever affected," she said. "Surely one could never get beyond one's humanness." And then after a pause: "Anyhow, I believe that sort of thing has gone entirely out of style; this is an age of naturalness, of genuineness, and the very last thing that real people want to do is to set themselves apart from their fellows."

And when Mis Peterson talks about music in general, and her own music in particular, one knows that she will certainly never set herself apart. She says that she cannot understand the complaint that some singers make against the so-called "sacrifice" which is demanded of them for the sake of their art. "Why, the joy that comes to me in giving pleasure to an audience repays me for everything that I have to forego of social pleasure and domestic joys," she declared. And one knows that she means it, for not only do her lips speak, but her earnest eyes and her honest manner back up her words.—The State (Columbia, S. C.).

Artist Taken Ill

Miss Charlotte Bergh, the celebrated coloratura soprano of Chicago, who sang before the Prince of Wales and who also took part in the excellent concert in Grant Hall last night, was taken suddenly ill today and was removed to the Hotel Dieu. Her illness has necessitated the canceling of several engagements, including one at Toronto. Her many admirers in the city will be grieved to hear of her indisposition.—Kingston (Canada) Press.

Macbeth at Reading

Immediately on conclusion of the recital by Florence Macbeth at Reading, Pa., a telegram was dispatched to New York by the promoters, saying: "Macbeth triumphed in recital tonight by finest singing which has been heard in a decade, is consensus of opinion." Reading's great critic, writing in the Reading Herald of October 28, added another tribute to the little American singer and agreed that the critics of the country are correct in stating that she is the greatest of all American coloratura sopranos. In part, the critic, Walter Heaton, said:

"Perhaps it is rather unfortunate that Florence Macbeth is merely a girl from our own Minnesota. Were she from some obscure village in the Balkans she might be hailed with acclamation and modern society would bow in admiration. Only very occasionally does one have the opportunity to hear such redolent 'bel canto.' Her silvery tones, beautifully young, are the purest music; and while she is an adept in all florid forms of song, yet the delightfully flowing cadences and velvet quality of each tone have a more far-reaching effect and appeal than mere roulades, trills and staccati.

"The opening aria from Handel's 'Atalanta' proved the purity of her intonation, facility of breath control and a seemingly perfect 'legato.' Bishop's 'Lo! Here the Gentle Lark' has been sung here on numerous occasions, but never has its coloratura sounded quite as musical as on this occasion. It takes an artist of the loftiest type to create distinct musical atmosphere amid passages seemingly purely technical. In her three French songs the rhythms were so polished and her phrasing so finished that the iridescent tones and changeful inflections seemed to be the simplest things imaginable. 'Les Yeux' (Rabey) cannot easily be forgotten and was astonishing in its clarity of musical expression and graceful gesture. In the Daleroze 'Morceau' there was a repetition of lustrous tone color and sympathetic emotion which proved that the singer can be truly emotional without being sentimental.

"The Waltz Song from Gounod's 'Romeo and Juliet' served to show that the critics are correct in stating that Macbeth is the greatest of American coloratura experts. Besides technic, it was also sheer music, and the charming phraseology tinted the work with a distinct musical coloring. MacFayden's 'If' gave us an exhibition of warmth of tone seemingly without a flaw. In the Bliss 'Sonnet' and Cadman's 'Sky Blue Water' Macbeth proved herself capable of qualities of lyric tone which must have been a valuable lesson to every vocal student present.

"After Scott's 'Wind in the South' the singer gave as an encore the 'Cuckoo,' and a repetition was demanded and granted. It was a naive exhibition of artistry very seldom witnessed in these 'futurist' days. In the last group of songs every point in modern song interpretation was clearly exemplified and made one feel that it is somewhat rare to hear such joyous, winsome singing coupled with distinct personal charm and ingratiating stage presence."

Another Schumann-Heink Triumph

Mme. Schumann-Heink and Frank La Forge appeared here last evening before an audience of 8,000 people who came from a large radius to hear the concert. Mme. Schumann-Heink was in glorious voice and sang a large and varied program, including many encores. One of the greatest successes of the evening was the "Flanders Requiem," just composed for her by Frank La Forge. It was a thrilling moment in the program and met with tremendous applause, which Madame Schumann-Heink insisted upon sharing with the composer. Mr. La Forge appeared also as soloist and was obliged to respond to the enthusiastic applause with many encores.—Wichita, November 8.

Ernest Davis at Galesburg

Ernest Davis was a happy man last night, and well he might be, for he had returned to his own and his own had received him with a warmth of greeting that left no room for doubt of their pride in him as an artist and their regard for him as a man. The spacious Methodist Church was comfortably filled, in the galleries as well as on the main floor, the audience including not only the music lovers of Iola but many from near-by towns, and from the beginning of the program to the end this audience lost no opportunity to demonstrate its approval and enjoyment. Virtually every number of the program was encored and to nearly all of the recalls Mr. Davis responded with another song, so that the program, which as printed contained but twelve numbers, as a matter of fact stretched to twenty before the evening was over. The first number on the program, the recitative "Ye People Rend Your Hearts" and the aria "If Ye Truly Seek Me" from "Elijah," was sung with beautiful effect and with rare dramatic impressiveness. This was followed by the ever popular narrative from the opera "La Boheme," "Che Gelida Manina," and the difficult vocalization was rendered with as much apparent ease as the simple and stately strains from the "Elijah" had been.

But the writer of this report is not enough of a music critic to make a review of every number of this program of sufficient importance to justify the space it would occupy. It is enough to say that whether singing the simple old English songs or the lyrical ballads or the dramatic selections from the classic operas the singer seemed equally at home and the audience seemed equally pleased.—Daily Register.

Ernest Davis, the young American tenor, who has recently created a great furore in the east, fairly captivated the large audience which filled Beecher chapel last evening. From the first moment he stepped upon the platform his ingratiating personality seemed to have a charm that made the audience willing to respond to his will.

His program was well chosen for the display of the artist's versatility. The mystery of Mendelssohn's art was unfolded in his singing of "Ye People, Rend Your Hearts," recitative, and aria, "If With All Your Hearts." His voice of rare quality and extraordinary range aroused the most enthusiastic applause of the audience. As an encore to this first number he sang a selection from Verdi's "Rigoletto."—Evening Mail.

The fine presence and the magnificent voice of Ernest Davis, tenor, accounts for the enthusiasm of the audience that heard him Thursday evening in Beecher chapel. It was a thoroughly responsive audience made up of music lovers, and one likely to be discriminating in its approval. Physically the singer is all that could be desired. Tall, broad shouldered, full chested, and yet not corpulent, a very Apollo, his appearance impresses. In addition he has the voice and the power and when he so chooses the impassioned element that thrills and satisfies listeners. —Daily Republican.

News Print Paper Shortage

The newspaper business is facing the most severe shortage of news print paper that has occurred in the history of the industry. No one is able to predict what the price will be, or whether any newspaper will get an adequate supply of paper. It is certain, with the tremendous increase in the volume of advertising which is universal throughout the United States, that more paper is being consumed at the present time than is being manufactured.

It is hinted that a good many newspapers, either from lack of supply or from inability to meet the 1920 prices, will be forced out of business. As it is, certain newspapers will be forced to curtail paper to a greater degree than at any time during the war.

The Chicago Tribune yesterday announced on the first page that thereafter the week-day issues of The Chicago Tribune would be limited to thirty-two pages in size, and that advertising would be left out to meet this schedule. The Tribune says: "By reason of the severe shortage of news print throughout the country, and the consequent obligation of newspapers everywhere to conserve paper, commencing Monday, November 3, the Chicago Tribune will restrict the average size of its daily issues to thirty-two pages until the need for conservation is past." This is a radical announcement on the part of the Chicago Tribune, as the daily issues of the paper have been running thirty-six, thirty-eight and forty pages. The Tribune has the money to buy all the paper that it can use, no matter what the price, and the attitude of the Chicago Tribune is exceedingly commendable, and in the interest of the whole newspaper fraternity.—Des Moines Capital.

Charlotte Bergh, Edna Wheeler Ballard and Tracy Jay Kingman in Canada

When Charlotte Bergh ended her first group of songs last night one wondered if there existed in the whole wide world another singer in whom all the attributes of greatness could so perfectly be united. In the Bell Song from "Lakme," she seemed to be content to illustrate what a thing of beauty the human voice can be. She poured forth her beautiful tones without effort generously and easily. She sings as the birds sing and she is one of the few artists of whom this is true. Edna Wheeler Ballard, who played on a magnificent harp, was wonderful. Her technique is superb, her tone is singularly pure and of fine quality, and her poetic sense is keen. Her selections were a delight to all. Tracy Jay Kingman has a rich baritone of a tenor quality. He is a finished master of the vocal art, and the dignity of his method was impressive. He sang his English songs with wonderful effect and his group of French songs were truly artistic. In the songs where he could add all the power of expression to his tones Mr. Kingman was at his best. The program was a joy, as thoughtfully chosen as it was sung and played.—The Kingston Standard, October 28.

Edna Wheeler Ballard as harpist played her way into the hearts of the large audience last evening. Her first number was a delightful pastoral. The second number, "Marche Triumphale," revealed her brilliance as an artist and the rich warm tones of the harp. The third harp number was a Mexican love song, which was interpreted in a flawless manner. To an encore she gave "Old Black Joe."

Miss Charlotte Bergh's first selection, "The Bell Song" from Delibes' "Lakme," is one of the most difficult compositions to sing. Miss Bergh's success in this number proves her an artist with a voice of rare beauty and with the finest training. The trills in "The Bell Song" were taken with a freedom and yet with a control that made her rendition comparable only to that of the prima donna Galli-Curci. Her voice is flexible and warm and she has the finest sense of shading. The "Butterflies" by Linn Seiler was a much lighter composition, but it proved her artistic accomplishment to be extensive. "There Are Fairies at the Bottom of Our Garden" was another appealing number, as likewise the "Song Fairy" by Bemberg and "Daddy's Sweetheart" by Liza Lehman.

As encores Miss Bergh sang "Annie Laurie" to harp accompaniment and "The Cuckoo Clock."

Mr. Tracy Jay Kingman sang several songs in French. The song "Il Neige" by Bemberg was one of these. Among his English numbers were "Sylvia" by Speaks, "O Let Night Speak of Me" by Chadwick and "Smiling Thru'" by Penn. Mr. Kingman's baritone voice showed fine training and his sense of dramatic value was sound.—The Daily Ontario, Belleville, Ontario, Saturday, October 25, 1915.

Frances Papert in Texas

It was a gala occasion, made so chiefly by the presence of Miss Frances Papert, guest artist from Chicago. Have you ever heard a beautiful voice that still lives in your memory, coming sometimes to your mind's ears like an exquisite echo that brings surcease from all that hurts for the moment?

Well, I shall have that joy always, for did I not hear Miss Frances Papert sing, "When I Gaze Into Thine Eyes"? It is things like that that should make one glad just to live. Really, Miss Papert's voice is soul-satisfying.—Four States Press, Texarcana, Ark.

FRANK LA FORGE

More than ten years of successful association in concert with the greatest artists have made the name of Frank La Forge familiar to practically the entire musical world.

After studying four years in Vienna with Leschetizky, Mr. La Forge toured the United States and Canada with Mme. Johanna Gadski, appearing many times in all the principal cities. For five years following this he toured with Mme. Marcella Sembrich. These concerts brought him prominently before the musical public of Europe as well as America.

Mr. La Forge has been for several seasons, and is at present, pianist with Mme. Schumann-Heink.

The songs of Frank La Forge are sung by many leading artists. Among others: Alda, Amato, Garrison, Gluck, Matzenauer, Rider-Kelsey, Schumann-Heink, Sembrich, and Werrenrath.

A partial list of the songs includes "To a Messenger," "Before the Crucifix," "Expectancy," "When Your Dear Hands," "I Came With a Song," "The Sheep Herder," "Spooks," "Retreat," "Like the Rosebud," etc.

A Prolific Musical Sunday (November 2)

Reinald Werrenrath, basso, gave a recital at Carnegie Hall in the afternoon.

Vera Amazar, Russian soprano, appeared in recital at the Garrick Theater at the same hour.

At the Hippodrome the Volpe Symphony Orchestra gave a concert with two soloists, Bernard Wolff, cantor, and John Powell, pianist.

John O'Sullivan Sings at Carnegie

It was a prolific musical Sunday. To keep track of all the musical doings is a reviewer's business, to listen to all of them is a habit, to write them all up is also possible, but to infer that all the offerings of the day were good is to prevaricate. John O'Sullivan appeared for the first time in recital at Carnegie Hall simultaneously with Amelita Galli-Curci, who was at the Hippodrome. The Irish-French tenor came back to us vocally and artistically better equipped. I entered the hall when the tenor of the Chicago Opera Association (he is to appear again with Campanini's forces) was singing "Un Paradiso," from "L'Africaine," by Meyerbeer. Among the natives or foreign singers inhabiting our country you will not find today an upper register such as that of John O'Sullivan's. He plunged himself into the aria with a certainty that made the singing a superb rendition, and the aria from "Pagliacci" re-echoed through Carnegie. The middle register is beautiful when employed properly. Only occasionally he sang off key, and even that did not rob the beauty, the power and the quality of his unique voice. He piled up a number of encores because the applause was vociferous, but if the lights had not gone out he might have proceeded with his singing "ad infinitum." His Irish group was of a vigorous, forceful nature. He must be a believer in his native songs, because he sang them with fervor, expression and native feeling. They consisted of "When Shall I Again See Ireland" (Herbert), "Thule Agra" (traditional), "Mo Chraohbin Cno" (ancient Celtic air), and "O'Donnell Aboo" (traditional). He commenced his program with an aria from "Joseph" (Mehul) and followed with "Phydile" (Duparc), "The Home Road" (Carpenter), and "Don Juan," aria by Tschaikowsky. His operatic appearances will strengthen his last year's prestige perhaps to a greater degree because this season he is in splendid trim unless nature plays a trick on his exceptional organ, which none of his admirers wish. Excellent accompaniment was given at the piano by Willfred Pelletier, assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House. Hazel Clark, violinist, was the assisting artist.

Galli-Curci at the Hippodrome

A capacity house greeted the diva at the Hippodrome. The stage, instead of the usual floral tributes, was garnished with some 500 people. And as to her singing, I do not remember to have heard the unique soprano to better advantage than on this busy Sunday of November 2. She was in glorious vocal form and gave an exhibition of lyric and fioratura singing perhaps without parallel in the annals of music since the days of Marcella Sembrich. Her legato was perfect, her upper notes clear as the best of the violin strings What would have Rossini said were he alive to listen to her flutelike notes. The master despised a flute. Once he was asked, "Maestro, which is the worst instrument after a flute?" He replied quickly, "Two flutes." But Galli-Curci's upper notes have the stirring power and the purity of tones which flutes do not produce even when mastered by experts. Her "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark" (Bishop) aroused an outburst of enthusiasm which only the great diva can effect. After the rendition of "Come per me sereno," from "Somnambula" (Bellini), she gave an encore consisting of "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes." The opening number was "My Lovely Celia," Old English (Monro), followed by "Daffodils a-Blowing" (Edward German), "L'Heure Exquise" (Hahn), "Clavelitos," in Spanish (Valverde), "Breathe Gently, My Song" (Liszt), "Valse" (Messaggero Amoroso) (Chopin-Buzzi Peccia), "Don't Come In, Sir, Please" (Cyril Scott), "Like the Rosebud" (Frank La Forge), "The Little Bells of Sevilla" (Homer Samuels, her accompanist), and the "Mad Scene" from "Hamlet," with flute obligato by Manuel Berénguer. Countless encores were granted, among them the popular "Home, Sweet Home." Messrs. Samuels and Berenguer, piano and flute, played a fantaisie by Hue. The audience was in the best of mood, as who wouldn't be when listening to the diva?

Harold Henry in Recital

Chicago makes itself felt before the metropolis audiences by sending her sons with a purpose of exhibiting their talent in the various branches of music. The second Chicago pianist to make his appearance in a period of two weeks was Harold Henry on the afternoon of November 7, and more are to follow; for instance, Flora Zygman, who is to appear this week. Mr. Henry was greeted by a fair attendance, whose delight was expressed through a very unusual applause. No pianist, no matter how prominent he may be, could have improved Mr. Henry's rendition of Impromptu, Opus 90 (Schubert). He gave a clear reading, which excelled in purity of tone and an exquisite interpretation. He played this composition with much charm, and the crystal tone which he extracted from the pianoforte was exceedingly pleasurable. He demonstrated his technic in the rendition of Preambule, from "Partita," in G, by Bach. Mr. Henry proved his knowledge of Brahms when he played Ballad, Opus 10, giving the composition an exceedingly interesting exposition. This Chicago pianist will be welcomed, for he is a mature artist and big enough to appear in New York City. His program consisted of:

Fantasia quasi Sonata (Apres une lecture du Dante)	Liszt
Ballad, Op. 65, No. 5 (Lyric Pieces)	Grieg
Reflets dans l'eau	Debussy
Etude, Op. 10, No. 10	Chopin
Polonaise, Op. 40, No. 3	Chopin
Prelude, Chorale and Fugue	Cesar Franck
Sioux Flute Serenade	Charles S. Skilton
The Dancing Marionette	Harold Henry
Caprice Espagnole	Moszkowsky

Francis Rogers, baritone, appeared in a recital at Aeolian Hall Thursday afternoon, November 6, assisted at the piano by Isadore Luckstone.

Ernest Knoch in New York

The conductor of many organizations, a resident of Chicago, paid a flying visit to the New York office of Music News. Arriving on Wednesday, November 5, Mr. Knoch, who reminds you of Siegfried Wagner, returned to Chicago on November 8, and the correspondent was glad to shake hands with a man of such talent and fine personality. He inferred that it is his intention to move to New York. Not a bad idea, but what will Chicago do without him? In any event, we wish him good luck everywhere.

Pierre Monteux Brings the Boston Symphony to New York

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first appearance of the season in New York was on the evening of November 6 at Carnegie Hall. Pierre Monteux was at the baton. The French conductor by his superb readings of the scores effaced completely the memory of the infamous Karl Muck. In a program of Beethoven, Debussy and Schumann Mr. Monteux proved that his real vocation is the greater musical arts, though he is very efficient as an operatic leader. The devotion with which he conducted the program gave the public another test of his abilities. There were hypocritical cries last year that the organization had suffered a musical depreciation. At this time I will

Prosperous Warren Proctor

The world of music is being revolutionized. A new era for American artists is in progress. Yes, and the American singer is able to buy even properties. News reaches this office that Warren Proctor, the excellent tenor, has acquired a residence at Flushing, Long Island. A wise and fortunate thing for an artist. Warren Proctor, who just returned from a successful trip with the Gallo English Opera, is preparing his program for the tour with Tetrazzini. The Italian diva could not have chosen a better assisting singer than Warren Proctor. Both will be winners.

Opening Season of the Symphony Society of New York

The Symphony Society of New York, Walter Damrosch conductor, opened its season on Thursday afternoon, November 6, at Carnegie Hall. The orchestral numbers consisted of Symphony No. 1 in C Minor (Brahms) and Prelude and Finale from "Tristan and Isolde." Albert Spalding, violinist, was the soloist and played Mendelssohn's Concerto for Violin with Orchestra in E Minor.

Music News in Demand

We do not wish ill luck to our musical contemporaries, who were compelled to shut down on account of the strike or reduce the size of their journals at a time when the musical season is at its full blaze, but the Music News office has been swamped with many requests—and in some cases the New York office could not supply the demand. Having disposed of our copies, excepting the usual file copy, many artists and musicians called at the office to have a glimpse at our reading matter. Since 1917—the year of Mr. De Valdor's New York appointment—the demand has increased thrice and many fold not only in New York, but from the neighboring states.

Marguerite Potter in Lecture Song Recital

Aside from singing, Miss Potter gave a lecture at her presentations, and to fit into the delineation of the songs she appeared in costume. The fair sex usually indulges in a description of the wearing apparel, but exempt me from this duty. But the costumes, to say it briefly, were decidedly tasteful. Even so, Miss Potter must not become vain; I believe she will not. What I intend to say happened at the Arion Society, west 72d street, on Sunday afternoon, November 2. She announced her recital as "Songs of the Southland." Miss Potter is the possessor of a very agreeable quality; the voice was more powerful than the size of the hall, which did not mar her singing. It is agreeable to note that she uses her voice with skill and uncommon intelligence. There was flavor and native beauty in her spiritual group; "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" (H. T. Burleigh), "Steal Away" and "Nobody Knows de Trouble I See." Then came the Creole selections: "Pov'piti Lolotte," "Marie Clemence" and "Musieu Banjo." I lived for a few minutes in old New Orleans when I listened to them. And we were transferred to the plantation life when Miss Potter rendered exquisitely Stephen Foster's "Old Black Joe" and Henry Work's "Kingdom Comin'." The last group was devoted to the northerners. Frederick Vanderpool, the young but prolific song writer, was featured with "Ma Little Sunflower, Good Night" and even the high brow habitue of recitals enjoyed the song of a coming composer. I watched their expression and caught some pleasant glimpses. James Rogers came in with "When Mammy's Away"; Alexander Rogers was featured with "Why Adam Sinned," and the last of the printed program was "Let Miss Lindy Pass" by Winthrop Rogers. Note that Miss Potter gave us three different Rogers, but to the writer Vanderpool's was the best. It was an agreeable afternoon and hopes are entertained for a hearing in the Aeolian Hall. Ralph B. Angell was at the piano.

Cecile de Horwath, pianist, gave a recital at the Princess Theater in the afternoon. And so ended the prolific Sunday.

Ruth Miller a Bride

The charming soprano, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera House, and now appearing at the Park Theater, has joined the rank of the wedded folks. The secret came out a month after she had been married. And the husband is Mr. Chamlee, a tenor, now touring with the Scotti Grand Opera.

Ruth Ray Greeted by a Large Audience at the Carnegie Hall

Not for a long time has Chicago sent a more ripe and well equipped musician than in the case of Ruth Ray, the violinist. And more, no newcomer to New York musical audiences has ever been greeted by such a large gathering as when the Windy City violinist appeared at her recital on the evening of November 4 at the Carnegie Hall. Perhaps Miss Ray has something to accomplish in the way of perfection, but her playing of Lalo's "Symphony Espagnole" disclosed her the mistress of many qualities. And we regret that duty compelled us to listen only to this particular execution, but she was indeed praiseworthy. Miss Ray showed superb technic, facile handling of the bow and an intonation which was flawless. Her tone was large enough for such a hall as the Carnegie, and at no time was she predisposed to extract dissonant tones. Her unaffected manner, her musicianship and her interpretation were admirable. If the writer errs not, she studied lately with Professor Auer, and while this is being said I don't think the master has given a better

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ANNA CASE

The story of the rise of Anna Case, the American concert soprano, is believed by many to be the most interesting in American musical annals.

"I was born in New Jersey," said Miss Case. "Our family moved to South Branch when I was three, and there they have lived ever since. My father was the village blacksmith, and is the village blacksmith to this day. I was the only child till I was eleven, when my first brother came, and the second one followed two years later. I am telling you I was the only child for eleven years that you may know there is occasionally an only child who is not what folks call 'spoilt,' for I had no time to be 'spoilt'—I was too busy. There were six in the family when I was still a young girl, counting a nurse they had to have for mother, who was ill, and I did all the work.

"Perhaps I shouldn't tell this now, but when I read and hear of other girls and boys who find life a little hard I long to tell them that somehow everything works out right in the end.

"I do not remember the time when I was not passionately fond of music. My father had a good bass voice and my mother a sweet soprano, so that I inherited my talent for singing from both sides of the family. When I was three I could play anything by ear that I heard. My father played the violin, and somehow—I do not know how, unless it was just born in me—I picked up enough crude knowledge of the keys of the piano to start to teach piano lessons.

"I was only fifteen when I found my first pupils, and I gave two or three lessons a week, at 50 cents a lesson. I still did all the work for the family and went from one task to another as fast as I could go. I got through by 4 and then would hitch up an old horse and drive many miles into the country to give a lesson. It would be 11 o'clock at night when I returned. The stable was so dark that I had to feel my way to unhitch the horse and feed him. I carried a revolver for protection on the country roads, but no one ever sat up for me or worried about me at home. I had to be in bed in order to get up at 6 o'clock the next morning to get breakfast for the family. That seemed to be everything.

"About this time I got a place in a church choir in Plainfield, but my father thought Sunday traveling a desecration and I had to go on Saturday and pay my board over Sunday. Then, Monday morning, I would take a train to New York, having found a teacher there whom a teacher in Summerfield had interested in me, and get back home in time to begin the family washing Monday night.

"A woman told her husband, a merchant in Plainfield, of my struggle and my ambition, and he sent word that he would pay for my lessons with the New York teacher and I could pay him back when I was able. I used to call at his store every week and get my lesson money, and when I was able to pay my own way I owed him $75. That debt I wiped out with my first concerts, and it represented the only money ever loaned to me.

"There was a constant argument with father. He said all I gave lessons for was to have money to foster a vanity for clothes, and one day, when he thought me still young enough to punish, I left home. I had only $1.50 in my pocket. I had a friend, the wife of the organist in Plainfield, and I went straight to her. I was earning then $27 a month singing in a church choir, and had to pay $24 a month for board. But somehow or other, with a pupil here and there, I managed to make enough extra money to keep me going.

"I wanted to sing in Wanamaker's Auditorium. I knew if I could get a hearing there it would help me to other concert work. I applied in person. I wrote, I begged, I pleaded, and finally I told them they would hear from me once a week for a year until they granted me my wish. They let me sing after I had written that, and for the first concert I was paid $40. Everything I wore when I sang there that day was borrowed. They liked my voice. It became my custom after that, whenever I was dead broke, to apply at Wanamaker's. They understood how badly I needed the money, always let me sing, and raised me to $60.

"I went from one church choir to another; always the bigger chance in view, and finally, when still living in Plainfield, I was invited to a dance at the Governor's house. It was my first party; I am sure my dress was borrowed for the occasion. I sang. Governor Stokes heard me, took an interest in me, and got a position for me to sing for three afternoons for $25 a week at the Bellevue-Stratford in Philadelphia. I had nothing to wear, and my teacher in Summerfield, who had always been my best friend, loaned me a dress, hat and shoes and the money to pay my way there.

"A man came to me at the close of the first concert and asked me to join his opera company, a branch of the Metropolitan. I had never heard an opera in my life; I did not know what the Metropolitan Opera Company was. When I told my teacher in New York she broke down and cried. I didn't cry; I didn't know what it was all about.

"I have been with the Metropolitan seven seasons. I have never had any training abroad, and I have never been abroad except for a few weeks, just when war was declared. I have never sung a note outside of the United States except for several concerts in Canada. I work hard; I always worked hard. I try to save my money, for I am planning to send my two brothers through college.

"I have no patience with the sentimentalism of today that declares a working girl has to sell her body and soul in order to keep body and soul together. It is false. It is wicked. If a girl is willing to work and wants to keep straight she can keep straight. If she is too proud to wear patched shoes and old clothes, too proud to do menial work when necessary, that's a different story.

"I have scrubbed floors for the neighbors and worked in the kitchens all day for 50 cents; I worked in the blacksmith shop to help my father. At one time I drove a hack. I always did whatever honest work offered in order that I might have money to develop my voice. Any girl, anywhere, who is willing to make the sacrifice to develop her talent may do the same.

"The Lord helps those who help themselves."

KINGMAN CONCERT COMPANY IN CANADA

The civic dinner at the City Hall on Saturday night in honor of the prince was a great success and was attended by about one hundred guests, including fifteen ex-mayors of the city. The prince and his entire staff were present. In addition, Edna Wheeler Ballard, harpist of Chicago; Charlotte Bergh, coloratura soprano of Chicago, and Tracy James Kingman, baritone, were present and rendered several beautiful selections which the prince and all those present greatly enjoyed.—The Standard, Kingston, Ont.

Charlotte Bergh of Chicago, coloratura-soprano, probably the finest singer who has appeared in Kingston in many years; Edna Wheeler, ballad-harpist, one of the greatest harpists of the United States; Tracy Jay Kingman, baritone, appeared before the prince at the civic dinner on Saturday night. Miss Shaw very kindly acted as accompanist at the civic dinner to the prince.

They are most finished artists and won unstinted admiration.—The British Whig, Kingston, Ont.

pupil, at least in the female contingent, than Miss Ray. She can be placed immediately after Heifetz and Seidel. New York is ever undemonstrative towards the Chicago musicians; perhaps its pride or the slow recognition may account for that, but Miss Ray received a spontaneous applause after each movement. Many floral tributes were bestowed upon the young musician, whose personality will also be a principal factor to her career. The concert began with Tartini's "Sonata" in G Minor and followed by "Nocturne" E Minor (Chopin-Auer), "Waves at Play" (Grasse), "La plus que lente" (Debussy), "Guitarre" (Moszkowski-Sarasate), "Poeme" (Fibich) and "Polonaise Brillante" (Wieniawski). First Subscription Concert of the Beethoven Association—John McCormack, Jacques Thibaud and Others Take Part

The Beethoven Association recently organized in New York by prominent artists and musicians, who will appear as soloists in the series of five concerts, gave its first public audition at the Aeolian Hall on the evening of November 4. By far this concert was the most artistic since the inception of the musical season. It enlisted soloists which insured success. The program was a Beethoven and as such it gave much pleasure to a capacity house. In entering the hall the popular tenor, John McCormack, was rendering the aria "My Heart Is Sore Within Me." It disclosed the tenor's adequacy, vocally, and artistically. He was in good voice and, as always, imbued his singing with accentuated expression and feeling. Dramatic songs are not best adapted to Mr. McCormack's splendid lyric timbre. This was shown in "Adelaide," an early song of the great master. The tenor was given a cordial reception. Then we einjoyed Jacques Thibaud, who played like a master "Romance" in F. The French violinist stands without rival as the elegant violinist. Refinement, musicianship, grace and finesse are his attributes. His intonation was ever clear, his tone beautiful, while the technic is out of question—is perfection itself. Harold Bauer also contributed. The last number consisted of a quartet for piano, violin, viola and cello, Op. 16, played respectively by Messrs. Bauer, Thibaud, Svecenski and Willeke. The pianist was admirable. Mr. Thibaud, save for some occasional inaccurate intonation, demonstrated his artistry as a player of chamber music.

In the Rondo he was inspiriting. Mr. Svecenski's retirement to the precincts of a teacher may have been responsible for his poor intonation. With scant rehearsals and the abandonment of practice, one cannot do justice to the beautiful art of chamber music. Mr. Willeke gave sufficient proofs of being an excellent interpreter of the intime music. Edwin Schnaider gave splendid accompaniment at the piano, naturally, whenever John McCormack was allotted a song. The tenor rendered also the recitative, "Jehovah, Hear Me." The concert opened with a trio for piano, violin and cello, Opus 97, in B Flat. Such an enjoyable evening is the more desired, but this event surpassed anything given this season. And to the Beethoven Association many best wishes in the achievement of musical progress.

Dicie Howell in Recital

Do not fear the degeneration of human voices, for the skeptical minds and the worshipers of European products have had of late several proofs that native voices are to be found in our country. Dicie Howell, a beautiful brunette with majestic stature, made her bow to the metropolis audience on the afternoon of November 5 before a very large gathering. Once in a great while someone breaks the monotony of Aeolian Hall, and Dicie Howell came equipped with a splendid lyric organ of distinction and native beauty. Hers is a fresh, pure and ringing voice, brilliant in the upper tones; in fact, this register is unique. Miss Howell possesses a magnificent medium, while the lower register is of excellent quality. I came with little expectation, but departed with genuine delight. Not only for concerts, but for operatic works of lighter nature, Miss Howell's voice will be most adaptable. There are some defects to be remedied. The emission is at times faulty, and the production also of the upper register, somewhere between the F and G. When these improvements are effected, Miss Howell will not give us the opportunity to note the "stridenti" nature of the upper tones. "Porgi Amor," from "Le Nozzi di Figaro," by Mozart, was an unexpected admirable rendition, for many a singer would commence with a spell of nervousness and thus mar the beautiful style of Mozart. In the "Non so piu cosa son," from the same opera, Miss Howell's voice came out with all its beauty, but more expression would have contributed to an artistic rendition. "Non dar piu pene, O caro," by Scarlatti, was sung, where praise should be unstinted. "Dal sen del caro sposo—Vologeso," by De Capua, closed the first group. From these hearings I can easily predict that Miss Howell will soon be heard wherever artistic singing is sought, and through studies she will accomplish that which an artist dreams of. There was applause after each number, and applause of warm nature. The balance of her program consisted of "O Beaux Reves" (Etienne Marcel), by Saint-Saens; "Berger et Bergere" (Wekerlin), "Intimite" (Nenormand), "Fleur Jetee" (Faure), "The Maid and the Sun" (Rimsky-Korsakoff), "Are They Tears, Beloved?" (Grieg), "Dewdrops," "The Bumble Bee" (Grondahl), "La Siciliana" (Sinigaglia), "My Heart Is a Lute" (Ms.), by Marum, "A Song of Joy" (Woodman), "Corals" (Treharne), "Buckle My Shoe" (Jules Jordon), and "Song of the Open" (La Forge). It would be unjust not to mention her excellent Italian diction. Francis Moore was at the piano.

Dicie Howell Does Honor to Theo Van Yorx, Her Teacher

While listening to the soprano, in recital at Aeolian Hall, my thought was sometimes concentrated on her modest teacher, Theo Van Yorx. If we were allowed to print all the machinations, tricks and machiavellistic methods employed by certain New York teachers in acquiring pupils, many would gasp with astonishment. Many a teacher whose pupils will never go further than the studios begs certain professionals to provide him with a testimonial whereby the naive aspirants to a musical career can be caught in a trap. How many teachers have had to abandon a singing career for the pedagogical rooms? Many! Watch the advertisements of those who taught (?) Galli-Curci, Ponselle, etc., and you will be puzzled about the mysterious testimonials given to mediocre pedagogues. Who perpetrates such unheard of things, and why are they permitted?

Well, Theo Van Yorx belongs not to this list of vocal teachers. Of a modest nature, he pursues his profession with calmness, honesty and an extreme efficiency. You will note, at certain recitals, teachers who promote their personality with the hope of letting someone know that they are the guiding spirits of the recitalists. Miss Howell sang, but Van Yorx was hidden in a corner, following with keen attention every sentence which came out from the splendid organ of his pupil. Some of his intimates knew of her being his pupil, but the large audience suspected little of Mr. Van Yorx's accomplishments. Miss Howell won, and let it be made public that Van Yorx is her teacher.

Fokine, Dance Wizard, Reaches New York

The premier dancer of them all arrived on November 7 in New York. Without Fokine the world would not record another great dancer. He is Mordkine, and a pupil of Fokine. The latter will supervise the dances in the spectacular performance, "Aphrodite," which is to be produced by Messrs. Gest, Ray & Comstock at the Century Theater. The dancer is accompanied by his wife and boy of thirteen.

The Music at the Rialto

I believe that the selections from "Francesca da Rimini," by Zaudonai, was the first presentation in any movie house. Mr. Riesenfeld, who conducted the orchestra, departed for once from the popular rule by offering a work which is not appreciated, even in the opera house. Perhaps when one begins with a movie house he ends in the operatic temple. One has to develop the taste. Mr. Riesenfeld has made a happy choice for the week ending November 9, and if the audience did not understand

We have a number of desirable vacancies for young Men and Women with high grade AMERICAN TRAINING. Pianists-Vocalists-Violinists. Teachers must be able to meet keen competition, while to the best the country calls for—the short people who are "on the job." These opportunities offer splendid salaries and are altogether exceptional.

Zaudonai's dramatic score, at least it gave the conductor and his orchestra a warm reception for the excellent rendition. Annie Rosner, soprano, sang "My Hero" ("Chocolate Soldier"), by Oscar Strauss, a song less adapted to her excellent voice. Martin Brefel, tenor, and Albano, baritone, sang the duo from "La Forzadel Destino," by Verdi. Both possess better voices than schooling.

Bonci, Ill, Postpones Recital

The famous Italian tenor, who is to appear with the Chicago Opera this season, has fallen a victim of illness. His recital, announced for Carnegie Hall on the evening of November 9, has been postponed to a later date. The Bonci admirers are extremely disappointed on account of their inability to hear the great tenor, but one can fight everything and anything except nature, so let us wait patiently.

At a recent recital given at Dudley Buck's studio the popular songs edited by the house of Witmark & Sons have been featured.

It is reported that "Smilin' Through," "The Want of You," "Values," and "Golden Crown," by Frederick Vanderpool, have met with unusual success, due to their extreme originality. It would be unjust to omit that "Carissma," by Arthur Penn, also met with favor. Otherwise the various interpreters featured songs by Ball, Hillam, Loomis, Waldrop, Elliott, Clay Smith, Guion, Gantvort, Tours, Wells, Herbert. Messrs. Arthur A. Penn and Frederick W. Vanderpool assisted the vocalists at the piano in a recital given on November 5 at 50 West Sixty-seventh street, New York.

May Peterson, Samuel Ljungkvist, Tenor, and the Tollefsen Trio in a Swedish Program

The St. Erik Society, an organization for the promotion of Swedish music in America, gave its annual concert at Aeolian Hall on Saturday evening, November 8. It is nothing but just to further the music of every nation, especially the kind that pleases not only the masses but the critical audiences, too.

Compositions of one nation alone, presented in one evening, may be sometimes a test on the public's patience; but such was not the case at this concert, because the interpreters were all satisfying. And if some of the works were inferior, the artists succeeded in elevating the value of the music.

The Tollefsen Trio, consisting of Carl Tollefsen, violinist; Mme. Augusta Tollefsen, pianist, and Michel Penha, cellist, opened the event with a rendition of Trio, Opus 1, in E flat, by Franz Berwald. The work is scholastic and of absolutely no musical value. No chamber music organization could have played it better, and no one else could have saved it.

Samuel Ljungkvist, tenor, followed with "Ballad" (Andreas Hallen), "Cradle Song" (Hugo Bedinger) and "The Song of the Fiddler" (Ivar Wideen). Of the three the last one was the most pretentious of the group. The tenor appeared last year under the same auspices, but on this occasion he reversed the impression. The quality of his voice has gained in beauty, the organ is more voluminous, and the interpretations denoted that the singer has been studying zealously.

Two piano solos by Augusta Tollefsen proved her efficiency, but Fantasia, Opus 11, No. 3 (Wilhelm Stenhaunnar), was another of the uninspiriting works. "Erotikon," Opus 16, No. 1, by Emil Sjoren, was of an agreeable nature, and Mme. Tollefsen played it charmingly. Some passages remind one of "Martha."

And then came May Peterson. The popular soprano appears only on rare occasions in New York, because the country at large wants her. The writer hopes to hear her more often in the metropolis. The songs disclosed more originality, and the manner of bringing out the beauties of the compositions led the audience to bestow a genuine ovation on Miss Peterson's rendition. Some admirers presented her with adorable floral tributes. Having heard her for the first time in concert, it would not be out of place to remind you that Miss Peterson's upper register is not only powerful but is also of a distinctly brilliant quality. Her top notes are clear, pure, ringing, and emitted with great skill. Her schooling gives distinction to the employment of her voice. With a splendid medium she combines taste, grace, feeling and expression. There is one more potent factor in the soprano's success: her personality. Her beautiful, expressive eyes, her natural, infectious smile, her rich blonde hair and her comely and artistocratic manner contribute to make May Peterson an artist of her own class.

She sang "The Song of Destiny" (Gustaf Nordquist), "Would That I Were Soaring" (Emil Sjogren), "Supplication" (Gustaf Nordquist) and "See, Thou Didst Come" (Hugo Alfven). The second and third song were enjoyed.

Then followed Carl Tollefsen, the violinist, who employed all his skill to make his two renditions of more musical value, but neither one of them was worthy of presentation. They were: "Andante Sostenuto" (Emil Sjogren) and "Gavotte and Musette," by Tor Aulin, a composer who appears often on the fiddlers' programs.

The return to the platform of Samuel Ljungkvist deepened the impression of his splendid progress as a singer as well as an artist. "The Forest Sleeps," by Hugo Alfven, a truly inspiriting song, must have been an inspiration to the tenor. Singing in the mezza voice, interpreted in unusually artistic fashion, the tenor was compelled to encore it. Another song which made him receive warm approval from the audience was "At the Last Moment," by Emil Sjogren.

May Peterson closed the event with another group. She charmed her audience with the singing of "Visa," by Helfrid Lambert, and had to repeat it. Another pleasant song was "From Heaven's Dome Above Us" (Swedish folk song). The group was concluded with "Star Eye," by Wilhelm Stenhaunnar, and "A Rosebud for Thee I've Broken" (Emil Sjogren). The applause was so thunderous that Miss Peterson graciously sat herself at the piano and sang "Comin' Thro' the Rye" as only Galli-Curci could really render it.

Some conclusions as to the value of the Swedish music could be drawn. Of all the composers featured on this occasion only two could be detached as the possessors of talents, and they are Emil Sjogren and Hugo Alfven. This event was in all pleasurable, and if one confessed a bore somewhere, the monotony was relieved by the interpreters. The St. Erik Society could not have selected better soloists.

Sophie Braslau in Recital

The popular contralto of the Metropolitan Opera House made her bow for the season on Sunday afternoon, November 9, at the Carnegie Hall before a packed house. Before her recital I doubted the rumor that the young singer was compelled to cancel her western tour with the Chicago Opera on account of a sudden attack of laryngitis. But during the recital I noted a certain veiled tone on the lower register and a slight throaty sound, which is proof of the operation. Her middle register and the upper showed no effects; on the contrary they were as in the past, beautiful, and both registers were employed skillfully and artistically. Gorgeous sounded her voice in Beethoven's "Nature's Adoration." She gave the song a capital interpretation; her splendid voice filled the big hall. The upper notes never sounded so clear, beautiful and ringing. She began her recital with Handel's "Dove Sei" and "Furibondo." Then came Mozart's "Un Motto di givja." In the latter the grace, the charm and the Mozartian style were lacking. It requires a lighter voice to render this song; nevertheless Miss Braslau never failed to disclose her artistry. The second group consisted of Swedish, Spanish, French, Venetian, English and Gypsy folk songs arranged by Reiman. Then followed "Il canto del dubbio" (Bossi) "Le Carnaval" (Fourdrain), "If I Had Known" (Tchaikowsky), "Rognedo" (Lsjeroff), and "In Memoriam" (Rhea Silberta). The American-English songs concluded the recital. They consisted of Cadman's "The Moon Drops Low," "Under the Linden" (Dirk Fock), presumably the composer was inspired by Berlin's great park, "Land of Silence" (Cecil Forsyth), "Greatest Miracle of All" (Guion), and A. Walter Kramer's "Now Like a Lantern."

Eleanor Scheib was always in harmony with the singer. She assisted capitally at the piano. And isn't it wonderful to see two women harmonizing without a stitch of incomprehension.

LA SALLE COUNTY TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

(Reprint from Streator Daily Free Press)

Georgia Kober, one of the foremost American pianists, returned to Streator yesterday after a period of five years and received a royal welcome from the La Salle county music teachers, who were convening at Good-Will Hall.

Miss Kober was presented as the principal of the afternoon and evening sessions, and the musicians who had journeyed from various parts of the county to hear her were well repaid for the effort. The convention will go down in history as the most profitable one yet held from the standpoint of inspiration and instruction gained by the teachers through Miss Kober's appearance.

Financially the affair was not so successful as some previous conventions have been because the weather interfered somewhat with the attendance, but the association is able to meet the heavy expense and still carry on for a spring convention.

Morning Session

The convention was called to order at 10 a. m. by Miss Ceacilia Castelli, president. The program, given by students of leading teachers in the county association, was so exceptionally good that the students' program will undoubtedly become a regular feature of the conventions.

At 1 o'clock the business session was held in the parlors. Much important business came up for discussion, and the election took place. The new officers are as follows:

President—Mrs. Alfred H. Bell, Lostant.
Vice President—Miss Lulu Yenerick, Ottawa.
Secretary—Miss Martha Brennecke, Streator.
Treasurer—Mrs. W. G. Foster, Streator.

Afternoon Session

The afternoon program opened at 2:30 with a group of songs by seventh grade children of the public schools. Miss Eisenhart has given some remarkable demonstrations of her work since she was chosen as supervisor in local schools, but never has her work been more creditable than yesterday afternoon. The ensemble effects were remarkable, the tone quality soft and beautiful, and the shading perfect. The children sang four songs, which were beautifully contrasted, and the audience was very enthusiastic over the numbers. Miss Margaret Hall presided at the piano.

Following these numbers came the lecture by Miss Kober on "Schumann," which was full of interest to all the musicians present. Miss Kober was for nine years a student with Dr. H. Kappes, intimate friend of Robert and Clara Schumann and of Felix Mendelssohn and his wife, Cecile. The story of Schumann's life and the interesting incidents in the careers of the two famous composers were read by Miss Kober from a paper prepared by Dr. Kappes after he was ninety-two years of age.

Miss Kober was also a student of William Sherwood for twenty-two years and was at one time a pupil of Josef Lhevinne, with whom Miss Mora Murdock studied while in Germany. The pianist was able to intersperse through the lecture many personal remarks which were pertinent and full of interest.

Informal Reception

Immediately following the program came the informal tea and reception to the visitors in the pretty parlor of the clubhouse.

Evening Concert

The evening session was called promptly at 7:30. The report of the Resolutions Committee was first made and was read by Mrs. Alfred H. Bell, chairman of the committee. Mrs. Bell is the newly elected president, who will promote the spring convention in her home town, Lostant, where she is organist in the Methodist Church and is head of a musical organization. The resolutions included the thanks of the association to the Woman's Association of Commerce for their hospitality, to the press for their generosity, to the supervisors of music and all who contributed to the success of the program, and to Herbert Schaefer for the use of the extra piano.

The concert opened with the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner," led by George Hood. The audience was delighted when Miss Kober appeared to play the accompaniment for the song. It is safe to say that the national hymn has never had so able an exponent in this city as Miss Kober, for she made the piano peal forth the noble strain with majesty and patriotism.

The High School Glee Club furnished a group of very charming songs during the program and were very much enjoyed. Miss Llewellyn has achieved splendid results with the girls, among whom there are some beautiful voices.

Miss Kober proved to be a delight to the eye and an artist whose playing astounded, thrilled and charmed her hearers.

Miss Castelli and Miss Kober closed the program with a brilliant piano concerto, which was thoroughly delightful and called forth great enthusiasm for both the artist and her pupil.

HELENE KANDERS TO SING IN NEW YORK

Helene Kanders, who is to be heard in her own recital at Carnegie Hall tomorrow evening (November 15), is a native American, born in California of Russo-Belgian parents. She left her native country at an early age to prepare herself for a musical career, most of this preparation having been accomplished in Vienna. At the age of eighteen she signed to sing with the Strasbourg Opera Company, and here she sang a wide range of parts, including the little role in "Madame Butterfly," Mimi in "La Boheme," Nedda in "Pagliacci," the title role in "Mignon," Marguerite in "Faust," title role in "Tosca," Rosaura in "Le Donne Curiose," Elcira in "Don Giovanni," Elizabeth in "Tannhauser" and many others. Her next engagement was for three years with the Royal Opera Company at Dresden. She was thus engaged when the war broke out, and she availed herself of the first opportunity to leave that city and territory, returning to Belgium, from which point she managed to return to the United States. She was engaged at once for leading roles of Gatti at the Metropolitan Opera Company, but felt that concert work afforded her a wider and more satisfactory field. Her New York debut in concert was at Carnegie Hall last February, and here she was most happily received by one of the largest audiences of the season. Her program was an unusually original one, her opening number being Beethoven's difficult aria "Oh Perfido," which has proven the stumbling block to so many aspiring artistes. Her rendition was perfect, and thereafter she added to the esteem which was manifested by her appreciative audience after each following number. The singer is one of the most attractive artistes on the concert stage. Her beauty is uncommon, and her voice, a pure lyric soprano with dramatic qualities, is handled by her effectively and with impressive fervor. She is to repeat her Carnegie Hall recital on the evening of January 13, and in the interim will be heard in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Boston and other leading eastern cities before her transcontinental tour.

BLACKMORE PUPILS IN RECITAL

At Bush Conservatory, on Saturday, November 15, at 3 o'clock, Miss Frances Dodge, Miss Lorine Chamberlin and Miss Leotta Foreman, three artist pupils of John B. Blackmore, pianist, will present a program of compositions by Debussy, Ravel, Liszt, Brahms and other composers.

These young ladies are from the Pacific Coast, having joined Mr. Blackmore's classes this fall to complete their studies.

MONTEMEZZI-CARRARA

The famous composer of "L'Amore dei Tre Re," now in America rehearsing his new opera, "La Nave," which is to open the season of the Chicago Opera, had his pleasant shock one day this week when he met, unexpectedly, Olga Carrara at Aeolian Hall. The meeting would be of no significance if the Italian soprano did not happen to be Montemezzi's heroine in his opera, "L'Amore dei Tre Re." The young soprano was singing "Fiora" (leading part) at the Verdi Theater of Padua, and her interpretation so elated the composer that he rushed behind the stage to express his delight. Six years have elapsed, and the composer and singer have not since met. New York being the city of destiny and today the mecca of artists and musicians, it happened that they are both here.

He recognized her with an expression of delight and repeated to the soprano that her former interpretation was still fresh in his memory. Mr. Montemezzi promised to attend Olga Carrara's recital, which is to be given on the 10th of February at Aeolian Hall, and from Chicago news has reached Astolfo Pescia, the singer's teacher, that his colleague, Maestro Gino Marinuzzi, the new conductor of the Chicago Opera Association, will honor the recital with his presence. It happened that Mr. Marinuzzi conducted the particular performance, given at the Verdi Theatre, when Olga Carrara was singing the leading role in the presence of the composer, whose opera, "La Nave," will open the New York season of the Chicago Opera at the Lexington Theater.

PRESS COMMENTS ON CHICAGO RECITAL

Kinsey Artist Course :: October 29th, 1919

"The recitalist proved himself a pianist of substantial qualities. He has gained a technical mastery which enables him to win brilliancy, good dynamic variety, and no inconsiderable beauty from his instrument, and he employs these essentials with a taste and skill that tell of intelligent musicianship. He succeeds in holding the interest of his hearers and in making the piano an agreeable and appealing instrument. And to do this is to do much. He read the MacDowell Sonata with enjoyable breadth and with good appreciation of its virile, healthy, outdoorsy sentiment and lent much of tonal charm to many of its more lyrical moments. The Pugno Serenade proved attractive and the transcription of "The Lark" disclosed the facility, clarity and cleanness of the player's technic in admirable light." —W. L. Hubbard, Chicago Tribune.

"A piano recital, which brought forth both older classics and new American compositions, was that which Raymond Wilson presented at the Ziegfeld Theater yesterday morning. It was Mr. Wilson's first Chicago appearance and he accomplished his premiere with evident success. Mr. Wilson has plenty of strength and a technical endowment which is sure and fleet, and he also has a taste for the more sustained and musical passages of the pieces which he performs. In the Mozart Fantasie he showed a taste for tone shading, for good phrasing and for lucidity of style. The Chopin Scherzo was dashed off with considerable brilliance and the middle section was given a warm singing tone."— Maurice Rosenfeld, Chicago Daily News.

"Beginning on a low emotional level (Fantasie in C Minor, Mozart) it was some little time before the fact that Wilson really functions in a highly efficient manner, both digitally and cerebrally, became apparent. This was accomplished with a Nocturne and Scherzo by Chopin and with the MacDowell "Sonata Eroica."— Edward C. Moore, Chicago Daily Journal.

"Everything he plays is nice, neatly executed and well-bred. In passages asking for a subdued tone his touch is very pleasing and the sentiment is gentle and refined."—Herman Devries, Chicago American.

Editorial

PASSING COMMENT

The growth of Americanization in music progresses all the time—some months slowly, and again by leaps and bounds.

A half-dozen recent appearances and programs in Chicago have been thoroughly encouraging.

Cecil Fanning, Ethel Jones, Ethel Benedict, Eugene Stinson, Carolyn Willard, Frederick Gunster, Mae Doelling and other young American artists have appeared with distinguished success in Chicago.

Arthur Hackett scored a big success at the Auditorium; Anna Case and Maud Powell drew an enormous audience to Medinah Temple.

Albert Spalding, American violinist and patriot, drew sold-out houses on his appearance with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

These are only a few out of many, as reference to Music News' columns will indicate.

And, just as indicative, is the fact of the use of so much American material in the programs.

Ethel Jones sang a preponderantly American program, including arias from the successful American opera "Shanewis" (Cadman). Hackett, Gunster and Fanning made their biggest successes in English text songs.

. . . . . .

On last Friday evening at Orchestra Hall the Men's Fall Festival Chorus (direction of Edward Clissold, a Service man) devoted its entire output to Chicago composers, honoring in this way J. S. Fearis, H. W. Fairband, Alfred Hiles Bergen, D. A. Clippinger, Daniel Protheroe, Palmer Clark, Laura Rexford, Rossetter G. Cole, Carrie Jacobs Bond and James G. MacDermid.

Even the solo numbers were almost wholly American, including Mrs. Beach, Cole, Fisher, Spross, Penn, and Jean Boyd.

This might be multiplied many times, and the encouraging thing about it is that all these artists and most of these compositions met with unbounded success.

. . . . . .

And—as a contrast to this—consider the bad judgment which presents to us "The Love of Three Oranges" in French!

This opera was written by Prokofieff (a Russian) on commission from Mr. Campanini, our General Director of Opera. It is paid for with Chicago money.

It was written, naturally, in Russian; and, also quite naturally, the singers did not wish to produce it in that language. And so, instead of doing the logical and patriotic thing, i. e., translating it into English, it has been carefully and at great expense translated into French and will have its premiere performance at the Auditorium in Chicago in that language.

. . . . . .

But there is no use to inveigh against opera in foreign languages unless we show that we really want it in our own.

Operas in English at the Auditorium or elsewhere in the best opera houses of America have not been uproariously received by professional musicians, and the public—as always taking its lead from the profession—has stayed away from these performances religiously.

. . . . . .

Mr. Campanini this year is trying us out once more and is announcing the typically American story "Rip Van Winkle" made into an opera by the American Reginald De Koven and sung to us IN ENGLISH.

What shall we do to prove that we earnestly want opera in English? Will we—as teachers—advise our pupils to buy tickets for "Lucia" or "Rigoletto" or some other opera that we "know" to be good, or will we prove by our own presence, enthusiasm and advice to our pupils and friends that we are 100 per cent loyal Americans even when it comes to Grand Opera?

An innovation of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra which is notably fine and will, unquestionably, be exceedingly successful, is the giving of Children's Concerts by the orchestra.

The first program, heard yesterday, had the following fine program:

Tambourin ..... Gretry (1741-1813)
Air } ..... Bach (1685-1750)
Gavotte }
Nocturne from music to A Midsummer Night's Dream ..... Mendelssohn (1809-1847)
Danse Macabre ..... Saint-Saens (1835-)
Pizzicati ..... Delibes (1836-1891)
Waltz—On the Beautiful Blue Danube ..... Strauss (1825-1899)

We quote the program explanation of the venture: "The concerts will be given by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra (ninety men), with Frederick Stock conducting. The programs will be of about an hour's duration, and, as the name given the concerts implies, especially constructed for the instruction and enjoyment of children. That the children may listen with better understanding and keener enjoyment, Mr. Stock will give short explanatory remarks. These concerts will be given at intervals during the season on Thursday afternoons at 4 o'clock. It is sincerely hoped the new effort will meet with popular response sufficient to warrant a series of these programs at regular intervals during this and succeeding seasons.

"In Chicago a man must have one hundred thousand dollars to be a millionaire; in Pittsburgh he can be a millionaire on fifty thousand. But in New York a man with brains and the right backing can be a millionaire on ten thousand."

—From a story in Hearst's Magazine.

DOES NOT LIKE OUR STAND

GRACE CHURCH, OAK PARK

Arthur Randolph Fraser announces that his choir of 50 men and boys will sing John E. West's "Seed Time and Harvest" (Harvest Cantata) next Sunday afternoon, November 23, at 5 o'clock vespers. The choir will be assisted by Arthur Kraft, tenor, and Gladys Knight Thomas, soprano.

The opera "Iolanthe" (Gilbert and Sullivan) will be given by Grace Church Choirs (Arthur R. Fraser, organist and choirmaster) Wednesday evening, December 3, in Warrington Theater, Oak Park, as a benefit for the New Parish House Fund. Special soloist, Rollin Pease as Strephon. Full details will be given later.

Urbana, Ill.—At the University School of Music the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra appeared on October 29, the program being purely orchestral.

STUDENTS' RECITAL

Very enjoyable music was heard at Lyon & Healy Hall on Friday evening—a good program and good executants. If one stops to think at such times, it is to wonder if he is listening to future great artists, and whether the ones to rise to eminence will be those of the marked present efficiency, or the ones who are not quite so glib and sure of themselves.

Kathryn Greene, a promising pupil of Monica Graham Stults, gave two groups of songs, revealing a good natural mezzo-soprano in process of growth and ineradicable evidences of Mrs. Stults' taste, discretion, love for a beautiful line, elegant diction, and always musical thought in the manner of delivery. The French songs, in particular, had the elaboration of finesse in their projection. Schindler's rhapsodic "Eili" was also well done. Paul Snyder, who is fostered by Rossetter Cole in the study of harmony and composition, has also fleet fingers, admirable poise and the makings of a big player inherent. He sensed the opulence of the excerpt from the Tschaikowsky Concerto admirably. Emma Ford was a bit literal for the Debussy mysteries. Tillie Tateel used Liszt, Chopin and Moszkowski, and Elizabeth Anderson the Grieg Sonata (Opus 7).

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

OTTO G. HIRSCHLER IN LOS ANGELES

Otto G. Hirschler, who made so conspicuous a success at the head of the organ department at Coe College last year, is now located in Los Angeles, where he is head of the piano and organ department of the Los Angeles Bible Institute.

He is also organist at the Church of the Open Door—and, in the church, is now giving a series of Thursday recitals on the splendid new organ lately installed.

CHRISTINE LANGENHAN APPEARS IN CHICAGO

Very delightful was Woods Theater on last Sunday afternoon, for—in addition to its permanent attractions, such as the most comfortable seats in any Chicago theater, fine ventilation and a general beauty of coloring which is exceedingly pleasant to the eye, it had also, at this time, a bevy of fine young Chicago musicians who were acting as flower sellers, program girls and ushers—the occasion being the first Artists' Recital for the benefit of the Scholarship Fund of the Chicago Woman's Musical Club.

The artists chosen were Christine Langenhan, soprano; Richard Czerwonky, violinist, and Ruth Bradley, accompanist, the latter proving herself a thoroughly fine technician and an artist of the most distinct and sympathetic nature throughout the program.

Mme. Langenhan made her first Chicago appearance at this time and at once proved her worth and her attractiveness.

Her stage presence is exceptionally fine, and her skill in holding attention and in charming her audience has rarely been equaled.

She is a linguist of the most profound attainment and sang at this time not only the unusual languages, Russian and Bohemian—but also a very definite and beautiful French and an English which was understandable to far greater degree than is the case with the vast majority of recital givers.

This clarity of enunciation was especially exemplified in a little speech she made, in which explanation was presented of one of the Russian songs, and which, in this way, she made so clear as to give the hint that all singers might increase the interest in their programs many per cent if only they would tell something about their unusual songs and tell it in such a convincingly clear way as did Mme. Langenhan at this time.

This singer is herself of Bohemian extraction, and she was therefore very much at home in two songs by Dvorak (in Bohemian), and gave them an exceptionally fine interpretation.

In two songs of Tschaikowsky (in Russian) she was equally authoritative, and, as they were songs of big interest, she presented them with powerful dramatic impulse.

This group contained also the "Suicidio" aria from "La Gioconda" (in Italian), which was presented in good operatic style.

The second group was entirely French and included fine examples of the work of Debussy, Saint-Saens, Fourdrain and Gounod, including the powerful aria from "L'Enfant Prodigue" of the first named, the cunning "Guitars and Mandolins" of the second, the brilliant "Carnival" of the third, and the dainty "Spring" of the last named in the group.

A multiplicity of engagements, added to the fact that the recital at the Woods did not begin at the advertised time, robbed me of the pleasure of hearing the last group, but as it was all in English and I know the excellence of Mme. Langenhan's enunciation of that text, it is easy to vouch for her high value in the numbers, which included "The Bird With a Broken Wing" (Colson), "The Faltering Dusk" (Kramer), "Awake, It Is the Day" (Barbour), "Retreat" (La Forge), "Trees" (Phyllis Fergus), and "Birds of Flame" (Charles Wakefield Cadman).

AT THE MacBURNEY STUDIOS

A voice of exceptional charm is that of Alice Bolton Fertig, contralto, and on Monday evening, at the MacBurney Recital Series, she showed that her use of it is most intelligent and that her general musicianship has advanced to the status where she may safely be designated a young artist.

She had the splendid assistance of Harold B. Simonds at the piano, and the program chosen for her by her teacher, Mr. MacBurney, was unusually good—even for him.

The cool, suave classics (Handel and Bach) were presented with definite charm, and the turgid, almost sullen, poems of Russia in their settings to music by Rachmaninoff and Moussorgsky, gave ample proof of the wide intelligence of the young singer.

Then followed songs of Irish, Swedish, Scotch and Seventeenth Century make, as well as a strictly modern group (American) devoted to Forsyth, Dichmont, Rogers, La Forge and Cadman, the whole being presented with skill and goodly effect.

Lenox—Miss Frances Coates, costume song interpreter, is to be the special artist for the program of the River Forest Men's Neighborhood Club at the Presbyterian Church in that suburb next Tuesday evening. Miss Coates, who is an artist pupil of Lucie Lenox, will give two full groups, old English and Scotch.

HAYDN CHORAL SOCIETY

The Haydn Choral Society, Haydn Owens conductor, is planning a busy season. The first concert will be given Saturday evening at the Y. M. C. A. Hotel. Two concerts for downtown are under way. Dates will be announced later. A trip to the coast is under consideration, and opportunity for trained voices in the chorus is one of the best.

MEN'S FALL FESTIVAL CONCERT

The annual concert of the Men's Fall Festival Chorus at Orchestra Hall under the direction of Edward Clissold was, as usual, a fine musical success. It was attended by a large audience and, quite as usual also, the enthusiasm of this audience was not nearly so great as it should have been.

As told in our editorial columns, the chorus numbers were entirely by Chicago composers, and it proved interesting indeed to hear and compare them.

The best liked were "Flag of the Stars" (J. S. Fearis) and "Loyal and True" (H. W. Fairbank), two patriotic numbers, which made a splendidly virile and wholly musical group; "The Tack," a comic little piece by D. A. Clippinger, a very nice arrangement of Carrie Jacobs Bond's "Perfect Day," and the perennially beautiful and popular "Land of Mine," by James MacDermid.

The chorus was in remarkably fine form—far in advance of last year, for instance, both in personnel and finish, and Mr. Clissold, always authoritative and equally artistic, proved himself, again—to be the exactly right man for the position he holds.

Edgar Nelson was the instrumental soloist of the evening and gave a splendid exposition of the possibilities of the Orchestra Hall organ in his intelligent and colorful playing of "Finlandia" (Sibelius), while in the excellent piece of writing, Symphonic Fantasie, by Rossetter G. Cole he was at once resourceful, polished and full of interest.

The Geranlen Trio appeared twice, and scored heavily both times, being obliged, of course, to add several encores.

This artistic ensemble is made up of artist pupils of Lucille Stevenson, and certainly reflects credit on her intuition and her instruction.

Dressed most becomingly and with a splendid accompaniment from Katharine Stevenson-Carter, their beautiful voices and perfect ensemble completed the conquest of the audience.

Of the numbers heard by this writer "In Italy," of Jean Boyd (in a wonderfully effective ensemble harmonization), was the gem, and it was, truly, sung with a spirit and style which were so unusual as to mark the number a perfect delight.

The other numbers—all given beautifully and each in turn charming the audience—were "June" (Beach), "Deep River" (Fisher), "Will o' the Wisp" (Spross), "The Year's at the Spring" (Beach), "Smilin' Through" (the cunning new song by Arthur Penn), and "When Twilight Weaves" (Beethoven).

OLIVE JUNE LACEY

Olive June Lacey, soprano, was engaged by the Wilmette Woman's Club to sing the part of the Juggler in "The Feast of the Little Lanterns," an operetta given by the club last Friday night, November 14, and was quite a success, artistically and vocally.

Her voice, which is of beautiful quality and unlimited range, was heard in several solos and a duet, and won the large audience with her portrayal of the juggler.

Miss Lacey's singing is at all times musicianly, and with her unusual interpretative ability she gives with ease the varied moods in whatever she choses to present.

ETHEL JONES IN SONG RECITAL

Partly because last Tuesday was Armistice Day, and more because she is American to the full in thought, feeling and training, Ethel Jones chose to make the program of her Blackstone debut in song recital preponderatingly American, and in so doing she showed her acumen, for the works chosen were vitally American as well as fully artistic and, if further proof be needed, a fine illustration of the fact that American singers can nowadays make their program largely (or wholly if they like) atune to their own nationality and best medium of illustration—the English language.

Chief in value of these numbers were the two major arias from "Shanewis" (Cadman), which were given a wonderfully fine reading by Miss Jones.

Cadman, you remember, did the very unusual in assigning the chief role of his opera to a mezzo-soprano voice, and, incidentally, in so doing he provided Miss Jones with numbers absolutely in her best metier—so much so indeed that they might have been written for her.

One of the daily papers, in speaking of Miss Jones, said that her voice was "like warm velvet," and this unusual expression certainly will convey to those who did not hear her recital the effect of her singing in "Shanewis."

Miss Jones, though still a growing singer and modest to the full in attempt and demeanor, has still reached so fine a point of vocal control and of artistic interpretation that her recital was one of constant and profound delight, and this was accented continually by her deft and clear use of the vernacular in her two closing groups.

The whole program was printed in Music News of last week, and its recapitulation here is unnecessary, but, to specify some of the best points, the "Japanese Death Song" (Sharp) was impressive, though terribly gruesome; "My Garden," by the Chicago composer, Eleanor Everest Freer, proved to be a positive charm, a song, in fact, which should be on the program of every serious singer; "Women of Inver" (Loughborough) gave opportunity for dramatic expression, Carpenter's "Cradle Song" was proven to be thoroughly artistic, and H. T. Burleigh's "Didn't It Rain?" gave opportunity for the display of that charming vein of humor which Miss Jones undoubtedly possesses, but of which she decided to make slight use in this recital.

Excellent accompaniments were played by Olive Kriebs.

COSMOPOLITAN SCHOOL

The Cosmopolitan School of Music and Dramatic Art announces a piano recital to be given on Friday evening, November 21, at 8:15, by Mrs. Edith Shaw Brown, pupil of Henry Purmort Eames. Mrs. Brown will play numbers of MacDowell, Ireland, Bax, Griffes and others.

Miss Mary Hansen, violinist of the Cosmopolitan School, will present some of her students at a musical Saturday morning, November 22, at 11 o'clock.

ARTHUR B. ENGLISH VOCAL STUDIO NOTES

The following activities are reported among the professional singers studying with Mr. English:

Miss Bertha Farner left last Saturday for a long tour with her organization, the Berthe Farner Concert Company.

Mme. Guilderoy Scott, contralto, will sing Elgar's "Sea Pictures" with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra on December 16.

Mme. Scott will be heard in joint recital in Kimball Hall December 4.

Miss Ethel Tamminga, lyric soprano, is singing the role of Robin Hood in the opera of that name under the Dunbar management.

Miss Mary Baker, coloratura soprano, has been engaged for the soubrette part in the same company.

Miss Lennie Hannan, soprano, has been engaged for a leading part in a musical revue touring Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Jane English, coloratura soprano, is to give a recital in Wayne, Mich., November 28. She is booked for several joint recitals with Mr. Charles Lagourgue, clarinettist, this coming season and will give her program, "Songs of Yesterday," for the Arche Club.

MORGAN EXTENSION SERIES AT ENGLEWOOD CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The second number of the Musical Extension Series given at the Englewood Christian Church Thursday evening brought a much larger attendance. The program was furnished by Margery Maxwell, soprano, and Vera Poppe, cellist, with Lyell Barber as accompanist. Miss Maxwell was in especially good form. Her voice, despite a slight indisposition, was under perfect control, enabling her to give her usual fine interpretations of the songs rendered. Miss Poppe is a new addition to Chicago's list of cellists, but is rapidly claiming the attention of lovers of that instrument. Her own compositions were of merit, and were well received. Mr. Barber added a long list of new friends by the splendid support he gave the soloists.

NORA LORAINE OLIN

Monday evening of last week Miss Nora Loraine Olin presented Dr. Merry C. Lincoln in a fine program of songs at her studio in Kimball Hall. Miss Olin is one of the best of local musicians, and her selection of songs for recitals are always worth hearing. The numbers as given were:

Were My Songs with Wings Provided ..... Hahn
Midsummer Lullaby ..... MacDowell
On Autumn ..... Mendelssohn
Autumn Song ..... Grieg
Autumnal Gale ..... Grieg
A Beggar at Love's Gate ..... Strickland

Dr. Merry is making music a part of her broad education, and she disclosed some good traits in the presentation of her songs. She has interpretative intelligence and used a musicianly style that counts for much. Miss Olin played excellent accompaniments for Dr. Merry.

FREDERICK GUNSTER AND MAE DOELLING APPEAR BEFORE THE LAKE VIEW MUSICAL SOCIETY

Frederick Gunster, tenor, appeared before the Lake View Musical Society last year, and so immediate and emphatic was his success that he was chosen again this year for the first artist program of the season, and on last Monday afternoon delighted a large audience of members and friends at the Parkway Hotel.

And—not alone did the society know just where to find a popular singer for the event, but they knew also that in the person of Mae Doelling, pianist, one of their own members, they had a most worthy and effective co-attraction and, going a step further, they remembered, too, that the importation of an accompanist for Mr. Gunster was an absolutely unnecessary proceeding, when right at home there was so efficient and artistic a one as Miss Alma Birmingham.

Throughout the concert Miss Birmingham showed her pianistic skill to be great and her ability as an accompanist to be of the finest description. The unity of thought and musical impulse between her and Mr. Gunster was perfect throughout.

Miss Doelling, sincere in bearing, profound in musicianship and absolutely brilliant in technical detail, played a group in which some Debussy showed her introspective facility, some Chopin again proved her to be poetic, and some Liszt, in which—quite as usual, she was a glittering success.

Mr. Gunster, who has a personality which puts him en rapport immediately with any audience before which he appears and a voice of unusually delightful qualities, is—further, a fine musician and a master program maker.

His first group, made up of some of the finest examples of French miniature art form in music, featured Franck, Rabey, Duparc and Fourdrain, the "Madrigal" of the last named (an exquisite song) receiving at this time its second reading in America, the first having been by Mr. Gunster in his recent Aeolian Hall recital in New York.

The second group was devoted to Grieg, a composer and a class of song wholly in keeping with the purity and the fine musical feeling in the Gunster voice.

The last group—a generously long one, was American, and it introduced several genre songs as well as two of the Spirituals (Reddick), which Mr. Gunster sang so wonderfully well at Lockport last fall as to constitute himself one of the extraordinary factors of that unusual event.

Kramer and Speaks were featured in this group, the remarkable charm of Fay Foster was again proven in "The Red Heart," and "Little Wheel a-Turnin' in My Heart" (Arms Fisher) again showed its delightful possibilities.

Mr. Gunster—naturally, sang a number of encores, and chief among them were two songs which, much used at present, are still growing in popularity.

These were "Smilin' Through" (Penn) and "Values" (Vanderpool), melodious songs both and equally fine and effective when sung so beautifully as was done by Mr. Gunster at this time. C. E. W.

ANNA TOMLINSON

The Beginners' and Intermediate Departments of the Anna Tomlinson School of Music are closing their first term of this season by dividing into classes of fourteen each and giving an entertaining demonstration of their class work for the term and a program, followed by refreshments, to their mothers and one guest each. As the school has made a record enrollment of 144 pupils for this term, this will make a good many afternoons for the Berwyn people to see what the pupils are doing.

Miss Anne Ludemann, an assistant teacher and pupil of Miss Tomlinson, and Mrs. A. J. Hessler, artist pupil, played for the Berwyn Woman's Club last week with great success. The day was devoted to France, and the music used was in duet form by Chaminade.

Mrs. Jennie F. Bentley of Minneapolis, a former pupil of Miss Tomlinson, has moved to Chicago to become an assistant teacher under Miss Tomlinson. This is the fourth new assistant Miss Tomlinson has been obliged to take this year, as her work is constantly increasing.

Miss Florence Wiersema, a former pupil and for five years assistant teacher for Miss Tomlinson, has accepted a position as supervisor of public school music for both high school and grades at Gooding, Idaho.

CAROLYN WILLARD

Carolyn Willard's annual recital, which took place at Kimball Hall on November 9, was one of the most successful affairs given by local artists in many a month. Miss Willard was in the best possible trim, and the house was full and immensely enthusiastic. Not only was Miss Willard at an advantage by reason of her admirable preparation, but she was peculiarly fortunate in the choice and arrangement of her numbers, which were not at all of the hackneyed variety. She opened the program with two old classic favorites, the Scarlatti "Pastorale and Capriccio" and the Bach "Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, D Minor." These were followed by the Liszt Eclogue and the Brahms Rhapsody, Op. 119, played by request. The Chopin group, which constituted the central kernel of the program, was done with delicacy and romantic color as well as technical charm. For the rest the numbers were less well known and exceedingly interesting. A burlesque march, "Trabel On," from an American Negro Suite (Otterstroem), offered a weird and almost comic contrast to the Chopin group, and the Debussy and MacDowell numbers were presented with great discrimination and artistry. The Rubinstein numbers in closing were rich in color and technical display, and in them, as in the foregoing groups, Miss Willard proved herself an artist of the first rank and of distinct and unique personality.

Stout—Alice Brown Stout, vocalist and accompanist, has filled the following engagements: October 26, vocal soloist at Elgin, Ill., on vesper program, sponsored by the King's Daughters; October 22, accompanist for Ethel Benedict and Frederica Downing on Mu Phi Epsilon program; October 29, accompanist for Mrs. Benedict at Chicago Beach Hotel; November 7, accompanist for Ethel Benedict in recital at Kimball Hall; November 17, vocal soloist at Illinois Federation of Woman's Clubs at Auditorium.

RADANOVITS ARTIST PUPILS IN RECITAL

There were five fine young artists to be heard at Lyon & Healy Hall on last Monday evening—yes, six—for, to insure perfect accompaniment and the best possible artistic piano musicianship for the event, William Lester, the brilliant Chicago pianist and composer, was added to the other five.

And not alone in his accompaniments did he shine, but also in two of his songs—the brilliant "Apple Blossoms" and the folk-like "Out Among the Heather," both of which scored on their own account fully as much as because of the fact that they were beautifully presented at this time.

Sandor Radanovits, the teacher of the young singers under consideration, is surely gifted with unusual perspicuity in the analysis of a voice and giving it proper classification and development, for these five (as well as many others who have been heard) sing with perfect ease, excellent musicianship and interpretation and a general fearlessness which betokens entire security.

Luella M. Feiertag, a coloratura with petite manners and style and with a most beautifully light and graceful voice, was heard to good advantage in works of Bishop, Leoni, Wilson, Lehman and Spross, excelling especially in "Will o' the Wisp" of the latter.

Lester Castle, whose bass voice has developed remarkably during the past year and who has added considerable dramatic ability to his vocalism, sang good pieces of Handel, Pierce and Hildach in a way to evoke much enthusiasm, and in Fay Foster's "Nipponese Sword Song" he was powerful and effective.

Borghild Braastad, who is, perhaps, classified as a lyric soprano, showed also that the dramatic is thoroughly within her metier.

She was entirely unique in her ability to present a group of songs in Norwegian (Grieg and Soderman), and in "Apple Blossoms" (Lester) she created a sensation.

Helen Haworth, a young artist from the West, who is taking Chicago by storm, was heard in four pieces, her best interpretations being those of "Invocation to Eros" (Kurstener) and an aria from "Samson and Delilah."

Her voice is beautiful, while at the same time it is rich and full, and her musicianship is notably good.

The audience—like all audiences that hear her, was exceedingly enthusiastic in approval.

Elsa Holinger, a dramatic soprano whose voice is of very great power and whose scale is, nevertheless, even, and whose tone is sweet withal, sang a splendidly chosen group of songs and sent the audience away thoroughly happy. Her rendition of "Il est doux" (Massenet) was masterly, and the De Nogero favorite, "My Love Is a Muleteer," very dramatic.

W. HAROLD SIMONS

The return of Mr. Simons from military service was celebrated last Saturday at the Mendelssohn Conservatory by his first recital, which was very welcome. Mr. Simons has been absent about a year in service in an orchestra on the U. S. S. Dauphin, flagship for the American patrol fleet, which was stationed a large part of the time at Key West.

Mr. Simons was formerly on the faculty of the Chicago Musical College, where he taught very successfully, and he is now teaching a large class at the Mendelssohn Conservatory, where he heads the violin department. He opened his program with the Dvorak Sonata, Op. 100, and brought out in full relief all its fantastic and imaginative content. He was accompanied with exquisite taste and artistry by Mrs. Simons. The second group was made up of three lighter numbers, the Beethoven Minuet, "Gavotte" (Gossec), and "Tempo di Menuetto" (Pugnani). They were done with grace and musicianly feeling, and were followed by the Finale from the Fourth Concerto of Vieuxtemps, masterful in interpretation and execution.

AMY WOLFLE

On Wednesday, November 12, at the Baron Hirsch Woman's Club, Mrs. Amy Wolfle read the closing portions of the play, "In Lilac Time," a drama of romantic title and the most intense dramatic purport. Mrs. Wolfle is an artist who possesses that rare gift of self-obliteration in the rendition of her work. This is a quality very essential to the success of a dramatic reader even more than to an ordinary actor, because of the difference and variation in characterization which is so necessary. Mrs. Wolfle is supremely convincing as an actress and interpreter by reason of this ability to forget herself completely in her part. She also has a voice which adapts itself well to the illusion of the masculine and feminine.

Although Mrs. Wolfle is perhaps best known as a dramatic reader, she is also a professional accompanist of no mean talent and a singer of ability. It is to be hoped that she will have much opportunity in the future to combine these talents in her service to the community, which will undoubtedly be great.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS

William Phillips, baritone, is to be the feature of the music for the First Congregational Church, Oak Park, on next Sunday. He will sing a solo at both the morning and the evening service.

Mr. Phillips has also been engaged to sing at the meeting of the Chicago Literary Club on next Monday. He sang at the meeting of the New England Women in the Crystal Ballroom of the Blackstone on Thursday, November 13. His glorious voice, interesting repertoire and engaging manner make his every appearance an added success.

A SUCCESSFUL PUPIL OF MRS. CHARLES KRUM

Three important and very successful recent appearances of Miss Eva Gordon, an artist pupil of Mrs. Charles Krum of Chicago, have proven the excellence both of the voice and of its preparation for public use, these being before the Musicians' Club of Chicago, at the Orpheum Theater in Green Bay, Wis., and in recital before the Woman's Club of Peoria, Ill.

At the Musicians' Club of Women (Chicago), Miss Gordon was heard with much appreciation in "Eili, Eili" (Schindler), two Russian folksongs, "In the Steppes" (Gretchaninow), and "To Columbine" (Crisp). Accompanist, Alma Birmingham.

In comment on her Green Bay appearance the press of that city said: "Miss Gordon is an artist of exceptional capabilities. She is possessed of a good contralto, ample in power and compass, has been carefully schooled and should go far in her chosen profession of singer."

The Peoria Star devotes much space to the young singer and says, among other complimentary things: "In the Russian songs Miss Gordon was supreme. Each variation of sentiment was portrayed in exquisite shades of tone blending."

Knowlton—Jean Knowlton appeared in costume recitals during October before the Woman's Club of Rockford, Ill., the Woman's Club of Davenport, Ia., and the Ossali Club of Highland Park. On Sunday evening, November 16, she sang in Maunder's "Song of Thanksgiving," at St. Peter's Church, and this is scheduled for an early repetition under the Civic Association. On Wednesday, November 19, Miss Knowlton sang a group of French songs before the Matinee Francaise.

MISCHA LEVITZKI AGAIN PLAYS AT ORCHESTRA HALL

One of the finest musical events—not alone of busy Armistice Day, but of this entire season, was that on Tuesday night given by Mischa Levitzki at Orchestra Hall, when his piano recital was heard by an almost full house and his fine art was appreciated in no uncertain way.

Unfortunately all critics had to leave early because of a press of other concerts, and so his delightful Chopin group, as well as the deftly chosen Rachmaninoff and Moszkowsky, to say nothing of the glittering "Blue Danube" (Strauss-Schultz-Evler), were not heard by any of the writers.

But—his first group constituted not alone wonderful piano playing, but was also delightful to the last degree.

Levitzki is serious, sedate, unsmiling, and, to a degree, unemotional.

But, he has the most remarkable technic one could ask for—his knowledge of dynamics is perfect, his repertoire is amazingly big and fine, and his readings are intellectual and artistically polished to the final degree.

Such playing of the Bach-Tausig Organ Toccata and Fugue in D Minor as he gave us is epochal in strength, purity and general grasp of the big subject.

The Melody in D Minor (Gluck-Sgambati), coming next, formed a fine contrast and buffer between this gigantic work and the equally monumental "Etudes Symphoniques" (Schumann), with which the group closed.

The Schumann was, like the Bach, played at a point of utter perfection in so far as its purity, power and style were concerned, and in it also Mr. Levitzki showed splendid tonal qualities, the most exquisite of shading and general interpretative excellence.

A JOINT RECITAL BY MAY MUKLE AND GILDEROY SCOTT

One of the most interesting announcements of the season is that May Mukle, violoncellist, and Gilderoy Scott, contralto, will give a joint recital at Kimball Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 14.

May Mukle, an Englishwoman, whose fame as a cellist has gone all over the earth, will make her first Chicago recital appearance at this time.

Gilderoy Scott, a real contralto with fine style and musicianship, will also appear for the first time in this city in recital, and to the unbounded regret of the many who have heard her in various other environments this will be a sort of farewell, also, for it is announced that she will change her residence to Lincoln, Neb., at the first of the year.

She expects, however, to make frequent trips to Chicago for the purpose of fulfilling professional engagements.

NINA TARASOVA FILLS FIRST CONCERT DATES OUTSIDE OF NEW YORK

Though Nina Tarasova, the sensational little singer of Russian folk songs and ballads, has already given three recitals in New York City, and will shortly be heard in a fourth—she has never sung in any other American city. St. Louis, therefore, will be the first to hear the "Russian Yvette Guilbert," as she has so often been called, and then comes a recital in Philadelphia before her second Carnegie Hall recital on Saturday evening, November 22. Boston, Washington and Chicago are other important cities where Tarasova has been booked for this season.

BRUNETTE WALTER

Pupils of Brunette Walter will give a song recital in the Kimball Hall Studios of Bissing Master School of Music Friday evening, November 21, at 8:30.

The occasion is in honor of Goldie Rovetz-Sauter of Detroit, Mich., former pupil of this school. Mrs. Sauter is a dramatic-mezzo soprano and will contribute two numbers to the program.

———♯♯♯———

Nichols—A special musical service was given in the First Reformed Episcopal Church, on Fifty-fifth street and Madison avenue, New York, last Sunday afternoon, at which John H. Tracey, a promising pupil of John W. Nichols, was tenor soloist. The program was arranged by Mrs. Carrie V. Hurley, organist and choir director, and the other soloists were Miss Dyke, soprano; Miss McClurg, contralto, and Leonard Tracey, baritone.

———♯♯♯———

Christmas Music—The Boston Music Company has prepared an exceptional list of choral music for Christmastide, including a great many carols, a long list of anthems and the following cantatas: "The Christ Child" (Knight), "Christmas" (A b t), "Christmas" (Stewart), "Christmas" (Wolf) and "The Nativity According to St. Luke" (Bullard).

———♯♯♯———

Frederiksen-Campbell — Frederik Frederiksen and Gordon Campbell gave an Ensemble Recital before the Kalamazoo, Mich., Musical Society on November 3, scoring great success before a capacity audience.

ANNA CASE AND MAUD POWELL IN MEDINAH TEMPLE CONCERT

The second of the Central Concert Company's Medinah Temple events drew a much larger audience than was present at the first, and both the artists of the program, Miss Anna Case, soprano, and Mme. Maud Powell, violinist, were applauded to the echo.

Mme. Powell, long a Chicago favorite, was heard to much advantage in a part of the A Major Concerto (Mozart), part of the Sonata for Piano and Violin by Lekeu, the Lipinski "Allegro Militaire," and some extremely pleasing, if homely, folk pieces, chiefly those of the southern Negro.

Miss Case, radiant as always—came to Chicago in exceptional voice and spirits and easily proved herself one of the most convincing of artists as well as a woman of infinite intelligence and charm.

She is a musician of fine ability and a program builder of unique perspicuity.

Her voice displayed again that exceeding purity and sweetness of quality which has always distinguished her, and her manipulation of it was at a point of super-artistry.

Not the least of the items which give her ability to please lies in the fact of extraordinarily fine enunciatory powers, and it is a fact that the English text songs were presented with such clarity and purity from this standpoint as to prove Miss Case one of the finest of American singers—one indeed who makes immediate and irresistible appeal.

The classics at the beginning (see program in Music News of last week) were sung with skill and purity, as was likewise the case with the unusual French songs of the second group.

"Princess" (Soderman), unusual as it was, yet proved to be a remarkably effective vehicle for the singer, and in it she charmed the audience greatly, fully completing the conquest in an Old Swedish folk dance which was sung with such authority as few could contribute to its presentation.

The last group—all American, was ideally chosen and exquisitely presented.

MacDowell has left us no more beautiful short piece than his "Slumber Song," which seems to have been actually written for Miss Case, so splendidly does it fit her powers, and Rodenbeck's "To You" was scarcely less attractive.

"Oh Mother, My Love" (Farley) proved to be a song of infinite tenderness and appeal, and Curran's "Rain" formed a good contrast.

Miss Case herself, as she told me during the intermission, was imbued with the desire to write a song early last summer while on her vacation, and in this song she was impelled to introduce the call of the bird she loves and to surround this with an "atmosphere" at once bucolic and beautiful.

So successful has she been in this work that the song (called "Song of the Robin") fell on delighted ears last Tuesday evening, and it is safe to say that were it placed on the market all lyric sopranos would be, at once—using it.

A cunning encore was that (author unknown to me) in which the efforts of an Englishman to make love to a French girl were finally rewarded by his finding out that she was already married, and the whole story was told most piquantly by Miss Case.

At the close this fine American singer introduced "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and gave the glorious number a spirited and spiritual reading which filled the collective mind and heart of the audience with delight.

A PROMISING CLARK PUPIL

At a recent Charles W. Clark interpretation class a tenor, Glenn Drake, was heard. Because of the unusual worth of this singer he should be given recognition. He is the possessor of a clear, clean tone. Particularly noticeable are his splendid insight into interpretation, refined phrasing and seriousness. We shall hear from Mr. Drake in the music world.

Chicago Musical College—An important addition to the faculty of the Chicago Musical College is announced in the engagement for that institution of Max Kramm. Mr. Kramm, who has taught for many years in Chicago, long has been recognized as one of the most efficient and successful of the piano instructors of the city. Lois Dyson has also been engaged for the violin department.

OPENING OF THE OPERA SEASON

By CHARLES E. WATT

The opening performance of the Chicago Opera season, "La Nave" (Montemezzi), on Tuesday evening, was a gorgeous pictorial, musical and society success.

The stage pictures are to be credited to the new director of this department, and are here given first place because they mark the most important advance ever made by the Chicago Company.

Comparisons as between New York and Chicago grand opera have invariably been in favor of the former, and only in a few such performances as "Francesca da Rimini," "Cleopatra" and "The Love of Three Kings" has the Auditorium approached the habitual gorgeousness (and good taste) of the Metropolitan productions.

We have a stronger repertoire than has New York and a vastly more capable list of great singers, but it has remained for Bel Geddes to give us correct stage settings, and it is earnestly to be hoped that "La Nave" is but a sample of what we have in store.

"La Nave" ("The Ship") was given its American premiere at this time and was under the baton of the composer.

Italo Montemezzi is a slight, young-looking man, very quiet, but undoubtedly with full powers to bring to beautiful performance his wonderful music.

This music is of the modern, detached, introspective kind—never thrilling, but always soul-satisfying as music and always perfectly fitted to the text.

It reaches its highest beauty in choral numbers and those especially for the men's chorus were done superbly on Tuesday and attained distinguished effectiveness.

The story is a wonderful one, but, as is the metier with D'Annunzio, it moves with measured stride usually, and very seldom attains truly dramatic proportions in action.

The three longer parts were presented by Raisa, Dolci and Rimini.

Basiliola is a Mary Garden part requiring a Rosa Raisa voice. Miss Raisa supplied the second of these, but left much to be desired in the first demand.

Dolci, once he got under way, found in Marco a suitable vehicle for his gifts, physical and vocal. Rimini, as always, was thoroughly effective, especially from the dramatic standpoint.

There were many other parts, and all were so well done as to become easily a part of the composite whole.

Emma Noe sang the little solo of "Una Voce" beautifully. Nicolay showed skill and splendid operatic style in two parts. Arthur Boardman made a most auspicious debut as Gauro, singing the short solos excellently and keeping well in the picture.

Trevisan, as Simon D'Armario, helped materially to complete several of the most striking tableaux, and Virgilio Lazzari lent his splendid voice and good dramatic feeling to a telling scene and solo assigned the Monk in the first episode.

The story of "The Ship" is too long and too complex for hurried telling, but it is one of remarkable and poetic aspects. As put into opera, the Prologue and Second Episode are genuinely thrilling, the first and third episodes being largely meditative.

Of the orchestration, and its presentation by the Chicago forces, and of the work of the chorus (especially the men), nothing but praise can be written.

We are promised fine ballet for the year, but the exhibition of Tuesday night can hardly be accepted as first class.

. . . . . .

The audience was at capacity of the Auditorium. Society was out in full force and much undress. A good many musicians were present, but not nearly as many as will be in evidence later.

Evidently the war conservation in opera is to be a thing of the past, and Chicago is in for a brilliant and successful season.

. . . . . .

"Butterfly" was given on Wednesday evening and "Fedora" last night. Tonight "The Masked Ball" will introduce Langaard, Eubank, Bonci, Galeffi, Nicolay and others.

"Norma" on Saturday afternoon and "Lucia" in the evening, as the vehicle for debut of Morgana. She will have the invaluable support of Forrest Lamont as Edgar.

. . . . . .

First Repetition of "La Nave"

A repetition of the successful Montemezzi opera is set for next Monday evening.

HERBERT GOULD A STAR IN "MARCELLE"

One of the finest successes attained by any singer in the three performances of "Marcelle" at the Aryan Grotto last week was that of Herbert Gould, one of the best known and liked of the Chicago basso-cantantes.

Mr. Gould's singing at the best clubs and societies in Chicago, as well as his many professional engagements thruout the country, has given him abundant prestige and fine routine and not only was his singing at this time of the finest professional grade, but also his action was at that same distinctly fine status shown at various other operatic engagements he has filled in Chicago.

Chorale Francaise—La Chorale Francaise de Chicago, Charles Lagourgue, conductor, has resumed its rehearsals. New works by modern French composers will be produced in the January concert. There is room for a few more men and women voices. Aspirants must apply to Miss R. Marchand, 1920 West Monroe street. Knowledge of the French language is not necessary for joining, and the French classes are given free of charge.

Medinah Temple—The next of the Central Concert Company's series will be given at Medinah Temple on November 25 by Margarete Matzenauer, mezzo-soprano, and Seidel, violinist.

Robinson—Carol Robinson, pianist, played on Tuesday morning at a benefit concert for the Stock Yards Day Nursery and on Wednesday gave a recital before the Schubert Club of St. Paul, Minn.

The soloists for the Edgewater Beach Hotel Musicale of next Sunday are Lucile M. Wynekoop, soprano, and G. Magnus Schutz, basso-cantante.

CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

November 8

The D Minor Fantasie by Ropartz, which was the novelty of the program last week as well as its most serious number, proved very attractive and its musical development was effective.

The Second Suite of Bach also was a musical joy. The soloist of the week was Joseph Malkin, and the vehicle used for his introduction as a symphony soloist was the Lalo Concerto for Cello.

Mr. Malkin looks very young, but has a fine stage manner, and his technic is so abundantly developed as to leave no necessity for discussion whatever.

Interpretatively he is far above the average of cellists and vastly more interesting than the majority we have heard with the orchestra.

Concert of November 15

The concert of November 15 was made notable through the return of Albert Spalding, who was greeted with an enthusiasm which reflected the attitude of the public both toward his art and himself.

Just returned from war service, Mr. Spalding is in fine form and exuberant spirits.

His violin playing has suffered no deterioration, and his presentation of the Dvorak Concerto for Violin was at a high point of technical perfection and interpretative value, although to most people this particular work is an unmitigated bore.

The balance of the program was a fine mixture of grace and color, Mozart in his Symphony in E Flat supplying the former and the latter being represented in full measure in the overture to "Secret of Suzanne" (Wolf-Ferrari), the Chadwick ballade, "Tam o' Shanter," and the Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier" (Dukas).

Program for This Week

SCORES SUCCESS IN CHICAGO RECITAL

AMERICAN (HERMAN DEVRIES)—
My share of pleasure in this clever artist's program came with the group of Chopin, Th. Otterstroem, Debussy and MacDowell. Miss Willard's talents are not new to us, but yesterday they seemed to show a marked development, greater breadth and even a more authoritative technic. She has a wonderful left hand, considerable imagination and other qualities of intelligence and distinction.
There is no doubt that Miss Willard is in love with her profession—all she does is warmed by genuine sincerity. Her public gave the applause she so richly deserves. Miss Willard should be heard with orchestra, for she has life, vigor and temperament.

DAILY NEWS (MAURICE ROSENFELD)—
Miss Willard disclosed an adequate technic, taste for tone shading and musical phrasing.

EVENING POST (KARLETON HACKETT)—
The Debussy "La Fille aux Cheveux de Lin" was played with appreciation. Miss Willard knows definitely just what she wishes to do, and her fingers serve her well. There is a substantial character to what she does, which shows that she has thought the thing clearly through and found out just what she wishes to express. The Rubinstein studies were played with vigor and a broad giving of the melodic outline. There was an audience of good size, which applauded the artist heartily and insisted on added numbers at the close of the regular program.

JOURNAL (EDWARD MOORE)—
Carolyn Willard, one of Chicago's talented pianists, gave a recital at Kimball Hall yesterday afternoon, an appearance which in her case has become an annual event. It is an entirely justifiable one. She played the Otterstroem March with immense enthusiasm, and if the wishes of the audience had prevailed she would have repeated it. Another fine feature of her program was Debussy's "La Fille aux Cheveux de Lin," which she played with great imagination and a lovely tone.

HERALD-EXAMINER (HENRIETTE WEBER)—
Carolyn Willard's annual piano recital always means the exposition of some well thought out interpretations. Yesterday's recital was no exception, and the deliberate self-control that is one of her most marked characteristics stood her in good stead throughout a taxing program. In "Hungarian," by MacDowell, and Rubinstein's D minor study she was particularly effective.

TRIBUNE (WILLIAM L. HUBBARD)—
Her audience received with marked favor all she offered. Her skill as technician and taste as interpreter are well recognized, and yesterday were enjoyably in evidence.

KINSOLVING MORNING MUSICAL

The Kinsolving morning musical series opened on Tuesday, November 11, with the double attraction of Tamaki Miura, the Japanese soprano, and Jacques Thibaud, the French violinist. The two artists shared an ovation in equal measure from an audience which filled the ballroom to every available space.

Mr. Thibaud plays with a richness of tone which stirs the soul to its very depths. He is a master of tonal beauty and never loses sight of the value of the emotional in interpretation, although he tempers this quality in his playing with sanity and wholesome good taste. However, it is the aesthetic and the passionately artistic which is paramount in his reading of such fantastic and colorful works as Lalo's "Symphony Espagnole" and the Saint-Saen's "Rondo Capriccioso." Together with this superb richness and warmth of tone, however, is coupled a delicacy of technique which is most unbelievable, but which colors the lighter number with an almost feminine daintiness, as in the Etude Caprice (Rode-Thibaud). In the Pugnani-Kreisler "Prelude and Allegro" there was, in contrast with the preceding number, a breadth and expansion of lines which was admirably virile, yet there is never, in Thibaud's playing, a sense of that undemonstrative reserve which we like to term "masculine." For in spite of all the attention we may try to give to the technical perfection there is always that pervading sense of selflessness, which is in reality only self, magnified and intensified through the mirror of a great art medium.

Madame Miura was radiantly beautiful to look upon in her richly brocaded oriental costume, and sang with a charm which is only her own. Her voice is a crystalline beauty and her manner quaint and bewitchingly typical of the feminine coyness of her race. In the English songs, which were distributed among the characteristically American, Irish and Scotch, she was true to feeling and prettily correct in her enunciation, while her Italian aria from "Pagliacci" and her great "piece de maitre," "Un bel di" ("Madame Butterfly"), were intensely dramatic and artistic to a degree.

Armistice Day was duly remembered in an exalted rendition of the "Star Spangled Banner" in prelude by Mr. Thibaud and an American war song by Madame Miura in closing.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

NAMARA, THE VERSATILE, REVEALS ANOTHER TALENT

A full length portrait in Arnold Genthe's "Book of the Dance" reveals Namara, the beautiful lyric soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, as the possessor of still another artistic gift. The lovely voice of Namara is well known, also her picturesqueness and histrionic ability, while her pianistic gift is also extensively recognized. But it is not generally known that Namara is an exceptionally graceful dancer—that she studied ballet dancing as a child and was one of Isadora Duncan's favorite pupils until her famous teacher insisted that too much dancing was bad for the voice and that Namara's vocal gift was too great to allow anything to interfere with its development.

PUPILS OF MRS. W. L. JACKSON IN BENEFIT PERFORMANCE

Violin and piano pupils of this successful colored teacher appeared one evening in the League of Nations Bazaar, which continued for several days recently at the South Park M. E. Church. The interesting progress made by these colored children reflects much credit on their teacher. Mrs. Jackson proves her real worth in that she is devoting her time to teaching instead of the professional career for which she was so well fitted.

Besides the pupils who took part they were assisted by William Barber, Littleton Rogers, Mrs. S. W. Qualls, Mattye Barber and John H. Wood.

The pupils and their numbers are here appended:

THE SCHOOL FOR SERIOUS STUDENTS

ASK WHY!

ARTURO PAPALARDO

Arturo Papalardo, the successful voice teacher, is recognized both in America and Europe as one of the finest of coaches and operatic conductors.

He is a graduate of one of the foremost Italian Conservatories and a co-pupil with Sammarco under the celebrated Maestro Antonio Cantelli, and was made familiar with the traditions of Italian opera at a very early age.

His career as an orchestral director was initiated in Florence, and later he went to San Remo, Novi Ligure Rimini, Reggio Emilia, Cagliari Sassari and other cities, where his talent and wonderful ability as a director attracted wide attention. This led to enticing offers to visit Rio Janeiro and San Paulo, Brazil, where he conducted with great success in the beautiful opera houses in those cities.

Thence he was called to the Municipal Theater in Odessa, Russia, and from there to London, where he appeared as a pianist with ever-increasing success.

Coming to America he made his debut in New York City and has conducted thrice on tour throughout the United States.

At present he is the director of Papalardo's Musical Art Studios in New York.

Among the artists who have been trained and prepared by him are Lucrezia Bori, Ethel Parks, Stella de Mette, Marta Paula Wittowska, Luigi Montesanto, as also Miss Mana-Zucca, the composer, who appeared recently at several concerts, singing with marked success.

Maestro Papalardo reports an unusually busy season.

Levitzki—Mischa Levitzki, although the son of an American citizen of Russian extraction, was himself born in Kiev, Russia, during a visit of his parents to that city. At the age of six young Levitzki's longing for musical expression began to assert itself, and, there being no piano in the home, he was given a violin. By the time he was seven he seemed destined to be a violin prodigy. One day a friend of his mother's, who was interested in his playing, asked him how he would like to learn to play the piano. He became interested and took two lessons a week, secretly, at the end of three months surprising his parents by playing for them at the house of this friend. His performance left no doubt as to choice of instrument or career. Shortly after this his parents returned to New York, where Levitzki enrolled as a pupil of Sigismund Stojowski. Four years later wealthy music patrons subscribed sufficient funds to enable Mischa to spend several years abroad studying with Ernest von Dohnanyi, the composer-pianist. He entered the concert field about a year before the outbreak of the war, his tour being interrupted at the beginning of hostilities, to be resumed again during the season 1915-1916. He returned to this country in the fall of 1916, giving a recital October 18 at Aeolian Hall, New York, which at once established him in the front ranks of the younger generation of pianists.

CECIL LIPSCHUTZ

A much-talked-about affair of recent date was the debut at Kimball Hall of Miss Cecil Lipschultz, sixteen-year-old artist pupil of Isadore Buchhalter. Miss Lipschutz played the following well-chosen program:

Andante con Variazioni.....Haydn
Sonata, Op. 7 .....Grieg
Allegro moderato; allegro molto; andante molto
Alla menuetto ma poco piu lento; finale; molto allegro
Etudes, Op. 25, No. 1
Etudes, Op. 10, No. 5
Valse, Op. 34, No. 1 .....Chopin
Ballade, Op. 38, F major
A'L'Eglise, Op. 3, No. 8.....Pierne
La Velocite .....Mathias
Melodie, Op. 10, No. 1.....Maykapar
Humoreske .....Bucharoff
Rondo a la valse .....Stcherbatcheff
Rigoletto (Paraphrase) .....Verdi-Liszt

Her work throughout indicated that she has been under excellent tutelage, and in addition to this that she is a young professional of considerable natural talent who, with further experience, will undoubtedly become an artist of large proportions. At present her playing is still young. But who would have it otherwise? Her girlishness and lack of maturity are as much a part of her charm as are her pianistic qualities of good tone and facile technic, and no one would wish to invest her with a sophistication which could at best be only artificial. There is something peculiarly fascinating in playing such as Miss Lipschutz's which foretells so portentously a brilliant future and at the same time presents to us an art which charms with its naivete and non-presumption. Miss Lipschutz is to be heartily encouraged and warmly congratulated as a result of her debut of November 11.

A. LOUISE SUESS

A. Louise Suess, who is a member of the faculty of the American Conservatory in the department of dramatic art, was heard recently in Kimball Hall in Short Sketches in dialect, which were exceedingly well done, and in an excerpt from Act 2 of "Within the Law," in which her character presentation was penetrating and gripping. Her reading showed deep study of the play and its purport, and a thorough knowledge of the technique whereby to convey to perfection its deepest and most satiric meanings. Her work embodied a conviction not soon to be forgotten.

NELLE BRYANT

It was a rare privilege to hear, on the evening of the anniversary of the signing of the armistice, Nelle Bryant, soprano, at a meeting of the Arche Club held in the recital hall of the Kenwood Club. Miss Bryant sang two groups. In the first were the songs "Ariette" (Vidal), "Hope" (Moussorgsky), "The Nightingales of Lincoln Inn" (Oliver) and Negaro's "My Love Is a Muleteer." "The Nightingales," a song from the old English, was especially enchanting in its lyric beauty, while the last, with its bravado strains, showed to good advantage the distinctly dramatic qualities of Miss Bryant's voice. Her encore, "The Americans Come," was full of patriotic fervor.

At the close of the evening Miss Bryant sang the beautiful aria, "Adieu Forets," with an understanding and interpretation which was rare, and as a final encore did Sidney Homer's "Sheep and Lambs" with a beautifully sympathetic tone.

WHITNEY TEW STUDIOS

On Monday evening, November 10, Miss Hazel Renninger sang the following program of ancient and modern classical songs at the Whitney Tew studios:

Pur dicesti (contralto).....Lotti (1667-1740
Voi che sapete (soprano).....Mozart (1756-1791 Scarlatti (soprano).....Le Violette (1659-1725
Nina (contralto).....Pergolesi (1710-1736
Ci Legaun Guiramento (from Hamlet) (soprano)
.....Ambroise Thomas
Obstination (soprano).....Fontenailles
The Swan (contralto).....Saint-Saens
Leo Cloches (contralto).....Debussy
Sonpir (contralto) .....Bemberg
Until God's Day (contralto).....Buck
Daddy's Sweetheart (soprano).....Lehmann
To a Wild Rose (soprano).....McDowell
The Little Irish Girl (contralto).....Lohr

As may be seen from the program, Miss Renninger divided her program between soprano and contralto songs, and was equally pleasing in all. She possesses a voice which is vibrant in quality and sympathetic, especially in the middle register. Her personality is very ingratiating, and she is beautiful to look upon. So popular were her numbers that several of them had to be repeated.

Marie Lighthall—Marie Lighthall, soprano, will sing at the Hamlin this coming week. Mrs. Lighthall will appear in recital at Edgewater Beach Hotel November 30.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

The opening of Chicago Symphony Orchestra season Monday evening, November 10, at the Pabst Theater was an event to gladden the hearts of performers and auditors.

A representative audience of what proved to be discriminating music lovers followed the program with sincere appreciation, and at no time has a Milwaukee audience been more spontaneous and fervent in their applause. There was not a dull moment; the atmosphere was electrified. The officers, directors and guarantors may well congratulate themselves upon the selection of Miss Margaret Rice as business manager. She has shown initiative and tactful ability, and has "put over" a subscription season that bars any call upon the guarantors—a feat many much more seasoned concert managers might envy, and the smoothness with which the first night went over proved what painstaking attention to detail had been given.

The program for this concert is elsewhere covered in detail. Program for second concert November 24 is given here with Carlos Salzedo, harpist, for soloist and for the third concert Jules Malkin, new first cellist of orchestra, will appear.

Tambourin (from Cephale et Procris).....Gretry
Symphony—Harold in Italy (Opus 16).....Berlioz
Harold in the Mountains
March and Evening Prayer of the Pilgrims
Serenade of a Mountaineer of the Abruzzi
Orgies of the Brigands
(Viola obligato by Franz Esser)
Introduction and Allegro for harp, with string orchestra, flute and clarinet.....Ravel
Invitation to the Dance.....Weber
Enchanted Isles (Symphonic Poem for harp and orchestra) (first public performance).....Salzedo
Marche Slave .....Tschaikowsky

CLEVELAND, OHIO

On Tuesday afternoon, at the Duchess Theater, was given the first of the Fortnightly concerts. The writer feels very fortunate indeed to be in possession of a guest ticket for these concerts.

In consequence of the new rule that tickets can be handed on to friends, there was a well-filled house to hear the program of Harriet Ware compositions, sung by John Barnes Wells, tenor, with Miss Ware herself at the piano. Miss Ware's brief remarks, personal to her, which she gave before so many of the numbers, made the program doubly interesting to her audience. The artists appearing at the next concert, December 2, will doubtless prove as great a treat as did these.

On Monday evening Gray's Armory was packed to its doors to welcome back to Cleveland Fritz Kreisler, violinist.

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK

A large and enthusiastic audience heard Raymond Wilson, the young American pianist, give the first of his recitals this season in the auditorium of Syracuse University recently. Mr. Wilson presented a varied and interesting program ranging from Mozart to the Modern Russian school, and after many recalls to the stage following his numbers granted the audience two encores.

The next day Mr. Wilson appeared before the Morning Musicales of this city and played, among other numbers, MacDowell's Sonata "Eroica," receiving an ovation from a large and representative audience.

ANDRE POLAH

The following is quoted from a Rochester paper after the recent appearance of the great Dutch violinist in recital at the Institute of Music in Rochester:

The assembly hall of the Institute of Music on Prince street was overcrowded last night for the recital of Andre Polah, Dutch violinist, who is the latest addition to the faculty of the school and who has been engaged by Mr. Eastman to play in the new quartet.

Mr. Polah proved himself a master of the technique of his instrument and a performer of rare ability in his interpretations; but his remarkable tone, rich, mellow and powerful, was the outstanding feature of his playing. An audience of more than usual discrimination was completely charmed by it.

The violinist's program included a major concerto by Mozart; "Poeme," by Ernest Chausson, and two groups of shorter numbers. In the first group were "Larghetto," Weber-Kreisler; "Waves at Play," Edwin Grasse; "Serenite," Saint-Saens; "Caprice," Wieniawsky-Kreisler. The second group included "Rondino," Vieuxtemps; "Ave Maria," Schubert-Wilhelmj; "Spanish Dance," Fabian Redfield.

The size of the audience which attended the recital was a source of great satisfaction to those who are interested in the success of the new Eastman School of Music, as it seemed to show that there is a great demand for musical recitals of this nature. Mr. Polah is looked upon as an important addition to Rochester musical circles and to the faculty of the school. He comes to Rochester with the reputation of being a violinist of remarkable talent and training, for his playing has been very favorably commented upon by his critics, both while he was connected with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra and while he was playing in concert.

Mr. Polah also appeared recently in Philadelphia, playing the d'Ambrosio Concerto and a number of smaller pieces, including a delightful arrangement of a Bach aria by Arthur Hartmann. The concert season for Mr. Polah is filling up rapidly and he is now scheduled for many recital appearances in different parts of the country.

The cut, which accompanies this article is made from a sketch by Gwendolyn Le Gallienne, daughter of Richard LeGallienne, the famous English poet.

BENEFIT MUSICALE

A musicale was given last week at the home of Mrs. Max Adler for the benefit of Babies' Day Nursery. Among those taking part were Ralph Leo, baritone, and the Murdock Trio.

Mr. Leo was in splendid voice and sang with conviction. He possesses not only a voice which is free and smooth in tone quality, but a personality which is singularly unaffected and genuine. This is always an asset which bespeaks a spark of the truly great, but it is especially likable in the intimacy of a home musicale. Mr. Leo opened with a small bit of sentiment in a song gem entitled "My Bit," written and dedicated to him by his father, Ernest Leo. Following this was Forsythe's dramatic "O Red Is the English Rose," and then the lyric and melodious "Smilin' Thru." His second group included "Tommy Lad" (Margetsen), and Sidney Homer's greatest, "How's My Boy?" which requires an actor as well as a singer to give it its full dramatic intensity. In fitting conclusion he sang the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" with an energy and directness which were most compelling.

The Murdock Trio played two groups in their usual charming fashion. So accustomed are they to one another and so well conceived is the ensemble of their work that it seems almost unnatural to think of the three young women, the Misses Mora and Leta Murdock and Miss Elizabeth Olk-Roehlk, as three separate entities. They played for their numbers the Arthur Foote Trio, D minor, "The Riding Messenger" (a Danish folk song), "By the Brook" (Bois Deffre), and the Scherzo from the Godard Trio. Their playing was finished and musicianly to a degree and contributed in large part to the pleasure of the evening.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

The audience at the Ziegfield Theater last Saturday morning to hear advanced pupils of the Chicago Musical College was a very large one, the theater being filled almost to the last place.

The program was also exceptional, most of the youthful singers and players being at that point where professionalism is just about to begin.

Perhaps the most astonishing number on the program was the first movement of the Mendelssohn Concerto played by Evelyn Vitto Levin, a small girl pupil of Leon Sametini. Evelyn belongs to that race which supplies the greater part of all the musicians of the world and which, also, is not afraid of hard work, and she has therefore already reached a technical perfection which is amazing when one considers her years.

She is also accurate and tasteful, and the success of her Saturday appearance was such as to prove that she will surely take a high rank among artist violinists at no very far distant time.

There was no other violin number on the program, but the Violoncello Concerto, No. 4 (Golterman), was well played by Margaret Duffy.

The pianists were four in number and began with Harriet Robertson, a talented pupil of Harry R. Detweiler, who was heard to advantage in an Arabesque (Debussy) and an Etude (Chopin), and the second player was Gertrude Gahl, who was excellent in the unusual pieces "Tendre Aveu" (Schutt), and a Humoresque of Rachmaninoff.

Merriweather Lewis, a southern girl, who is studying with Harold V. Mickwitz, showed very unusual talent and fine repose in her playing of a Movement from a Chopin Concerto and easily held the closest attention and won a fine round of applause. She had the fine advantage of having the second piano part played by Mr. Mickwitz.

Ernest Bacon, a very temperamental and excellently trained young Chicago pianist, pupil of Alexander Raab, showed some of the finest singing tone ever heard from a pupil in a Nocturne of Chopin, and was brilliant as well as wholly logical in a Brahms Rhapsody.

Helen L. Shepard, who has a fine voice which is being beautifully treated by Rose Lutiger Gannon, sang the big aria from "The Queen of Sheba" (Guonod), and Alberta Biewer again disclosed good vocal points in that from "Don Carlos" (Verdi).

A singer with great facility and brilliance is Martha Hatfield, and her presentation of "Ah fors e lui" (Verdi) was rewarded by unusual applause. C. E. W.

Haworth—Helen Boyle Haworth, contralto, will give a downtown song recital in the spring. The Chicago Artist Quartette, of which Mrs. Haworth is the contralto, and the other members of which are Juanita Whicher, soprano; Victor Downer, tenor, and John Rankel, bass, sang at the fiftieth anniversary of the Keystone Lodge at the Cameo Room of the Morrison Hotel on last Wednesday evening, Mrs. Haworth and Miss Whicher appearing also in duets.

Levitzki—Mischa Levitzki was soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Emil Oberhoffer, Director, on Nov. 7, playing the Beethoven Concerto, No. 3.

RECITAL AT THE WELGE SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Before an audience which overflowed the studio rooms and which gave earnest appreciation of their efforts pupils of the Welge School of Music gave a recital Tuesday night. The program included piano, violin, reading and vocal numbers, which in scope and in rendition, more than fulfilled the expectation of friends of Mr. Welge and Miss Gladys Welge and the faculty and put an immediate stamp of success upon their effort. Though less than one year old, the Welge School has forced its way into the front ranks in Austin music circles and is in fact drawing pupils from beyond its immediate range of activity, and the success of Tuesday evening guarantees its future. The work of the pupils evidenced the careful, thorough efforts of the teachers and was indeed a matter of congratulation for both.—Dalinghaus, with Herald and Examiner.

LOUISE BOEDTKER AND ADOLF HOFFMANN IN RECITAL

Sunday afternoon, November 16, an interesting program was given at the Edgewater Beach Hotel by Louise D. Boedtker, soprano; Adolf Hoffmann, cellist, and Elsie Barge, accompanist, under the management of Miller, Resseguie & Tufts.

Miss Boedtker has one of the loveliest voices heard recently and, together with good musicianship and voice production, she has a brilliant future ahead.

In her first group, "If I Were a Bird" (Liza Lehman), "Retreat" (La Forge), and Fisher's "I Heard a Cry," were sung with splendid interpretation and tone color, and in the second group, composed of Gilberte's

ADOLF HOFFMANN

"Evening Song," Lehmann's "Daddy's Sweetheart," and "The Nightingale" of Ward Stephens, she disclosed style and a brilliancy of technic that completely won her audience and had to respond with Leoni's "Dawn" as an encore.

Mr. Hoffmann, cellist, opened the program with "Kol Nidrei" of Bruch, which brought forth a full, rich tone and even legato that is not heard often in cello playing.

His other numbers, "Spanish Serenade" (Glazounow), "Berceuse" (Hoffman), a lovely composition from his own pen; "Allegro Appassionato" (Saint-Saens), "Evening Song" (Schuman-Popper), and the brilliant Mazurka in G Minor of Popper were rendered with exquisite tone and facile technic, and proved Mr. Hoffmann is an artist in every respect.

Miss Boedtker sang Ronald's "O Lovely Night," with cello obligato by Mr. Hoffmann, bringing to a close a very delightful and artistic program.

Miss Barge gave sympathetic and well balanced support at the piano for both the artists.

MAY PETERSON SINGS AT NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

The first concert this season of the Peninsula Music Club was a distinct success, and the artists of the occasion, the brilliant May Peterson and Louis Graveur, shared honors evenly. Mr. Graveur opened the program with a series of folk songs by Korbay, and while slightly off key in the first two numbers, his tone quality reached an exquisite climax before the end of the group, and a marked improvement was noted in the carrying quality of his voice since his appearance in this section several years ago. With a most unusual stage presence and a voice of no great range, he handles his registers with perfect phrasing and diction and the result is an artist of no mean ability. He was most effective in the prologue—"Pagliacci," by Leon Carollo—but captured the audience with a group of miscellaneous gems, the most pleasing of which were "Sylvia," an encore by request, and "Five and Twenty Sailormen," the work of Coleridge Taylor.

Miss Peterson, whose personality is as captivating as her art, warmed up to her audience from the moment she made her imposing entrance. In her first group of songs she gave a short description of each number, which enabled the audience to enjoy more fully the flute-like tones which portrayed the musical pictures. She was at her best in her first number, "Voi Che Sapete" (Le Nozze di Figaro), but in Wekelin's French poem and an old Scotch melody her quality of tone has only been equaled by Alma Gluck, who was conceded to be, some years ago, "the perfect American songstress."

As an encore Miss Peterson's rendition of "Carry Me Back to Ole Virginie," brought tears to the eyes of many, and when the audience refused to leave the house she sang spontaneously, to her own accompaniment, "The Last Rose of Summer."—Newport News Times-Herald.

ERNEST DAVIS IN GREAT DEMAND

Ernest Davis, tenor, soloist with the Apollo Club in Chicago this week, has been making numerous appearances in the Middle West.

In Music News last week in our Press at Large Section two notices were, by mistake—put under one caption.

Part of this matter was in reference to Mr. Davis' splendid success at Galesburg, Ill., and another part, which should have had a separate heading, refers to his singing at Iola, Kan., which is the place of his nativity and where his return was greeted with extraordinary enthusiasm.

GEORGIA HALL-QUICK IN WISCONSIN

Georgia Hall-Quick, one of the most brilliant pianists of the Northwest, is having a great success with her recitals throughout Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan, this season. On November 4 she gave a recital before the Schubert Club of Kenosha, Wis., giving the following program:

Sonata Eroica, G minor, Op. 50.....MacDowell
Slow, with nobility—fast, passionately.
Elf-like
Tenderly, longingly
Fiercely—very fast

Impromptu, F sharp
Etude, A flat (Aeolian harp)
Nocturne, C minor
Ballade, A flat
.....Chopin

Tambourine.....Raff
Serenade, B flat.....Rachmaninoff
Dialogue.....Tschaikowsky
Hungarian Rhapsodie No. 12.....Liszt

Mrs. Quick played before 1,000 at Ivanhoe Temple, Milwaukee, on November 10, the program being given for the wives of the men who attended the meeting of the Mystic Shriners.

On November 13 Mrs. Quick played the Liszt Concerto in Janesville, Wis., with the MacDowell Club. Of this number, Catherine Mead, music critic of the Milwaukee Sentinel, said:

"Mrs. Quick was heard in the Liszt flat major concerto, a composition of exceeding difficulty, in which the artist acquitted herself with entire success. Each hearing of this fine pianist brings something of fresh interest. Her progress has been tremendous in the last two years; finished technique and certainty of execution have always been hers, as well as breadth of interpretation, but increasing imagination and poetry of conception are rapidly placing her in the front rank. She was enthusiastically encored and responded with the 'Dialogue' by Tschaikowsky."

BRAIL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

A "complimentary" students' recital afforded pleasant diversion for a group of people who crowded the Brail studios on Sunday afternoon. A lot of little people and some older ones "did their bit" on piano, violin and in recitation with the varying degrees of courage or apprehension which obtain, and, in the main, emerged successfully, thereby giving pleasure to the auditor and reflecting credit on the teachers and the school. It is always interesting, always enjoyable and explains readily why a pupils' recital is one of the permanent forms of musical enjoyment. Perhaps only a musical veteran dare make such a statement, but it has proved true these many years. There is undying charm in what young people do—in music as elsewhere.

This recital was no exception to the agreeable rule, and to chronicle its success and pleasure is to congratulate Miss Brail on her standards, ideals and efficiency. Among her many pupils the following were heard in admirable selections: Violet Kahn, Helen Snyder, Madeline Seifer, Helen Ofner and Robert Curry. Other participants were M. Carnahan, K. Clark, S. Sienman, F. Lurie, H. Gans, H. Westphal, A. Anderson, E. Kaufman, D. Buechler, E. Mogensen, E. Eichbaum, M. Morris and a young miss who sang in substitution and whose name was not heard.

John McMahill Jr. regretfully disappointed the audience by reason of illness. He was down for violin numbers.

ST. PAUL, MINN.

By MYRTLE WEED

The first Symphony Concert in the series of twelve given by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Emil Oberhoffer conductor, took place Thursday evening, October 23, at the St. Paul Auditorium. The concerts are given under the auspices of the St. Paul Institute and the large attendance at all musical events thus far augurs well for the season.

Mr. Oberhoffer gave the first movement of Tschaikowsky Symphony in F Minor, No. 4, Op. 36, an authoritative reading. The enlarged orchestra, now numbering eighty-five men in its personnel, is a greater medium for Mr. Oberhoffer's interpretations, and the violin section has greater body of tone, full and expressive. The clarinets and flute were alike beautifully expressive, as was the oboe in the second movement. The fanciful Scherzo was done with fine effect, and the finale but showed the splendid virtuosity of the players.

A new work, "Rapsodie Espagnol" (Maurice Ravel), was enthusiastically received and brought the program to a close. It is a worth-while work, abounding in interesting instrumentation, color and rhythm. Another hearing of it would be gladly welcomed.

Mme. Matzenauer's numbers were the Letter Scene from "Eugen Oniegin" (Tschaikowsky), and "Poeme de C'Amour et de la Mer" (Chausson), with an aria from "Carmen" as an encore.

Her art is ever alluring. A marvelous voice, loveliness of phrasing, and the utmost confidence, contributed to the charming presentation she gave the numbers.

The second concert by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra Thursday evening, November 6, was an inspiring occasion with Mischa Levitzki, pianist, as soloist. The overture to "Fidelio" in E Major, Op. 72, No. 4 (Beethoven), was given a spirited reading, and it was well chosen as an introduction of the Brahms Symphony No. 4, in E Minor, Op. 98.

The symphony, as played by Mr. Oberhoffer and his men, aroused the audience to the greatest enthusiasm; and so large an audience must have been gratifying to the conductor, who signaled the men to rise in acknowledgment of the continued applause. The masterly first movement was dramatic in its intensity. The second Andante Moderato, of a romantic style, was extremely beautiful. The Rondo was played with fine rhythmic precision, and the unusual finale in the form of a Passacaglia was a great triumph. This movement showed the composer's great command of the resources of counterpoint, and at the same time tested the resources of an orchestra which has won the highest commendation for its playing of the Brahms Symphonies.

The playing of the Beethoven Concerto for piano, No. 3, in C Minor, Op. 37, by Mischa Levitzki, was that of one inspired. The matchless ease with which he tosses off delicate passages, in short, a touch that is divine, again sweeping down to a tremendous and mighty climax that astounds with its precision—all this and much more are characteristic of the charm of Mr. Levitzki's playing. The cadenza of the first movement, which I attribute to the pianist-composer, was masterful and majestic. The soulful chords of the largo were invested with infinite beauty of tone. Just for the concerts alone one wished that the pianist might be re-engaged for the third season, and when three encores were granted, that desire was the more emphatic.

The Chopin C Minor Nocturne, "Staccato Etude" (Rubinstein), and the Chopin "Military Polonaise" were marvelous in the effects he obtained with and without the pedals, for he was sparing in his use of them.

Sousa and his band were heard at a matinee and evening program October 27 at the Auditorium, under the management of Finkelstein and Ruben of the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate. The double line the length of the building waiting to get in touch with the box office early in the morning attests to the March King's popularity. The band numbers thirty-one former service men, according to Mr. Sousa, but the statement that the band now playing is a part of the great naval battalion band he organized at the Great Lakes is incorrect. The programed numbers included "An American Wedding March" (Sousa), dedicated to the American people, and composed at the request of the American Relief Legion for our American brides. It is a dignified and well written number. This, together with the colorful and dramatic "American Indian Rhapsody" (Preston Ware Orem), was the distinctive feature of the program. A Moorish Fantasia "The Court of Granada" (Chapi); Suite, "American Maid," Valsette; "The Wood Nymph" (Eric Coates); March, "Sabre and Spurs" (Sousa), and Caprice Brillante "The Caravan (Ora Hume), made up the band's program. Mr. Sousa supplemented the program with many encores; among these were his own justly famous "El Capitan," "U. S. Field Artillery," "Liberty Bell March," "Smiles" and "Me-ow," the last designed no doubt to please lovers of jazz music. Even Mr. Pershing has a strong predilection for it.

Mary Baker, soprano; Florence Hardeman, violinist, and H. Benne Henton, saxophonist, were soloists.

Miss Baker pleased with her singing of the "Moonlight and Starlight" (Gilberte), and the encore, "Robin, Robin, Sing Me a Song," with harp accompaniment.

Mr. Henton played his own arrangement of "Scenes That Are Brightest," and for an encore "When You and I Were Young, Maggie."

Miss Hardeman's numbers were "La Ronde des Lutins" (Bazzoni); "The Swan" (Saint-Saens), with harp accompaniment, played as an encore, the program closing with the "Star Spangled Banner."

The place was reported sold out for the evening concert long in advance.

Arthur Alexander, tenor, in self-accompanied recital, appeared at the People's Church Thursday, October 30, before a large and enthusiastic audience of Schubert Club members at the first evening program in their series of artists' recitals.

Though Mr. Alexander is a most artistic accompanist, does not his playing detract somewhat from his art of singing, since his appearance was first and foremost a song recital?

The program follows:

Caro mio ben	Giordani
Star Vicino	Salvator Rosa
Lungi dal caro bene	Secchi
Vittoria	Carissimi
Romance Il pleure dans mon coeur Mandoline Beau Soir Cheveaux de Bois	Debussy
Chanson Triste	Duparc
Adieu	Faure
La Procession	Cesar Franck
Le Colibri	Chausson
Le Plongeur	Widor
Retreat	Frank La Forge
In the Yellow Dusk	Edward Horsman
The Crying of Water	Campbell-Tipton
The Eagle	Carl Busch

Mr. Alexander disclosed a superb voice, vibrant in quality, winning the favor of his audience in the first group. The dramatic style with which he sang the "Vittoria" (Carissimi) heightened its effect and gave it a compelling charm.

The French group was sung with artistic finish and admirable diction, the French number "La Procession" leaving a deep impression.

The English group, which came last, was too short in comparison with the French, which was finely sung, but the success of the last group justified the giving of more American songs by American composers on our concert programs.

N. Stuart Smith, pianist, of New York, with Jessica De Wolf, St. Paul soprano, and Malcolm McMillan, accompanist, gave the opening fortnightly recital at Junior Pioneer Hall Wednesday afternoon, October 22. There were not seats enough to accommodate all, as each member was allowed one guest, and it was apparent that they availed themselves of the privilege.

The program is here given:

Piano—
Etude, Op. 25, No. 1	Chopin
Tarantelle	Chopin
Prelude, C sharp minor	Scriabine
Etude, F major	Neupert
La Nuit de Noel	Liapounow

The Little Fish's Song ..... Aronsky
Piano—
Westminster Abbey ..... Groviez
Danseuses de Delphes ..... Debussy
Poissons d'Or ..... Debussy
Pavanne Pour un Enfant Defunt ..... Ravel
Jeux d'Eau ..... Ravel

Mr. Smith possesses a singing tone of crystalline beauty, and he was ultimately successful in conveying the "atmosphere" of the French school. The Debussy numbers, animated with a light and irresistible rhythm, afforded contrast beside the sustained effects obtained in the Ravel numbers. "Westminster Abbey" by a composer of Spanish origin was made interesting. While the pianist is a type of artist to which the finer, more subtle things appeal, his program would have been more comprehensive and enjoyable had the first group attained something more in the way of climaxes, and offered greater variety of style.

Mrs. De Wolf sang a group of songs with characteristic artistry. Admirable phrasing and the skillful handling of her voice had their part in her success. The beauty of her fresh voice was fully displayed in the long "Just You" (Burleigh), sung with a charm and tenderness that made an instant appeal. Mr. McMillan provided artistic accompaniments.

The St. Paul Musical Academy presented Mabel Jane McCabe, pianist, in a concerto recital Friday evening, October 24, at the Y. W. C. A. Auditorium. Miss McCabe is a concert pianist of brilliant attainments, whose abundance of technic is equal to all demands; her refreshingly vigorous style added to the attractiveness of her programed numbers, the Schumann A Minor Concerts, Op. 54, and the Liszt "Hungarian Fantasy." Margarette Pettersen supplied the orchestra accompaniment on second piano.

Miss Annette Lake, as assisting soloist, sang the Recitative and Aria from "Rinaldo" (Handel), "When Celia Sings" (Moir), and "Birthday Song" (Woodman).

OSCAR SAENGER PROVIDES MUSICAL COMEDY WITH A NEW STAR

Lilian Kemble Cooper, the well-known young actress who made a name for herself in the support of such prominent actors and actresses as Henry Miller, Emily Stevens, Ruth Chatterton and others, made a successful debut as a singer with Raymond Hitchcock's company in the musical comedy, "Hitchy Koo." This transformation was brought about by Oscar Saenger, with whom Miss Cooper has studied for the last two seasons. She is the possessor of a lovely soprano voice, and Mr. Saenger predicts big things for her. The New York Times, in commenting on her first night performance, said of Miss Cooper: " . . And there is Lillian Kemble Cooper making her first appearance in musical comedy, and doing it successfully, too, as anyone bearing the name of Kemble would be expected to do."

Syracuse University

Professor Harry L. Vibbard Recital—The first of the annual series of concerts by members of the faculty of the College of Fine Arts was given by Professor Vibbard, organist. The following program was rendered:

Liszt—Prelude and Fugue on the Name B-A-C-H; Reubka—Sonata in C Minor; Schubert—Ballet Music from Rosamunde; d'Evry—Toccata, Bossi-Cantabile; Buxtehude—Fugue in C; Schumann—Canon in B Minor; Franck—Piece Heroique.

Dr. Adolph Frey—Piano recital. The program was as follows: Schumann—Carnival, Op. 9; Chopin—Barcarolle, Op. 60, Ballade, Op. 23, Valse, Op. 42; Liszt—"Legende, St. Francis de Paule, marchant sur les flots"; Debussy—"La Cathedrale engloutie," "Poissons d'or," "La Plus que lente"; Dohnanyi—Rhapsodie, Op. 11; Sturkow-Ryder —"Imps"; Cyril Scott—"Siberian Valse"; MacDowell—"Of Brer Rabbit"; Saint-Saens —Etude en form de Valse.

Professor Raymond Wilson—Piano recital. Professor Wilson played the Sonata Eroica by MacDowell; Fantasia in C Minor by Mozart; Chopin Scherzo, Opus 20; Nocturne, Opus 62, No. 2; Compositions by Pugno, Glinka-Balakirew, and Liapounow. Of special local interest were the Prelude in F Minor by Berwald, and Gavotte Moderne by Frey.

Professor Laura Van Kuren, soprano, and Mr. Ernest P. Hawthorne, pianist—This was Mr. Hawthorne's first appearance here in recital. He showed that he is a pianist of ability, has ample technic, which is especially brilliant in rapid passage playing, and plays fortissimo with great vigor but without any display of physical endeavor. Mr. Hawthorne played the Pastorale Sonata (Op. 28) by Beethoven; Chopin, Sonata, Op. 58, and several smaller numbers by the same composer; Rubinstein, Barcarolle in A Minor; Debussy, "La Danse de Puck"; Stojowski, "Chant d'Amour"; Paderewski, "Cracovienne Fantastique." Miss Van Kuren sang two groups of songs in her usual manner and gave several encores.

Students' Recital—At the first of the monthly public recitals the following program was presented by students of College of Fine Arts:

Organ—Grand Choeur in D ..... Lacroix

At the Mizpah

The First Baptist Church choir, Charles M. Courboin, organist, Howard Lyman, choir leader, presented "The Holy City," cantata by Gaul.

A number of excellent concerts have been given under the auspices of the Recital Commission.

Madame Berthe Baret, French violinist, was assisted by Louis Grunberg, pianist. Giovanni Martinelli, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Mlle. Magdeleine Brard, pianist.

Miss Vahrah Hanbury, soprano, and Charles M. Courboin, organist. Emilio de Gogorza under the auspices of the Morning Musicals.

The Morning Musicals are an important factor in the music life of Syracuse. It is through the efforts of this organization that some of the best talent is brought to Syracuse.

The recital by Emilio de Gogorza was one of the best of the season thus far. He sang to a packed house. Every number of the excellent program was rendered in a most artistic manner and enthusiastically received. He was repeatedly encored. His singing is of the kind which thoroughly satisfies.

A Greater May Festival

The Festival Association is making plans for the greatest May Festival that Syracuse has ever had. The chorus is at work and plans for orchestra and other talent are well under way. In the new Keith Theater Syracuse will have an auditorium which will make it possible to present the Festival in a more fitting and satisfactory manner than has heretofore been possible.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

San Francisco, November 10, 1919.

With an ably led, first-class symphony orchestra, a chamber music organization of widening reputation, and the presence in our midst of an ever-increasing number of artists whose names are common property wherever musical people congregate, San Francisco is gradually assuming the role of western musical capital. Never have music and things musical boomed so much and promised such honorable returns as they have done this season, and the outlook is bright and clear for performer and teacher alike. Furthermore, the site has been bought and the plans decided upon for a really great opera house, capable of seating 2,500 or more in a monumental pile which is also to include a number of smaller concert, theater or lecture halls, studios, and all the necessary adjuncts of a home of musical art. We shall again be enabled to hear, as before the fire of 1906, the great eastern operatic aggregations, whose visits cannot be made profitable even at prohibitive prices of admission, because there is no theater in San Francisco large enough to hold a paying house.

Entering upon his fifth season as conductor, Alfred Hertz led his eighty-odd merry men to victory on October 17, when the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, increased in personnel and in efficiency, held its initial concert of the season at the Current Theater. For this occasion Mr. Hertz had chosen Brahms' D Major (No. 2) Symphony, Debussy's "Fetes" and the Prelude and "Liebestod" from "Tristan and Isolde" with which to make his bow; surely an eclectic and well-balanced program with which to start the ball a-rolling. The next week the principal offerings were Cesar Franck's D Minor Symphony and Busoni's Symphonic Suite (Op. 25). The Busoni number was new to us "out west," and at first hearing its musical value does not warrant its evident difficulties of execution. The popular concert on November 2 attracted an extremely large crowd, probably because of the favorites which were played—the "Carmen" Suite, Liszt's No. 2 Rhapsodie and the "Ride of the Valkyries." The program also included, unfortunately, an arrangement for orchestra of the much-worn "Humoreske," introducing several measures of the "Suwanee River," and Frederick Stock's particularly inappropriate arrangement of Beethoven's Menuet in G, both of them hardly in place on a symphony orchestra program. On November 7 Mr. Hertz' offerings were Brahms' "Tragic" Overture, interpreted in his usual authoritative style; Beethoven's boisterous and high-spirited No. 8 Symphony in F (Op. 93), and Liadow's fanciful, impressionistic pictures, "Le Lac Enchante" and "Kikimora"—musical phantoms both, intangible and formless, yet setting up an indescribable atmosphere of mystery and sorcery.

The regular Friday afternoon Symphony concerts are repeated the following Sunday, and a popular program is given every other Sunday—three concerts every two weeks.

Geraldine Farrar has flashed through our musical firmament and left a kind of futuristic impression—a confused day-dream of feathers, jewels, amazing gowns and what not. Somehow, these things have made a greater impression on us than her performance, if we can except a "Madame Butterfly" aria in which La Farrar set a new fashion for prima donnas on tour by accompanying herself at the piano.

The Chamber Music Society has already given several concerts, three of these being in Berkeley, the seat of the University of California. Mr. Louis Persinger, who is also concert master of the Symphony, is at his old post as first violin, and the programs so far have met with the approval they deserve.

The Extension Division of the University of California is sponsoring three sonata recitals, one of which has already taken place. Mr. Sigmund Beel is the violinist and Mr. George Stewart McManus the pianist. Three sonatas in one evening is (to use a vulgarism) "going some," but these two really fine artists held their audience from start to finish on November 6, when they played a Bach sonata in A Major, a Schuman example in A Minor and Grieg's C Minor (Op. 45). These concerts are of a highly educative nature, and if sufficient public interest is shown they will be followed by a number of other concerts and lectures on musical subjects, the object of the Extension being to help to create a love for the better kind of music in large and small communities throughout the state.

VICTOR BLONDEAU.

Fox-Paine—Hortense Fox, pianist; Myra Paine, violin, and Sarah E. Paine, accompanist, will give a concert at the parlors of the Western Conservatory in Kimball Hall on Saturday evening, November 22.

TOPEKA, KAN.

Is there any one in this city who really believes that Topeka has lost interest in her municipal organ? Topeka proved two things irrefutably last night—that the organ has not lost its charm and that the magnetism of Clarence Eddy as a recitalist is stronger than the line of least resistance on a warm Sunday evening.

There were no fewer than thirty-five hundred people in the audience, many of them fair visitors who had come in eagerness to hear the organ and to witness its response to the touch of an artist of Mr. Eddy's master skill.

Mr. Eddy, the dean of American organists, who has heretofore demonstrated the quality of his art to Topekans, holds securely his fame as an organist. There is a peculiar suavity in his playing which pertains to few other organists. He is such a past master of technique, so adept in registration, and so absolutely resourceful in all possibilities of the organ, that he never loses the sweet flow of whatever composition he may be playing. He is also a master builder of programs—something new and something old—and to cap the climax of expectation on the part of those not so highly versed in profundity, he played a most charming arrangement of the well known "Ave Maria" by Schubert. The Prelude and Fugue of B-A-C-H (Bach) was clearly played and the French school admirably depicted in a "Romance Without Words" and a "Caprice Heroique" of Bonnet. "Hope," a new work of Yon, proved fascinating as well as the wonderfully played "Caprice" of Wolstenholme.

The test of the new Kenetic blower was brought out in the closing number, "Festal March," demonstrating that there is still some squeak left in the organ, and it is hoped that a permanent organist may be provided by means of which Topeka may continue to enjoy the instrument.—Daily State Journal.

NICHOLS' TEACHING ACTIVITIES

John W. Nichols, the well-known concert and oratorio tenor, who for several seasons past has appeared with success before prominent musical organizations throughout the country in joint recital with his wife, a very talented pianist, has been selected to head the vocal department at Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., one of the largest girls' schools in this country, where he already has a large class of promising pupils, many of whom will be heard in the musical world, and several of exceptional talent who will undoubtedly make their marks in the very near future.

Mr. Nichols will spend two or three days a week at Vassar, and the rest of his time will be devoted to a large class in his New York studios at Carnegie Hall, where he is preparing many singers for church, concert and opera. Many of his pupils are now filling important engagements throughout the country, as proof of his excellent method of teaching.

During the summer Mr. Nichols has charge of the vocal department of the University of Vermont, at Burlington, Vt., where many of his New York pupils go for a vacation on beautiful Lake Champlain and to continue their vocal studies under his direction.

MAY MUKLE

Miss Mukle has been with us so steadily for the past four years that we have come to look upon this English cellist as an

MAY MUKLE

American possession. Last May, after many months in Hawaii, she made a hurried trip across the continent and sailed for England for the summer.

She was warmly greeted there upon her several appearances, among which was her Aeolian Hall, London, recital, on July 4, about which the press could hardly have said more. It was a repetition of the success attending her unusual chamber music concerts in Honolulu. Miss Mukle, in her London recital, was accompanied by her sister, Anne Mukle, who made the third of the trio with Maud Powell, here some seasons ago. For the London Aeolian Hall recital Miss Mukle played the following numbers:

Concertina after the Third Sonata.....Ariosti (1660)
Accompaniment for stringed orchestra from the figured bass by Albert Elkus; pianoforte arrangement by May Mukle; first performance
Schelomo (Solomon), Hebrew Rhapsody..Ernest Bloch
For violoncello and orchestra; version for violoncello and pianoforte by the composer; first performance in England
Five Short Pieces.....Purcell Warren
An Absent One
A Little Cradle Song
Whims
"So Seems It in My Deep Regret"
A Sunday Evening in Autumn
Two Fancies.....May Mukle
The Hamadryad
The Light Wind
Chant Elegiaque.....Florent Schmitt
Melodie.....Frank Bridge

At a second trio concert with Beatrice Langley, violin, and Harold Samuel, piano, the program included:

Trio for piano, violin and violoncello.....Maurice Ravel
Modere
Pantoum
Passacaille
Finale—auime
Passacaglia for violin and violoncello.....Handel
Repetition of Ravel Trio

Her time was too short for many appearances, but she returns to England in February for a number of dates, eight in Scotland, one with the Scottish Orchestra.

Miss Mukle gives her annual recital in New York, at Aeolian Hall, November 20, and a joint recital with Mme. Gilderoy Scott December 14, at Kimball Hall, Chicago, from there going south to Texas and returning to New York for a joint recital with Rebecca Clarke January 26, after which she sails for Europe. In the interim Miss Mukle is playing in Buffalo, Detroit—three recitals—and various appearances in the East.

This virtuosic cellist has no equal among her own sex, all critics seem to agree, and there are few among the opposite sex who enjoy the following this English girl does. Her repertoire seems unlimited, and she has a distinctive personality to which the cello seems to belong. You do not think of it as an awkward instrument for a woman when she is playing; there is a subtle grace that weds instrument and woman into a very lovely picture.

SCHUMANN-HEINK CONTINUES HER KIND ACTS TO SOLDIERS

There is hardly a day goes by without a newspaper clipping is received, from one part of the country or another, recording a kind and generous act of Schumann-Heink, that most human and dearly beloved of singers. Just recently after her Washington concert, Madame sang to an audience of 900 patients at the Walter Reed Hospital, in the Red Cross House. Later she sang in one of the wards, and rather than totally disappoint the helpless men in other wards, she had a number of her own phonograph records distributed in the hospital. In appreciation of the prima donna's kindness, the doughboys presented her with a service flag, made by themselves, containing four stars, one each for her sons in the army. They gave her also a silk pennant bearing the message, "Welcome, Mother."

FLORA ZYGMAN

Teichmueller. She played with great success the G Major Concerto by Beethoven with the Warsaw Philharmony, also giving recitals at the International Exposition in Leipzig (1914) and the largest cities in Europe. Her playing has won her the unanimous praise of the European press, and the "Przeglad Codzienny" ("Daily Outlook"), Warsaw, 1913, says of her playing:

"In the rendition of the G Major Concerto of Beethoven, Miss Flora Guenzburg showed a thorough and masterful understanding which held the audience spellbound. Her playing was earnest, intelligent and thoughtful throughout every detail. A beautiful deep tone, an unfaltering touch, splendid phrasing and perfectly developed technic proved a combination which earned for Miss Guenzburg loud and prolonged applause."

Mme. Zygman, who recently came to America, has appeared in recital in Chicago and New York with fine success.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

Wednesday evening, November 12, the first Chamber Music Society program was given in the ballroom at the Hotel Statler under the auspices of the Woman's Club.

The Cleveland Quartet made its public debut at this concert. The members of the Cleveland Quartet are Nikolai Sokoloff, first violin, who is also the conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra; Louis Edlin, second violin; Herman Kolodkin, viola, and Victor de Gomez, violoncello, all members of the Cleveland Orchestra.

They gave a varied program which was much appreciated by the "discriminating concert-goers" of Cleveland. The second program is to be given by the New York Chamber Music Society, Carolyn Beebe, director and pianist, Tuesday, November 25.

PRISCILLA WILLIAMS.

STORIES OF THE OPERA

"LA NAVE" ("THE SHIP") BY MONTEMEZZI

"La Nave" is in a prologue and three episodes, and deals allegorically with Venice and her maritime power during the sixth century, the action taking place in the year 552. The human tragedy, however, has to do with two feuded families, the Faledri nobles and the commoners, the Gratici. The prologue shows a public place in Venice. Crowds of workmen are busied on the new cathedral, on the docks, and on the covered walks. Into the square comes Orso Faledro, followed by his four sons. He curses the Gratici, who have punished him and his sons by plucking out their eyes, and hurls maledictions on the people.

A ship approaches? Basiliola, daughter of Orso, enters. Her brothers hide their faces in their cloaks, that their blindness may not be seen. Basiliola pretends to be resigned to her fate, but secretly plots the destruction of the Gratici. The ship lands, and the brothers Gratici, Marco and Sergio, appear amid acclamations of the people. Marco tells of the distant shores they have visited, of the overthrow of the barbarians and the pirates, and of the holy relics they have recovered and now bring for the cathedral. Marco is made tribune, and Sergio bishop. Basiliola comes forward and dances before Marco. She dances until, laughing and sobbing, she falls into semi-delirium, while the people curse her for her shamelessness.

Episode one shows a wooded knoll near the dike that holds back the sea. On the knoll is a deep hole wherein are confined all who have dared insult Basiliola. Basiliola comes, and the prisoners beg her to kill them. She laughs at them, when Traba, the monk, appears and prophesies her ruin. Marco intervenes, and although he realizes Basiliola's baleful influence, he turns again to her, and she, throwing aside her tunic and clad only in veils, dances before him and maddens him by painting for him dreams of greatness and triumph when he sails away to conquer the world.

In episode two Basiliola has bewitched the other brother, Sergio. We see them together in the cathedral, he being intoxicated. The people demand the return of their creed and that Basiliola, the corrupter of the church, be exiled. She fascinates the men by her beauty, and as Marco arrives she gives Sergio a sword and bids him fight his brother. The brothers fight, and Sergio is slain. Marco, sobered by the deed, stays the avenging hand of the people and bids Basiliola be bound to the altar of the Fighters of the Sea, there to await her punishment. He goes forth to prepare the ships for battle.

In the last episode the huge ship is seen ready to sail forth on the Adriatic. The people sing hymns, but Basiliola is chained to the pagan altar. Marco goes forth to do penitence for the killing of his brother. He will be accompanied by workmen of all kinds, and his voyage will be one of victory. Basiliola, seeing herself neglected, makes a last effort to win back Marco and save her life. But the captain suggests she be nailed to the prow of the ship, and this is done, giving to the close of the opera a gruesome touch and a dramatic impulse seldom equaled even in grand opera.

AN "INTER-CHURCH" CONFERENCE

H. Augustine Smith found himself back in Chicago last Friday on an interesting mission. He is a member of the Survey Committee of the Inter-Church World Movement. It is half amusing to an old-timer to note the changing years. It is easy to recall the period when it was "wicked" to do the things which are now turned to as essential factors in wide religious growth. The church once drove out agreeable and natural diversions. Now, by elaborate endeavor, it seeks to restore them. The World Movement confesses that all men are religious by instinct and that the natural sources of pleasure are as legitimate vehicles for religious expression as the strictly formal methods. Too bad that it is so long a time learning that "the way to make an indifferent thing bad is for good people to refuse to do it."

The conference enlisted the interest and counsel of such leaders as Dean Peter C. Lutkin, Osborne McConathy, Herbert Gould, Cora Mel Patten and others, and the values of drama, music, pageantry, dancing, games and festivals. Details as to their most effective use were gone into fully by Mr. Smith and discussed with a view towards a summary by the interested confreres. From the tabulation of a large group of such conferences the World Committee proposes to submit a composite estimate of values and procedure. It's a big movement, wants full weighing, and its decisions should be invaluable.

MISS BLANCHE SNIDER GIVES SONG RECITAL AT CANTON

One of the most enjoyable and artistic song recitals heard here in years was given at the M. E. Church last evening by Miss Blanche Snider, soprano, assisted by Mrs. Beulah Taylor Porter, pianist. Miss Snider is an artist of exceptional ability, and gave a program of unusual worth, which was enjoyed by a large audience. It included songs by Handel, Bishop, Purcell, Carpenter and McFadyen, sung with exquisite style and tone, and brilliant numbers, such as "Caro Nome," from "Rigoletto," in which a wonderful example of perfect technic, flexibility and breath control was displayed. Miss Snider has a charming personality, and her gentle stage manner won high commendation. The program of 20 numbers was given entirely without words. Miss Snider's training has all been with Mrs. Ellen Kinsman Mann, one of the foremost voice teachers in Chicago, who has to her credit many professionals filling concert engagements. Canton was also privileged to hear Mrs. Porter, one of Chicago's leading accompanists. Her delightful accompaniments and charming manner contributed much to the success of the evening. The ladies, who have been guests of Mrs. Snider's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Snider, returned to Chicago today.—Canton Daily Register.

BENEFIT TO ROSEMARY PFAFF

Rosemary Pfaff, the youthful coloratura soprano who has gone to New York to continue her vocal studies, was tendered a benefit concert at the Elks' Club in Oak Park on last Friday evening.

So popular has the young singer made herself in that suburb that the results of this benefit netted to her a check for $500.

MUSIC WEEK IN ST. LOUIS

"Give a Thought to Music" was the slogan which made music a fundamental part of the life of the community during Music Week, November 3 to 11. Without doubt more thought was given to music during this period than at any other time in the history of the city.

The idea of St. Louis' Music Week was first presented by Arthur G. Gaines, manager and secretary of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra. His plan expanded until it included all of the music and civic interests of the city. Headed by Mayor Henry Kiel, the campaign committee was composed of such interests as the Symphony Orchestra, music teachers and merchants, public schools and churches, as well as musicians from the various choral societies and allied interests.

Through the co-operation of teachers, receptions and music recitals were held daily. A Popular Concert given by the Symphony Orchestra and Mme. Peralta on Sunday afternoon taxed the capacity of the Coliseum. On Armistice Day the week's program culminated in a community sing, when thousands of all nationalities assembled to express thanksgiving in song in memory of the day. The impetus given music will be carried forward through the plan for organization of a Civic Music Association.

The first concert of the fortieth season of the Symphony Society and Orchestra called forth a record audience on Friday afternoon, November 14. The orchestra, under the able direction of Max Zach, conductor, presented a well-chosen program under most favorable conditions. The orchestra has been increased to a membership of eighty-one, which makes far greater breadth and volume of tone. The soloist, Sophie Braslau, contralto, was most satisfactory in her aria from "Semiramide." A little recognition of American art on a program composed entirely of foreign compositions would create better feeling on the part of many.

Mrs. Anna Froman, formerly of St. Louis and Music News staff, was a visitor to the city recently. Mrs. Froman has a large class of pupils in Clinton, Mo., and is soloist in church work. What St. Louis loses Clinton gains in having Mrs. Froman's musical genius a factor in the community.

CAMEO SALON

The program of the Cameo Salon on Sunday night was all-American.

Elizabeth Guion Dormer read a beautiful personal tribute to the work and memory of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and the editor of Music News made a short address on "Americanization of Music."

Two Indian girls (of the Cherokees) gave very interesting native songs and dances.

Mme. Hannah Butler sang a group of songs with great effect, her enunciation of English text being beautiful. Her numbers included Fisher, La Forge and Penn.

Cleveland Bohnet played again the atmospheric piano pieces by Grun and Griffes which so delighted the Lockport Festival audience, and good accompaniments were provided wherever necessary by Mrs. Edward Miller.

There was a distinguished list of visitors, including Miss Georgia Kober and Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Clark.

FLORENCE MACBETH'S GREAT HEART

"How about the house? I hope you haven't sold it all out," said Miss Macbeth to Mr. Oberfelder, the promoter of her recital in Denver, the day before the event. "Why, yes," he said, "as a matter of fact every seat went a week or two ago when they heard you were coming. But no, not exactly, because I have two or three special boxes which I always keep in reserve." "Then I want the soldier boys from the local recuperation hospital to come in and occupy those boxes." "Great," said Mr. Oberfelder, "but there is not much time to arrange with the authorities." "Oh! we'll get the Denver Post on the job and they will fix it." Accordingly Mr. Oberfelder got busy, made arrangements with the Denver Post and on the evening of the concert sure enough the delighted convalescent soldiers were present and enjoyed a great musical treat, thanks to the kindly thought of Miss Macbeth, the energy of Mr. Oberfelder and the co-operation of the Post.

But this was not the only incident occurring in connection with Miss Macbeth's Denver appearance, for seated in the theater as her own special guests were a poor flower seller and her little daughter. "I am a daughter of Italy," she had written, "and heard you sing on more than one occasion in my native land. Then I was enjoying affluence and social standing. We came to America, I, my husband and little daughter, then my husband died. Today I am selling flowers in this city, and though I would give all I have to hear you again, I cannot because my means are gone, but I am coming to catch a glimpse of you to remind me of the happy days of long ago." She came with her little daughter and was overcome when she found herself treated as the most honored guest the house contained; and during the recital anyone could have seen her listening enrapturedly—with tears of joy and gratitude rolling down her cheeks—to the same little girl she had once admired and enjoyed in her native land.

FLORENCE MACBETH AT DENVER

"This wonderful coloratura the star of the course."

So said the Denver Post of November 5, 1919, which was no less generous than the Denver Times in its praise of the wonderful songstress, its critic, among many other eulogies, saying:

"The third of the Oberfelder concert series at the Auditorium Tuesday night brought to Denver music lovers another vocalist who has of late created quite a stir in musical circles and has won her way to the top among the coloratura sopranos of this country.

She has done this in spite of being an American with none of the traditions of any European school to back her up. Florence Macbeth sang, and Denver agreed, it was quite evident from her reception, that the advance praise was not overenthusiastic. She has a sweet, true voice of great natural charm and beauty, one of the kind that reaches out and strikes a note of sympathy. More especially in her upper register does her voice have an appealing beauty. She has an excellent high E flat.

"The concert was quite as delightful and as satisfying as all of the Oberfelder series has been, and once more drives home the fact that the best in music can be given at a sane and sensible price when there is an auditorium of such seating capacity as we have."

A LETTER TO MR. KINGMAN

Mayor's Office, Kingston, Canada.
November 11, 1919.

To Tracy J. Kingman, Chicago.

Dear Mr. Kingman: I wish to thank Miss Charlotte Bergh, Miss Mary Shaw, Mrs. Edna Wheeler Ballard and yourself on behalf of the Civic Committee for the wonderful program given for the Prince of Wales at our civic dinner.

The prince was most enthusiastic about the beautiful work done, and we were more than delighted with it.

Very sincerely,

INNOVATION OF SYMPHONY LECTURES A SUCCESS IN MILWAUKEE

William Boeppler, the enterprising director of the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music, aided and abetted by Miss Margaret Rice, who is managing the local season of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, is giving a rare opportunity to the music lovers of Milwaukee—and those who are in a fair way to become music lovers if they are properly given half a chance—to gain a large and pleasing dose of knowledge in a short leisure hour and thereby learn to enjoy fully what some now only care for from a sense of duty.

Each Friday evening preceding the Monday evening Symphony concerts at Pabst Theater explanatory lectures on the symphonies will be given free to music students of Milwaukee and patrons of the concerts, at Stephenson Hall.

To give credit where credit is due, it must be announced that the proposition was put up generally and response came generously. Mr. Boeppler tendered the use of the hall, and among volunteers lecturing are Frank Olin Thompson, pianist; W. H. Williamson, organist and director of St. Paul's Church and Temple Emanu-El, and Alexander MacFadyen, pianist and composer (all members of the faculty of Wiscosin Conservatory); Otto Miessner, head of music department of Normal School, and prominent in all music movements; Jacob Moerschel, of piano department of Normal School, and widely known as a progressive pedagog; Miss Adeline Ricker, one of the most popular of Milwaukee's musicians and an advanced teacher, and Miss Ella Smith, a brilliant pianist and teacher who has also achieved literary success.

The first lecture on the "Eroica" Symphony was given by Miss Ricker, interestingly and entertainingly, and very much pleased her audience.

—Courtesy Milwaukee Journal.

Top row—Otto Meissner, Frank Olin Thompson, W. H. Williamson.
Bottom row—Adeline Ricker, Jacob Moerschel, Ella Smith.

This idea has not been tried out before in Milwaukee on any large scale, and those interested, starting with Miss Rice and Mr. Boeppler and the volunteer lecturers, are to be congratulated, for they are not only making a pleasant way now, but are building an appreciative public for the future, and it is a means of bringing the students of the various schools together, a fraternizing that cannot help but develop mutual interests.

All seven of the musicians who are to lecture are from among the busiest of people, and their worth will increase the general appreciation of the lectures as the season progresses. Even though familiar with the symphonic works, it is pleasant to have the memory refreshed.

MILWAUKEE AUDITORIUUM ORCHESTRA CONCERT

The following program was given on Sunday afternoon, November 16, at the Milwaukee Auditorium, Herman A. Zeitz conducting:

March—Milwaukee's Finest ..... H. A. Zeitz
Phantasy—Aida ..... Verdi
Berceuse ..... Jarnefelt
Praeludium ..... Jarnefelt
Waltz—Roses from the South ..... Strauss
Overture—Mignon ..... Ambroise Thomas
Moment Musical ..... Schubert-Stock
Intermezzo from Naila ..... Delibes
American Patrol ..... Meachem

Milwaukee launched its season of "Pop" concerts with a program designed especially to attract and entertain the masses. It began promptly at 3:30 p. m. and ended just as promptly at 5 p. m., and six encores were given, at that.

There has been a great amount of talk about support for the orchestra this season, and a certain amount of new interest in it, but as it is a municipal orchestra it is a little difficult to get a number of the right sort of individuals interested to the extent of boosting by personal attendance and seeing to it that others not in the habit of attending form a new habit, from civic pride, if nothing else. This first concert was fairly well attended, but far from what it should be. Granted the orchestra is not a great one numerically or in artistic finish, it played very acceptably, and those present showed that they enjoyed it by asking for encores.

Filling the seats means backing the orchestra financially, and a few dollars' backing will soon see Milwaukee with its own symphony orchestra taking the place it should among the other big symphonies of the country. Musicians particularly are apt to look with contempt upon the idea of spending time on things musical that have not some high standard, but this is not the way they have reached their own success. Every effort to do something well, with ambition to make it better, and finally best, deserves co-operation. The biggest and best have come out in the open and declared that all music has its place, from jazz to Church music. Show the other party your interest, and they will return it.

Building a symphony orchestra in any community is a long, difficult task, but it is the final establishment of a high musical standard in a community and in a city the size of Milwaukee, with its enormous musical population, those engaged in music alone should be able to start the tumbleweed with a push of velocity that would keep it going and growing.

The conductor, Herman Zeitz, and his musicians are proving their belief in the need of the community, and their faith in the future, by giving largely of time and talent. Their work is worthy of all the support Milwaukee can give, for their first performance of the season augurs well and they gave those present a very pleasant hour and a half.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

Fanning-Turpin

The singer who achieves a certain high level and then holds to that throughout a comprehensive list of difficult songs is hard to find, but Cecil Fanning is one of these. He gave at Kimball Hall last evening his first public recital in Chicago, although he has had some semi-public appearances in the city.

An artist who is a favorite in New York and Boston, and for that matter throughout the country, who has sung with distinguished success in London, too, should draw in Chicago as well as elsewhere, and his unquestioned success last night will undoubtedly establish Mr. Fanning on Chicago's preferred list.

He has a baritone voice of beautiful quality which he uses with such a satisfying mastery of vocal resource that his singing might well be a model for others to follow. Old French arias and modern songs were equally well interpreted. A striking ballade of Leowe's, "Archibald Douglas," was given most emphatically. There were also settings to four of Mr. Fanning's poems and several songs especially composed for him.

A marked feature of the recital was the complete understanding of the singer with his accompanist, H. B. Turpin, which made the songs actually beautifully balanced duets. A good-sized audience received every number so enthusiastically that numerous additions were made to the scheduled list.—Henrietta Weber in Chicago Herald.

Minnie Hauk, Famous Opera Singer, Is Blind and Penniless

New York, Nov. 5.—From the golden heights attained through her golden voice; from wealth, the friendship of royalty, world-wide fame; from an apparently sheltered haven where, assisting young artists, entertaining graciously her American compatriots and wearing the halo of her glorious past, she still enjoyed comfort, respect and admiration—Minnie Hauk, once grand opera queen of America and especially of New York, now poor and blind and alone, stretches hands of entreaty across the seas to the land and the city of her birth.

Minnie Hauk, according to news recently conveyed to the many friends and admirers, is so poor that she has sold her jewels to buy bread. She is widowed, her titled husband, Baron Ernest von Hesse-Wartegg, having died a year ago. She is practically blind and can hardly grope her way from room to room of the villa on the shores of Lake Lucerne, once occupied by Richard Wagner, but her home for years.

She writes piteously: "My only desire is to be laid side by side in my poor husband's grave. It is hard to think of my past brilliant career and all I did for the needy, singing everywhere for benevolent concerts and entertaining hundreds of people here at Tribschen—and to find myslf now, in my great need, without a friend at Lucerne! Oh, to find help to get me over this awful crisis in my sad helplessness, a great deal owing also to my awful affliction in not being able to see and help myself. I have only a short time to live. Don't you think that Americans ought not to let one of their noted singers, who did so much for art all over the world, waste and nearly kill herself by worry and weeping?"

New York's Nightingale

Minnie Hauk has been called "New York's own nightingale," for she was born there November 16, 1852. As a girl she sang in Christ Church choir while continuing her studies. And her first operatic appearance was made in this city when she sang Norma in Brooklyn in 1869.

She appeared at the Academy of Music for a number of years and it was here that she first sang the name part of "Carmen," the first time the opera ever was given in this country, October 23, 1878. A few years later she appeared in the same role at the Metropolitan. She also created it at Covent Garden in London.

She sang "Carmen" 600 times, and all over the world. For though Minnie Hauk was American born and made her first success in her native land, her fame was international. Few musicians from the United States have ever appeared in so many different parts of the globe. The beautiful American singer was a tremendous favorite with royalties of the last century. She sang at all the European courts, and when the empress of Russia was ill Minnie Hauk was invited to the palace and sang in a room adjoining the great lady's bedroom. The grand duke of Mecklenburg, the grand duke of Baden and many German potentates entertained her.

Receives Many Decorations

She sang before the imperial court of Japan, the royal court of Siam and the court of the sultan of Lahore, in India. She has been called the most decorated woman in the world, having received medals from the king of the Belgians, the king of Spain, the emperor of Russia and many other crowned heads.

She married the Baron Ernest von Hesse-Wartegg in 1881, an Austrian author and explorer who had written many books on Asia and the Orient. Unlike many prima donnas, Minnie Hauk married but once, and until his death her husband lived with her in the Villa Tribschen at Lucerne when they were not traveling. He often accompanied her to this country, where she made her farewell appearances in 1891. Despite his personal celebrity, he frequently was called "Mr. Minnie Hauk" while traveling about the United States, to the amusement of himself and his wife.—Marguerite M. Marshall in Chicago Journal.

Gustaf Holmquist

Mr. Holmquist is a finished artist, showing wonderful training and musicianship. He displays perfect control of his voice, presenting his big dramatic numbers with as much ease as his lighter, more delicate selections. He commands a wide range of tone and sings with artistry and ease. — South Bend Tribune.

South Bend music-lovers rarely have the opportunity to hear a singer of the caliber of Gustaf Holmquist, basso, of Chicago. Mr. Holmquist possesses a bass-baritone voice of rare beauty and uses it with artistic purpose and technical finesse. The beauty of his tone and his mastery of the legato was manifest in the smooth, melodic flow of Bischoff's "If God So Clothe the Grass." The "Boat Song," which followed, was presented with a lightness and grace rarely heard in bass singing, in addition to being tonally beautiful. . . . His final group consisted of Negro Spirituals, to which the rich resonance of his voice and his exceptional tone control added infinite charm.—South Bend News-Times, South Bend, Ind.

Cecil Fanning in New York

Cecil Fanning and H. B. Turpin are always welcome visitors in Aeolian Hall, not only because each of them is a real artist, but because their team work is so remarkably good. It reminds one of Sir George Henschel when he sang a Liszt song and accompanied himself on the piano. Such intimate co-operation is rare in the musical world. Year in and year out these two men have performed together, delighting lovers of good singing and piano playing all over the country. The English composer and conductor, Sir Landon Ronald, recently wrote a long article in which he said that the accompanist at a song recital, if good, should be accorded as much honor and praise as the singer. In the present case one can do this; Mr. Turpin is a splendid accompanist.

Mr. Fanning posesses one of the most agreeable baritones now on the stage, and he has it thoroughly under his control; it has grown more sonorous since his last visit here, and he has gained in eloquence and confidence. One thing he must guard against: Like others who boast a fine voice, he cannot always resist the temptation to choose a poor song because it suits his voice well; last night's program bore witness to this. Some of the songs were applauded not because they were good but because they were so effectively sung. However, they all do it. Maurice Renaud went so far as to say that "singers do not love mastersongs."

This cannot be said of Mr. Fanning. He has plenty of mastersongs in his repertory and makes good use of them. A case in point was Loewe's highly dramatic ballad, "Archibald Douglas," which he sang last night; he made it an exciting miniature music drama, to the great delight of the audience. Another superb climax was attained at the close of an aria from Mehul's "Joseph en Egypte." Gretry, Monsigny, Duparc, Bemberg, and Debussy were other French composers represented.

The last two groups were made up of songs by American composers, all of them either to poems by Mr. Fanning or dedicated to him. Two Indians in the audience, after hearing Cadman's "The Doeskin Blanket," declared it "wasn't Indian." But it was a good song, all the same.

Marie and Josephine Kryl

Misses Marie and Josy Kryl scored a triumph last evening at their joint recital, given at the Lawrence Memorial Chapel. The audience was almost swept off its feet by the magnificent artistry of the two young women. At the very start of the recital they were enthusiastically applauded, but as the recital drew toward the closing numbers the applause came in storms, and they were called back to the platform again and again.

Miss Marie Kryl, pianist, who has shared honors with Mme. Galli-Curci at a recital in New York City, displayed a remarkable polish and technic in her playing. With the greatest poise and ease imaginable, this young artist tosses off the most difficult passages. Her mastery of the art of painting tone pictures is seldom equaled.

Miss Josy Kryl, violinist, has shared honors with the great Ysaye and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. This young woman displays an astounding knowledge of technic that should mark her as one of the most promising of the younger artists. Her playing shows remarkable emotional qualities. Her appearance on the platform was always a signal for a burst of applause. These young artists, who are daughters of the famous band director and soloist, Bohumir Kryl, both show a remarkable polish and finish in their playing which should win numberless successes for them.

Mischa Kottler, a young man of remarkable ability, accompanied Miss Josy Kryl. He shows a mastery of technic that marks him a true prodigy.—Appleton Daily Post, November 5, 1919.

Josef Konecny at Danville

The Randolph-Macon Institute formally opened its concert season by eminent musicians on Friday night with a delightful concert by Josef Konecny, Bohemian violin virtuoso, assisted by soprano and pianist.

Mr. Konecny is a master in musical interpretation, playing with brilliancy and finish selections of great technical difficulty and the works of the great masters of the violin. While he proved his artistry in all his programmed numbers, his playing of Paganini's Concerto in D and a caprice by the same master aroused most enthusiasm from his audience, among whom the critical were impressed by his wonderful technic, perfect control of the bow and his intricate and difficult feats in harmonics and double-stops. The climax of his great playing was reached in his final number, a Bohemian dance by Sevcik, characteristic of the fire and esprit of that people, a number contrasting melody with terrific tempo, and affording scope for the display of all the violin technics in double harmonics, tenths, octaves and pizzicato, as well as beautiful melodies.

The violinist responded three times with encores, playing a Hauser berceuse, a dainty serenade, and at the close the soulful and impressive Ave Maria.—Danville (Va.) Register.

Frederick Gunster in Chicago

W. L. Hubbard wrote as follows recently in the Chicago Tribune:

Frederick Gunster, the New York tenor, gave a song recital yesterday afternoon before the Lake View Musical Society, being assisted by Mae Doelling, solo pianist, and Alma Birmingham, accompanist. Mr. Gunster, whose work has won him favor in the East, is the possessor of a voice of natural beauty, carefully schooled and skillfully used. It inclines rather to the suave, the ingratiating and the soft than to the robust, the resonant and the aggressive, but it is none the less a voice of good power and capable of effective dramatic expression.

Heard yesterday in a group of French songs and in five Grieg selections, he proved himself an interpreter of excellent parts. His diction is clear and accurate, yet free from exaggeration and affectation; his handling of the musical phrase discloses good musicianship and taste, and he grasps the poetic meaning of the texts and makes it potent with his hearers. All in all, a singer possessed of fine abilities and one listened to with sincere satisfaction.

May Peterson at Columbia

Columbians and fair week visitors listened with keen delight to the recital given last evening at the high school auditorium by Miss May Peterson, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company. It seemed just the sort of entertainment to top off a gala day and give the people, tired out with noise and crowds and confusion, a complete contrast thereto, at the same time sustaining in a subtle way the prevalent spirit of joy and the mood of pleasure. What other singer who can be called to mind could have achieved this so successfully as did May Peterson with her radiant beauty, her gracious, generous, animated youth and her exquisite voice?

Because her audience last night made her know beyond a doubt that they liked and appreciated her singing she disregarded empty seats and in a delightfully intimate way sang to those persons who were there far beyond her program's bounds, adding a half-dozen or more encores. These included several special requests, among them "Dixie," which surely was never livelier nor lovelier, and Cadman's "The Land of the Sky Blue Water," "Comin' Through the Rye" and "The Last Rose of Summer."

It's a recital like that of last night that strengthens one's confidence in the esthetic and artistic future of America and warms one's pride in its development up to the present time. May Peterson is a delightful example of the modern American girl of real gift and of high, steady musical purpose. Her interpretative method is characterized by a simplicity which springs from intelligent conservation, temperamental warmth and human feeling which she possesses to marked degree but which she is unwilling to let overflow at any time into emotionalism. Thus to her finished technic, her fresh, rarely beautiful and abundant voice she adds unerring good taste.

It seems unnecessary again to enumerate her selections, which were printed in advance of her recital; sufficient to say that they ran the whole gamut from Mozart and Massenet opera arias, through French, Swedish and Russian song groups to a Scotch ballad and a Southern negro spiritual, and all had the common characteristics of luscious, colorful tones, of vocal and physical poise and of musical eloquence; these combined with refreshing spontaneity and the requisite variety of mood.

The Columbia Afternoon Music Club, under the auspices of which Manager Brown brought Miss Peterson to Columbia, marked the singer up last evening as one who will be wanted here again and who, should she return, will certainly be welcomed with a house of more apppropriate size. — The Columbia (S. C.) State.

Walter Spry's Chicago Piano Recital

Walter Spry celebrated his twenty-five years of artistic activity by giving a public recital in Kimball Hall last night, and virtually every pianist in town was there to honor him. Mr. Spry's pedagogic abilities have too often been demonstrated to require detailed or reiterated acknowledgment here. His talents as solo pianist are not less worthy of commendation. This year Mr. Spry plays better than ever.—Herman Devries in the Chicago American.

Mr. Spry put forth an easy elegance, a fancy for nice tonal effects, a musical reading and a mechanism and manipulation which were more than adequate for the complete representation of his program. He won the plaudits of the audience by his artistic qualifications, and his quarter of a century piano fete was attended by a genuine artistic success.—Maurice Rosenfeld in the Chicago Daily News.

Carleton H. Bullis at Appleton

A real treat was given to the students in chapel Wednesday morning by the conservatory department. Dean Evans gave a talk on how the chapel happened to be equipped with the beautiful pipe organ that now predominates there. Dean Evans also went into detail and explained the construction of the instrument and how it is operated. The organ is not complete in every respect, but space has been allowed for additions.

Professor Carleton Henry Bullis, instructor of pipe organ at the conservatory, followed the talk by rendering the following selections on the organ:

Fanfare ..... Lemmens
Movement from New World Symphony ..... Dvorak
Gavotte ..... Thomas

Professor Bullis showed real talent and ability in the selections he gave and they were enjoyed immensely by the audience.

The first of a series of faculty recitals was given November 14 by Professor Bullis, organist, and Marion Ramsey Waterman, soprano. These faculty concerts have always been very popular in former years. This season promises to be especially good. The new chapel organ facilitates the work of the organ department and makes possible the big programs planned by the conservatory.

THE NEW ORGAN

The organ is one of the finest in the country. It is of the invisible type; the two organ chambers are entirely inclosed, and the sound issues through a set of shutters which are electrically opened and closed.

Only the keyboards, stops, pedals and convenient movements for the player are visible. Some of the largest pedal pipes are placed above and across the stage, partly hidden by grilles in the ceiling. An electric blowing plant installed in the basement of the chapel furnishes compressed air which feeds the windchests of the organ. Current for the action of the organ is furnished by a low-voltage generator. The pipes are constructed of metal and wood. As wood pipes produce the most soft and mellow tones, this organ gives varied effects, some of which vibrate through the entire building. There is a solo flute and clarinet stop and salicional of exquisite quality, closely resembling an orchestra.

Tone colors of almost infinite range and effects ranging from the most delicate pianissimos to the jubilant climaxes are produced by the new organ. Swell boxes fitted with movable shutters permit variety of shading. The instrument was built by the J. W. Steere & Son Organ Company of Springfield.

Raymond Wilson in Chicago

The recitalist proved himself a pianist of substantial qualities. He has gained a technical mastery which enables him to win brilliancy, good dynamic variety, and no inconsiderable beauty from his instrument, and he employs these essentials with a taste and skill that tell of intelligent musicianship. He succeeds in holding the interest of his hearers and in making the piano an agreeable and appealing instrument. And to do this is to do much. He read the MacDowell Sonata with enjoyable breadth and with good appreciation of its virile, healthy, outdoorsy sentiment and lent much of tonal charm to many of its more lyrical moments. The Pugno Serenade proved attractive, and the transcription of "The Lark" disclosed the facility, clarity and cleanness of the player's technic, in admirable light.—W. L. Hubbard in Chicago Tribune.

"A piano recital which brought forth both older classics and new American compositions was that which Raymond Wilson presented at the Ziegfeld Theater yesterday morning. It was Mr. Wilson's first Chicago appearance and he accomplished his premiere with evident success. Mr. Wilson has plenty of strength and a technical endowment which is sure and fleet, and he also has a taste for the more sustained and musical passages of the pieces which he performs. In the Mozart Fantasie he showed a taste for tone shading, for good phrasing and for lucidity of style. The Chopin Scherzo was dashed off with considerable brilliance and the middle section was given with a warm, singing tone.—Maurice Rosenfeld in Chicago Daily News.

Dr. Muck Protests

When poor Dr. Muck was hounded from America and the Boston Symphony by an unappreciative republic he returned to the sanctuary of Berlin, but not in chastened mood. He proclaimed to the admiring German public that ignorant American officials had arrested him on the ground that his innocent musical scores contained a code of communication. But news of this statement enraged the ignorant officials, and they told on him. What they told shows Dr. Muck as anything but innocent.

The eminent (not to say notorious) conductor's letters of deception to a young woman of Boston have been this week made public. Therein a comprehensive vocabulary of vituperation is taxed. Among the epithets he applied to the American public, are: pack of swine, rabble, vulgar crowd, curs, and, again, dogs and swine. Intimate relations with Count Von Bernstorff are revealed, showing Dr. Muck as an invaluable agent of German propaganda. Even the few persons who once sincerely believed Dr. Muck to be a victim of circumstances are now enabled, through these partial revelations of the Secret Service, to see what a curly and palpitant snake was cherished in the cold, classic bosom of Boston.

Florence Macbeth at Akron

An audience which filled Music Hall to capacity was delighted and thrilled with the art of Florence Macbeth on Friday afternoon. It is not only that Miss Macbeth is the possessor of a beautiful voice which she uses with intelligence, but that she has a most unusual charm, as was illustrated by an incident at the close of her program.

Even without her usual accompanist, who was delayed by train service, a triumph was achieved, for a local lady, Mrs. Katherine Bruot, was hastily summoned and went through the whole difficult program without a rehearsal. That Mrs. Bruot acquitted herself splendidly was realized by the audience, and Miss Macbeth reflected the feeling perfectly when, at the close of the Gilberte waltz song, she took Mrs. Bruot's hand in her own and expressed in her own naive way that everything had been just as she would have it and that in future visits to Akron she would be honored to have Mrs. Bruot accompany her.

And then, following her custom, she sang "Annie Laurie" as a fitting closing to the program.

Miss Macbeth's recital was the opening of the afternoon series which the Tuesday Musical Club is offering, but it is a perfectly safe assertion that at no concert, afternoon or evening, has a more delightful artist appeared or one who so immediately charmed the hearts of the audience. The program was preponderantly and fragrantly classic, and the spontaneity of applause demonstrated beyond a doubt that Miss Macbeth possesses the art of making beautiful everything she touches.—Akron (Ohio) Journal.

Flora Zygman in New York

Following are a few extracts from the New York press in relation to the very successful piano recital given by Flora Zygman at Aeolian Hall in that city last Thursday afternoon.

"Mme. Flora Zygman, a young Polish woman who has given recitals in Russia and Germany and who recently arrived in this country, made her New York debut yesterday at Aeolian Hall.

"Mme. Zygman is evidently an artist who possesses an admirable technical equipment and more than ordinary musical intelligence. Especially in the Chopin group she displayed a keen emotional sensitiveness which never descended to exaggeration and throughout she controlled this side of her nature by taste and a sense of balance."—New York Tribune.

"Mme. Flora Zygman played a program containing several unusual Russian works as well as a Sonata by Beethoven and a Chopin group. She has good technic and equipment and gave effective interpretations. Her Chopin numbers were skillfully played, arousing enthusiastic applause.

"In addition to her gifts as pianist she is most attractive to look upon, which is a real asset to a concert artist."—New York Herald.

"Mme. Zygman showed a conjuror's power at the keyboard, a polychromatic technique in wholly unknown trifles of Szymanowski, Michalowski and Bortkjewicz. She won applause in a MacDowell Polonaise, a vigorous Theme and Variations by Chevillard, melodious airs of Scarlatti and Rachmaninoff and a Chopin group, in which last she found more than do most players of an influence from the barbaric, ancient East."

"Star Opera" Artists Sing Unmolested

For the benefit of the members of the late Star Opera Company, the prolonged death-throes of which came finally to an end at the Lexington Theater on October 28, a concert was given in the same theater on the evening of November 2.

Cordons of husky policemen were in evidence inside the theater and out, but they were wholly unnecessary. Nobody showed any particular interest in the event, not even the Teuton music-lover, and the receipts, said to be in the neighborhood of $1,300, will not, when divided among the seventy members of the comapny, make any of them especially wealthy.

The German language was conspicuous by its absence, and the program was offered in English, French, Italian and Latin by Bernhard Koenig, Viola Graham, Mary Schiller, Miriam Ardini, Albertina Babst, Harriet Behnee, Emilio Blazevic, Salvatore Solte and Hans Steiner. Irish songs were also featured by Teles Longtin. Edward Grasse, blind violinist, was the only artist appearing who was not a member of the company.—Musical America.

Anthony Linden in Minneapolis

Anthony Linden, the soloist, revealed himself as the artist of which he has already given glimpses in his ensemble and obligato work with the orchestra. His tone in all positions is musical and sweet and in the high register of much brilliancy. The Symphony Orchestra always has had skilled flutists, but never one with such poetic conceptions as in his playing of the concertino in D by Chaminade or the "Wind Among the Trees" caprice by Briccialdi. Quite enthusiastically received, he played extra and with equal skill and refinement an allegretto by Godard and "Au Bord d'un Ruisseau" by Boisdeffre, the latter with harp accompaniment by Henry J. Williams.—Minneapolis Journal.

NINA TARASOVA, ELFIN SINGER, DENOTES SPIRIT OF RUSSIA

"Who is this little person," writes Evelyn Heneker, in the New York Telegraph, "for all the world like a mischievous kitten, with the most alert grey-green eyes and tiny, provocative features, framed by a rebellious mass of copper hair? It is little Nina Tarasova, who has come to America, bringing with her the spirit of Russia, not only as a singer of the national folk songs but inadvertently in the expression of her own personality. Miss Tarasova took an instant liking to America and Americans. Why? 'Because,' as she expresses it, 'you are so natural; it is like people that are well born—they do not go by rules, because they need not do so; they know by their instinct what is right. It is so with your American people. You are healthy. Why do I say that? Because you always laugh! It is not so in Europe. I have lived in Germany, and found their jokes heavy. In France it is the "double entendre," a play of words, but never the healthy fund of the American, who sees humor in the most ordinary events of the day.' The little singer went on sadly that there is no humor in her beloved Russia. There joy is closely akin to tears. 'Our moujiks weep when they are drunk,' she said. 'They are never noisy. Our songs are sad, even for the joyous occasion. A young boy will meet a village girl. They sing so'——. She hummed a few haunting bars, sotto voce, ending with a long-drawn tragic, 'Ah, and yet they are happy. We have no comedy in Russia. Our nation loves the drama, and all is tragedy.'"

FIVE NEW SACRED SONGS BY GRANT-SCHAEFER

Church singers will welcome four sacred songs for high and low voice by G. A. Grant-Schaefer from the press of the Arthur P. Schmidt Co., Boston: "Praise the Lord With Exultation" (Psalm 117), particularly suitable for Thanksgiving, and of a brilliant character; "Sing to the Lord a Glad New Song" (Psalm 98), based upon the traditional Hebrew shophar calls, effective for church recitals; "From Out the Depths to Thee I Cry" (Psalm 130), a song of dramatic quality, and "Up to the Hills I Lift Mine Eyes" (Psalm 121), a quiet and sustained melody, which is built up to a superb climax. They have also issued a Christmas song, entitled "Tidings of Great Joy," for high and low voices. It contains the complete Christmas text and has all the characteristic joyousness that it demands. It was very beautifully sung last Christmas by the late Mrs. Cora Libberton from the manuscript, as was also the Ninety-eighth psalm.

John McCormack Sings on His Tenth American Anniversary

On Sunday evening, November 9, John McCormack gave his one hundredth New York recital.

Ten years ago the tenor appeared at Manhattan Opera House under Oscar Hammerstein. At least 750,000 people have heard the Irish tenor in the one hundred concerts, besides his appearances at Metropolitan Opera House. Last week the Beethoven Association presented John McCormack, Jacques Thibaud, Harold Bauer and others in a concert given at Aeolian Hall. Well, the house was not filled because the management tried to save money at the expense of publicity. Those who attempt to promote their talents, and others who plunge in entertainments without the usual publicity will always fail to draw. John McCormack on his one hundredth concert attracted at least 5,000 people at the Hippodrome. The lesson of publicity is evident. I didn't admire the selections; the usual classics, save for two Haendel Arias, were absent. I presume Mr. McCormack must have suffered from a cold, for he was not in very good voice, still he is always able to satisfy his listeners. One song was rendered in the usual McCormack style, "Only You," by his accompanist, Edwin Schneider. The song is agreeable and melodious; if all the vocalists could sing it with the same devotion, feeling and ardor as McCormack did it, then Edwin Schneider's song is apt to become as popular as any of the American songs. The usual encores were granted, one by del Riego called "Thank God for a Garden," and on one instance a fervent admirer shouted from the upper house the name of a song which was not understood by anyone, but an encore was given anyway. The program was opened with "Come se ti vedro" and "Mio Caro bene," both by Haendel. There were songs by Graham Pell, Arthur Foote, Charles Marshall, Arthur Whiting; an Irish group of four songs, two by H. T. Burleigh, and one by John Melvin. The assisting artist was Winston Wilkinson, violinist.

New York Symphony Will Tour Europe

Under the direction of Mr. Walter Damrosch the Symphony Society of New York is to undertake a tour of eight weeks throughout France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Italy and England. The first concert will be given at the National Academy of Music in Paris on May 4, 6 and 9, 1920.

Walter Antony Says Publicity Helps the Known and Unknown Artists

The well known critic, Mr. Walter Antony, takes the opportunity to preach publicity, which is a necessary tool for the artist as well as the musician. Following are his comments on the subject:

"The musician, the professor, the player must contribute to the support of the musical publications; if they fail to advertise they become their own enemies and against their own material interest. The professor who refuses to advertise kills his success, and also of those who make efforts for the development of music in the community. How does one expect help from a newspaper to promote a musician if the latter does not help his own career?"

These utterances by one of the well known critics should be a lesson to those who believe that publicity is not a necessity.

First Audition of the Season by Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra

Some two seasons ago and ever since our critics were erring about the origin of the composer Dvorsky.

Joseph Hoffman reckoned in him a coming musical light, and so brought him out in his own recitals. At that time Dvorsky was noticed conspicuously by the colleagues of the press, but their erring went so far as to suspect Hoffman of being this same Dvorsky. Previous to the appearance of the Philadelphia Orchestra the press notices crept out and the mystery was solved. Dvorsky is a Polish musician inhabiting Pau, a city of France. Mr. Leopold Stokowski had all the reasons of bringing to the attention of his audiences Dvorsky's composition "The Haunted Castle." Here is a work that's full of color, of harmony and individuality. Dvorsky may have thought of Wagner, but he himself has something to say. He is a colorist, and while many composers have depicted the wind and storms by the medium of their various talents, Dvorsky gives us in "The Haunted Castle" a splendid description of the storm and the wind through very characteristic passages of the strings. In every orchestra, and of the very best, the Philadelphia must be included as a fine organization, you will notice some unwelcome noises emitted from the trumpets or trombones, and this happened in the Dvorsky work, as well as in the Rienzi overture, otherwise played effectively. "The brass" came out, only rarely, to cause a dissonant sound. Perhaps encouraged by the subscribed fund of one million dollars, Mr. Leopold Stokowski, the conductor, aimed to emphasize that the public's subsidy will not be a vain effort. He is an elegant, refined and manly leader. Highly musical and a musician of high standing, Mr. Stokowski gave us a superb reading of the Seventh Symphony by Beethoven. The allegretto was a classic as far as the execution and the direction was concerned. The whole symphony was given a superb rendition, even if the reeds section did not always play flawlessly. The overture to the "Sharpshooter" (Der Freischutz) by Weber, was a joy to the ears. The most distinguished audience ever witnessed at an orchestral concert was present, and its size demonstrated what the Philadelphia Orchestra with its leader means not only to the Quaker City, but to the Metropolis itself. Their occasional trips to New York are not vain efforts. And, oh joy and glory, the concert ended at 10 o'clock because Mr. Stokowski conducts the movements of a symphony without pauses.

The Symphony Orchestra of New York

Walter Damrosch gave himself wholeheartedly to French music on the afternoon of November 13. He featured D'Judy's "Linfonia Brevis de Belle Gallico." Before listening to a repetition of the work I can again assert that troublesome days never inspire the arts. Individual sorrows may inspire one, but when the whole world is in distress then all are engulfed in the circumstantial catastrophe. D'Judy's work being a "war inspiration" may be compared to the war poems of Kipling. That Richard Aldrich of the Times, supposed to be an authoritative critic, should analyze Turina's "The Processional of Rocio" when Mr. Damrosch substituted it with overture to "Le Roi d' Y" by Lalo, is a matter of surprise to this writer. Mr. Aldrich condemns a work that was never featured. Poor Turina! A sheriff would have been more lenient. The orchestra played also Debussy's "Berceuse Heroique" (dedicated to the King of Belgium and his subjects) and "Oux Etoiles" by Duparc. Ossip Gabrilowitsch was the soloist.

Flora Zygman in Recital

It looks as though Chicago is going to embed itself in the hearts of the music lovers inhabiting the congested city of New York. The third pianist to come from the Windy City is Flora Zygman, who gave a recital at Aeolian Hall on Thursday afternoon, November 13. There was not a large audience, but the pianist seemed not to have been affected in her playing. She gave an exhibition at the piano such as only few women musicians have ever equaled. She came unheralded, but her return will be watched, and it is expected to draw large audiences. Her program was varied and ambitious, enlisting not only the old masters but new ones, too. She was heard in Sonata Opus 1, No. 2, by Beethoven, and in the Pastorale by Scarlatti-Tausig. Her technic is complete, while her interpretation of Beethoven gave the listeners an opportunity which has not been given too often at Aeolian Hall. A delicate touch, but distinct, the tonality was clear and pure. Miss Zygman proved to conclusion that she possesses temperament and keen musicianship. All the three movements were delightful, charming and expressive, while the Pastorale was exquisite, and the listeners never appreciated so much the peasantry mood and the rustic atmosphere as when the young pianist played it. The audience was very demonstrative in its applause. There is no doubt that this young artist will be noticed in the near future, for she is not a player only, but an artist with all the qualifications required to make her the elect pianist.

Kathryn Lee in Recital

The recitals in the past week were equally divided between pianists and vocalists. It is true that no new star has come to create a sensation; with such shocks we have not been blessed for some time. But compensation is derived from the reappearance of old favorites.

Kathryn Lee succeeded in drawing a large and distinguished audience on the evening of November 10 at Carnegie Hall, which is the scene of more recitals than last season. We have to make allowances for Miss Lee, who was hampered by a cold, but fine interpretations and musical feeling for the songs were the evident qualities of her recital, besides the excellent French diction.

She gave a rendition of Protheroe's "Ah, Love, but a Day," "Amoureuse" (Massenet), "Sonnet d'Amour" (Thome), "Psyche" (Paladilhe) and "Chevalier de la belle etoile" (Holmes). An offense of Miss Lee's recital was some flat singing, but when recuperation, poise, control and correct emission replaced this she was indeed delightful. Her lyric voice, especially in the upper tones, shone by the sheer beauty of her clear and ringing top notes. She imbued the French songs with the proper atmosphere. She was rewarded with the most and the largest number of floral tributes ever witnessed at a recital. She began her program with "Introduction," by Fay Foster, and followed with "Danza, Danza, Fancilla" (Durante), "Oh, Mio Rabbino Caro" (Puccini), "Posa la mano sul mio core" (Marchesi) and "Voi dormite, Signora" (Tosti). Then came the dedicated song, "Down the Lane," by the excellent composer Claude Warford; "Lilacs" (Rachmaninoff), "The Lark" (Glinka), "Serenade Francaise" (Leoncavallo), "La Perjura" (Lerdo de Ferjava), "One Spring Morning," "Raft Song" and "In a Bower," all by Ethelbert Nevin. The concert was concluded with "Final" (Nevin).

Andre Benoist officiated as accompanist.

"Mikado" at the Park Theater

Back to Gilbert and Sullivan, the Society of American Singers did not fail to make "The Mikado" a worthy revival. May William Danforth as Mikado and Frank Moulan as Ko-Ko be spared by Providence for many years to come! Both were exceedingly correct to the picture. Their comical exhibitions, their gestures and monologues threw the audience into a state of high spirits. Let us now train some who will some day replace these two comedians, for without them the Gilbert and Sullivan comedies will inevitably be buried in musical libraries. Mr. Campbell sang agreeably the part of Nanki-Poo, while Yum-Yum, interpreted by Sallie Keith, deserves a word of praise.

John McGhie directed capitally.

SHAWNEE, OKLAHOMA, HAS RARE ARTIST COURSE

That Shawnee, Okla., is fast becoming a music center is attracting a good deal of attention through the south. Shawnee is a town of 22,000 inhabitants and a typical college town. Two universities are located there, Oklahoma Baptist University and Catholic University.

On November 4, 5 and 6 the following metropolitan opera stars appeared in concert: Paul Althouse on the 4th; Marie Rapold on the 5th; and Arthur Middleton on the 6th. Althouse gave a splendid program, and his voice and musicianship will long be remembered. The success of his program was slightly marred through an indifferent attitude toward his audience. His accompanist, Paul Weaver, was in harmony in his attitude. Marie Rapold gave a splendid program and made us all feel good in spite of the fact that her upper notes were never full, and sometimes a little off pitch. Her accompanist, Miss Lena Kohn, did some wonderful work and some of it was not quite so wonderful. Middleton and his accompanist, in complete sympathy, left nothing to wish for. He gave a heavy, great program to complete satisfaction of every one. We want all of them to come back, but Middleton, come soon!

The audience of Shawnee has several things to learn in listening to such artists, but they are coming.

Elaborate plans are now under way for a great spring festival, which will take place about the first week in May.

QUOTATIONS OF LAZAR S. SAMOILOFF OF CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK

"If the singers would feel more and pretend less, they would give pleasure to their hearers."

"I prefer a tenor with a soul to one with a high C."

"Voice culture brings out the best qualities in the voice. The quality of the voice is often a reflection of the singer's character."

"A famous singer is not always a good teacher, but a good teacher must know how to sing well."

"If, when singing, you forget your own personality and think only about the song you are singing, Success will be your middle name."

"A singer should pay attention to the voice placement, but the soul's expression is the thing that makes a singer famous."

"Study art and give your lifetime to study it, if you really love the art. But if you are looking for money or glory in art, you will never achieve it. It will evade you like a shadow."

"Words that come from the heart of the singer, go into the heart of the listener. Be careful, then, that your heart does not lie."

"What creates a liar? A listener. What makes singing teachers promise the impossible? The pupils. Who, in business or in any other art, would undertake to promise anyone definite riches? But the father of a singing girl wants a written guarantee that his daughter will make millions if she studies."

"If a singer is successful, the public says: 'What a gorgeous voice,' forgetting the existence of the teacher; but if the artist is bad, everybody asks the name of the teacher. Why not reverse the process?"

A CAPPELLA SOCIETY OF MILWAUKEE

William Boeppler, director of the A Cappellas, is conducting rehearsals regularly every Monday evening in preparation for the big "Elijah" Concert in the spring. This is the twenty-fifth season and Mr. Boeppler announces the society is in splendid condition numerically and vocally. The soloists engaged for "Elijah" are Verna Lean, the popular Milwaukee contralto; Arthur Kraft, tenor, who is rising steadily in Chicago favor; Marie Pruzan, soprano of Chicago Opera Association, and Burton Thatcher, baritone.

ALHAMBRA THEATER, MILWAUKEE

Manager Fisher of this attractive movie house believes in novel presentations, no matter what the first cost may be, and the way the 2,800 seats are filled and the many times the extra crowds stand proves that he has good judgment in providing drawing cards. The pictures presented the past week were in no way features, but the artistic musical interlude, "A Study in Music," slowly unfolded itself in an effective stage picture. Stately white columns of a hall, and a large frame upon which the lights played in evanescent shadows, gradually bringing into relief the picture, as faintly "Dear Old Pal of Mine" came from a violin and faint tones of an accompanying piano. A large concert Steinway, finished in ivory white, a piano lamp with the faintest pink glow, and a tall vase of flowers were the furnishings. Two young men in white flannels, George Lipschultz, the violinist director of the theater, and William Lindner, pianist, and as the lights brought them into view the simple little ballad turned to "Spanish Dance" (Rehfeld), the applause was stormy, and a very unique arrangement of the "Gavotte" and "Kiss Me Good Night," from "Mlle. Modiste," by Mr. Lipschultz, was played, and had to be repeated. This last number was kept all week, but "Alohaoe" and "Caprice Viennois" were substituted for the first two the last half of the week, and at no time has the weird Hawaiian air been more dreamily appealing. The piano played an unusual and beautiful accompaniment. Mr. Lipschultz is a concert violinist of large abilities, and it is apparent to the musician who demands the best that at the same time he has the knack of pleasing the large general public. His "Mlle. Modiste" arrangement was replete with demands of technic, and the writer heard it four times with increasing appreciation and enjoyment. Not one thing marred the completeness of this musical picture. It was tonally as well as artistically finished.

Mr. Fisher does not do anything by halves, and to this feature was added a special organ solo by Frederic Rowley. Mr. Rowley is a brilliant technician, and his playing is colorful and refined and of higher rank than even the major picture houses in larger cities offer. The organ he uses is of good tone, but limited in quantity and variety, but he gave a very satisfying rendition of the Liszt "Second Rhapsody," and the last half of the week a medley of his own arrangement, including selections from grand opera, popular dance music, and ending with Nevin's "Rosary," in which the electrician showed his ingenuity by illuminating a cross on the screen.

The week's entertainment will linger long in the memory of those who attended, for constantly one hears remarks about the music featured at the Alhambra and very little about pictures. The house is full, consequently we judge it is music which draws them.

The orchestral numbers for the week included "Rosamunde Ballet" (Schubert), "Adieu" (Friml), "Swing Song" (Barnes), "Venetian Suite" (Nevin).

Probably no violinist in the country played to more people than did George Lipschultz last week, and very certain am I that no audiences in the country are more appreciative of artistic offerings than those attending the Alhambra.

for Muratore, Vanni Marcou and Mlle. Vecart in a performance of 'Manon' (Massenet). The conductor on this occasion was Tulio Serafin. At the Coliseo Theatre the French artists were the object of undignified intrigues. Nevertheless Mme. Vallin Pardo has achieved some success.

"Maestro Gino Marinuzzi, who is to conduct the Chicago Opera forces beginning November 18, refused to direct the performances of 'Marouf' (Henry Rabaud). 'Manon' (Massenet) was given in Italian."

That the new conductor of the Chicago Opera has refused to direct 'Marouf,' by Rabaud, is a surprise to me, because the work has achieved unusual success at the Metropolitan Opera House, and, besides, Gatti-Casazza has decided to place this opera in the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House. Naturally the management of the Coliseo must have been jealous of the French forces which were appearing simultaneously at the Colon. No other comments are necessary. The incidents speak for themselves, and the conclusions are left to the judgment of the intelligent and unbiased public.

John O'Sullivan Achieves Many Successes in Concerts

The brilliant tenor of the Chicago Opera Association, since his arrival in America last month, has filled many engagements in concerts, and, what is more, he succeeded in drawing large audiences. He proved to be at home in the concert field as he is in opera. During the month of October he appeared at Lynn, Boston and Cambridge, Mass.; Manchester, N. H.; Providence, R. I., and Portland, Me., and at Carnegie Hall in New York he created a furore. On November 21 he is to appear at Montreal, Canada, in opera. On this occasion he will sing in "Werther" and "Carmen." Shortly he will also make his bow for the second season at the Chicago Auditorium, where he will appear in the same old roles which made him famous last season.

Opening of the Philharmonic Season

On Thursday evening the Philharmonic season opened its doors with a presentation of "To the Fallen," by Rogers; the Second Symphony by Brahms; "In the Tatra Mountains" (Novak), and Prelude to "The Mastersinger" (Wagner). The first and the third were new to the public. A packed house listened to this concert of November 13. Josef Stransky was at his desk.

With the present season the Philharmonic enters on its seventy-fifth year.

Robert Schmitz

Among the prominent French artists now before the American public we shall not omit to place Robert Schmitz in the front rank of great pianists. This musician represents, through the medium of his intrument, the incarnation of the French pianist. Notwithstanding that our sister republic possesses many excellent manipulators of the keyboard, Robert Schmitz should be placed among the very best. After four years of military service, of which three years were spent at the front and six months in a hospital, he returned to America, and in spite of the hardships of war, the American public, whenever he made an appearance, noticed his perfect execution and the charm with which he imbued his compositions.

After his New York recital, held during last April, he appealed to his listeners with his marvelous technic and keen insight in interpretations of the favorite compositions, and the new ones, too. At his last recital he played "Les Sillages," by Louis Aubert, and "Le Tombeau," by Couperin, also "Preludes," by Debussy, Magnard Chabrier and Franck. The critics recognized him as a brilliant pianist, and placed him among the virtuosos, and his program, which consisted of the new French modern school, was commended by the representatives of the press. Since his debut, he appeared frequently before the American public, and at all times he chose to play a genuine musical program. Many of the professional pianists, as well as teachers, find no inconvenience to come from the Middle West to receive instruction from Robert Schmitz. Shortly we will have the opportunity to speak about him when he appears in a recital at Aeolian Hall some time in December. For his appearance he expects to feature Moussorgski, Borodine, Liapounoff, Albeniz, Turini, Debussy and Ravel. When he appears as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, besides one work by Franck, he will play "Concertino," by John Alden Carpenter. These two events promise to establish two new records in the pianistic world.

Charles Fontaine Sings "Gismonda" at the Opera Comique

The sympathetic Belgian tenor, who is to appear again the coming season with the Chicago Opera Association, has succeeded in impressing the Parisian critics, as well as the public, when "La Gismonda," by Henry Fevrier, which was given at the Opera Comique during October. The French papers report more the success of the interpreters than of the work. It seems that the critics of Paris do not consider Fevrier's work an inspiriting composition.

Helen Kanders Sings at Carnegie Hall, Richard Hageman at the Piano

I deviated from the usual routine, which consists of being seated comfortably in one of the parquet seats. I accepted, for once, a place in the dress circle, located in the upper portions of Carnegie Hall. In doing so I convinced myself of two facts: The Carnegie is truly a huge concert hall, and Helen Kanders' voice carried into the farthest corner of it. Not every recitalist can be distinctly heard in this concert temple. Helen Kanders' voice was audible and clear. I failed to discover dramatic qualities, but the lyric of Helen Kanders is one which is distinctly beautiful in quality. Many of our recitalists have yet one task to fill, and it is one of the essential factors to success—how to arrange a program which would adapt itself to a singer's temperament. If this soprano could choose the kind of songs capable of responding to her temperament and inclinations of voice, then she would really achieve more than a passing success. Debussy's "Defleurs," from Proses Lyriques; "Margaret of the Spinning Wheel," by Schubert; "Autumn Eve," by Sibelius, a song which is monotonous and too long, were not happy selections. Her real success was in Schubert's "First Loss," and especially in the Old English songs, viz.: "Mary of Allendale," rendered with a clear, brilliant and pure lyric timbre; "Phyllis Has Such Charming Graces" was an admirable interpretation. In fact, the entire English group. "In Moonlight," by Elgar, and "A Feast of Lanterns," by Bantock, were charmingly sung. One must be musical to interpret with such beautiful effects those superb English songs, which are genuine pearls of the musical English literature. Of the French group "Les Armaillis," by Dalcroze, was beautifully sung by Miss Kanders and with a splendid diction. The soprano must avoid singing off key; this is due to lack of breath control. The recital was a pleasurable event. She began her program with Mozart's Aria, "Elvira," from "Don Giovanni," and followed by Brahms' "Nightingale and Blacksmith." Both were excellently sung. Besides the mentioned songs, Miss Kanders gave us "Laughing and Weeping," by Schubert; "Les Caresses" (Dupont), and "Dansons La Gigue" (Polderuski). What a splendid accompanist is Richard Hageman. I know of few who can give such a musicianly support. He is suggestive, illustrating and a colorist at the piano. Such a capital accompaniment is rare in New York, even though the metropolis enjoys quite a number of capable accompanists. In all, he was a tower of strength at the piano. The house was well filled, including the upper portions.

Overflowing Audience Hears Heifetz's Second Carnegie Recital

Groups of men and women still worship their living heroes. The masses, especially the toiling classes, forget, on certain occasions, political upheavals, disturbances, unrest and all the chains of rebellion which have become the characteristics of the world of today. Yes, the masses threw into oblivion all these characteristics when they listened to Jascha Heifetz's second recital of Sunday afternoon, November 16, at Carnegie Hall. Give the people the education, and you will uplift their minds for the arts. They like the beautiful things in life, and proof is given when the masses are being fed with it. The reign of discontent would disappear if we will try to educate the people. The results will be a better world. At this hour, when we are trying to get back to the pre-war conditions, I see no better agency of stabilizing the situation than "Education for the Masses." If it were possible to procure the best of entertainments at low prices I believe the masses would forget their rebellious moods. That they appreciate genius no one can deny; that they sincerely love music there is no doubt. When Jascha Heifetz concluded "Caprice," No. 24 (Paganini-Auer), the concluding number, the masses flocked nearer to the stage, begging for more, and the young genius pleased them by giving several extras. In exchange, the music lovers and hero worshipers applauded frantically. And did Jascha Heifetz deserve the tremendous and unusual ovation? He did. Much has been written about this genial violinist since his debut in 1917. He was then a boy of eighteen. Now he is twenty-one, but a mature artist. Perfect technic, a unique tone, a flawless intonation—these are his characteristics. He is a pearl among pearls. He is the sparkle of the present-day violinists. May he be so for many years to come. Every number was warmly applauded by an audience which was occupying even the stage's extemporaneous seats. The most pretentious composition of the program was "Concerto," No. 5, in A minor, by Vieuxtemps. He played it superbly. Then followed "Grave" (Friedman-Bach), "Vivace" (Haydn-Auer), "From the Fatherland" (Smetana), "Melodie" (Tschaikowsky), which the audience redemanded; "Scherzo" (Tschaikowsky), "Lullaby" (Cui) and many encores. The audience consisted also of professionals, students, teachers and the privileged class, and I believe that not one hand was idle after each number played. Samuel Chotzinoff was at the piano.

How to Play It

Had Sergei Rachmaninoff's piano recital at the Auditorium yesterday afternoon possessed no other merits it would have been worth while simply because it showed Chicago concert-goers how his prevalent C sharp minor Prelude should be played. The wish was instant that every piano student in this broad land of ours might be there to hear, and hearing, learn. For every student plays it or attempts it somewhere along his upward climb to Parnassus, and now that it is even successfully "ragged," the knowing how is of value. Its composer made it a thing of tonal beauty and compelling power. He had the whole first part of it literally swim in tone. The notes of the theme were sustained and given real song value while the chords were played over and around them merely as accompaniment, while the lyric utterance was uninterrupted. It made the hackneyed composition a poetic message not soon to be forgotten. —W. L. Hubbard in the Tribune.

Georgia Harpster and Angie Montgomery

The duo singing of Miss Georgia Harpster and Angie Montgomery at Ogglesby school on November 6 was a musical delight.

Miss Harpster has a lyric soprano voice of beautiful quality which she uses with ease and intelligence, while Mrs. Montgomery's contralto is of liquid clarity. Add to these qualities, blend, splendid enunciation, poise and intelligent regard for the text and the warm reception accorded these artists is readily understood. The "Kerry Dance" was particularly well done.

They appeared again at St. Patricia Sunday, November 16, in "Stabat Mater" (Rossini) and other numbers.—Auburn Park Reminder.

Edna Wheeler Ballard, Tracy Jay Kingman and Charlotte Bergh in Canada

Edna W. Ballard is a harpist of distinction. Her playing displays sound technic and splendid artistry. Tracy Jay Kingman, baritone, received the finest praise for his artistic work. He is master of the mezzo voce or soft effects in singing.—The British Whig, Tuesday, October 28, 1919.

The civic dinner at the City Hall on Saturday night in honor of the prince was a great success and was attended by about one hundred guests, including fifteen ex-mayors of the city. The prince and his entire staff were present. Charlotte Bergh of Chicago, coloratura-soprano, probably the finest singer who has appeared in Kingston in many years; Edna Wheeler Ballard, one of the greatest harpists of the United States, and Tracy Jay Kingman, baritone, rendered several beautiful selections which the prince and all those present greatly enjoyed. They are most finished artists and won unstinted admiration.—The Standard, Kingston, Ontario, Monday, October 27, 1919.

Miss Bergh has a charming personality and a wonderful coloratura soprano voice. Her trills and other embellishments are marvels. She is entirely unaffected and sings with ease.—The Perth Expositor, Perth, Ontario.

The Convention Hall was the scene of a brilliant concert last night when Mme. Schumann-Heink, assisted by Frank La Forge, appeared before a vast audience. The diva was in wonderful voice and sang a taxing program, which included three arias. One of the greatest demonstrations followed the song group of Frank La Forge's composition, the "Flanders Requiem" being particularly effective and grateful as showing the dramatic powers of this great dramatic singer. Mr. La Forge had a success all his own after his solo numbers and responded to encores.—Kansas City, November 6.

Ethel Jones

Miss Ethel Jones, mezzo, who scored an artistic triumph at her recital at the Blackstone Theater November 11, appeared in a recital at Kenosha, Wis., Saturday, November 15, where she was the recipient of an ovation.

(By W. L. Hubbard)

In the afternoon at the Blackstone Theater Ethel Jones gave a song recital which proved in uncommon degree satisfying and admirable. Possessed of a warm, sympathetic and thoroughly schooled voice, gifted with the power to "tell the poem" both by word and by skillful variation in tonal color, blessed with musicianship and also interpretative sensitiveness and sense, she is a recitalist it was genuine pleasure to hear. Her program was interesting and attractively arranged, and with ideal accompaniments supplied by Olive Kriebs the afternoon became one of joy.

(By Herman Devries)

At the Blackstone Theater yesterday afternoon I had the very pleasant privilege of listening to Miss Ethel Jones, mezzo. During the last eight days I have heard two Chicagoans of no mean talent and two others from the East. When will Chicago musical organizations realize that within these bounds there is sound and desirable talent and that the East, musically speaking, is frequently misheralded and its artists not as effete as tradition would have us believe?

Miss Jones has every quality to advance her name far in her chosen profession. Her lovely voice is a thing of full, warm tone and rich sympathy. Her diction is perfect.

MILWAUKEE

The Sistine Chapel Quartet of the Vatican was presented to the public through the Marion Andrews Concert Bureau recently. The program consisted of numbers for the most part unaccompanied of an early era and it was in rendering those most closely connected with their religious services they met with the greatest appreciation, as was natural. The "Ovos onnres qui transitis per viam" by Vittoria and used on Holy Thursday, was one of the gems of the evening. "La preghiera" by Marchetti could well grace any choral program and abounds in fine effects. The unusual soprano voice of Signor Gabrielli seemed very fitting in the sacred numbers but in humorous numbers seemed to lack the pliability necessary. Signor Cecchini has a very fine tenor voice of operatic proportions, if his calling had led in that direction. The individual voice was given very little opportunity to be heard other than the ensemble, which was at all times the acme of art in its phrasing and detail.

Mr. George Lipschultz, the popular young violinist, and conductor of the orchestra at the Alhambra Theater, is also the feature soloist this week. Wherever Mr. Lipschultz is stationed many admirers follow for the pleasure of his work alone. His especial number on this occasion is a Spanish Dance by Rehfeld as a novelty with other more familiar excerpts added. His technique is so adequate one loses all thought of it as a listener, but both layman and connoisseur are at once gripped by his beautiful tone color and atmospheric playing heard only from those bordering on genius. It is indeed a stride for "music" in Milwaukee that the masses can be privileged to hear so clever a young violinist.

His conducting is also marked by fine rhythmic assurance and much of his solo magnetism reflected. Mr. Linder played splendid accompaniments on an ivory Steinway piano, a work of art without and within. The management is certainly to be commended upon the standard of its musical programs.

About twelve hundred people were in attendance at the presentation of "St. Paul" by Mendelssohn at the Grand Avenue Congregational Sunday evening. Mr. Carl Mueller is the able conductor and organist. The large chorus choir was assisted by Beecher Burton, tenor; Alma Hahn, soprano; Elsa Bloedel, alto, and George Russell, baritone. Mr. Burton's tenor voice is well known and much admired by Milwaukee audiences, and he is as well a seasoned oratorio singer. Miss Hahn is a promising young singer, of mellow sympathetic quality, but as yet new to this type of work. Oratorio requires that certain stamp of musicianship which comes only by experience, and Miss Bloedel has had many opportunities with the A Capella Chorus, under Mr. Boeppler, which is at once evident in her presentation. Mr. Russell has a baritone voice well endowed by nature and was a favorite on this occasion.

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra concert season opened November 11 under the management of Margaret Rice.

The delightful melodies of Sullivan and the sparkling wit of Gilbert's clever lines seemed as fresh as if they had been written yesterday when the Community Opera Company appeared in five performances of "Pinafore" last week at the Community House. The work of all the principals was of the highest order, but Wilson Bushnell as Sir Joseph, Roy Blanchard as Captain Corcoran, and William Bond as Dick Deadeye deserve special mention for their fine interpretations and splendid singing. Mary Quinn as Josephine and Mrs. Palen as Buttercup were adequate in their portrayals of two of the best known roles in light opera. Without question, the chorus of twenty voices was one of the finest ever heard in Erie, made up as it was from the ranks of soloists from various church choirs, and their spirited singing of the familiar ensemble numbers was one of the greatest joys of the week. All in all, the opening of the Community House for the current season was a complete success, and "Pinafore" will go down as one of the most pleasurable entertainments ever enjoyed at the little theater. The dramatic wing of the Community House, the Community Players, will make their first appearance this season during the week of November 10, when they will be seen in five performances of Anatole France's "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife." The cast is as follows:

Master Leonard Boutall	James Flynn
Master Adam Fumee	Albert Dowling
Master Simon Collins	Harold Titus
Master Jean	Alfred Bell
Master Serrafin	Harry Schwartz
Master Giles	William Boyd
Blind Man	Alec Sisson
Chickweed Man	Wilmot Skinner
Water Cress Man	F. V. Clark
Catherine	Rachel Davis
Alison	Nellie Dickey
Mlle. Garadiere	Eleanor Gray

Anna Case, the popular soprano, appeared in recital at the Park Theater on Monday evening, November 3, and when she stepped on the stage for her first number she was greeted by an audience that filled every inch of seating capacity and, in addition, occupied many stage seats. This season Mrs. McCoy is finding difficulty in securing proper accommodations for her public, as for both the Scotti Opera Company and for Anna Case the demand for seats was so great that many were turned away from the box office. Miss Case, lovely as ever, sang a very interesting program in her usual finished style, appearing to especial advantage in a group of French songs which included the "Il Passe" of Chauvet, which brought her the greatest applause of the evening. Many encores were given, one of the finest of which was the Old English "My Lovely Celia." Miss Case has many friends in Erie, this being her fourth appearance here.

The Russian Symphony Orchestra is booked for two concerts at the Park Theater on Sunday, November 23, while Josef Hofmann comes on December 9 as the third number of Mrs. McCoy's Artist Course.

ALBERT H. DOWLING JR.

ST. PAUL, MINN.

The splendor of the presentation of "Aida," given the first night of the opera season by the Chicago Grand Opera Company, left little to be desired, for it was a superb achievement, eclipsing the finest ever given here. The chorus Mr. Campanini provided was notably fine; the singing of the priestesses from the distance, and the religious hymn by the chorus were well done; the sacred dance toward the close of the first act exceedingly effective.

While Raisa, in the garb of the Ethiopian slave, did not appear in all her glory to outward manifestation, her voice and art spoke for itself. Her voice is one of great resonance and beauty, so wonderfully blended throughout the registers that whatever she essays is a satisfaction. It was heard above the orchestra at all times, even the mightiest crescendos. The finesse of her singing, together with the great dramatic power of the singer, has won her the greatest acclaim.

It was a keen disappointment not to hear Sophie Braslau, who was ill at the Saint Paul, but Lillian Eubank rose to the occasion to a fine degree. She has a commanding presence and a voice of remarkable range, but not of true contralto quality in the different registers, which fact was all the more perceptible when heard with Raisa.

Arimondi, as King of Egypt, has a bass voice which he uses with good taste. Dolci, on the other hand, did not make the most of his role as Rhadames. Rimini was altogether successful in the delineation of the King of Ethiopia. Much praise was heard for the fine, deep quality of Lazzari's basso and he was a most acceptable high priest.

The incidental dances by Anna Ludmilla and corps de ballet were extremely fascinating and a distinctive feature of the first night's performance. Teofile de Angelis conducted admirably, Mr. Campanini having returned to Chicago.

The afternoon performance of "Madame Butterfly" was a highly creditable one in spite of the fact Tamaki Miura failed to appear, due to some transportation mishap.

The Japanese prima donna has won the highest favor here, as elsewhere, and draws capacity houses, but in her absence the name part fell to Myrna Sharlow. Irene Pavloska sang the part of Suzuki.

Forrest Lamont scored a genuine triumph as Pinkerton. His vibrant dramatic tenor was heard to decided advantage in the first act. The clearness of his enunciation, together with the excellent quality of his singing, was pleasing to the audience.

Clarence Whitehill's voice and style lent distinction to the performance. Louis Hasselman was the able conductor for the Puccini score. The season closed with "The Masked Ball" (Verdi); interest centered in the appearance of Emmy Destinn. Her portrayal of the role of Amelia was authoritative—a skillful and artistic rendition.

Alessandro Bonci as Riccardo created a sensation and his laughing song in the second act called forth a repetition. Baklanoff was Renato. Marjorie Maxwell as the page delighted with her charm of personality and vocal attributes.

The cast was well balanced and the orchestra, under Teofile de Angelis, scored heavily in the brilliant success of all three performances.

CHRISTINE LANGENHAN CLAIMS SOUTH

The following most flattering telegrams and letter have been received by Hugo Boucek of New York, the manager of Miss Christine Langenhan, the distinguished dramatic soprano:

Weston, W. Va., Oct. 27.

"Christine Langenhan has come, and we are hers from her opening number. She carried her audience with her, and we are delighted and hope to have her again.

"(Signed)
"E. G. ROHRBOUGH,
"Pres. State Normal."

Louisburg, N. C., Oct. 30.

"The concert given on yesterday evening in Louisburg College Auditorium by Miss Christine Langenhan was in every respect a success. No artist for years has aroused the same singing enthusiasm; none has sung with such charm, and to her artistic powers she adds the charm of a splendid womanhood which has captivated the entire college community. We shall be more than happy to discuss with you her return engagement at any time. The response to her singing last evening was voiced in encore after encore, all of which was responded to with such graciousness that the entire audience was captivated.

"I am very cordially yours,
"(Signed) F. S. LOVE,
"Pres. Louisburg College."

Batesburg, S. C., Nov. 5.

"The concert by Miss Langenhan was a delight and will be a joy forever with Summerland College. She is all and many times more as a singer than you claim in your advertisement, and we consider it an honor to have had the pleasure of entertaining her in the College socially. She is all sunshine. She concluded with "Think, Love, of Me," the only way in which Summerland College remembers her.

"(Signed) P. E. MONROE,
"Pres. Summerland College."

Refinement of Tone and Delicacy of Touch

Are the Distinguishing Features of the

Baldwin Piano

IT is these features that lend confidence to an artist when playing a recital. Nothing is so inspiring to even the amateur as the sympathetic tone and the wonderfully responsive action of the Baldwin.

Editorial

PASSING COMMENT

The article headed "Dr. Muck Protests" in our Press at Large Columns last week was copied from the Musical Leader, to whom credit is hereby, tardily, given.

And the same paper has a rousing good editorial in the last issue on Otto Goritz, the man who has proven himself so unfriendly to America and American institutions that no one feels aught but joy at his announced intention of taking himself and family back to Germany.

That is where he belongs and with him should be sent every person who still thinks it possible to make propaganda for German ideals in this country.

The New York public utterly repudiated the Goritz attempt to present opera in German in that city and the country at large will do the same.

In Louisville, last week, it is reported in the daily papers that Kreisler was advised by the local management that he had better withdraw his announced recital because there was so much feeling against its being given, and this he did.

Any one who had anything to do with Germany's side of the war is very apt to meet just such feeling almost anywhere in America for the next decade.

The success of Edward Johnson with the Chicago Grand Opera is a matter for sincere congratulation. Mr. Johnson is a thoroughgoing American and the fact that his countrymen have received him so wholeheartedly is proof positive of the rapid passing of that old-time prejudice against all things American in music and the slavish adherence to the idea that all good opera singers come from Europe.

True, Mr. Johnson, with many other Americans, found it advisable to go to Europe to begin his operatic career, but it is doubtful if he would have done even that had there been, as there should be, smaller opera houses in this country where the American artists might try their wings.

And that will come eventually for, it is a necessity of the times, and must come.

Meantime we are proving right along that we have plenty of material here and an abundance of teachers to prepare this material for public appearance.

A case in point is that of Arthur Boardman, who on short notice prepared a part in the opera "La Nave," and on opening night of our season went on and did it with great credit to himself and his teacher.

And Mr. Boardman makes no secret of the fact that his teacher is a Chicago man, i. e., Albert Borroff, who is himself a thoroughly fine singer and interpreter, and who in the case of Mr. Boardman, has shown that his tutelage is of sufficient force to carry his pupil to success even on the Auditorium stage and in such distinguished company as that in which Mr. Boardman found himself in "La Nave."

One of the most distinguished and honored of figures in the music life of America today is Mrs. Edward MacDowell, who is devoting her life to going up and down throughout musical America playing the music of her husband, the late Edward MacDowell, America's most celebrated composer, and making propaganda for the MacDowell Colony, one of the finest ideas ever evolved in this country.

One day last week Mrs. MacDowell delighted a very large audience of the students at the Northwestern University School of Music in Evanston with her talking and playing, and on last Sunday night the MacDowell Society of Chicago presented her to a large audience at the Banquet Hall in the Auditorium Hotel, at which time she told a most interesting story of the aims and life of the MacDowell Colony.

"There's so much bad in the best of us,
And so much good in the worst of us,
That it does not behoove any of us,
To talk ill of the rest of us."

THE DOMINIE.

OMAHA, NEB.

On Wednesday afternoon, November 19, an unusually attractive program of Spanish music was presented, in costume, by the musical department of the Omaha Woman's Club, under the direction of Miss Edith May Miller, which was attended by a large and enthusiastic audience.

The program opened with a group of typical Spanish folk songs by Mrs. J. Stanley Hill, with guitar accompaniment by Mr. Potter, which were given in a very charming and artistic manner.

Miss Mildred Jack gave an exquisite interpretation of the Spanish dance.

The flute solos by Mrs. A. F. Anderson were a rare treat, and were rendered with efficiency.

Francis Potter, with his pleasing personality, gave a group of guitar numbers which were splendidly given and especially interesting.

Mrs. Hill closed the program with the magnificent "Gipsy Maid" by Donizetti, one of the most difficult songs, especially for a dramatic singer, and "The Spanish Gipsy," which displayed her wonderful dramatic ability and was a naive exhibition of artistry very seldom witnessed.

Miss Miller gave adequate accompaniment at the piano.

Gunster—Frederick Gunster, now on tour, found that "Values" and "Smilin' Through" were so well liked when he used them as encores at his Aeolian Hall recital in New York that he has used them on his tour, sometimes programmed and sometimes as encores, but both songs have appeared every time he has sung.

STORIES OF THE OPERAS

"The Masked Ball" (Verdi)

The first scene of act one takes place in the hall of the Governor's house. We learn that there is a conspiracy to assassinate the Governor. A negress, Ulrica, is brought in, charged with being a witch. The Governor makes a jest of the charges and dismisses her. He declares that he will himself go in disguise to the witch's hut and learn the truth of the accusations.

The next scene shows the interior of Ulrica's house. The Governor is disguised as a sailor. A knock comes and he hides, when Amelia, the wife of his secretary, enters. She has come to confess to the black sorceress her unbidden love for Riccardo. He is only too happy to find his own love is reciprocated, and he listens with interest when the witch bids Amelia gather certain herbs which are to be found within the shadow of the town gallows. Amelia goes, but Riccardo lingers to have his fortune told. Ulrica tells him that he will be killed by the first man who shakes his hand. The conspirators have entered, but they refrain from shaking his hand for fear they have already been suspected. But Renato, Amelia's husband, enters in search of his chief, and grasps his hand.

Act two takes place in a lonely place near Boston. There the Governor finds Amelia in search of the herbs. She confesses her love and begs him to leave her. Renato now arrives to announce that the conspirators are waiting in ambush. Amelia quickly veils her head and the Governor begs Renato to escort her back to the city without any effort to learn her identity. Renato promises, and the Governor makes his escape. But the conspirators enter, and, thinking they have found their victim, tear the veil from the woman and she stands revealed as Renato's wife. He denounces her, despite her protestations of innocence, and vows dire vengeance.

Act three takes place in Renato's house. He is about to kill his wife Amelia, but relents. He determines rather to concentrate his energy on killing Riccardo, the Governor. The conspirators enter and he is chosen as the assassin.

Act four reveals a ballroom in the Governor's place. All is gayety and merriment, and there are many opportunities for the incidental dances rendered by the opera corps de ballet. The Governor has decided to give up Amelia. A note comes from Amelia herself warning him not to attend the ball. But he decides to face his enemies. Renato enters and learns from a page how the Governor is dressed, and in the midst of all the joy and laughter he stabs his victim. Riccardo falls, but dies proclaiming Amelia guiltless of all sin, and tells how he had planned to send her, with her husband, to an honored post in England. Renato is overcome with remorse and the curtain falls on the tensely tragic story.

DELAYED REPORTS

On account of Thanksgiving, Music News was compelled, this week, to go to press one day early, and as it happened that a great mass of matter came in on Tuesday and Wednesday, much of this is necessarily held to next week.

If you do not find your review or article this week, please wait patiently until next Friday.

AT THE WHITNEY TEW STUDIOS

On last Sunday afternoon the "piece de resistance" of the recital by the Tew students was the "Persian Garden" by Liza Lehmann, in which Miss Gladys Scrimgeour and Mme. Elise Zolbran-Melius were the women singers, each of them presenting some of the alto and some of the soprano solos, this being in line with the Tew ideas of what a voice should really cover in the way of range.

Both singers showed growing voice, good style and a just appreciation of the act of Mme. Lehmann.

Mr. Tew himself sung the bass score and did it with fine vocal display and interpretative detail, while Mr. Iles, the tenor, again showed himself the possessor of an exceptional voice and further proved his familiarity with and appreciation of the score.

The program, in its entirety, read as follows:

Let Us Forget (contralto) ..... Maude V. White
The Wren (soprano) ..... Liza Lehmann
Miss Rella Yastrow
O don fatale ..... Verdi
Mme. R. S. Stabile
The Swan ..... Saint-Saens
Long Ago ..... MacDowell
Tune Thy Strings, O Gypsie ..... Dvorak
Miss Gertrude Clark (debut)
Duets (from Il Trovatore) ..... Verdi
Contralto and tenor
Soprano and tenor
Mlle. Adrienne De Vere and Edwin Iles
Knowest Thou the Land (contralto) ..... Thomas
Non e ver (soprano) ..... Mattei
Miss Mabel Grieves
Good-By (bass) ..... Tosti
Eleanore (tenor) ..... Coleridge-Taylor
Edwin Iles
Prayer (contralto) ..... Hiller
Bell Song (from Lakme) ..... Delibes
Miss Emma Berg
Forever and Forever (contralto) ..... Tosti
N-no One Ever Marries Me (soprano) ..... Lehmann
Mlle. Yseult Zvevecoeur
In a Persian Garden (Song Cycle) ..... Liza Lehmann
Miss Gladys Scrimgeour, soprano and contralto
Mme. Elise Zolbran-Melius, contralto and sourano
Milles, tenor
Whitney Tew, bass

Not all of this was heard by this writer, but among the fine numbers were the duets of Mlle. de Vere and Mr. Iles and the solos of Miss Berg.

This young singer has voice and presence as well as an unusual intelligence and when she has gained thorough repose will become a very fine singer.

The entire program was received with much appreciation by a studio full of people and many individual numbers were productive of much enjoyment. C. E. W.

REAPPEARS IN NEW YORK WITH ORCHESTRA

NEW YORK MORNING SUN:

"Mr. Spalding, who is a serious artist, if there ever was one, played Mendelssohn's long honored composition in the most manly style. A big, sonorous, opulent tone, intonation of impeccable correctness and a style vivacious without frivolity and elegant without effeminacy were the chief characteristics of an admirable performance. There was prolonged and enthusiastic applause."—W. J. Henderson.

NEW YORK HERALD:

"In selecting Albert Spalding as soloist, Mr. Damrosch made a happy choice. His excellent tone and the dignified yet spirited manner with which he played, brought him hearty applause. It is not often that an American soloist opens an important series of concerts, and it is still less often that an American plays so artistically as Mr. Spalding did yesterday."—Paul Morris.

NEW YORK EVENING TELEGRAM:

"The soloist with the New York Symphony was Albert Spalding, who played Mendelssohn's 'Concerto in E minor' with his usual artistic understanding."—Robert Welch.

NEW YORK EVENING MAIL:

"Mr. Spalding's tone dreams and floats with an added richness for which the solemn experiences of the war should not have all the credit. He is a fine artist developing and steadily expanding."—Katherine Lane.

NEW YORK MORNING WORLD:

"Albert Spalding played the Mendelssohn violin concerto brilliantly and was recalled half a dozen times."—James Gibbons Huneker.

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH:

"Albert Spalding had Mendelssohn's stately and resilient 'E minor Concerto' for his effort, and the work, peculiarly suited to his gracile hand and placid temperament, gained in the estimation of those who have heard it played in uncertain or slovenly manner by violinists of more exalted pretensions than the modest but scholarly Mr. Spalding. His fingering and the generous singing clarity of his tone combined to make his performance a marked and memorable success."—John H. Raftery.

NEW YORK EVENING SUN:

"Mr. Spalding's playing of the 'Concerto' was admirably smooth; his tone has mellowed in his militaristic absence, too, it seemed."—Gilbert Gabriel.

NEW YORK EVENING WORLD:

"He won, as he deserved to win, the long continued applause that both the audience and the players bestowed upon him."—Sylvester Rawling.

NEW YORK EVENING POST:

"His playing of the Mendelssohn violin concerto was a performance beautiful in many details and infused with spirit."—Henry T. Finck.

NEW YORK TIMES:

"Mr. Spalding was greeted warmly, and played Mendelssohn's Concerto with vigor and spirit."—Richard Aldrich.

NEW YORK AMERICAN:

"He played with gusto and with a full, vibrant tone. The last movement brought him five recalls from an audience quick to appreciate the sterling value of his performance."—Max Smith.

ST. JAMES' ANNIVERSARIES

Every successful organization confesses its obligation to its founders and reverences its past. Real progress depends on such loyalty. Anniversaries and special events serve to emphasize what was sought for, what has been and is being done. In the crowded demands of the day's work no time is better spent than that which commemorates notable events and idealizes and ever sentimentalizes their values.

St. James' Episcopal Church is a veritable storehouse of tradition and civic and religious service. Its tower was one of the landmarks left standing after the great fire. Entrance into its borders at once gives the atmosphere of sturdy, vigorous, patient, unhesitating faith in its being, its purpose, its usefulness and its broad outlook into an ever-widening future.

Dr. James S. Stone, the rector for twenty-five years, accepts and enlarges his heritage. St. James' has been in the forefront to meet the specific demands of its day and often gone further, many times setting the pace for others.

And in all its activities it has placed large importance to the sphere of music. Men with vision know that the final word of significance is musical; that music only can gather up and succinctly, as well as emotionally, express both the temporal and heart values of every great event.

Therefore, in remembering the eighty-fifth year of being of the church and the thirty-fifth year of the vested choir, it was given to music to focus and then convey the admixture of gratitude, pride, reverence and devotion which entered into the celebration.

There is no adequate space to enter into even the outstanding incidents which made graphic the week of anniversary. A rapid survey would lay stress on the beautiful souvenir programs and service lists; the wide range of musical literature scanned to choose just the right substance to voice the spirit of each service; the blend of the obvious with the spiritual; the vast audiences; the remarkable thank offering, when $7,000 was placed on the altar; the stateliness of the processional; the stunning effects of tympani, trumpets, and trombones in the opulent Jordan "Te Deum"; the top-notch pitch of enthusiasm of the choir when they put over this, the Foster canticles and the superb Gade "Zion" in glorious style; the speech of Mr. Berg presenting the organ chimes; the compelling effect when they were used in an interpolated verse from "Hark, Hark, My Soul"; the elaborate preparedness of the choir in the Gade contata, a work of serious import and bristling difficulties; the regret at Hugo Goodwin's illness and admiration for Walter Keller's adaptability in taking his place; the presence and value of the orchestral support; the lovely touches of feeling infused into the Tschaikowsky Andante; the virtual ideality of Dr. Stone's tribute to his choir and choirmaster, to whom he paid the compliment of knowing in advance just what was in a rector's mind of desire, and lastly, and more fully, a recognition of the new and commanding force of John W. Norton's personality and competency. He has come back from his naval service so enriched and broadened that he quietly takes his place among the leaders of his kind with untold possibilities lurking in the background as to where they will lead him toward honor and eminence. The events centered about the music, and Mr. Norton was the mainspring. He had a great opportunity, and proved equal to it.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

Renzina Teninga, organist and artist pupil of William Middelschulte and John Sheehy, artist pupil of Karleton Hackett, will appear in recital at Kimball Hall Saturday, December 6.

The attendance of students at the American Conservatory this season has far eclipsed any former record. The time of instructors such as Adolf Weidig, Karleton Hackett, Heniot Levy, Allen Spencer, Silvio Scionti, Louise Robyn, Arthur Olaf Andersen and others is filled until waiting lists are in order and the available teaching space does not suffice to accommodate the throng of students.

The children's classes in Dalcroze Eurhythmics of the American Conservatory has been placed under the direction of the Misses Leontine and Marion Roberts.

COLUMBIA SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The Columbia School of Music has arranged for a series of concerts to be given in the Auditorium Recital Hall, which began Tuesday, November 25. An excellent program was given by pupils of the piano, voice and violin departments, representing the following teachers: Clare Osborne Reed, George Nelson Holt, Helen B. Lawrence, Ludwig Becker, Lillian Price and Walter Spry. This will be followed on December 16 by a recital to be given by Margaret Farr, pianist, who is studying with Walter Spry and David Shapiro, violinist, student of Ludwig Becker.

A midseason program by the children's department is booked for January 13. In February Parthenia Carmichael, a member of the faculty, who has been trained by Clare Osborne Reed, the director of the school, will give a piano recital with a vocalist. The program in March will be a general pupils' program, and in April a joint recital will be given by Eloise Bedlan, a pupil of Gertrude H. Murdough, and a singer.

Another series will be given by the school in their own recital hall, the first one being December 2. On this occasion a number of students representing various teachers will give the program. Another students' program will be given on January 27, and a rather interesting affair has been arranged for February 24 to be given exclusively by the voice department. Additional pupils' recitals will be given March 23, April 20 and May 4.

The Children's May Festival will be given as usual in the Auditorium Recital Hall and is to be an all-day affair. The morning will be given over to a demonstration of the children's class work. In the afternoon soloists from the various departments will give the program, assisted by the Junior Orchestra under the direction of William Montelius.

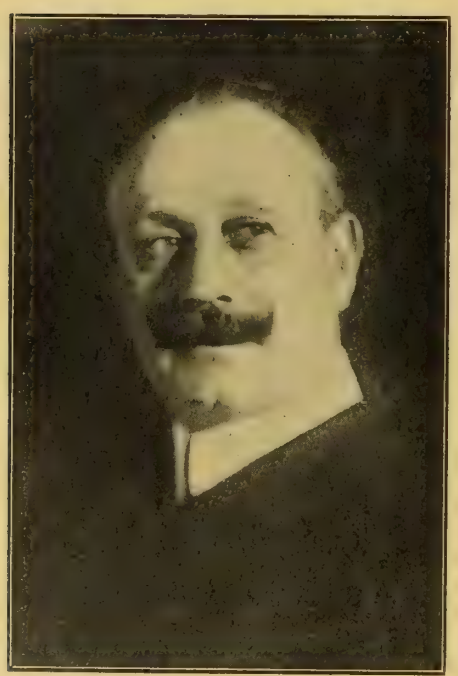
FIRST WEEK OF OPERA

"La Nave," With Montemezzi at the Baton, Provides a Brilliant Opening—Campanini Promises a Wealth of Novelties—Edward Johnson and Other Americans Score Heavily —Miura Repeats Her Famous "Butterfly"—Many Old Favorites Reappear—Forrest Lamont Scores in Two Roles—Revival of "Masked Ball" a Brilliant Success

"La Nave"

The total effect of "La Nave," on the opening night, was a wonderful one. It is a beautiful production, and the music, to those who can analyze music sufficiently to appreciate utter skill in manipulation of motifs and short phrases, is absolutely fascinating.

It is true that the poetic drama of D'Annunzio is too fine for general assimilation, and the stage settings and costumes of Bel-Geddes are symbolic rather than literal, but so magnificently was the music presented on last Monday under the authoritative baton of the composer. and so well was the opera cast, that nothing but pleasure could possibly result, unless, indeed, it would be for that strictly limited minority of those present who prefer melodrama to poetry and for whom it is impossible to exercise the imagination beyond the point of actual vision.



CLEOFONTE CAMPANINI
General Director

There are some points in the story which are too vague to the general listener, and some of these are not cleared up by a careful study of the libretto.

For instance: Since Basiliola undertakes the elaborate scheme of fascinating an entire family merely in order that she may wreak vengeance on them for the cruel wrongs done her own, why does she, when foiled and humiliated at the end of the opera, go to her death like a glorified martyr? It would seem only in keeping that her approaching death would have terrified her and that she would have to be carried, struggling, to her awful fate of being nailed to the prow of the ship, rather than walking to it with the air of a queen ascending her throne, and with a smile of satisfaction on her face, instead of that terror which would be natural under the extremely unpleasant circumstances.

As said in Music News of last week, the cast of this opera was at least completely adequate, and it remains now to emphasize only a point or two.

The young American singers of the cast, including Emma Noe and Arthur Boardman, certainly proved their right to presence on the Auditorium stage.

Mr. Boardman, at this time, made his very first appearance in any opera, and his ease of bearing, as well as beauty of voice, were subject for sincere admiration.

NINA MORGANA
A Debutante Coloratura Soprano

And herewith is a story: Mr. Boardman made no application for a place in the Chicago Company whatever, but it was necessary to find at once a singer to fit the part of Gauro, and Giacomo Spadoni, one of the assistant conductors, remembered having heard, somewhere, "just the voice." He cudgeled his memory, and finally it came to him that Arthur Boardman was the man.

Having located him, it was with some difficulty that he was persuaded to undertake the role on such short notice, but when it was finally decided, he set to work with a will and became letter and stage perfect in a few days.

Mr. Boardman gives a large share of the credit to Mr. Spadoni himself, who was, he says, "indefatigable in his suggestion and drill, and who really made the whole thing possible."

C. E. W.

"MADAME BUTTERFLY"

"Butterfly" was given its first performance on the second night of the opening week with the adorable Japanese soprano, Tamaki Miura, as Cho-Cho San, Irene Pavloska as Suzuki, Forrest Lamont as Pinkerton, Baklanoff in the role of Sharpless, and Beryl Brown as Kate Pinkerton. The opera enjoyed its usual popularity, and all the parts were well taken. Among the additions to the scenic effects was introduced a bona fide Japanese baby as the child. The lighting was managed skillfully, with the exception of the first act, which should have been subdued more gradually in the love scene.

Lamont is exactly the person to do Pinkerton. He does it with an Americanism which is striking in contrast to Miura's typical orientalism. He was in excellent voice on Wednesday night, even better and more velvety in quality than last year, and histrionically he could not have been equaled, so sound has been his routine and so thorough is his understanding of the part.

EDWARD JOHNSON
Phenomenally Successful American Tenor

Miura was perfect, as always, in voice and action, and Baklanoff did Sharpless with the usual amount of superciliousness and polish, though he was more splendid than usual in voice. Beryl Brown played the wife with all the conviction that can be attached to a most thankless part. But both her actions and her singing bespoke great ability, and we are looking forward to hearing her in something more important. The parts taken by Trevisan, Defrere and Nicolay were all good, and the performance as a whole, with Hasselmans at the conductor's desk, was a beautiful production.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

"FEDORA"

Young Edward Johnson "stopped the show" on Tuesday night, the occasion of his debut. He must have known, intuitively, or else learned that "the world deals good naturedly with good natured people," for his so

ALLESSANDRO BONCI World Famous Tenor

frank happiness in the near-riot of approbation for his singing was contagious. He radiated manly satisfaction and modest pleasure and the audience took him to its heart in a way which told him he could have his own way with it in future. He might stand as a type of what we Americans like best—something wholesome, earnest, talented, capable, well-trained, and invariably cheerful and straightforward. His voice is a great asset, vibrant, clear, full and rich, of even emission and great range. He sings just as we love to hear a man sing, naturally, with ease and freedom and with such evident joy in the endeavor that it infects all who come under his spell. And his dramatic instinct is just as sure and sane. He has passion and fire—and the tight rein to govern them. Wherever he was and whatever he did was part of a picture. He graded and shaped and modeled his interpretation into the roundness of perfect grace and completeness. The role of Loris is gratefully theatrical as Sardou made it, and in the hands of one who could supply not only the histrionic and vocal power but the added values of youth, good looks and fiery fervor, the presentment became vivid and assertive. The audience rose to the event with genuine American heartiness, glad to have so worthy a representative in so well tilled a field. You can always tell when an American audience is satisfied. Mr. Johnson's presence in our company is of distinct importance and he scored unequivocally. Dorothy Jardon was his foil as the heroine of the Giordani music and Pavlova substituted on short notice for Marguerite Namara, whose appearance had been looked for with keen interest. The role would have been just that which she could do well in and her personality make distinctive. Rimini was in excellent form, facile and well poised. Good bits were done by both Lazzari and Nicolay, and their presence at such times is of inestimable value, for the "bits" entrusted are important and need good care. Teofili De Angelis, a new conductor, also proved himself of excellent parts. In the intermezzo he won felicitous results from his men. There was a little hidden chorus singing and the scenic investiture was handsome in some particulars and ordinary in others. But Johnson was a perpetual joy. May he live up to his opportunity and make us all everlastingly proud of him.

FORREST LAMONT
A Favorite of Last Year, Reappearing in "Tosca"

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

"The Masked Ball"

If anything could be more absurd than the placing of the scene of "The Masked Ball" in Boston it would be the "scandalous doin's" that are perpetrated in that opera.

Conspirators swarm the stage, there are midnight rendezvous at the foot of the "town gallows," mysterious soothsayings at the house of the sorceress—and stabbings in the back at the gay ball.

A husband is asked (by the libretto) to fail to recognize his wife merely because she has a flimsy veil over her face, although the musical score requires her to sing an elaborate duet with him!

But, it is all the "old-time grand opera," and it is all great fun.

And—more to the point from the standpoint of the public, Verdi has clothed the bombastic, impossible story with the most beautiful music imaginable.

It is an open question whether "Il Trovatore" itself has such a mine of melody or such wealth of musical effects as are to be found in this old opera, long shelved, but now most gratefully revived by Mr. Campanini.

It was—on Friday evening, staged rather shabbily in so far as the earlier acts were concerned, and there was, evidently, no attempt to clothe it with any adherance to a logical scheme—but, the last act (the ballroom scene) was a-glitter with lights and color and the groupings of the chorus were not at all bad.

The ballet exhibition amounted to practically nothing more than a bit of added movement to an already animated scene.

Alessandro Bonci, long noted for the elegance and sparkle of histrionism as well as for the great beauty and purity of his vocal art, was the count of the performance, and right smartly did he dress and act the part, and with thorough style and effect did he deliver the abundant and beautiful vocal message entrusted to him.

Carlo Galeffi will—beyond question, become a great factor of the season as the days go on.

In "Masked Ball" he had not a great deal to do beyond the "Eri tu" and to fill his part in the wonderfully fine ensembles. All this he did with conviction, and—further, gave proof of a voice which should become one of the big assets of the company.

The most unsatisfactory part in this opera is Amelia, and one waits for other characterizations before definitely placing Borghild Langaard, who, like Galeffi, is a newcomer.

She has voice a-plenty, and, seemingly—fine operatic routine.

Lillian Eubank, who—unquestionably, will make a fine Azucena in "Trovatore," did all she could with the foolish part of Ulrica and left a decidedly good impression as to her vocal powers.

Others who did well in their parts were Constantin Nicolay, as one of the conspirators, and Olivieo, who always sings well the little bits assigned him.

The conductor was De Angelis, who—as in other operas heard during the week, displayed a tendency to overemphasis on power.

"Fedora" Repetition

Owing to illness, "Norma" was withdrawn at the last moment and "Fedora" substituted on Saturday afternoon.

Again did Edward Johnson triumph, and again did Dorothy Jardon show great possibilities.

HUBBARD WRITES OF CHILDREN'S CONCERT

He was such a little fellow. Not much over 6 or 7. And small for his age. His head didn't come up to the top of the back of the seat, and his toes barely touched the floor. But that did not matter, for only at first did he lean back. After the music began he sat on the front edge of the chair and so his feet reached all right.

His shirt was clean and white and his blue tie had been carefully tied. But his hair was mussed and O, there was a beautiful grimy shade to his right hand—a shade that no amount of washing could make come off. For he was a real boy, even though his face was small and slightly pinched. A kind of sad, wondering face, just a little older than it should be. And the eyes were big, wide open ones, and they looked out as though marveling what the world really meant.

The lights, the big hall, the men on the stage with strange instruments in their hands, the people all about him—these seemed to awe him a little and make him draw into himself.

At last a man came on the stage and told about music, and about instruments, and about what was to be heard. The little fellow drew back into his chair as though to shrink away from it all. But his eyes widened and he watched everything closely. A man in the orchestra played a tambourine just to show what it was like, and then when all the men played the tambourine could be heard in the music. And his eyes sparkled.

Then the man spoke again and there came a big flowing tune that set the little fellow dreaming and his face grew quite solemn and old. Once more the man spoke and told of a dance that is danced at midnight when the clock strikes 12 and Old Mr. Death comes out with a fiddle and tunes it, and all the skeletons come and dance in the moonlight. And their bones rattle and they dance faster and faster until the cock crows, and the clock strikes 1, and then they all hurry away.

And the man had the clock strike 12 and had Old Mr. Death tune his fiddle, and had the bones rattle, and had the cock crow, and had the clock strike 1. And then the whole orchestra began, and the whole thing was done, the dance, the rattling bones, the cock crow, and all. And the little fellow forgot everything. He shoved forward onto the frontest edge of the seat, he peeked round a big man in front of him. And he heard Old Mr. Death tune his fiddle and he saw all the dance, and he heard the cock crow, and the clock strike 1, and then he saw all rush away. And when it was over his eyes were big and wide and he was almost standing up. And all the children around him were clapping their hands and making a noise. But he, he just sank back into his seat and folded his arms as close round him as he could and sighed a big sigh. And hugged himself.

He was such a little fellow, but he had seen a wonderful dance which the skeletons dance when the clock strikes 12 and Old Mr. Death tunes up his fiddle. And he will never, never forget it.

Much might be written about the first Children's Concert given yesterday afternoon in Orchestra Hall by the Chicago Orchestra, about the house being packed to the doors with children, about the fine explanatory talks given by Mr. Stock. But it will suffice for today that just one little fellow had an afternoon he will never forget. And there were hundreds of other boys and girls like him who were there and had just such a time.—W. L. Hubbard in Chicago Tribune.

THEODORE HARRISON SINGS

At a private musical given by Mr. and Mrs. Elias Day of River Forest in honor of Theodore Harrison, that admirable baritone was heard in an impromptu recital, which was so fine in choice, interpretation and appeal as to stand in mind as one of the best short programs of the season.

Mr. Harrison, with the invaluable aid of Jean Boyd at the piano, sang some old Italian classics most beautifully, while in a group of thoroughly unusual war songs he proved his voice to be a remarkable one, and his interpretative ideals vastly higher than the average.

Anna Imig, a mezzo-soprano with beautiful voice, an artist pupil of Mr. Harrison, sang also and charmed the audience with her spontaneity and style, her fine voice and her wonderfully good enunciation and coloring of texts.

Mr. and Mrs. Gabriel (Ethel Wakefield Gabriel) were also heard to good advantage in a list of songs from the pen of Mr. Gabriel, who has just returned to Oak Park after long war service. C. E. W.

OAK PARK, ILL.

The first of a series of organ recitals at the First Congregational Church of Oak Park will be played on Friday evening, December 5, at 8 o'clock, by Edwin Stanley Seder, F. A. G. O., organist and director of music of the church. The organ is a large, four-manual instrument, possessing all legitimate resources of the church and concert organ, and has been installed in the church slightly over a year. This will be the first series of recitals to be given on it. Mme. Permelia Gale, contralto soloist of the church, will be the assisting soloist.

Mr. Seder's organ program will be as follows:

Suite in C, Op. 205.....Homes N. Bartlett
Chorale; scherzo; andante; finale
Toccata, Adagio and Fugue in C.....J. S. Bach
Evening Chimes.....Wheeldon
Intermezzo.....Gaston Dethier

DR. MARY C. LINCOLN

Dr. Mary C. Lincoln, whose professional offices are on Michigan avenue, is, in addition to her other work, a decidedly talented musical amateur, and the song recital she gave at the studio of her teacher, Nora Lorraine Olin, in Kimball Hall two weeks ago, was an unusually interesting and successful one.

It is to be regretted therefore that her name was incorrectly given in our review of that event.

FIRST WEEK OF OPERA

"Lucia"

If the Chicago Opera intends to draw big Saturday evening crowds these performances must be kept up to that desirable standard which was put in evidence last year (for the most part).

Unfortunately, the first Saturday night of this season was not at a perfectly satisfactory point, although there were at least three excellent interpretations, and only one that could be called bad.

The trouble was in the stage management and settings—which were commonplace.

The very worst feature was the fact that throughout the first act there was loud talking behind the scenes, which could be heard distinctly throughout the main floor, and which detracted materially from the enjoyment of the singing.

Rimini repeated his authentic Henry Ashton, and was, as before, thoroughly convincing.

Forrest Lamont, one of the best Edgars in memory, again filled that part with style and conviction in looks, dress and singing voice, while his dramatic action was absolutely the best he has yet shown us.

Nina Morgana sang the title role and thereby effected a satisfactory debut in Chicago. She has youth, good looks, and knew how to dress the party very beautifully.

She managed the Mad Scene and the other coloratura moments excellently, and in the Sextet was unusually fine.

Emma Noe, always dependable—sang the part of Alice, and both in looks and voice was all that the part deserves—and more.

The Wedding Scene was (contrary to the rest of the opera) gorgeously put on, and in the last act there was a ballet, which, however—like other manifestations of the week in that line, was purely perfunctory in scope and execution.

If the week showed any one thing conclusively it is the fact that this public likes the old operas. "Masked Ball" was a genuine delight to the huge audience that witnessed it, and "Lucia" was enjoyed to the last note.

It is a great pity, however, that the stage management and the dressing of these old operas are not improved. Why not put Bel-Geddes at work on an entire new scenic and sartorial enframement for some such opera as "Lucia"? Surely the result would be worth the expenditure! C. E. W.

Other Operas

"There is no performance of opera tonight, but Mary Garden will play "Thais" on Saturday afternoon (having effected her re-entry on Thanksgiving night in "Cleopatra"), and in the evening "Aida" will be given.

A special Sunday matinee will bring "The Masked Ball," while "La Nave" is announced for Monday night.

BALATKA ACADEMY OF MUSIC

Thursday evening, November 20, pupils of Anna Balatka Donath and Kurt Donath were heard in recital at Auditorium Recital Hall. Mae Hornbeck and Erhardt Bergstrass were accompanists. Pupils from the departments of dancing and violin appeared, acquitting themselves with credit.

Seven pupils of Mme. Donath displayed good training in works of Chopin, Rachmaninoff, Liebling, Whitman, Rubinstein, Gruenfeld and Liszt. Growing musicianship, technic and a good understanding of the work at hand are special points of Mme. Donath's teaching and the pupils are working along good lines.

Mr. Donath presented four pupils and they sang with poise and authority. A smooth, flowing tone, good phrasing and a clear pronunciation of the texts that is worthy of special commendation. Miss Foley used a good soprano well in "The Old Refrain." Mr. Alberg made a good impression in "The Magic of Your Eyes." Miss Murray sang easily and well Tosti's "Could I?" Students in the dramatic work pleased the audience. Mr. Donath furnished splendid accompaniments for his pupils and led the school chorus. The program was as follows:

Piano—Polonaise in A Major.....Chopin

Weaver—O. E. Weaver, for some years director of the Vocal Department at Valparaiso University, has resigned that position and accepted the directorship of the Music Department of the State University of Arizona at Tucson.

GRACE EPISCOPAL CHURCH, CHICAGO

At Grace Church on last Sunday morning unusual interest attached to the music through the singing by Rene Lund. baritone, of "But Who May Abide," from "The Messiah," for offertory.

Mr. Lund has a voice of such true musical feeling and such good technical equipment that a number like this, with its abounding floral passages and its underlying religious fervor, suits him exactly, and his work was at this time, as always, full of pleasure-giving and authority.

Grace Church is still holding services in the chapel, and is, consequently, much hampered in musical output, but Harrison Wild, resourceful and artistic, does the best possible work and presents the finest programs that could be given under the circumstances.

A glance at the November service list shows the use during the month of the following comprehensive list of anthems: "Praise the Lord" (Randegger), "Let the Righteous Be Glad" (R. F. Lloyd), "Savior, When Night Involves the Skies" (Shelley), "Shew Me Thy Ways" (Roberts), "Whoso Hath the World's Good" (Otis), and "Blow Ye the Trumpet" (Woodman).

The offertory solos have been: "Something for Thee" (Sheldon) and "The Pilgrim's Message" (Craig) and the duet, "The Lord Is My Shepherd" (Smart).

In spite of the fact that the church building is in ruins from the fire, the chimes at Grace are still in operation, and their use at the opening of each service is a markedly interesting feature.

Robert W. Hunter, who is chime ringer for the church, has held that position for twenty years.

Other long-time incumbents are William E. Johnson, tenor in the choir for more than twenty-five years; Harrison Wild, choir director and organist more than twenty-five years, and Rene Lund, baritone, in the choir for eight years. C. E. W.

MUSICALE AT CHICAGO TEACHERS' COLLEGE

On Monday afternoon, November 17, in the college assembly hall, the Junior Glee Club of the Chicago Teachers' College, 68th and Stewart avenue, presented several part songs—"In Lullaby Bay" (Berwald) and "Says Jane" (Forsyth)—and a cantata, "Fays of the Floating Island," by Bliss.

Very definite training had been given these young ladies under the efficient instruction of Prof. W. H. Fairbank, who, during the rendition of the above numbers, accompanied this body of some seventy-five singers.

Their work was pleasurable to hear, the attacks were especially good, and Prof. Fairbank deserves much credit for the success of this program of song.

Assisting the chorus was Miss Susan Barakian, soprano, a newcomer to Chicago and the possessor of a remarkably telling voice, clear and dramatic in quality and beautiful in diction. She sang two songs, "Come Down, Laughing Streamlet" (Spross) and "O! Didn't It Rain!" (Burleigh). She was recalled twice for an encore, for one of which she chose the quaint "Cuckoo" of Grant-Schaefer. Although Miss Barakian gives immeasurable pleasure with her voice, her personality is even more winsome in its essential use of the interpretative and the dramatic. Edna B. Wilder.

ANNE GULICK DEBUT

On Wednesday morning, November 19, there appeared for the first time in Chicago, at the Ziegfeld Theater under the Kinsey management, a Boston pianist of unusual talent. Anne Gulick is in possession of many qualities which should make for success. She has a beautifully facile technic, refined taste and musical intelligence, and a limpidity of tone which is enchanting. In addition to this, her personality reveals in every way the sincerity and modesty which attach to the really fine artist.

Her program was well built and interesting from beginning to end. Her Bach "English Suite in A minor" was full of the authority and command of the old classic style, and the Ravel Sonetine following was particularly delightful in its fantastic interpretation. I think the young pianist reached her most perfect heights in the Chopin group, which was replete with all that a Chopin group demands of an artist—brilliancy of tone, solid technic and coloring of sensuous beauty.

Her closing group included the Schubert Impromptu (G flat major) and the "Ballet Music from Rosamunde" and three pieces of the modern French school.

Miss Gulick is an artist of very versatile proportions, who adapts herself easily and sympathetically to a variety of moods and interpretations, and with the technical preparation at her command, which is the very best, she should become one of the best-loved of her sex in the world of piano playing.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

DICIE HOWELL Soprano

IN DEBUT RECITAL, AEOLIAN HALL, NOVEMBER 5, 1919

Press Comments, November 6, 1919

"Miss Howell was cordially welcomed and merited the approval which she received. Hers is A VOICE OF EXCELLENT QUALITY, POSSESSING MORE THAN ONE TINT AND HAVING COLORS WELL SUITED TO DRAMATIC UTTERANCE within certain limits. Her delivery of the old Italian airs showed good schooling and a sense of style, while in some of the French songs she reached a clearly defined level of interpretative power. This singer appeared to have QUICK SENSIBILITY AND REAL MUSICAL INSTINCTS. She ought to attain a good position on the concert platform."—Wm. J. Henderson, New York Morning Sun, November 6, 1919.

"Another VOICE OF EXCEPTIONAL BEAUTY was heard by New York concert goers yesterday when Miss Dicie Howell, a soprano from North Carolina, gave her first public recital here in Aeolian Hall."—Paul Morris, New York Herald, November 6, 1919.

"FEW COULD SURPASS AT RELIGIOUS RECITATIVE AND ARIA. HER TONE IS EXQUISITELY SWEET AND CLEAR, her style arch and aristocratic."—The Listener, New York Evening Sun, November 6, 1919.

"Her voice is of lovely quality and she emits it with astonishing lack of effort."—The New York World, November 6, 1919.

"Miss Howell displayed a voice of much PURITY AND EVENNESS OF TIMBRE, and one which she uses with discretion. Her singing of the Mozart airs, 'Porgi amor' and 'Non so piu Cosa San,' and Scarlatti's 'Non dar piu pene, O Caro,' showed an admirable understanding of the classic manner, both in her phrasing and in the flexibility of the voice itself."—Grenville Vernon, New York Tribune, November 6, 1919.

"Dicie Howell, yesterday afternoon, sang in a colorful mood to match her frock. SHE HAS A RAVISHING PIANISSIMO, and she chose a program dominated by the things best suited to a small lyric voice. Hers is a fresh, clear soprano, ingratiating, and most skillfully used."—Katherine Lane, New York Mail, November 6, 1919.

"She sang two Treharne numbers with MUCH SKILL AND BEGUILING SUCCESS, and in the Grondahl group was, probably, at her vocal best. Woodman's 'My Soul Is an Enchanted Boat' and La Forge's 'Song of the Open,' which ended the recital, were greatly applauded."—J. F. Rafferty, New York Telegraph, November 6, 1919.

WHY IS A CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC?

Question and answer by William Boeppler, Director Wisconsin Conservatory of Music, Milwaukee.

This question was asked of the student body of the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music by its director and founder, Mr. William Boeppler, and the answer and much of same address will be incorporated in this article.

"Why Is a Conservatory of Music? Is It an Essential Thing, a Necessary Link in the Chain of Human Institutions?" A conservatory of music, an institution apparently to conserve music. Two words only—CONSERVE MUSIC—but what a big field of human activity do they contain! Conserve means preserve, maintain, which also includes develop, build up, keep up, keep going, and keep growing.

And music: The music as composed by the masters, old and new; the music that is a language of the soul, the spirit of music, not only its technic, its laws and ways of production and reproduction of creation and re-creation; its thousand forms and moods and messages; its charms and beauties; its greatness; its loftiness. An endless field is opened up with those two simple words—CONSERVE MUSIC!

After all, are not all human institutions built in order to conserve something that concerns the life of our body or soul, the life of the individual or the nation or the entire human race?

Institutions, including banks, warehouses, hotels, factories, stores or offices of any kind—all have the aim to conserve something within the material world that surrounds us.

And the same holds good in the spiritual world of the mind and its activities, in the world of religion, science and art, and here is where music has its place and the institutions that aim to conserve it.

A complete answer to a further question on the results obtained in a conservatory of music could well be answered by the history of the Wisconsin Conservatory but for the fact it would take a book rather than article to relate it. A short resume of its history related by Mr. Boeppler is proof he has directed aims along lines to best conserve the art of music with high ideals.

This excellent institution now looks back upon twenty years of steady, uninterrupted success. Organized in 1898 by William Boeppler with the support of the three brothers—Dr. Louis, John, and H. O. Frank and William H. Upmeyer—the school has constantly grown into its present large proportions. Today the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music stands before the public as one of the acknowledged big music schools of the country, and without question as the leading music school in the State of Wisconsin.

The business management lies in the hands of such well-known men as Theodore Dammann, president; W. H. Upmeyer, treasurer; Emil H. Koepke, secretary; William Boeppler and Mrs. Louis Frank, directors. The musical management is in charge of Mr. Boeppler and his excellent assistant, Frank Olin Thompson. Finally, the faculty is composed of over fifty competent teachers, among them such well-known artists as (in addition to Mr. Boeppler and Mr. Thompson) Mrs. Norman Hoffman, Mr. William Middelschulte, Miss Katherine M. Clarke, Miss Pearl Brice, Miss Winogene Hewitt, Mr. Hugo Bach, Miss Olga Marcan, Miss Ida Shroeder, Miss Rose Phillips, Arthur H. Arneke, Miss Gay, Miss Hinsdale, Miss Verna Lean, Miss Malek, Miss Bloedel, Mr. Kappelman, Clara, Marie and Minna Strasen, Mr. W. H. Williamson, Miss Fielding, Dr. Mulvey, and a host of experienced instructors in all departments of music, dramatic art and languages. Not less than nine new teachers have been engaged this year, all of them instructors of experience and efficiency.

Especial attention is called to the following important features: Progressive Series of Piano Lessons, the latest and most up-to-date method of piano instruction, originated by Godowski, Hofmann, Sauer, and others, officially introduced at this school, showing thereby the progressive spirit in which this school is managed; the Upton Keyboard Harmony, a most efficient way of teaching harmony to beginners in a pleasant and intelligent manner; the Conservatory Orchestra, splendidly successful under the artistic leadership of Pearl Brice; the Public School Music Department, under a teacher of high standing and experience, Miss Erna Dichman; lastly, the Forum Lecture Course, a new addition to the program of this school being a series of lectures on topics of international and cultural interest by well-known men of all walks of life, arranged by Mrs. George Roab.

The motto of the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music has always been "forward and upward!" Their study course proves that this motto is again adhered to in the plans of this season, and the conservatory is enjoying the most successful year of its career.

MARGUERITE POTTER

On Sunday afternoon, November 2, Marguerite Potter gave a lecture song recital for the Arion Society of New York entitled "Songs of the Southland." This has previously been reviewed in the columns of Music News. On November 17 she appeared before the Manhattan Study Club at Hotel McAlpin, and on November 30 will give a recital at the Astor Hotel before the Round Table Club. On December 12 she will be heard at the Waldorf Hotel by the Verdi Club.

Miss Potter has recently had in preparation a new lecture recital, "Songs From Spanish Lands," which was heard for the first time on October 27 in Brooklyn under the auspices of the New York Department of Education, and was a pronounced success.

Miss Potter held her first pupils' recital on November 18. M. C. W.

The next meeting of the Illinois Council will be held in Epiphany Parish House next Sunday afternoon, November 30, at 3:30 o'clock, when Mr. J. C. Deagan, of organ chimes fame, will deliver an address on "Chimes, Their Relation to the Modern Organ." Mr. Deagan has invented other instruments of percussion, of which he will give a description. The meeting is open to all lovers of the organ. Members are urged to come and to bring a friend. Illinois Council recently gained the distinction of enrolling the first new member under the new rates.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

The program printed in Music News last Friday was given at the Chicago Musical College concert in Ziegfeld Theater on last Saturday morning to a very large attendance.

To begin at the end—the work of Gertrude Mandelstamm (pupil of Alexander Raab) was of exceptional value.

Miss Mandelstamm is a young artist who not only has distinguished herself at the college, but has already made many fine appearances otherwise, and it is very safe to predict for her a fine career.

Her choice of a Brahms "Carpiccio" in contrast to the brilliant "L'Orage" (Liszt) was a most happy one.

Other pianists were Miriam Penansky, a talented young player with Karl Reckzeh; Helen Smith, who was very successful in MacDowell numbers, and Ann Gordon of South Dakota, who, under tutelage of Rudolph Reuter, has made fine development, and who played, also—a MacDowell group.

The singers were Susanne Richardson, Anne Leonard, Dr. E. G. Urbanowicz and Gene Cashman—all of whom showed fine voices and reflected much credit on the college.

Two violinists appeared—both pupils of Leon Sametini, and both doing much credit to him.

Carl G. Rink played the Vieuxtemps "Reverie" and Lulu Gieseke the A Minor Concerto of Viotti. C. E. W.

Sophie Braslau's

New York Recital

NOVEMBER 9th, 1919

THE SUN:

Sophie Braslau's program at Carnegie Hall in the afternoon was one of pleasant interest. She is one of the most interesting of song recital artists.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE:

Carnegie Hall was filled to capacity yesterday afternoon at the song recital given by Miss Sophie Braslau. Miss Braslau has rightly won for herself an enviable place on the American concert stage, and her artistic progress has been marked and consistent. She was yesterday at her best, vocally, and gave abundant pleasure both because of the richness and power of her voice and because of her interpretative intelligence. This voice is a truly magnificent organ. Miss Braslau was enthusiastically applauded and forced to many encores.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH:

Sophie Braslau made an enviable achievement in the afternoon by drawing an almost record audience for song recitals, to hers, at Carnegie Hall. She sang with her accustomed vivacity, skill and keen emotional awareness.

NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL:

Yesterday afternoon Miss Sophie Braslau, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, warmed the hearts of a houseful at Carnegie Hall. Miss Braslau as a singer of songs is now well known in the musical community—well known for the possession and forthgiving of a beautiful low voice, one of the most beautiful to be heard nowadays.

THE GLOBE:

Yesterday afternoon Miss Sophie Braslau, the contralto of rich and abundant voice, gave her annual song recital.

THE EVENING SUN:

The richness of Miss Braslau's voice, and the power in her use of it proved valuable. Younger America knows no finer contralto than hers, nor more fortified by interpretative keenness.

THE EVENING MAIL:

An operatic singer who knows what concertgoers want is Sophie Braslau. While the greater part of her program at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon was given to songs of dramatic caliber, in which she excels, there was sufficient variety to prove her glorious voice equal to every demand.

NEW YORK HERALD:

Miss Braslau possesses one of the great American contralto voices, and she has rarely been in better voice than yesterday. Simplicity and sincerity are required in these songs of the people, and Miss Braslau possesses these things, as well as unusual beauty of tone.

Rudolph Ganz With the Portland Symphony Orchestra

The much-anticipated appearance of Rudolph Ganz with the Portland Symphony Orchestra marked the initial concert of the series planned for the winter. Mr. Ganz played the piano part of Grieg's A Minor Concerto, and perfect unity of conductor, pianist and orchestra was marked from the beginning. Mr. Ganz also played the two legends by Liszt, "St. Francis of Assisi preaching to the birds" and "St. Francis of Paulo walking on the waves," with a depth of understanding and a oneness with the instrument that held the audience enthralled. His gracious response to the enthusiastic applause was the beloved "Liebestraum" of Liszt. Very loath to allow Mr. Ganz to disappear from the stage for the last time, the audience finally settled itself into the deep satisfaction of having heard a true artist.

Mr. Denton is being more and more appreciated as an able conductor of an organization which has for its motive the musical upbuilding of Portland, its community, and the Northwest. And, with Mrs. Donald Spencer as business manager, the orchestra has a bright future.

Several other artist soloists have been engaged for later concerts, to which Portland is looking forward.

Home Opera for Portland

The Portland Opera Association expects to present its supreme achievement in the form of "Martha" at the Municipal Auditorium November 21 and 22.

The object of this association is to give the people of Portland high-class opera at popular prices, and locally this performance is causing a stir of delightful anticipation.

Mr. Corrucini has proved himself a conductor in every sense of the word, and to Mrs. E. L. Thompson, president of the association, goes the credit for interesting individuals and clubs sufficiently to put the organization on a self-sustaining basis.

The Oregon Music Teachers' Association will convene in Portland November 28, 29 and 30. Public school music is to be uppermost in the programming of the topics and speakers. Music teachers are looking forward to the day when music as a mind developer will take its place by the side of now well-recognized branches of learning and be given its just due—not as an accomplishment, but as a necessity.

Public school music is a step in the right direction.

LAURA RAWLINSON.

MAX ROSEN TO PLAY WITH MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY

Returning from his successful concerts in Grand Rapids, Montreal and Buffalo, Max Rosen played at a concert for the benefit of the Beth David Hospital in New York before leaving for Minneapolis to fill his engagements with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra in Minneapolis and St. Paul. The young violinist has been meeting with his customary success and applications for return engagements have come in from many of the cities where he has appeared. Mr. Rosen has just been booked for joint recital with Margaret Matzenauer in Rock Island. This makes his fourth joint recital this season with the famous contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

ELSA KELLNER

Several meetings with this attractive Milwaukee woman increased the first impression that there was something very familiar, a feeling of having met before. This idea was finally pigeonholed and stayed in its cubby until I heard Mrs. Kellner sing through a program and, although she is a soprano, there is a very tangible something between her and the beloved American contralto, Christine Miller. Mrs. Kellner is more decidedly blond, exceedingly pretty, and has distinctive personal charm which, if anything, increases when she is singing. Her voice is a soprano of lyric quality, with enough more volume than is usually found in the lyric to place her as a dramatic soprano. The power of her voice is decidedly surprising, as she is rather petite and sings with comforting ease. There is abundance of imagination, intelligently used, in her interpretations, and much of the reason for this was discovered when I learned her concert repertoire in English, Italian, French and German consists of over three hundred songs—memorized. This accounts for the ease, sureness and sincerity, for it is built on the foundation of constant study and application.

Mrs. Kellner was born in Milwaukee, and her primary music study was four years of piano under Elizabeth Taylor of Boston. She took up vocal study and also French and German, and then went to Berlin for two years, studying with Etelka Gerster. Through advice of the late Putnam Griswold she took up operatic work with Teresa Emmerich and made her debut in concert with the Bluthner Orchestra in Berlin. This resulted in a contract for three years with Royal Opera at Wiesbaden, before taking up which she returned to America, expecting to make only a short visit, but was married and, the war also intervening, she has confined herself to concertizing in America. Her local appearances have been numerous, and, it is just as interesting to know, have been well paid, because one of the prevalent faults with our music situation is that artists are expected to donate their services in their own localities. She has sung, besides recital work in Milwaukee, with Lyric Club and Musical Society, and also with Florence Hinkle, Lambert Murphy and Henri Scott in a big Wagner Festival with Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

In New York, besides an Aeolian Hall recital, she appeared with the Philharmonic Orchestra before the Liederkranz Club, with Efrem Zimbalist, Ada Sassoli and Leon Rothier at Harmony Club and in several private musicales at Hotel Astor. In these appearances she was accompanied by Richard Hageman and Charles Gilbert Spross.

Other outside appearances have been with St. Paul Symphony Orchestra, Walter Rothwell director; Chicago, several clubs; Detroit, Minneapolis, Birmingham, Ala., and before many of the clubs in the State of Wisconsin.

Her season opened this year in Milwaukee November 20 at the Wisconsin Club, some joint appearances with Rudolph Reuter and two private recitals in New York City. Eric Schmaal is accompanist for Mrs. Kellner in Milwaukee, and her enthusiasm for her work is apparent in her constant study.

The operatic career interrupted by the war will be resumed this season, and she will coach in New York City with Richard Hageman in preparation. Elsa Kellner has youth, beauty, personal charm and an instinctive interpretative talent. These four valuable assets, added to her natural gift of voice and capacity for work, with all apparent signs of a splendid constitution and sweet disposition, seem to spell success in the career she has chosen.

A Brisk Musical City—Musical Culture Club Shows Enterprise and Patriotism—An Ethelbert Nevin Evening

By CHARLES E. WATT

An Ethelbert Nevin Evening

Streator has many things which are not to be found in every small city, and clearly defined among these assets is a well-developed musical feeling, coupled with unusual Americanism.

A few hours in that Smoky City last Thursday was full of surprise and enjoyment.

Mrs. W. G. Foster

Chief among the bright lights of the city, in general intelligence as well as in musical enthusiasm, is Mrs. W. G. Foster, who has so many accomplishments that it is difficult to name them all. She is a musician of wide study and experience, is musical critic and general writer on the Streator Free Press, has held many positions in state organizations, is a representative of the managerial firm of Miller, Ressiguie & Tufts, correspondent and representative for Music News in Streator, and president of the Musical Culture Club, which has as its slogan "America First," is devoting its entire season to American music, and which was responsible for the presence in Streator of the editor of Music News.

Withal, Mrs. Foster is a fine conversationalist and a charming woman.

The Burkholders

Another well-known name in Streator is that of Burkholder, and of the musical Burkholders there are two, mother and son.

Mrs. E. F. Burkholder is a state figure in educational and club work, having a wide acquaintance and influence.

Raymond Burkholder, primarily an artist violinist, is also a teacher of splendid reputation, and, further, is the president of the Streator Conservatory of Music.

This thriving school has extensive and well appointed rooms in the Burkholder Building, and a short visit there disclosed musical activities and achievement of advanced kind.

Among the prominent teachers of the conservatory are Mora Murdock, the brilliant Chicago pianist and member of the Murdock Trio, who stands at the head of the piano department, others in that branch of instruction being Ida M. Wright and Lulu Mae Yenerich.

A splendid vocal department is headed by Charles E. Sindlinger, who is widely known as a soloist and teacher throughout the state, including Chicago, where he lived for many years and was long tenor soloist at the fashionable Kenwood Evangelical Church.

Others of the faculty of Mr. Burkholder's school include Grace Wright and Louise Dicus, violin; Mina Charlton, guitar and mandolin, and A. S. Poole, cornet.

Septimus E. Barbour

An artist and teacher of whom Streator is justly proud is S. E. Barbour, who has a beautiful studio where he teaches both voice and piano.

Each week he goes for two days to La Grange, Mo., where he is head of the music department at the college.

Mr. Barbour has studied piano with the late Emil Liebling, organ with Harrison Wild, and voice with several teachers, including many terms with Oscar Saenger both in Chicago and New York.

He has a voice of great range and beauty, is an exceptional accompanist and a thoroughly successful teacher.

Branch of the Sherwood School

A brief visit to the Streator branch of the Sherwood School discovered Ceacilia Castelli in charge and a very interesting little boy in the midst of a lesson, in which he was doing some Bach with clarity and style.

There was a handsome picture of Georgia Kober (teacher of Miss Castelli) in the room and a general atmosphere of the expected musicianship and artistic attainment. Another successful teacher here is Martha Brenneeke.

A Nevin Program

As a part of the musical scheme of the winter at the Streator Musical Culture Club Ethelbert Nevin was selected as the subject, and the following program was given at Good Will Hall to a fine audience and great appreciation on last Thursday evening:

Lecture ..... Charles E. Watt
Americanization of Music and Ethelbert Nevin
One Spring Morning ..... Nevin
Doris ..... Nevin
Miss Cecilia Sheehan
Violin obligato played by Paul Lester
Piano Suite—Day in Venice
Dawn
The Gondolier

Miss Ruth Bradley
Song—At Twilight
Mighty Lak' a Rose Nocturne
My Desire
..... Nevin
Septimus E. Barbour
Piano—Misericordia
(At Midnight on the Lung Arno), From the Suite May in Tuscany ..... Nevin

Narcissus
Love Song
Shepherds All and Maidens Fair
From the Suite In Arcady
Miss Bradley

Americanization of Music

Mr. Watt devoted a few minutes to Amercanism and talked on various phases of the subject—the Use of American Music—the Encouragement of American Artists—Opera in English and Related Topics.

Ethelbert Nevin

"A prominent and successful figure was Ethelbert Nevin during his life," said the speaker in taking up the main subject of the evening, "and there is no abatement of his popularity or influence, although he has lain in his grave for eighteen years."

Mr. Watt repeated much of the material he has used in previous Nevin lecture-recitals, including the reading of a most interesting letter written to Mrs. Crosby Adams by Nevin himself.

Following this half-hour talk the music was given with splendid effect.

Miss Sheehan, a pupil of Mr. Barbour, sang with nice tone and interpretation and was particularly deft in enunciation of text. Mr. Barbour played for her, and the violin obligato added material effect.

The group sung by Mr. Barbour was exceedingly well chosen, and was delivered with much effect.

The "Nocturne" is doubtless one of Nevin's strongest compositions, and it, especially, was beautifully interpreted by Mr. Barbour.

Ruth Bradley

A young artist of splendid gifts is Miss Bradley, for not only did she play (almost at sight) for Mr. Barbour and also some accompaniments to readings by Mr. Watt in exceptional style, but also in the piano numbers, which were prepared especially for the occasion on short notice, she was brilliant and artistic.

For final encore she used "I Stood on Tiptoe on a Little Hill," by Carl Beecher of Northwestern University School of Music at Evanston.

Miss Bradley is petite and graceful, with a mignon face and charming stage bearing, and her pianism is of extraordinary clarity, color and finesse.

Comment of Local Press

The following is from the Streator Free Press:

The Musical Culture Club has presented many worthy programs during its six years of existence, but few have been more instructive and more enjoyable than the Nevin evening of last night at Good Will Hall.

The newly decorated auditorium of the building was very attractive and the platform was very homelike with its tasteful arrangement of piano, piano lamp and tall vase of yellow chrysanthemums.

S. E. Barbour, leader of the lesson, had been fortunate in securing two splendid attractions for the evening in Charles E. Watt, editor of The Music News, and Ruth Bradley, Chicago pianist.

Whatever preconceived notions the members of the club and their guests may have held as to music critics in general, they were impressed with the fact that there is at least one eminent member of the profession who is not pedagogic, dictatorial, sardonic and heartless, but is suave, genial and altogether human. The fact that he is the father of four very interesting daughters was not known to the audience, nor that he was a very successful pianist and teacher before he became an editor of one of the leading musical magazines in this country. He recalled with great pleasure, in conversation with a representative of this paper, his first visit to La Salle county, twenty-two years ago, when he was soloist at Ottawa at a convention of the I. M. T. A. As nearly as he could recall, Georgia Kober was also a soloist and was a beautiful young artist who was beginning to attract attention, but had not developed into the eminent pianist which she later became. Mr. Watt was also inclined to think that Mrs. W. G. Paisley, who is well known here, was one of the officers of the association at that time and helped to make the convention a success.

AMERICA FIRST

Mr. Watt had no sons to send to the war, but he had a facile pen, and all through the past four years he has sounded his slogan, "America First," which is printed on the cover page of his magazine and is woven into all his critiques. It is not remarkable that a man so filled with patriotic zeal should include in his talk on Nevin a preface on Americanization. The fact that the Musical Culture Club had adopted the motto of "America First" was commented upon very favorably by Mr. Watt, who also spoke highly of the excellent facilities Streator was offering its young students of music through its splendid conservatories, which he had visited in the afternoon.

Mr. Watt pointed out the fact that America had learned to make its own dyes during the war, had learned how to make gelatin for the big Jello plant, had learned that her own fashions were better than those of Paris, and was learning the worth of American music. He did not hesitate to state most empratically that he believed the opera companies and orchestras of our country should be made up and directed by American artists who were conversant in the English language.

ETHELBERT NEVIN

His discussion of Ethelbert Nevin was extremely interesting, for he had gleaned his information from many sources and had discovered many facts about the life and works of the noted American which were new to the audience.

Mr. Watt brought out the characteristics of the Nevin piano music and songs and ended his informal talk by reading some of the Nevin songs, for which Miss Bradley provided ideal accompaniments. He selected for this part of the program "The Rosary," "Merry, Merry Lark," and two children's songs. Mr. Watt was given such sincere and enthusiastic applause at the close of his talk that he was very much gratified by the appreciation of the audience.

A CHARMING ARTIST

Miss Bradley returned to Streator as an exponent of Nevin after having made one very successful appearance here as an accompanist on the State Music Teachers' program last spring. Her interpretation of the suite, "A Day in Venice," was marked by a depth of feeling and beauty of tone which delighted the audience. Needless to say, she was recalled and gave, by request, the rippling "Scherzando" of Carl Beecher. Her last group was made up of the somber "Misericordia" and three numbers from the "Day in Arcady" suite. It would have been well had every piano student in Streator heard Miss Bradley's interpretation of the "Narcissus," which has become so hackneyed but which was played last evening as it should be played and demonstrated very clearly why Nevin became so popular.

Miss Bradley is a charming young artist and has a captivating personality, so she made a veritable triumph of her appearance here.

The other Nevin numbers on the program were songs by Miss Cecilia Sheehan and by her teacher, S. E. Barbour. Miss Sheehan was selected for two native and coquettish shepherdess songs, "One Spring Morning" and "Doris." She gave the numbers charmingly, the last being especially attractive with a violin obligato played beautifully by Paul Lester.

Mr. Barbour sang four of the most worthy songs of Nevin: "At Twilight," "Nocturne," "Mighty Lak a Rose" and "My Desire." Miss Bradley provided beautiful accompaniments, which made the numbers all the more enjoyable.

OPENING OF MUSIC NEWS OFFICE

Punctually at 9 a. m. Saturday, November 15, Music News representative and correspondent opened the door of the first office established in the Queen City of the Pacific Coast by Charles E. Watt, owner and editor of Chicago and New York Music News. Suite 502, Chickering Hall, Seattle, is from now on the headquarters of the paper in the building devoted to studios, music publishing offices, music and piano stores, and violin makers, on one of the busy main streets of this youthful, aspiring, progressive and most beautifully situated port of the west. A fitting environment for future composers, poets, and artists is this wonderful Nature's Showland, the place where famous ships of war were built under the shadows of the giant mountains of the Cascades and Olympics, rearing their magnificent sparkling majesties high above this future western Chicago. Here labor year after year a devoted band of musicians from all parts of the globe, giving of their best ungrudgingly, often receiving but little of the warm and inspiring appreciation such efforts merit, and which Music News' representative observes with sincere admiration. It shall be her pleasant duty to chronicle in future issues what is being done for the cause of music, the drama and art in Seattle by all these loyal and earnest artists. Acknowledgment is here appreciatively made of the courtesies extended by the majority who have been called on at this early date, among them Mrs. Doctor A. Jefferson Nelson, Mrs. Elizabeth Richmond Miller, Professor Thomas J. Ryan, Professor Carlos MacAllister, Professor Carl Grissen, Mr. George Kirchner, Mr. Hale Dewey, Professor Albert Markus, Mr. Will Smith, Mr. Paul Pierre McNeely, Mr. J. K. McDonough, Mr. Arthur Hill, Mr. A. Rosenthal, Editor Sol Krems of the Jewish Voice, and others, and of the keen interest displayed in Music News. In hoisting our flag in the west Music News' representative feels the greatest satisfaction and interest, knowing she can voice and give full publicity to all that is being achieved here, and also sometimes sketch a little of the other sides of life in the cosmopolitan, beautiful and famous Port of Seattle. Anna Case Has Her Fortune Told

(Note—This reading of Miss Case's palm was made before the "Autobiography of Anna Case" appeared in Music News.)

By JANE ENGLISH

The right hand of Anna Case, the New York soprano, tells a wonderful story of health, happiness, fame and fortune.

A strong money line and three influence lines attend her life line throughout. Two of these influence lines begin in childhood, the third at about the age of twenty-two, at the point of some strong interference by relatives. At this point the interference, which has been continuous since childhood, disappears. This last influence line indicates that the love and assistance of some friend causes a turning point in the life just here which determines the entire career. These influence lines in any hand indicate that the fates are constantly directing the course of the subject.

In Miss Case's hand Apollo (art) is more strongly developed than Jupiter (ambition). The efforts of this kind of a life in the pursuit of fame is not so much for fame itself as for the joy of the work.

Miss Case sings, then, because she loves singing for the beauty there is in it, the fame and fortune it brings being secondary to her personality. In other words, Miss Case has the hand of the true artist, not of the "successist." And, as is usually the case with this type, success is given as reward.

The heart line is clear, idealistic, and with but one great affection foretold.

A capacity for hard work is shown, but with it a dislike for detail. This dislike is so marked that it occurs to me Miss Case is fortunate in having such a capable maid.

The fate line decidedly foretells two important changes ahead. I would say the prediction is that Miss Case will leave her own land to sing in several others, for a number of years, returning again to the United States and to greater success than ever.

Finally the best line in the palm is the head line. It bespeaks dependable judgment, talent for writing, generosity, intuition, intellectual energy, business ability, self-criticism, and imagination, with a balance between the purely imaginative and the purely practical.

YVETTE GUILBERT'S RECITALS AT THE MAXINE ELLIOTT THEATER

Madame Yvette Guilbert announces two Sunday evening recitals, which as usual will be given at the Maxine Elliott Theater. The first recital takes place Sunday evening, November 30; the second Sunday evening, December 7. A special feature of Mme. Guilbert's recitals this season will be a miniature orchestra composed of very select players to accompany Mme. Guilbert in some of her songs and to perform some purely symphonic works written for smaller instrumental organizations and rarely heard. This orchestra will be under the direction of Mr. Sam Franko.

THE MUSICAL TREASURES OF JOHN FREDERICK & BROS.

I accidentally dropped in the shop of John Frederick & Bros. on Fifth avenue. It would be quite difficult to discover this famous house of instruments offhand. Situated in one of the busiest districts of the metropolis, you are liable to pass it by without noticing it, but those who are interested in fine purchases could easily walk into the shop blindfolded. When I arrived, the sympathetic manager, Mr. Doring, was busy exhibiting some fine importations to his prospective buyers. When I had an opportunity I approached him and asked him whether the war has affected the sale of violins, cellos and other similar instruments; he replied quite convincingly that while no one had access in purchasing merchandise from Germany, it was quite easy to substitute with purchases made in France and Italy. I went into the repair shop and watched three or four artisans repairing violins, some of them worth not less than $10,000. I looked over many of the treasure violins themselves and even witnessed the sale of one Nicholas Amati dated 1655, which was purchased by an amateur. This treasured instrument was formerly used by the famous Arthur Argieiicz. Some of the fiddlers have on various occasions complained of the shortage of good violin strings. This is quite surprising, for the house of Frederick & Bros. seem ready to supply the finest tricolo violin strings manufactured in France and Italy. I have looked over some very beautiful bows. On various occasions I expressed my opinion concerning the popularity of the cello; to my regret this celestial is not yet a prime favorite of our music lovers. To solve the problem at this moment would be useless. If New York has the patience to listen to many mediocre violinists during the season why shouldn't the cello attempt its fortunes to the same degree with the violin? Naturally, no orchestra could go on without three or four cellists, but the number of cello recitals in New York in Carnegie Hall or Aeolian Hall does not exceed the number twelve. Mr. Doring, manager of this house, told me that they could sell one thousand violins against one cello. This confirms my assertion that this beautiful instrument is unfortunately unpopular. In looking over the stock I admired the Gurnerius dated 1729; the Stradivarius, a rare specimen; the famous Amatis and the whole range of violins originating from Italy, France, Germany and Austria.

The viola, another instrument yet unpopular in America, was found in comfortable quantities at this artistic shop. In fact, violinists and cellists would seem to be able at any time to find all that is necessary to them. And out-of-town readers can always ask for a catalog, a copy of which seemed to the writer not only beautiful but exceedingly instructive as well.

The picture shows one of the famous violins of this shop. J. de V.

CHARLES E. LUTTON

Mr. Charles Edwin Lutton sang a group of songs last Tuesday evening for the Wilmette Woman's Club. Miss Beatrice Byxbee played the accompaniments.

Mr. Lutton recently resigned the directorship of the Woodlawn Methodist Choir, a position he held for five years. The choir presented him with a beautiful ebony baton as a token of their esteem.

Mr. Lutton has appeared recently at the Evanston Woman's Club in recital and also in the Sinfonia Opera, "Cox and Box," by Sullivan. He is to give a recital at an early date at the Chicago Evangelical Institute, and will sing for the New England Women's Society in December. He has several "Messiah" engagements scheduled for the Christmas season and will sing in a return engagement for the Evanston Woman's Club the afternoon of New Year's day.

Mr. Lutton has accepted a solo position at Hemenway Methodist Church, Evanston, where he sang before he led the choir at the Woodlawn Methodist Church.

Mr. Lutton, accompanied by Professor Grant-Schaefer, sang at the Three Arts Club October 12 to a large, enthusiastic audience.

Mr. Lutton also sang at a studio recital Thursday evening, November 20, at the Music Annex, Northwestern University, Professor Grant-Schaefer playing the accompaniments.

By MRS. JAMES M. TRACY

The fall musical season has commenced in full swing. Robert Slack's first concert with Geraldine Farrar, assisted by Rosita Renard, pianist; Arthur Hackett, the splendid tenor, and Claude Gotthelf, accompanist, drew an overflowing house. The Oberfelder Series with its first concert followed October 13, when Paul Althouse, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera, charmed a large audience by his fine performance. He was ably assisted by our own Larry Whipp at the piano, who also gave a group of American organ numbers. Mr. Whipp is a rare exception to the rule that the professional organist has no elastic touch for the pianoforte. On the contrary we often wonder at which instrument he is the most expert. Certainly as a sympathetic, intelligent accompanist, he cannot be excelled, and as to giving us perfect delight from the organ this also is without question. In the Aria from Verdi's "Aida" Mr. Althouse quite carried us to regions ethereal. The second and third concerts of this series followed with Marie Tiffany, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, and Olga Gulledge, pianist. Her program was quite a diversion from the beaten path, in that it was chosen from rather an uncommon repertoire. This, however, may have enhanced the interest and pleasure rather than to depreciate it. Miss Gulledge in her piano numbers of MacDowell did not play with much accent or rhythm. Perhaps I am especially critical on this point. Florence Macbeth in the third concert November 4 proved a genuine delight. She has a fine soprano voice with a carrying quality that she knows how to control. She articulates and enunciates perfectly, bringing out her nuances well defined and effective. A splendid technique, she produces a beautiful sustained tone, never forcing her voice, and therefore singing with that ease that at once bespeaks the artist. Not in many a day have I heard anything to please me better. To criticise closely would be out of order, as the fine qualities of this artist so far overtop any slight imperfections. Again Mr. Whipp showed his true merit by the splendid accompaniment work. Sophie Braslau, contralto, and Albert Spalding, violinist, in joint recital were the artists of the second concert of the Slack Series at the Auditorium November 18. The entire seating capacity of the house was sold out, and the genuine enthusiasm of the Slack audience was again apparent. Well this might be, as the concert proved a musical delight from beginning to end. Mr. Spalding draws a splendid tone; shows tremendous technique and produces a fine sustained tone quality, making all the nuances effective. He did the "La Campanella" of Paganini in an astonishing manner. Perhaps in the Sonata of Handel his accompanist, Andre Benoist, was not always with him. It seemed as if in the rendition of Schumann's "Abendlied" (Evening Song), Mr. Spalding displayed his inner soul feeling to a greater extent than in any other number, causing me to wonder if, perhaps, he was more a perfect technical artist than a particularly soulful player. I was especially pleased with the fine harmonics he produced in one of the encore numbers. Miss Braslau possesses a magnificent contralto voice, combined with fine technique and sustained quality of tone. She is a very dramatic person, and leans noticeably towards the tragic, causing me to remark that she would make a splendid tragedienne; however, in the group of six folk songs representing the Swedish, Spanish, Venetian, French, English and Gypsy, she depicted well all the distinctly different temperaments of the nations. There seemed somewhat of a sameness throughout her singing generally, yet this might have been due to her mood that evening, as this did not appear so when she sang here before. Eleanor Scheib's (her accompanist) playing seemed rather hard. Perhaps the piano was more at fault than she. What a great privilege it is, however, to be permitted to hear such fine artists come to us, and give so generously of their talents. Mr. Slack announces a special engagement of Rudolph Ganz, pianist, at the Central Presbyterian Church November 28. The Musical Society of Denver gave its first dinner at the Adams Hotel October 23. This was followed by after dinner speeches and a funny program in the form of a "frolic" was given by David D. Abramowitz, Florence Lamont Abramowitz, Bernice Doughty, J. Warren Turner, Frederick Schweiklet, Edward B. Rinquest, Joseph Newman, Josephine White, John C. Wilcox, Della Lomason, Blanch Dingley Mathews, Floyd Spencer and Cateau Stegeman Tracy. Mme. Ida Soda announces the opening of her studio at 1627 Lawrence street after a musical sojourn in the east. Mary Frazier Fauth has been engaged as chorister and soloist at Highland Park Presbyterian Church. R. Jefferson Hall, the organist at St. Mark's Church, speaks very highly of her voice and singing qualities. The musicians of Denver extend a cordial welcome to Annabelle Macintyre Dickey Babcock, who has come to Denver to reside. She is probably one of the best known contraltos, and has sung extensively throughout the United States. Indeed, the musical fraternity is to be congratulated upon receiving such a valuable member in their midst and we trust Mme. Babcock will find Denver to her liking in every way.

VOTICHENKO PLAYS IN PHILADELPHIA

"Russia of Yesterday and Russia of To-day" was the title of the program offered by the Matinee Musical Club at the Bellevue Stratford last night (November 4).

Quite the feature of the all-Russian program was the playing of Sasha Votichenko, the only musician who masters the tympanon. Mr. Votichenko presented his own compositions, which are masterful tone-pictures of pastoral life in the province of Little Russia.—Philadelphia Ledger.

E. ROBERT SCHMITZ

Awarded artistic recognition by his native France as one of its greatest pianists and conductors, E. Robert Schmitz gave New York the thrill of the season by his first recital here, and revealed himself thereby a pianist of supreme merit. That he is an artist in the highest sense of the term was amply proven and attested to by the enthusiasm of his audience and the extraordinary criticisms carried by the press.

Mr. Schmitz was talented as a youth, and both violin and piano claimed his early attention. Specialization in piano while at the Paris Conservatoire, however, won for him a first prize upon his graduation in 1910, and he thereupon toured Europe as a concert pianist for a few years. Germany, Belgium, Holland and England each in turn acclaimed Mr. Schmitz. The pioneer interpreter of Debussy's music in Germany and England, he was lauded equally for presenting the works of contemporary Gallic composers as for his superb mastery of the three T's—tone, technic and temperament.

Upon his return, Paris then learned to know of his ability as conductor as well as a distinguished pianist. He was conductor of the symphony orchestra, which he founded and which bears his name, and on the programs of which were many little-known works of present-day composers.

His friendship and collaboration with men of the caliber of Debussy, Saint-Saens, d'Indy, Dukas, Widor and many others throughout Europe, bespeak his thorough appreciation of that which is valuable in the works of the moderns, leaving aside, nevertheless, the modern extremists. The versatility of Mr. Schmitz was emphasized upon his appearance as lecturer, and both as conductor and soloist of the same program. Likewise as the leader of his French Schola Cantorum, there was occasion for Mr. Schmitz to more than sufficiently demonstrate his ability along such lines.

Up to 1914, Mr. Schmitz was enjoying an enviable reputation as an extraordinary musician. Then came the Great War and he was called to the colors.

JOHN RANKEL

John Rankel has been filling numerous engagements this fall. After closing his engagement with the Mascot Opera Company he sang at the Isis Theater in Kansas City; Hamlin Theater, Chicago; Hippodrome, Chicago; Chicago Athletic Club; Illinois Athletic Club; Bankers' Banquet at the Congress; Women's Press Association.

Besides his numerous engagements, Mr. Rankel has an excellent class in voice. Miss Schliessmann, a promising lyric-soprano, has sung at numerous clubs this season.

Mr. Rankel has been obliged to reject many engagements. He is soloist at Christ Episcopal Church, Winnetka.

Ravinia—Louis Eckstein, the General Director of the Ravinia Company, announced this week in New York at his offices in the Aeolian Building that the season of 1920 at Ravinia will be a week longer than in former years. The season will commence on June 26 and end on September 6.

Sundstrom—Ebba Sundstrom, violinist, will give a joint recital with Esther Pearson, soprano, in Rock Island, Ill., December 5.

INTERPRETATIONS OF ORATORIOS AND RELIGIOUS MUSIC

By J. WARREN ERB

The indifferent manner of preparation and presentation of Sacred Music is becoming today the despair of church managers and choral leaders.

Singers in general and many conductors feel that a strict presentation of the notation alone with an interpretation absolutely devoid of color or suggestion of meaning produces an effect of great purity and spiritual thought and is quite sufficient in the rendition of Sacred Music.

What an absurdity and how little interest

J. WARREN ERB

there is in such a production for the listener! This is why the interest in Spiritual Music and the greatest of all forms of Sacred Musical writing—the Oratorio is waning.

In fact through this misapprehension on the part of both singer and conductor Oratorio's part is becoming extinct. Audiences loving and awaiting the messages which the classic writers clothed in wonderful choral settings will not be contented with the "dry bones" presented to them in the productions of today.

A well known New York choir manager says that the comparative lack of preparation is the cause of the almost prevalent condition of uninteresting religious singing. Most artists will devote unlimited time to the preparation of a program of classic song literature, but will be content with simply "running over" any religious song work to be performed.

No role of opera or characterization of a dramatic part should be so near to the artist as the expression of their relationship to the Divine source of all life and being; and no inner feeling should be too intense or emotion too deep to portray their own relationship to God.

Unless conductors and singers have this conception of their spiritual work it perishes by their own hand.

One has only to hear the wonderful Bach Chorus of Bethlehem under its conductor, Dr. Fred Wolle, to realize the conception of reverence and deep religious spirit of conductor and chorus, which must be the impetus of such a festival of sacred music, and to realize, however, with all careful rehearsing and execution of notation, the orchestra which is employed from year to year for their festivals is still not an integral part of the mental harmony of the festival, as they do not have the spiritual grasp on the situation.

This, too, is why so many well known concert artists fall hopelessly short in their appearances at these festivals.

Music is the most natural expression of the real existence of man, and song, being such a means of mental and spiritual transmission, becomes a very active force through which thought is projected and mental influences executed on great masses of people.

This places a tremendous responsibility upon singers and conductors—that their influence be toward the upholding of highest standards of spiritual and musical thought.

APOLLO CLUB AND ERNEST DAVIS

An evening of musical pleasure was given before a large audience at Orchestra Hall on Thursday evening, November 20, by the Apollo Musical Club and Ernest Davis, tenor.

Part songs were sung by this well-known company of singers in a most enthusiastic manner. Sullivan's "Lost Chord" was so beautifully rendered that they were compelled to respond, and it was repeated.

ERNEST DAVIS

Mr. Wild, as director, gave to the Club his very self for its success, and Edgar Nelson, pianist, and Alice Deal, organist, again distinguished themselves as excellent accompanists.

Ernest Davis, the soloist, was in splendid voice; his diction was of the very best. The "Lament" from "Pagliacci" was sung with much feeling and finish. His group of songs was particularly interesting: "The Star" (Rogers); "Values" (Vanderpool); "The Heart of Her" (Cadman), and "The Blind Ploughman" (Clark). He graciously responded to encores after each appearance, singing an "Aria" from "La Traviata"; "Christ in Flanders" (Bergen), and "To a Messenger" (La Forge). The artistry of Mr. Davis is beyond question, and his effectiveness very great. E. W.

And now comes Chicago's "discovery" of Serge Prokofieff, the Russian pianist-composer. His two recent recitals in that city aroused a great deal of interest, and Mr. W. L. Hubbard, the distinguished critic of the Chicago Tribune, not only devoted a good deal of space to the review of his concert, but also wrote of him again in the following article in the Sunday Tribune:

"Mr. Prokofieff is an interesting figure in the music world, and his two appearances here in recital were productive of an exhilaration and a pleasure that the majority of piano recitals do not afford. He grips attention the moment he appears on the stage and he does not loosen it until he has completed his performance. I know of no pianist now before the public who sits so quietly at the instrument as does this young Russian. And yet there is no effect or dynamic climax impossible to him. He has tremendous force in his hands, and the left is fully as marvelous as is the right. Technical difficulties seem not to exist for him and he overcomes them with a quietness and ease that verge on the uncanny. Few players that the present or the past generation of concertgoers have heard have distinguished and articulated the musical phrase with such clarity and precision."

The Elderly Person

Two men alighted from the train as it stopped at a tiny station in New England. Both were elderly, both plump and well preserved, both rigged for some sport, but totally unalike in every other way. An English deer stalker's cap, handsome sweater, knickerbockers and hip rubber boots went with fish basket, landing net and steel rods. A slouch hat, old serge trousers, a flaring shirt collar and rough shoes with the other costume.

The station man finished his many different agencies and wheeled his truck back leisurely as the train moved off. The western man got in the first word, but the fisherman didn't mind that. "Can you point the way to the house where Charles Dudley Warner was born?" asked one, and "where will I find good fishing?" said the other, but both together. The agent's red face expanded into a smile. "Warner's place? Come this way," he said.

Thus did humble culture win out and leave haughty sordidness to champ the bit and chew the cud of neglect.

The little village was Charlmont, Mass., a few miles beyond the eastern entrance to the Hoosac Tunnel and on the line of the "Mohawk Trail," that being a broad highway cut over Hoosac Mountain, which towers pretty straight up twenty-two hundred feet. To greet the memory of the man who wrote "Being a Boy" and climb over that Trail to North Adams, nineteen miles away, and to loaf a bit, was the mapped out day's job for the Elderly Person. Well worth going a thousand miles to accomplish, too.

The friendly station agent had said: "That big button ball tree in front of the house is there because Warner's father took the boy walking one day and cut a cane from a suitable tree. When they reached home he stuck the cane in the ground and it took root." The girth of the glorious tree would need part of a third man to circle it—a most superb specimen of what missionaries call Sycamore. Its bark was as lustrous and dappled as a Guernsey cow and from its little elevation the long arms stretched far and wide. The elder Warner had an eye for situation. The weather worn two story house fronted the rocky bed of Deerfield River and across the valley the mighty hills reared their forest clad slopes. It was just contentment to sit down on a rise and think of a boy living in such a place. The thought of a city flat brought a shudder. The Elderly Person was glad to meet a boy on the "covered bridge" near by and talk with him luxuriously because he was living in such a place. True, the boy didn't seem elated!

The Trail followed the course of a mountain stream and its tributaries. Presumably these streams have in time's flight made the mountains by cutting a way downward for the surplus water on the crests. The streams themselves are not large, but their courses are wide gorges. Boulders block and arrest and direct flow. In the ages past these boulders have been undermined, grain by grain, of their earth support and torrents have wrestled with them as they sped by. Far up in the hills there are glades and plateaus where pools form and streams go lazily making the flow of the water musical.

The charm of the Berkshires, to the western man, was their wooded slopes. Every sort of tree and shrub and flower finds foothold and crowds and fights for place. On the mountain tops were whole fields of daisies, buttercups and devil's paint brush; contrasts of pure white, brilliant yellow and dazzling orange-red ferns of unbelievable size and acreage creep and propagate. Maples, lindens, locust, beech, elm, spruce, hemlock and the gleaming white birches lift slender stems and stand in sentinel rows. The colors in the fall are proverbial. That may be, but they were adorable in June. In the early morning the Elderly Person had it all to himself with only the birds to be startled when he threw out his arms and shouted for very joy at such overwhelming luxuriance.

To be a very cap sheaf of delight the mountain laurel was in its full glory. There is no way to tell how lovely it is, nor can any words tell how lavishly it spreads its dainty cups. It was the very base of everything. It hung over the brook's edge, peered from every covert, rooted in the wayside, and shone from the far peak of the mountain. It was just as thick on our forest as dandelions are on our plains. It is of the azalia, rhododendron, oleander family with thick rubbery leaves which shine like polish. The plant is everything from a little tuft in a crevice to a young tree, and it is nearly all bloom. These flowerets come in clusters of fist size, with so many separate blossoms that a count showed thirty-five full blooms and eighty buds on one cluster. The colors run from a deep pink to pure white and the flower resembles closely a tiny pink colonial saucer, six or eight sided, with delicate markings for decoration. There is no odor that would make for perfection.

The Elderly Person flirted with the blossoms all day, carrying them in his hand, in his hat band and stuck in his belt. There was no need to remember "conservation." They just insisted on being plucked. . . . For hours the jaunt ran on with just the glory of existence in such beauty and gratitude for eyes to see it and ears to hear what it preached. There were many who saw it from motor cars, and others who only scorched up the mileage and disturbed the quiet with their honks. But the trudging man had no quarrel with other men's definition of happiness. The sun came out hot and strong for a time, but there was always the cooling umbrage of the forest. Then the clouds massed and glowered and muttered and the heavy shadows crowded, the flowers looked frightened, the crags threatened and the trees stood still wondering if another test of their strength was imminent. Some stark battered old pines testified how serious some of these encounters had been. The birds fluttered excitedly and their song was hurried and nervous. All but the wood thrush—he sang on luxuriously cool and liquid—perhaps deceived in a shortened nap and believing the twilight was at hand. The white rocks looked whiter in the somberness. The leaves whispered and twisted their shoulders to see what might be portending. The water asserted its voice in chatter and ripple, being the one element which would be most affected if the threatened storm came. It looked to its banks and pools, noted certain boulders which needed attention and prepared for the additions to the family with all the care of a good housekeeper. The automobiles put on speed to reach safe harbor. One cordial driver stopped his big car and invited the tramp to "hop in" and looked puzzled and skeptical when assured that the walking was preferred. For the Elderly Person was hoping with infinite desire that there would be a rousing storm and he have a chance to see it in the mountain. He deserved better than he got for his spirit of adventure, because after the elaborate preparations all that came was a soggy drizzle which obscured the far off views. After the crest was past the sun took charge once more and the trip ended without mishap.

But in the midst of the ominous moments the Elderly Person stopped for a drink of water and then leaned over the protecting fence which guarded the "Trail" from the gorge far below. Prudence tapped him on the shoulder and said it looked very threatening and she didn't know how far we had come nor how far we had to go. That there were dates ahead, etc., and this was no time to moon over the fence with alluring shadows down below where there might be a Circe and all her damsels to work mischief for men away from home. To remember Ulysses' trouble, and tend strictly to business. But the Elderly Person only scoffed: "If I don't do it I'll always be sorry. If I don't get home today I will tomorrow."

And then he climbed over the barrier and down the racky fastnesses to the thick, deep woods whose arms and voices had beckoned so irresistibly. And when he reached the bottom he knew that Prudence was an old fraud who would have persuaded him to miss the crown of his fun.

The glade was a natural amphitheater with interlacing tree tops shutting out all save filtered light. A thick muck of dead leaves and moss yielded a spongy spring to the footsteps. Wonderful ferns, young shoots of trees and shrubs, and fantastic shapes of rocks, covered with moss, made it a court of honor for fairies and nymphs. How long since a human footstep or voice had invaded the precincts? The stream ran along, widening and contracting and circling its shallow course. A giant boulder had refused to budge and with accretions made a barricade and the pool that was needed. There was only one thing to do, the one thing he hoped for when he pushed Prudence aside. Stripping, as Rupert Brooke says, and taking a slender maple sapling for support on one side and a hemlock on the other, he leaned far over the pool until he saw his reflection. Then he shouted: "Hello, Narcissus. Why, you've grown a beard since I saw you last." Then he let the saplings go and plunged in! Great!

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

Kreisler Not Wanted in Louisville

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 20.—Fritz Kreisler, violinist, who was an Austrian army officer, officially advised of widespread hostility to his proposed appearance here tonight in recital, canceled his engagement on advice of Mayor George W. Smith, and tonight is speeding toward Lawrence, Mass., his next scheduled stop.

The mayor's letter said he had considered the "unusual circumstances" and had concluded that a postponement would be "the part of wisdom," although admitting Kreisler's right to give a performance.

Jefferson Post, American Legion, opposed the concert. Other organizations followed, and posters advertising the concert were removed from store windows and other public places.

C. J. Foley, the violinist's manager, sought a conference with Mayor Smith today. The note and the cancellation followed. Meanwhile ticket cancellations had greatly reduced the prospective audience.—Chicago Tribune.

Konecny in Bristol

Delightful in the extreme was the concert at the Virginia High School last night, featuring Josef Konecny, Bohemian violinist. From the opening number, Rubinstein's Sonata in G, to the curtain encore, Konecny held his audience with the magic spell of the violin, of which he is indeed master.

His work last night was without error. It was without question the work of the finished artist, the master. He impressed one as having been born and reared with a bow in his hand, so naturally, so freely did magic music leap forth from the instrument at his touch. The artist was entirely absorbed in his art, to the apparent exclusion of the outside world. He showed a confidence in his own ability that characterizes only the artist who is sure of himself. And throughout the evening, as he responded to one persistent encore after another, he stirred the audience with his masterful art.—Bristol (Va.) Courier.

Ruth Bradley at Streator

Miss Bradley, in her two groups of piano numbers and in her accompaniments, proved to be a very dramatic interpreter of musical values, giving to each bit of phrasing its measure of singing beauty of tone and with a facility and brilliance wholly delightful, conquering all technical difficulties.

In the "Misericordia" her dramatic passion found opportunity for full scope, and she rendered it with all the sustained power and impassioned seriousness which her ardent nature supplies. She took the much-played "Narcissus" of Nevin and gave to it a delicacy and sweetness, a buoyancy and lightness which only an artist can impart, and in all renderings there were conscientiousness, originality of treatment and wonderful clarity of tone.—Streator (Ill.) Independent-Times.

Florence Macbeth at Minneapolis

Invading Minnesota again on her Middle Western tour, Florence Macbeth even surpassed her splendid triumph of a few weeks ago at St. Paul, this time at Minneapolis. What the important journals of this go-ahead city said in consequence is of much interest. One of them, the "Tribune," under date of October 20, wrote:

The Bell Song from "Lakme," by Delibes, seemed written especially with her voice in mind. More effective was the encore she used after her Rimsky-Korsakoff aria—an old English song by Bishop, entitled, "Lo; Here the Gentle Lark." The agility with which that coloratura voice of hers swept its winging flight through various cadenzas, dipping, soaring and twisting about in Immelman turns, provoked from the audience a savage refusal to let her leave the stage. So closely and uniquely does Miss Macbeth trespass upon the province of the birds that, should the birds ever organize and insist upon a closed shop, the head of the "Minnesota Nightingale" will be the first demanded.

Miss Macbeth's voice seemed to have gained its power without losing its girl-like timbre, while her skill of coloratura singing once more asserted its excellence in the Hindu Bell Song from Delibes' "Lakme," and the hymn to the sun from "The Golden Cock," by Rimsky-Korsakoff. Miss Macbeth made a positive hit in Bishop's "Lo! Here the Gentle Lark." Frank Gray's "Dreams" was enhanced, too, by a lovely closing note in altissimo followed by "Annie Laurie," which Miss Macbeth sang endearingly.—Minneapolis Journal.

At her second appearance with the orchestra as soloist Florence Macbeth won a notable success.—Minneapolis Daily News.

Ethel Benedict in Chicago Recital

Ethel Benedict was heard in song recital last evening in Kimball hall and proved a singer possessed of a soprano voice of good range, warm and sympathetic in quality, well schooled and admirably handled. She knows how to sing and she gives so sincerely of herself and her best that listening becomes genuine pleasure. Musicianship and taste distinguish all she does and only a little more clarity in diction, better pronunciation of French when she uses it, and a little more grace in bowing could be desired in the way of betterment of her work and stage manners. Her program was well chosen and her singing of the group of classic selections could not have been improved, and the recital in its entirety may be set down as thoroughly praise meriting. Alice Brown Stout furnished excellent accompaniments and contributed three manuscript songs which proved of worth.—W. L. Hubbard, November 8. Chicago Tribune.

Gertrude Cleophas

Following are some Minneapolis press comments on the work of Miss Cleophas, pianist:

Gertrude Cleophas has appeared as a successful soloist so frequently that good performances were expected from her; nor was there any disappointment, for both in a Beethoven sonata, and a group of short pieces she displayed sound artistry and facility of interpretation, combined with flexibility of expression that enabled her to imbue each number with just the right spirit. Her selections were well selected in point of contrast, and were all the more enjoyable on that account.—Daily News.

As customary, Miss Cleophas gave a thoughtful, vivid reading of the score, emphasizing the salient points with the calm assurance of the experienced artist, giving voice to the many variations in a manner that strengthened the conviction that she is one of the most satisfying among local pianists.

This was further borne out by a group of shorter pieces delightfully contrasted: an Etude by Chopin, "La Toupie," Leschetizky, "Reflets dans Peau," Debussy, and "Carnival," by Grieg.—Tribune.

Miss Cleophas, whose annual recitals and recent appearance with the Symphony orchestra have brought her forward as a pianist of resourceful technic and scholarly interpretations, first played the A flat major sonata, Op. 26, by Beethoven. After the glorious theme with variations, Miss Cleophas proceeded to give the work entire, her playing throughout being marked by refinement and intelligence. In the variations, as in the funeral march, her tone developed great power, and the suasion of dynamic precision and well modulated color effects gave variety to a fine performance of the beautiful sonata.

Miss Cleophas made her second appearance in a well chosen group which held such seldom heard things as Chopin's Etude, Op. 25, No. 7, in C sharp minor, and Grieg's "From the Carneval," Op. 19. The rare mood of introspective pondering of this Chopin study was well brought out, while in the folk life humoresques of the Grieg music vitality and gayety were well contrasted with the intermezzo of the well-known "Bridal Procession," which is here introduced by whimsical Grieg. Two lighter numbers of much charm were "La Toupie," the spinning study by Leschetizky, and "Reflets dans l'Eau," by Debussy.—Journal.

May Mukle at the Pittsfield Festival

That May Mukle, the violoncellist, has already made a place for herself in the hearts of Pittsfield music lovers was demonstrated last night at the high school when this gifted artist was given a cordial reception by the large audience which gathered to hear her.

Miss Watson and Miss Mukle opened the program with a masterful performance of the Greig sonata in A minor for pianoforte and violoncello. The final allegro with its striking brilliancy at times was suggestive of a Norwegian folk-dance, while the andante was as sweet a lullaby as ever soothed a child of the Northland. Miss Mukle as her second number gave a superb rendition of Saint-Saens' concerto in A minor, conspicuous for its outstanding virtuosity. Miss Mukle's hearers never cease to admire the ease with which she executes the most difficult technical passages, and on the other hand the enchanting beauty of her tone.

The final cello group consisted of Schubert's "Litany," "Moment Musical" and Popper's "Papillon." The two contrasting Schubert numbers were equally delightful, the "Litany" with its devotional character, and "Moment Musical" which Miss Mukle plays with a piquancy and individual style.

The Popper selection as usual captivated her audience, and in response to their hearty applause she repeated it. This veritable butterfly chase was played with great fleetness and vivacity. An appropriate encore was "Autumn Flower," also by Popper. —Pittsfield (Mass.), Eagle.

Gertrude Polk at Valparaiso

The appended press report from Valparaiso, Ind., following a musicale given for Mrs. Maurice Lowenstine by Gertrude Jeannette Polk, reader, and Mrs. Jennie Thatcher Beach, soprano, says of Miss Polk's work:

Miss Polk, radiant and charming in an exquisite frock of lavender and silver, read as her opening number "East Is West." In this difficult reading Miss Polk impersonates many characters of widely different types; all were given with that wonderful skill and artistry which Valparaiso audiences have learned to expect from her. Her Chinese dialect, the impersonations of little Ming Toy, gruff old Lo Sing Kee, Billy Benson, etc., were all perfect characterizations and held the breathless attention of her audience. "Patterns," by Amy Lowell, was perhaps the crowning achievement of the afternoon; in this number Miss Polk was a dream of loveliness in a handsome Louis XVI period costume of pink satin and silver lace; a perfect ovation followed the reading of this tragic poem and she was obliged to add several encores.

Miss Polk's wonderfully thrilling voice was the subject of universal comment; clear as the silver-throated bell in certain lines and again low, rich and vibrant, it encompasses all emotions and sways the auditors at will.

CHICAGO ARTISTS' ASSOCIATION

The second program of the Chicago Artists' Association was heard on last Tuesday, and it was well attended. The Beethoven Trio made much of the Rachmaninoff "Quasi Variazione" and won enthusiastic applause. Mrs. De Lamarter was musicianly and sincere in a group of fine songs. Walter Spry gave musicianly and refined readings of numbers by Brahms-Dohnanyi. He has a fine style and makes his work a pleasure to hear. Mr. Wild read some good poems from his own pen. Frank M. Dunford has made a decided artistic growth, and it enhances his singing in a way worthy of comment. His big, resonant voice, as always, met the requirements of the Verdi aria easily, and also in numbers by Burleigh and Pergolese he gained fine effects. Beulah Taylor and Tina Mae Haines played accompaniments for Mrs. De Lamarter and Mr. Dunford and shared in the success of the program. Mr. Holt, president, and Mr. Lester are giving the association the vital punch that counts in organization work.

CENTRALIZING SCHOOL OF MUSIC

On Saturday last a program of most unique conception was given at the Centralizing School under the direction of Miss Charlotte Pendry (music) and Miss Irene A. Skinner (dramatic). It was given under the title of "Dramatic Interpretation of MacDowell" and was prefaced by a little talk given by Miss Pendry, in which she told something of the life, aims and ideals of the great American composer and concluded with unqualified praise of American music and American musical training. Miss Pendry is magnetic in personality and most convincing by her enthusiasm.

Parts two and three of the program were heard by this writer, and were greatly enjoyed; in particular, the last part. This was an attractive scene of an old negro mammy, with a little gathering of five or six sleepy children about her, begging for the good-night story. She tells them a story of Bre'er Rabbit, which is then illustrated at the piano by the well-known Bre'er Rabbit of the great composer, and this is followed by "An Old Love Story" and the queer "Salamanders" from the same suite. Then the program explains that "the hour is getting late" and the children's heads begin to nod to the music of "Dying Embers."

This clever combination of the dramatic and the instrumental in the form of these illustrated tableaux was most unusual and attractive. MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

MARJORIE DODGE WARNER AND MILDRED BROWN

Tuesday evening a delightful concert was given by Marjorie Dodge Warner, soprano; Mildred Brown, violinist; Mischa Kottler, pianist, and Marian Lychenheim playing good piano for Mrs. Warner and Miss Brown. Mrs. Warner is a delightful artist, and carried her audience with her in all numbers, whether grave or gay. Personality is hers, and the gift singing her way to you is almost gripping in its power. Miss Brown has made rapid strides as a violinist, and there is an authority and poise about it that counts. The tone is lovely in quality, and her work was musicianly and artistic. Mr. Kottler has a good technic, and should develop with experience.

CADMAN CYCLE GIVEN AT ERIE

Preceded by a concert program of unusual excellence, the Cadman cycle, "The Morning of the Year," was given artistic rendition by the quartet of the First Presbyterian Church last night under the able direction of Albert H. Dowling Jr., organist. A good-sized audience made up of discriminating musicians and music-lovers of the city praised the fine work of the gifted quartet singers in every phase as well as the interesting introduction, intermezzo and accompaniments played by Mr. Dowling.

All the brightness and color of the springtime, as well as its languorous appeal embodied in the characteristic Cadman music, was brought out to the full in the presentation. The theme of spring, introduced in the prelude, was carried through the entire cycle, recurring in the various phrases with tuneful prominence.

Miss Faith McCormick, soprano; Mrs. La Mont Feist, contralto; Bruce Morrison, tenor, and Roy Blanchard, bass, easily wielded their fine resources of vocal technic, their voices blending finely in the tonal coloring of the quartet numbers—"Spirit of Spring," "I Hear the Whispering Voice of Spring," "I Saw the Bud-Crowned Spring Go Forth," and the closing, "O Spirit of Spring, Delay."

Other outstanding numbers were the soprano and tenor duet, "Alas, That My Heart Is a Lute," the bass solo, "The Brooklet Came From the Mountain," the tenor solo, "I Cannot Sing to Thee as I Would Sing," the soprano aria, "Welcome, Sweet Bird," and the alto solo, "The Moon Behind the Cottonwood."

In the miscellaneous program preceding the quartet was heard in the "Viking Song," Coleridge-Taylor. Miss McCormick's numbers included "Without You," Rubins; "Homing," Del Rigo, and Ford's "The Island Where Babies Grow." Mr. Blanchard sang "Roadways," Densmore; "When Mollie Smiles," Buzzi-Peccia; "The House of Memories," Aylward. Mr. Morrison sang "Good-by to Summer," Noel Johnson; "Your Eyes So Deep," and "The Glory of the Day Was in Her Face," Burleigh, while Mrs. Feist contributed "Consecration," Manney; "The Wanderer," Schubert, and "The Danza," Chadwick. There were numerous requests for a repetition of the concert.—Erie Dispatch, November 19, 1919.

Kanders — Helene Kanders, soprano, whose recital Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall was given under a heavy physical handicap, will repeat her appearance with a new program, including a group of Russian songs, at Carnegie Hall Tuesday evening, January 13. Miss Kanders, after arriving at Carnegie Hall Saturday evening, was taken suddenly and violently ill, and her physician forbade her appearance. She refused to follow his advice and appeared, suffering keenly during the first half of her program. Thereafter she recovered and continued to the end, being rewarded by insistent recalls at the end of her regular program.

Lewis—Pauline Lewis was the accompanist for Miss Nelle Bryant in the appearance of the soprano before the Arche Club on Armistice Day and scored a pronounced success. Her pianism is of distinctly fine quality and her sympathy with the songs and the singer unusually pronounced.

Mischa Levitzki Plays Again

It is true that many aspirants to fame succeed in calling the attention of a few hundreds of listeners, but this season many favorites have returned to the recital room, and nearly all of them have filled up the halls. Mischa Levitzki gave his first recital of the season at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, November 18, and was greeted by a capacity house. I listened to his playing of Beethoven's Sonata Opus 57, F minor (Appasianata). The last movement was played with vigor, vim and splendid effects. The first movement was rendered in rather confused manner and with no distinctive beauty, besides there were too many pauses employed during the execution. The second movement was somewhat pallid. He played a group by Chopin in a striking manner. Levitzki has grasped Chopin to the point of perfection. Technic, interpretation, musicianship are his attributes, but the Pole lies deeply in Levitzki's mind. He played the Etude C major, Etude A flat and G sharp minor with dash and brilliancy. The first one was repeated. The recital began with Bach Tausig's organ Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Melody in D minor (Gluck Sgambati), Prelude in G minor (Rachmaninoff), and "Concert Arabesque" (on themes of the "Blue Danube Waltz") (Schultz Zuler). Levitzki was given an unusual reception, and he deserved it.

Minna Kaufmann in Recital

If you cannot enjoy the new aspirants, let us have the old favorites. Minna Kaufmann belongs to the latter, only let us hope that she will effect more appearances. A large audience attended her recital of songs on Friday afternoon, November 14, and but for lack of space I should have commented on her appearance on an earlier date. What a relief when a singer does not offend through off-key singing. So many recitalists have tortured us, but Minna Kaufmann went through the recital, rendering songs in beautiful tone always. The soprano has still retained her organ, which is of good quality. To know how to sing is to make your song the more pleasurable. To know how to interpret and enunciate is to place yourself among the intelligent artists. All the songs were rendered with beauty of tone and artistic results, but the Scandinavian group was indeed exquisite singing. "Lynnove's Song" (Kyerolf), "Spinn, Spinn" (Yungst), "Polska" (Danustrom), and two anonymous songs were extremely enjoyed and heartily applauded. Only few recitalists have given pleasure in "L'Heure Exquise" by Poldowski, but Minna Kaufmann did please, even with her correct French enunciation. Otherwise the program enlisted "Caro Selve" (Handel), "O Bocca Dolorosa" (Sibella), "Extase" (Duparc), "Aime Moi" (Chopin), Aria, "Ah Perfidio" (Beethoven), "From Hill of Dreams" (Bauer), "Art" (Fox), "A Memory" (Fairchild), and "Sanctuary" (La Forge). Ruth Emerson was at the piano.

May Mukle Plays

Here is an English cellist who can rival any of her male co-stars. Shall we again indulge in comparisons? May Mukle needs it not. Briefly speaking, she is a superb cellist, a splendid musician and a technician par excellence. I confess that no cellist, at least this season, has shown superiority in handling the instrument. She extracted a beautiful, clear, pure, musical and powerful tone. At no time did the intonation degenerate into dissonant sounds. Hers was correct from the inception to the last. Her force is masculine, her agility is admirable, her technic knows no handicaps. Devoid of any mannerism, she plays her music with simplicity and wonderful effects. I expected not so much, but how delightful it is for one to be able to pen his impressions. Concerto after the Third Sonato of Ariosti (1660) (pianoforte arrangements by herself) was the opening number and the initial presentation in America. Miss Mukle brought all the qualities which I have mentioned above. The composition is a pretentious and musical work. Then followed "Schelomo" (Hebrew rhapsody) for cello and piano by Ernest Bloch, a Swiss composer who makes his home in New York. Mr. Bloch failed to impress his hearers. The Hebrew melody was absent, the oriental chant was not in the score, the work has capital faults. It is long, dry and of little musical value. Miss Mukle made the best of it. The accompanist, Ethel Cave Cole, was effective in the lyric passages, but in the loud utterances she banged the piano without mercy. The cellist pursued her musical scope without disturbance.

This English cellist is one of the best artists before the American public and a cellist for whom we must not spare praise. Other numbers played: "Variations" sur un theme rococo (Tschaikowsky), "Air" (by request) (Bach), "Two Fancies: (1) The Light Wind; (2) the "Hamadryad" by herself; "Christmas Carol" (arr. by Percy Grainger), and "Elfin Dance" (Popper).

Rosalie Miller Sings

Some singers are inclined to believe that transferring their activities from Aeolian Hall to Carnegie Hall is to strengthen the artistic prestige which one may not find at the concert hall of Forty-third street. It is true that some of the artists and musicians succeed in uplifting their art, but others prove to be inefficient when they invade the big hall of Fifty-seventh street. Rosalie Miller could have strengthened her prestige if she had appeared at the Aeolian instead of the Carnegie. That she possesses an excellent lyric voice no one can deny, but the organ is not powerful enough to cope with the requirements of Carnegie Hall. She sang the German lieder in English, but her voice was lost, and only indistinct sounds were heard.

As an interpreter of songs she is excellent, but the emission of the voice is faulty and her method of singing is one which requires more study. She also sang with good taste a group of French songs by George Hue, but with a poor French diction.

The Berkshire String Quartet gave its first recital of chamber music at Aeolian Hall on Tuesday evening, November 18. The quartet consisted of Hugo Kortshak, first violin; Jacques Gordon, second violin; Emile Ferir, viola; Emmeran Stober, cello, and were assisted by Harold Bauer at the piano.

The Opening of the Metropolitan

The opening of the season with a non-spectacular opera did not affect the box office. In reaching the opera house the announcement of "no seats for tonight" was perhaps the only exciting news of Monday evening, November 17. Society came in great numbers, and for the first time since the war the tiaras, diadems and expensive jewelry were much in evidence. The bill was "La Tosca," with Farrar, Scotti, Caruso, Bada and Cecil Arden. Moranzoni conducted. No need to comment upon the cast, and no new features were

"Aida"

The real spectcular opera come on Wednesday evening, November 19, when the beloved "Aida" was given before an audience which overtaxed the theater to its utmost. The interest was not centered upon the opera itself, but principally upon the debutants. Gabriella Besanzoni sang Amneris. She came with an enviable reputation, having appeared in many of the leading opera houses of Italy, Mexico and South America. Before analyzing her work and voice I will add that she will without doubt strengthen the prestige of the Metropolitan as a singing artist. In vocal honors, as well as in her artistic work, Gabriella Besanzoni was the outstanding feature of the performance. The singer possesses one of the most remarkable contraalto ranges today. The medium is superb, her employment of the mezzo voice is artistic and effective. The upper, which is the range of the mezzo-soprano, is also of excellent quality, though at times metallic, only when the voice is forced. Her Amneris was an artistic feat. Renato Zanetti, a Chilean baritone, sang Amonasro. He exhibited a lyric voice of sufficient power to cope with the requirements of the Metropolitan. But the part is not too well adapted to his voice and he lacks yet the artistry and the distinctive features of an actor. The quality of his voice resembles that of Riccardo Stracciari. His future appearances should be watched.

Martino, a Spanish basso, made his debut as Ramfis, and if his voice is not of distinctive beauty, he gave satisfaction to the listeners with his excellent emission. He will be a valuable asset for similar parts. Otherwise the cast was the same as in the previous seasons. A great vocal and artistic improvement was noticed in Louis D'Angelo's interpretation of the King. His sonorous basso organ and his excellent singing rendered his role an admirable factor of the performance.

Martinelli made an effective Rhadames, but Muzio's Aida was unequal. Her voice was at times white, her phrasing too open, and very often the text was more spoken than sung. In the mezzo voice she was artistic, while her acting was intelligent. Marie Tiffany sang the Priestess with an excellent and pure soprano voice. Roberto Moranzoni conducted with vim and vigor.

J. DE V.

Owing to Mabel Garrison's illness, the "Barber of Seville" was substituted with "La Boheme." Charles Hackett sang for the first time at the Metropolitan the role of the poet, and the balance of the cast consisted of Amato, Didur, Alda, Romayne, and Papi conducted.

"Faust"

The French repertoire came back to life on Friday evening, November 21, when "Faust" was given with a cast which enlisted practically the same personnel as last season, save for one exception. And that exception was Albert Wolff, the new French conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House. Mr. Gatti-Casazza has chosen this time a leader who is well versed in musical methods. Mr. Wolff was previously conductor at the Opera Comique, and if the business manager of the Metropolitan had not offered the position Mr. Wolff would be today directing the magnificent Symphony Orchestra "Lamoureux" of Paris, because, previous to the conductor's engagement at the Metropolitan, he was proposed to lead France's best orchestral organization. As the cast was the same as last year, it gives us an opportunity to comment upon Mr. Wolff's work. He is a leader whose energetic beat is in full evidence during the performance. Not only the orchestra, but those concerned on the stage, are absolutely under his command. His musicianship, which makes it possible for him to be acquainted with the work he conducts, is of a high order. His signals at the proper time are given every instrument and even every vocalist. Under his direction the Metropolitan Orchestra was decidedly and undoubtedly a new artistic body. He brings the vitality of youth, the ardor, the brilliance and the traditions of the French opera houses. What a magnificent performance if he only had a French cast, but all the glory, however, goes to him for giving "Faust" a totally new reading than the former conductors have ever given. We shall have the opportunity to judge all his qualities when he conducts such a refined, splendid, superb work as "Marouf" by Henri Rabaud. We will also avail ourselves to judge his abilities as a composer when he directs, some time in December, his own opera, "L'Oiseau Bleu," with text by Maeterlinck. His debut was an eventful one, and the management, at least for his acquisition, should be given all the praise.

Geraldine Farrar is declining in voice, and on this occasion her Marguerite was not more satisfactory than last year. Martinelli as Faust was vocally satisfactory, and Kathleen Howard as Marthe was, as always, exaggerated. And, coming back to the French contingent, Robert Cousinou reappeared as Valentine and brought again those artistic qualities which he exribited last year. Save for some off-key singing in the first act, his vocalization was adequate throughout the performance. His artistry and action were especially exhibited in the death scene. His voice has grown rounder and cooler, and it is more powerful than last season. Leon Rothier as Mephistopheles again proved what a magnificent asset he is for the Gallic repertoire. He acted conventionally, but with force, distinction and excellent artistry. He was in good vocal condition and perhaps better than last year. Mme. Delaumois was an acceptable Siebel. The chorus sang well and the theater was packed to its utmost.

The season's opening of the Morning Choral Club is marked with renewed interest in the work of this unique organization. The thirtieth anniversary of the Club, which is entirely officered and managed by women, is celebrated this year and in that period of time only four musical directors have directed the choral work. The present director, Charles Galloway, has been with the club some years, and has brought the work to a high standard of choral singing. The eminent Frank Damrosch expressed his appreciation by saying the Morning Choral Club of St. Louis was the finest chorus of its kind in America.

Mrs. Joseph W. Folk is the president and is most successful in directing the social and musical affairs of the Club. To add to the Club activities a monthly musical bulletin, to be known as the Musical Era, will be published, carrying with it all local music notes of interest.

The program of the opening day was given by Nina Tarasova, singer of Russian folk songs and ballads, and Cornelius Van Vliet, the cellist, accompanied by Mrs. Carl J. Luyties. The cello numbers were among the most pleasing on the program, and Mr. Van Vliet's reception by the large audience assured him of his standing with St. Louis music lovers.

On Monday evening, December 8, Mme. Schumann-Heink and the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra will give a concert at the Odeon. In addition to the support of the orchestra Mme. Schumann-Heink will be accompanied by Frank La Faye, the famous composer-pianist.

SARAH E. PAINE

The following program was given last Saturday evening by Hortense L. Fox, pianist, pupil of Miss Sarah E. Paine of the Western Conservatory. Miss Fox is only fifteen years old and is carrying heavy school work in addition to her music study, so that in view of this fact her execution of so long and difficult a program was in truth a remarkable feat, and both she and her teacher should feel justly complimented by her success. She was assisted by Myra A. Paine, violinist, in a groupe of well selected numbers.

GRACE CHURCH, OAK PARK

In line with his usual energy and enthusiasm, Arthur Randolph Fraser is already giving many special musical services and events at Grace Church, Oak Park, where he is choirmaster and organist.

The opera of "Iolanthe" (Gilbert and Sullivan) is rapidly assuming shape and is to be given in the Parish House on December 3.

The annual performance of "The Messiah" Christmas week promises to be a fine one.

On last Sunday afternoon John A. West's cantata, "Seed Time and Harvest," was given at the 5 o'clock service to a large audience.

Mr. Fraser displayed fine control of all his forces and gave splendid accompaniments both in hymns and the cantata, and, midway of the latter, distinguished himself by the beauty of his playing in the Intermezzo.

The choir was in fine shape and sang with brilliance and good musical feeling, maintaining a fine contrast between the quieter numbers and those requiring power and showing throughout good balance of parts, fine shading and excellent interpretative feeling.

Some soprano solos were well done by Gladys Knight Thomas, and the visiting artist was the splendid tenor, Arthur Kraft.

Mr. Kraft was in fine voice, and his singing of "The Rain Cometh Down" was at a point of unusual beauty and value, while the long and very beautiful duet with the soprano was presented with rare skill and charm.

Altogether a most attractive service and one entirely apropos of the day.

Fantasie, F minor ..... Chopin
Concerto, D minor (No. 2) ..... MacDowell
Larghetto calmato
Presto giocoso
Largo-Molto Allegro
(Orchestra parts on second piano by Mr. Eames)

The program was a great success. Mrs. Brown is thoroughly conversant with the artistic demands of her instrument and possesses a good clean technique. She worked up to especially creditable interpretation in the MacDowell Concerto.

At the Mendelssohn Conservatory in the McClurg building on last Saturday afternoon a fine piano recital was given in very clear and definite style by Anna Swanson, who made much success in the following well chosen program:

Etude de Concert, Op. 36 ..... MacDowell
To Spring ..... Grieg
By the Frog Pond ..... Seeboeck
A la bien-aimee ..... Schutt
La Campanella ..... Paganini Liszt
Vier Rhapsodien, No. 3 ..... Vier Rhapsodien

Mr. Allen, vocalist, will give a recital Saturday, November 29 at 2:15 p. m.

GILDEROY SCOTT

Mme. Gilderoy Scott, whose big contralto voice is of heavy quality, sang the Elgar "Sea Pictures" with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, November 16, and was heard at her best in "Where Corals Lie" and the dramatic "The Swimmer." She showed good training, and was well received by the audience.

Wallace—Alma Wallace, accompanist, played for Marie Zendt at Governor's Island for the soldiers, November 13, and also at a musical given at the Rufus King mansion at Jamaica, L. I., November 21, and for Margaret Cameron at a Globe Concert at Mount Vernon, N. Y., on Tuesday, November 25.

Haworth—Helen Haworth, mezzo-contralto, has been engaged to sing at the Edgewater Beach Hotel musical of December 7. The Premier Quartet, of which she is a member, sang on Thanksgiving eve at the Illinois Athletic Club.

ALBERT WOLFF

FRENCH CONDUCTOR
Metropolitan Opera House

Makes an eventful debut in "Faust"

Some of the Headlines of the New York Press on November 22nd

"Manager Gatti-Casazza's new conductor makes fine showing."—New York American.

"Albert Wolff conducts 'Faust' with life; makes good impression."—New York Herald.

"M. Albert Wolff puts new life into the perfume bottle of 'Faust.' "—New York Evening Sun.

"French leader scores in debut at first 'Faust.' "—New York Evening World.

FOLLOWING ARE THE UNUSUAL COMMENTS OF THE NEW YORK PRESS:

"His hand was soon made evident in the spirit which was manifested in the doings on the stage and in the orchestra, a spirit manifested in rapid and elastic tempos and a resulted vivacity of movement in those portions of the score where vivacity of movement is called for; also in a notable vigor of accent, stress of rhythm and dramatic emphasis. So far as the animation and accent were concerned, they were all to the good of the whole effect; and 'Faust' has hardly had a performance in recent years that has had so much of these qualities."—Richard Aldrich, New York Times, November 22.

"It must be admitted that Monsieur Wolff's achievements last night came as a pleasant surprise. He held his forces well in control, impressing his personality upon the performance firmly yet considerately. His interest was given to the orchestra, which he kept constantly responsive to his will, fluent in its rhythmical movements and dynamically elastic. Monsieur Wolff's musicianship made itself evident in many fine details of his reading. His tempi were satisfactory and admirably adjusted. One felt always the man's sense of balance and proportion; his grasp of broad outlines, as well as detail. With his musicianship, moreover, Monsieur Wolff combines vigor and temperament. The vocal ensembles were more animated and stirring, thanks to Monsieur Wolff's energetic beat."—Max Smith, New York American, November 22.

"Mr. Wolff's reading was full of life and rhythm. His beat is precise and his management of the men in the orchestra is masterful. There were many little refinements in his reading. Accompanying the singers, he was careful not to drown them, and at the same time he directed with a precision that gave evidence of long experience as a conductor."—Paul Morris, New York Herald, November 22.

"His conducting of 'Faust' was in accord with the latest conceptions of the Paris Grand Opera. The orchestra was kept subordinate to the voice at all times."—W. J. Henderson, New York Sun, November 22.

"Mr. Wolff is an excellent conductor. He gave us a taste of his quality, and that quality proved an unequivocal success. For one thing, apart from his authoritative beat, he has temperament. He doesn't let his forces indulge in general slumber; he brisked up matters. Mr. Wolff is a conductor sadly needed in the department of French operas. He is sure to make matters lively with his vital baton. He was called before the curtain after the Garden Scene."—James Gibbons Huneker, New York World, November 22.

"Mr. Wolff is amazingly full of vigor and spirit. Under him the orchestra is awake, alive, keen, and briskness stirs the colors of the score to a glow which the Metropolitan's 'Faust' has not known for many a year. He is the best French conductor to come to the Metropolitan."—Gabriel in the New York Evening Sun, November 22.

"Mr. Gatti-Casazza must have been happy when he witnessed the triumph of his new French conductor. Under the new conductor all the poetry was fully revealed. In a word, he rejuvenated 'Faust.' "—Henry T. Finck in the New York Evening Post, November 22.

"Mr. Wolff is a worthy addition to Mr. Gatti-Casazza's forces."—Sylvester Rawlings in New York Evening World, November 22.

"The debut of Albert Wolff as conductor was a sort of event. Seeing and hearing him conduct arouses new anticipations."—Katharine Lane in the Evening Mail, November 22.

Simple Truths Used by Great Singers, by Sarah Robinson-Duff. (Oliver Ditson Co.)

This is a most readable little book, and is dedicated by the author "To My First Pupil, Mary Garden." The last chapter gives an interesting account of Miss Garden's early days and her debut, and has a portrait of that famous singer in which she is but faintly recognizable as compared to the present-day photographs—at the height of her career. The other chapters are on Breathing, Tone Placing, Evening Up the Voice, Vocalizing, and Resonance. They consist of essays "delivered and read before the 'Palestrina Summer School of Music,'" and contain a quantity of valuable experience, besides being couched in a most attractive style of diction.

An American Ace, scena for tenor solo and chorus of men's voices, by Frederick Stevenson. Price 50 cents. (Oliver Ditson Co.)

The poem, by James Church Alvard, is sufficiently dramatic and full of stark realism, in tragedy, blood and curses. The musical setting is clever, effective, scholarly. We have a wealth of diminished seventh chords, which seem inseparable from male chorus work, but there are many other harmonies of note, some of great strength and vitality. The author has the idea of introducing a hymn tune in the accompaniment (organ with cello obligato), which imparts an odor of sanctity to the moment of demise of the valiant ace, and continues through the subsequent entry of the chorus in a rather vigorous passage, which would apparently obliterate it unless played with rather unhymnlike forcefulness. The conclusion is Con Furia, quite according to the text, and the last chords on full organ, sustained, have frankly a minor second added below the bass note, to give the thundery effect a trill. That is about the way many organists would play it, anyhow.

Twelve Sacred Trios for Women's Voices, from the works of Early Church Composers, arranged by Louis Victor Saar. Price 50 cents. (Oliver Ditson Co.)

The names of Arcadelt, di Lasso, Palestrina, and Vittoria are included. There is variety in the numbers, and they are nicely engraved, with Latin and English texts.

Album of Twelve Pieces, for piano, by Selim Palmgren. Price 75 cents. (Boston Music Co.)

Effective and pretty little sketches are these, though not very easy, and rather more "schooled" than pieces of this type often are. We have "Intermezzo," "Waltz," "Dragon Fly," "The Sea," etc. Edited by Clough-Leighter. Why edited?

Four Crumbs From Peacock Pie (songs), by Howard D. McKinney. Price 75 cents net. (J. Fischer & Bro.)

There is a great deal of charm in the music of these verbal conceits. The composer would handle something serious with conspicuous ability.

Mana-Zucca, fourteen piano pieces, in three books, grades I, II and III. Price, each, 60 cents net. (Boston Music Co.)

The composer's gift of melody shows itself all through the three books, having most scope in the third, which consists of weather pictures.

Hartmann, six pieces for violin in first position, with accompaniment for the teacher's violin. Price 50 cents. (Ditson Edition.)

Hartmann's musicianship and originality show themselves in everything he does, even in simple pieces like this. Besides their use for instruction, they will provide entertainment where violins but no piano are available.

Public School Class Method for Cornet, by Albert G. Mitchell, Mus. Doc. Price 75 cents. (Oliver Ditson Co.)

The similar work for the violin has become such a standard that there is no doubt of the value of this for the cornet. There are practical hints about the class, tuning, etc., and exercises from the earliest degree of difficulty up to fairly florid work by Arban.

Five American Dances, by Eastwood Lane. (J. Fischer & Bro.)

These dances, for piano, seem to have caught some of the prominent characteristics of essentially American music, therefore should form a classic in their way. There is a Negro Dance, a Dance Hall Ditty, a Gringo Tango, a Barn Dance, and an Indian Reminiscence.

REMARKABLE RECORD BROKEN

Hilda Casper Wittig's Pupils Give Harmony Test

At Milwaukee, Wis., Hilda Casper Wittig, a normal teacher of the Effa Ellis Perfield Music Teaching System, presented her junior class in a demonstration recital on Thursday, November 13, 1919, which proved very interesting and revealed possibilities of musical development in children formerly thought impossible. The demonstration brought forward rhythmic development and ear training which in some instances were surprising, and showed that almost every child has talent for composition.

Mrs. Wittig employs the Effa Ellis Perfield Pedagogical System in the class training of her pupils. Her work was deservedly admired. In the harmony test Florence Kerner, aged 13 years, made the remarkable record of spelling 84 chords in 45 seconds, thereby outrivaling the former record of 55 seconds held by little Emilie Parmalee, an eleven-year-old pupil of Martha E. Smith School of Music of Atlanta, Ga.

Florence Kerner of Milwaukee now holds the Effa Ellis Perfield championship medal for rapid chord spelling.

Evelyn Scotney

Makes Brilliant Debut

as the Princess in a memorable revival of "La Juive" at the Metropolitan on Saturday matinee, November 22nd

"She seems to be, on the whole, rather better than Galli-Curci."—Henry T. Finck in the New York Evening Post, November 24.

"It has, in a certain register, an infantile quality, which we recall in the singing of Melba and Tetrazzini."—James Gibbons Huneker in the New York World, November 24.

"She is a commanding figure and has a brilliant voice."—Robert Gilbert Welsh, New York Evening Telegram, Nov. 24.

"Miss Scotney delivered her coloratura passages with the ease of the experienced artist. Her voice is normally a pleasing, limpid one."—Catharine Lane, Evening Mail, Nov. 24.

"Miss Scotney has the forward placing and head resonance. Her voice is by nature beautiful, flexible and of no little strength."—Pitts Sanborn, New York Globe, Nov. 24.

"She has an agreeable light voice, flexible in florid song and true to the pitch. SHE SEEMS TO BE, ON THE WHOLE, RATHER BETTER THAN GALLI-CURCI."—Henry T. Finck, New York Evening Post.

"Miss Evelyn Scotney as the Princess displayed a voice of ample power and some skill in 'Florid' song."—E. H. Krehbiel, New York Tribune, Nov. 24.

"Miss Scotney has a light, high soprano, a flexible coloratura. It has in a certain register an infantile quality, which we recall in the singing of Melba and Tetrazzini. Of a handsome stage presence, the acting of Scotney is restraint to the point of respectability."—James Gibbons Huneker, The World, Nov. 24.

"Miss Scotney managed the 'Florid' music with ease and precision. Hers is a high coloratura soprano."—Max Smith, New York American, Nov. 23.

"Miss Evelyn Scotney was heard in the role of the Princess, which she sang with fair success. Her voice, used mezzo voce in the middle register, was beautiful."—Paul Morris, New York Herald, Nov. 24.

"Her voice is a high soprano, capable of great and piercing power, and with some dexterity in 'Florid' music."—Richard Aldrich, New York Times, Nov. 24.

"Miss Scotney's performance was a well-defined and substantial success, both as a display of artistic singing and as a gratifying example of sound dramatic effectiveness. Her well-placed and warmly vigorous voice and intimative sense of relative values, and an ingratiating and at times commanding presence, completed the items of her emphatic success, both with her musical hearers and a matinee audience, which applauded her right zealously."—John H. Raftery in the Morning Telegraph, Nov. 23.

Music News

Vol. 11 Chicago, December 5, 1919 No. 49

The Growth of Americanism in Music, and Especially as Demonstrated at the Opera Season at the Auditorium

Several happenings of the first fortnight of the opera season have proven that Americanism in music is on its way to complete recognition.

Two young American artists — Evelyn Herbert and Edward Johnson — have scored unequivocal success in parts of the first rank, not to mention the great number of lesser parts so well taken by other Americans as to prove conclusively that the company contains many such who, if given a chance, could do the leading parts quite as well as we are accustomed to hearing them done.

Miss Herbert has had her entire training in America. Mr. Johnson had his early training here, as also his initial successes. Both are intensely American in thought and feeling.

A remarkable new ballet, written by Felix Borowski, a Chicagoan, which was dressed and outfitted with scenery entirely in this city, has been another success, proving itself, in fact, just as good, if not better, than those Russian ballets of a few years ago, which we considered then to be beyond any possibility of American composition or ingenuity.

. . . . . .

And—if these things could be done so beautifully and so successfully, what may we not hope for in the immediate future? And why may we not assume that it is time to ask for that which we so ardently desire—complete recognition of American artists and opera sung to us in our own language?

We have been told repeatedly that we have had no American composition good enough to bear close competition with the French and Italian operas, and, further, it has been insisted upon by those who manage our opera houses that there are not American singers so good as some of the foreigners.

As far as composition is concerned, the answer is right at hand in Cadman's "Shanewis" and Borowski's "Boudour" and (we hope) in De Koven's "Rip Van Winkle." And so far as the singers are concerned, the answer may be found in a multitude of successes, including the two mentioned earlier on this page and in a long list headed by Mary Garden and Geraldine Farrar.

True, Garden—impelled by the necessity of the times—went to France for recognition, but what was her career there?

She went into the very stronghold of the French, learned their language, and triumphed in their own greatest temples of opera.

Herbert learned Mimi in Italian and sang it equally well with some of the best Italian singers of the company, simply because the tradition of the Auditorium is that "La Boheme" does not bear translation and also because the Italian singers do not, or will not, learn English.

But if Evelyn Herbert can prepare "La Boheme" in Italian, and Mary Garden can place herself at the very head of the French singers, why could not Rosa Raisa learn English, if the sentiment of Chicago was such that it was demanded of her?

Is she not, besides being a great singer, as brilliant mentally as Garden or Herbert?

Good Pianos
are made slowly

It takes a long time to build a really good piano. Pianos which are hastily constructed are usually poorly constructed.

Every Cable-made Piano is many months in the making. After the wood has been thoroughly seasoned, expert workmen form and shape the piano—slowly, painstakingly, exactly. Then expert tone builders begin their careful work.

The result—an instrument of supreme beauty—one which will give you for a lifetime a full measure of satisfaction.

THE HARRIS STUDIOS

Miss Amelia Grande, soprano, of the Harris Studio, 929 Kimball Building, has filled many engagements, giving the entire program excepting in two places, during October and up to November 24. She has sung four return engagements in one and three in another place. Another soprano, Miss Anna Charvat, has sung four engagements during November. Both these young artists have beautiful voices, well cultivated.

A list of Miss Grande's engagements follows:

Highland Park Congregational Church.

Aurora Association meeting, Congregational Church.

First Congregational Church of Oak Park, Illinois.

Pilgrim Congregational Church, Oak Park.

Auburn Park Congregational Church.

Waveland Avenue Congregational Church (Association meeting).

Methodist Deaconess Home (annual meeting).

Hubbard Memorial Presbyterian Church (4 times in 2 months).

Detention Home of Juvenile Protective Association (3 times in 2 months).

Calvary Presbyterian Church.

Votichenko—The noted Russian composer, Sasha Votichenko, the sole exponent of the tympanon, afforded the audience an added pleasure. To the modern ear the tympanon is peculiarly fascinating. The curious effect, from the felt to the steel hammers and the plucking of the strings a la zither, gave variety that was weird and fascinating.—The New Era, Lancaster, Pa.

RECITAL AT ELLEN KINSMAN MANN STUDIO

Saturday evening, November 22, an excellent program was given by students from the class of Ellen Kinsman Mann. The work displayed was of high character and worthy of sincere consideration and commendable in every respect. She has high ideals about the art of singing, and these are reflected in the splendid work of those under her direction, lifting the programs out of the pupils' class, and it is a great pleasure to hear a concert like the one of Saturday evening. The Kinsman Trio opened the program with a group of numbers by Faning, Silesu and Lemmel and did some fine work in shading and tone color. Mr. Laskowski, tenor; Alice Stitzel, soprano, and Marian Adah Tenney, contralto, members of the trio, have made good in the trio.

Edna Shelby made a good impression in numbers by Spross and Mallinson. Viola Bannon was sincerely musical in her work and heard to good advantage in Salter's "Morning Glories" and "Life's Paradise," by Brown.

Miss Tenney had poise and assurance in "Eros," by Kursteiner. Her voice is a contralto of good quality and fine range.

Leonard Allen, tenor, has grown beyond belief in vocal assurance, and made a fine artistic impression in Lehmann's "Ah Moon of My Delight." He has personality and a sincere spirit that counts for much in singing.

Pauline Marshall's lyric soprano and petite manner made her charming in the "Villanelle."

Alice Stitzel, lovely soprano, made the aria from "The Queen of Sheba" of fine dramatic worth. She has the voice to make its big phrases stand out with telling effect.

Clement Laskowski, tenor, of likable personal traits, made much of his chance in the aria from "Elijah." He has gained poise, power, and with continued work has much in his favor.

Blanche Snider, whose recent song recital at Canton won enthusiastic approval, made a delightful artistic impression in a group of songs by Phillips, Scott and Buzzi-Peccia.

Geneve Cadle has a fine spirit toward her songs, a good soprano to set them forth, and she gets better at every hearing. She did good singing in a Vidal number and the Puccini Aria, "Vissi D'Arte."

Dorris Nelson has the talent and contralto voice to make singing a pleasant task, and she displayed musicianly taste in "But the Lord Is Mindful of His Own" (Mendelssohn). "Danny Boy" (Weatherly) won approval as she gave it.

Miss Cadle and Mrs. Nelson gave a group of duets with lovely tone and manner. Tuscan Folk Songs they were, and given with fine spirit.

Beulah Taylor Porter, at the piano, gave of her best.

MAY MUKLE IN RECENT APPEARANCES

May Mukle, cellist, who will appear in joint recital with Mme. Gilderoy Scott, December 14, at Kimball Hall, has been appearing constantly since her return from England. Besides a concert at Pittsfield, Mass., she made a short tour via motor through New England, playing at Dublin, N. H., Manchester, Vt., and Greenwich, Conn., and an extra benefit concert for Ascension Farm School was given at the Lenox Club, Pittsfield, with Ruano Bogislor and Vahslar Talanoff.

Miss Mukle was also soloist at First Pop Concert of the Reading (Pa.) Symphony Orchestra, Harry E. Fahrbach, director. Miss Mukle achieved splendid success in the Saint-Saens Concerto for violoncello and orchestra, and a group with piano accompaniment brought demand for encore.

Another recent appearance, where Miss Mukle scored heavily, was a joint recital with Grace Kerns for Lockport City Teachers' Association in Lockport, N. Y., November 14.

ETHEL BENEDICT

Ethel Benedict was special soloist on October 26 at the First Congregational Church, Oak Park, Ill. On October 30 she sang at the Chicago Beach Hotel. She was one of the soloists, singing the part of the Youth, in the performance of "Elijah," given by members of the Apollo Club in Oak Park November 9.

On December 11 she will appear in Milwaukee as soloist with the Lyric Glee Club, and on December 12 will sing "Messiah" at Rock Island, Ill. On December 16 she will give a recital for the Litta Society of Pekin, Ill., and will be soloist at the Masonic installation at the Auditorium Hotel on December 18.

RAMON GIRVIN PRESENTS SOME VERY TALENTED VIOLIN PUPILS

A private musicale arranged by Ramon Girvin for last Wednesday evening brought to hearing two young violinists who are exceptional in every way, and who, in their work, go a long way to prove that Mr. Girvin today stands among the very best violin teachers of the country.

These two were Louis Kottler and Henry Sopkin, both still in their teens and both talented to the extreme limit, though in different ways.

Young Mr. Kottler is poetic, somewhat dreamy and very definitely en rapport with the strictly classic school, while the youthful Sopkin is more impetuous and brilliant, with a decided leaning to intensity of passion in what he plays.

For the first of these brilliant boys Mr. Girvin had chosen the Handel Sonata in D Major, and for the other the Viotti Concert in A Minor.

Each played excellently in his own way, both showing absolute certainty of musicianship and technic, and each, in turn, giving interpretative work which proved originality and intelligence, as well as the most careful and authoritative of tutelage.

Both these boys will reach high rank in their profession, and Mr. Girvin is to be heartily congratulated, both on what the boys are naturally, and on what he has been able to do for them as well.

HARPSTER-MONTGOMERY

Georgia Harpster, soprano, and Mrs. Angie Montgomery, contralto, who have recently been doing such attractive duo singing, appeared at St. Sabina's Church on November 16 in selections from the "Stabat Mater."

Miss Harpster did the "Inflammatus" with dramatic fervor and conviction, and the ensemble was very effective in the "Quis est Homo" duet. Miss Harpster also sang the Gounod "Paice Dominie," which showed off her voice in its more lyric vein, and Mrs. Montgomery was very pleasing in Allitsen's "O for a Burst of Song."

A group of harp solos was played by Clara Louise Thurston, which added greatly to the effectiveness of the service.

PAULIST CHORISTERS TO GIVE CONCERT

The Paulist Choristers of Chicago, one hundred voices, Leroy Wetzel, director, will give a concert at Orchestra Hall on Friday evening, December 12, at 8:15 p. m.

The program will consist of solos and choruses from the works of Handel, Tschaikowsky, Grieg, Rachmaninoff, Zolatorieff, Egar, Saint-Saens, Mercadante, Dickinson and a group of traditional Christmas carols.

The choristers will be assisted by Frank Barnard, tenor; Hugo Goodwin, organist, and Oscar Deis, accompanist.

AT THE MacBURNEY STUDIOS

In four divisions was the program at the MacBurney studio recital on Monday evening and varied to the limit of that number, for with one group in the suave Italian, one in modern French, one in rollicking Irish, and the fourth in English (American composers), there was provided, surely, a full meed of variety and a corresponding value and interest.

The singer was Emma Boyd Waddell, a soprano of very nice presence, serene stage manners and the possessor of a voice at once warm and bright.

That Mrs. Waddell has musicianship, too, is beyond question, and that she studied each of her Monday numbers to the end of attractive and logical interpretation is equally the fact.

"Lascia Ch' io Piango" (Handel) has probably served as the opening number of thousands of programs, and yet it still retains and will for long retain a pristine freshness and an everlasting beauty. This was followed by "Virgin Tutto Amor" (Durante), not so well known but also very attractive, and Tosti's "L' ultimo Bacio," sentimental and saccharine—all these being extremely interesting in the Waddell readings, and with the extremely suave, always penetrating, but never overwhelming, accompaniment of Harold B. Simonds.

The French group contained well-known but also well-chosen selections of Hahn and Chaminade, with one by Ferrari which was a delight, and two by Yvette Guilberte, one of which was saucy, as this Frenchwoman herself always is, and the other being rather dejected in tone.

The Irish numbers were "A Bag of Whistles" (Crist), "The Blatherskite," "Would God I Were the Tender Apple Blossom" and "The Leprehaun," and the American group, excellent of content and contrast, included "The Robin Sings in the Apple Tree," "Midsummer Lullaby" and "The Sea," by MacDowell; "Summer Glow" (Eastwood Lane), and "Robin, Robin, Sing Me a Song" (Spross).

ORNSTEIN AT ORCHESTRA HALL

On Monday evening Leo Ornstein was the solo feature of a concert given at Orchestra Hall which enlisted—further, the services of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in entirety and of one of the self-playing devices, Mr. Ornstein being used as a foil to this arrangement.

Limited time made it necessary to omit hearing of the "reproductions" and of the purely orchestral numbers, which included works by Weber, Mozart, Ornstein, Liszt and Tschaikowsky.

The pianist was heard in two movements of the Rubinstein Concerto No. 4 in D Minor, and the hearing proved to be one of the superb treats of the season.

Mr. Ornstein, whose earlier work in Chicago, when he played mostly his own compositions, made but an ephemeral impression, has grown and developed amazingly, and today stands as a superb exponent of such works as the great concerts of MacDowell, Rubinstein and Liszt.

His technic is so amazingly clear and rapid in action as to constitute a pianistic marvel, and his rhythmic sense is so wonderful as to make him a human metronome, but one, however, swayed and dominated by an elasticity which could never attach to iron and wood alone.

His temperament is electrical, and his reading on Monday of the Rubinstein Opus left nothing to be imagined or desired.

After the magnificent exhibitions Mr. Ornstein has given us in the recent playings of the MacDowell and Rubinstein Concertos, we are filled with an intense yearning to hear him again in recital, and we hope that the hearing will not be long delayed.

Zygman—Mme. Flora Zygman, one of the best of Chicago pianists, who gave a successful recital at Aeolian Hall in New York last week, has had such flattering offers to take up her residence in that city she has determined to do so and has taken a studio in the Metropolitan Opera House Building.

ISOLDE MENGES

The second appearance of Isolde Menges in Chicago was a signal success, and, although the young artist introduced herself as a player of great talent, she has undoubtedly broadened and developed in every way since her first performance last spring. On Sunday she gave the following program at Kimball Hall:

ISOLDE MENGES

Concerto, A major	Mozart
Allegro-Adagio Rondo, Tempo di Minuetto, Allegro
Slavonik Dance, G minor	Dvorak-Kreisler
Ballet Music from Rosamunde	Schubert-Kreisler
Samoan Lullaby	Boyd
Praeludium and Allegro	Pugnani-Kreisler
Chaconne	Bach
Nocturne, C minor	Medtner
En Bateau	Debussy
Scherzo Valse	Chabrier

Her technic is broad and built up wisely along sane and tasteful lines, and her rhythms are strongly accented and most virile in power. At the same time there is refinement and womanliness to be found in her work, which makes it strongly appealing in combination with the vigor and abandon. She has also plenty of romance and sentiment in the lighter numbers, and always a slightly concealed but charmingly delicate sense of humor.

She was accompanied by Miss Eileen Beattie, who plays with great ease and a never-failing sympathy.

Miss Menges will play a return engagement at Kimball Hall in January, after which she and her accompanist will return to their home in England for a concert tour.

HORACE DAVIS AND MARIE LIGHTHALL

Sunday afternoon at Turner Hall Marie Lighthall, soprano, and Horace Davis, tenor, made a success with the audience in the singing of the "Trovatore" duet. Mrs. Lighthall was heard only in the duet because of her recital engagement.

Mr. Davis sang later the "Aida" aria with good dramatic style. His voice met the requirements of the score, and he gave it out without reserve, singing the high ending forte with great surety. He was compelled to add an encore.

The orchestra, under Mr. Hand, did some things well.

MARIE EDWARDS VON RITTER PRESENTS A TALENTED PUPIL IN RECITAL

A remarkable talent is that possessed by Vernice Bearsh and fortunate indeed is it that this talent has been placed in the care of Marie Edwards Von Ritter, for she herself was a child prodigy and understands the genius thoroughly.

Besides which she has had the most elaborate of schooling, and her years of teaching have given her a routine and a perspicuity which are unerring.

VERNICE BEARSH

Vernice Bearsh is only twelve now and this writer has been observing her progress under Mrs. Von Ritter for several years with constantly growing delight.

Not a forced development is hers, for her teacher believes thoroughly in self-expression and allows her little pupil all possible logical leeway, and therefore Vernice is neither compelled to overpractice, nor is she tied down to hard and fast rules of interpretation, but is allowed, always, to express her own personality.

This is a splendid plan for the most part, and on last Friday evening at Lyon & Healy Recital Hall it resulted in thoroughly interesting playing.

And most of this playing was definitely correct and clear, the only exception being the slow movement of the Sonata, No. 9, by Mozart, which I should say was not quite so well memorized or digested as other parts of the program.

The opening number, bits of Burgmuller, Bach and Handel, was remarkable in the speed and clarity of running passages; the depth of the chords (although Vernice has a very tiny hand), and the insistence and beauty of the melody line, to say nothing of the remarkable grasp the young pianist displayed in canonic and fugal passages.

The last two groups comprised the following well chosen list of pieces, which are thoroughly adapted to the child mind, and which in technical perfection and brilliance were admirable indeed as played at this time: "Butterfly" (Lavellee); "Pizzicatti from Sylvia" (Delibes); "Annie Laurie" (for left hand alone by Robyn); "Idilio" (Lack); "Fughetto" (Guilmant); "Staccato Etude" (Raff); "Berceuse" from "Joclyn" (Godard), and "Capriccio" (Scarlatta).

The audience, somewhat depleted in numbers by the rain, was thoroughly appreciative and rewarded the work of the player with many recalls, flowers and encore demands.

In the middle of the program Miss Leta Murdock appeared, and to the definite and musical accompaniment of Marie Edwards Von Ritter, played a group of well known short pieces for the violin, closing with the remarkably fine and potent "Indian Snake Dance" by Cecil Burleigh.

Miss Murdock has a tone of fine proportions and beautiful quality, her musicianship is beyond reproach and her musical feeling and readings are at a point which continually interest and charm. C. E. W.

LA FORGE-BERUMEN STUDIO RECITAL

Sara Reynard, Alice Bracey, Rosamond Crawford, Kathryn Kerin and Louis Meslin, pianists, pupils of Frank La Forge and Ernesto Berumen, appeared in recital at the La Forge-Berumen studios on November 25, presenting a program of modern piano compositions. All the young pianists displayed once more their splendid training, delighting the audience with their beautiful playing.

Mollenhauser—Mr. William F. T. Mollenhauser, well known American composer and violinist, has again entered the concert field after five years' retirement, owing to the death of his father, the late Edward Mollenhauser, renowned composer, violinist and teacher. Mr. Mollenhauser gave a recital in Sioux City, Iowa, the first of November, upon which occasion he dedicated his Adagio-Rondo, written for violin and orchestra, to Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Heizer of Sioux City.

MUSICIANS' CLUB OF WOMEN

On last Monday in a concert by Chicago Composers, a fine piano concerto by Amy Emerson Neill was played beautifully by Mary Cameron, with Marie Bergerson Borro at the second piano.

There was an excellent group of works by Borowski, Cole, Carpenter, Harold Henry and Herbert E. Hyde, well presented by Lillian White Freyn and a group of Arthur Olaf Andersen duets sung by Mrs. Freyn and Mrs. Franklyn Wood, the latter presenting also a group of solo numbers by Carpenter, Lester, Hyde and Grant-Schaefer.

Norma Altermatt played a group comprising a sonata by Leo Sowerby, the "Invocation" (Borowski) and a Gavotte-Intermezzo by Louis Victor Saar.

TWO RECITALS BY JACOB MOERSCHEL PUPILS

Every once in a great while the fagged interest of a reviewer receives a happy jolt. The anæmic monotony is disturbed by a real red corpuscle and more often this happens through attendance of student events than among professional. One knows just about what to expect of the "stars." A cold or death in the family may alter technic of a number or so, but a big artist usually performs all the regular stunts, and after a few seasons not even imagination can be drawn upon.

The recital given by Alfred Rehorst, a twenty-one-year-old boy, who only began to study when he was fifteen, was enough to make any imagination sit up and take notice. He is a tall, erect young chap, mild-mannered, with a studious expression, always interested in what is just before him. He is sincere in his handclasp and very modest about his accomplishments. His program embraced these numbers:

English Suite No. 6, D minor (Prelude and Allegro—Allemande—Courante—Sarabande and Double—Gavotte—Gigue)	Bach
Waltz, E flat major	Chopin
Waltz, E minor	Chopin
Nocturne, B major	Chopin
Etude, G flat—op. 10	Chopin
Etude, A minor—op. 25	Chopin
Polonaise, E flat minor	Chopin
Polichinelle	Rachmaninoff
Romance	Iljinsky
Novelette	Glazounow
The Girl with Flaxen Hair	Debussy
Arabesque	Debussy
Reflections in the Water	Debussy
Fairies at Play	Carl Heymann

The Normal School auditorium would not have held another person, and the audience was thoroughly appreciative. Bach was played with an introspective reverence and distinct clarity, steady rhythm and well-defined tempos, colored just enough to be safely decorous. No trifling here. It is hard to believe such Bach could have been acquired in only six years' study.

Then Chopin, with variety in each number that hints young Rehorst has delved into the subtleties of this composer of moods. Crisp, brilliant staccato; airy, fleet, delicate runs; contrasts of legato phrases, abrupt transitions, and change of tempos, never lost sight of and never slurred. The Nocturne was a dreamy, pathetic story, sympathetically told—a tonal picture. Both Etudes were brilliantly executed. Contrasts of the deep, sustained chords in opening of the A minor were followed by a fiery display of runs and octaves. The Polonaise was articulated by fingers appreciative of its moods and tenses, its power and lacy network.

And in the last group we are increasingly surprised. For if Chopin was a far cry from Bach, his interpretation of the moderns is even more versatile. Rachmaninoff opened with a barbaric intensity and resolved into treble weavings around the beautiful melody of the left hand, whose marked accent never wavered.

The Ilynsky "Romance" was dripping with emotional color and a fine pianissimo legato.

The "Novellette" of Glazounow proved a dazzling bit of brilliance, and we come to three Debussy numbers, and in these, more than anything else, it was almost impossible to believe it was the same pair of hands, so different was the technic. Purely impressionistic pictures, imaged with a golden tracery. Not melancholy, but a seriousness surrounded them. Perhaps the "Reflections" made the greatest impression. There was a vibrant movement and shading which made it a very unusual interpretation. In spite of the pleasure of his Bach, I have a feeling that his reading of these moderns, which is marked with individuality, will make of him a very unusual interpreter along modern lines. It will be a career worth watching if he makes it his life work to be a concert pianist. He has the material and suggests by his quiet, self-contained demeanor that all the depths are not yet plumbed.

The Food, Household and Music Show being held at the Auditorium is affording a chance for many things to be given, and among them a program by young Raymond Dettlaff, a fourteen-year-old pupil of Jacob Moerschel, in Plankinton Hall on the evening of November 21, attracted and enthused a big audience. The talented little lad played on one of the small Miessner pianos, and the volume of tone he produced was almost unbelievable. He thoroughly enjoyed the novelty of what he was doing, and so did his auditors. His numbers are all memorized and played with understanding and expressive coloring. Like all small youngsters, he enjoys velocity himself, and his accuracy is astounding. Only the sangfroid of youth would ever start such tempos and get through them. His program, which follows, was chosen to especially fit the occasion, and in no way embraces what he really can do.

Probably not many fourteen-year-old boys, attending high school, would want to attempt this. And Raymond is a real boy, with a lot of mischief in his brown eyes. He loves the outdoors and games, like any other healthy lad, but he has musical ambitions and talent to fulfill them.

CONCERT OF YE OLDE FOLKS

A Personal Reaction

The impulse to praise one community concert in particular drowns the desire to comment upon the necessity for community concerts in general. If the paragraphs that follow breathe panagyric, they will yet fail to express the effect the concert had upon me. Perfect relaxation can come only with contentment, and I was not alone in yielding completely to the charm of the concert of Ye Olde Folks, given at South Church on Tuesday.

Forty singers, garbed in the quaint, becoming costumes of a past generation, poured forth olden melodies and awakened memories of former good times that the hurry and scurry of today had almost banished. The merry-go-rounds of "Three Blind Mice" and "Scotland's Burning," created a refreshing thrill and a laugh. The response to "Love's Old Sweet Song" and "Auld Lang Syne," which the audience shared with ye menne and women syngers, measured the appreciation of that audience, indicating a desire for something more restful than vaudeville and less strenuous than dancing.

The solos and part songs were so admirably adapted to those who sang them that each one scored a hit. Life-ever-lasting Hostetter delighted us with "Twickenham Ferry"; in a sturdy song for two, "Larboard Watch," ye lusty warblers, Hall and Claland, made a difficult thing seem easy; and when Mistress Grateful Golightly Doran questioned "O Dear, What Can the Matter Be?" I once more fell in love with the jingles of Mother Goose. I should like to know the individual reactions to "Flow Gently Sweet Afton" sung by Happyheart Overflowing Shaw (she whose mother was an Ogden). Like many of the numbers on the program "Sweet Afton" has clustered about it associations peculiar to each listener and must have recalled tender memories lurking in their hearts.

The feature numbers were unique. Mistress Faith-that-makes-faithful-Hodge rendered Certain Quaint Tunes on ye Chest of Whistles that revived the grace of the Gavotte and Minuet while accentuating the horrors of present day dance music and dances, horrors that abuse our ears and jangle our nerves.

Wonderful Anabastus Morse sang a Very Worldly Tune, "Rory O'More, in a style that would win any fair maid and please older people. And he was immense as "Old Grimes."

From the audience came Miss Lucy Hartman as a surprise, handsomely gowned in the latest mode with songs equally vivid in contrast to those of Ye Olde Folke. Her rendition of "No, John" was a wicked delight. She interpreted the coquette skillfully, and sang the teasing lover's part with gusto. Her selection from "Elijah" was splendidly suited to her powers.

"What Are the Wild Waves Saying?" was sung by Fancy-free Encouragement Boydston and Cheerful Hezekiah Hall, who made of this olde olde songe for two a refreshing performance.

"Art is the obviously well done," a surgeon once told me. From the unique program so frequently quoted in these paragraphs to the moment of snuffing the candles the work of an artist was visible in every detail. The effective march of ye syngers in their gayly colored gowns with fichus and frills and buckles; the draping of rare shawls and old-fashioned quilts; and the lighted candles on antique furniture combined to make an unforgetable picture. Artemissimo Cotsworth, Chief Tyme Beater, fashioned and directed the entertainment. His brilliant garment of Colonial cut and fashion harmonized with his gentlemanly courtesy. His successful effort, which I have but faintly praised, makes further comment on the need, the value and the joy of community concerts superfluous.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ORGANISTS

Meeting of Illinois Council

Last Sunday afternoon a very interesting meeting was held at Epiphany Parish House, when Mr. J. C. Deagan gave the council a fine address on "Chimes; Their Relation to the Modern Organ," afterward discussing some of his other instruments of percussion, and demonstrating the beautiful tonal qualities of these instruments. It is to be regretted that more members did not take advantage of this opportunity to hear such a delightful lecture, but those present included some of Chicago's most distinguished organists, and after the lecture a pleasant hour was spent in social intercourse. A series of interesting meetings are planned for the season, and these are to take place on the three sides of the city.

AGNES LEIST BEEBE PRESENTS PUPILS IN RECITAL

Some teachers insure for themselves "nervous" pupils' recitals through their own fussiness and some invite unattractive stage presence in their students through their own disregard of good form.

But to neither of these classes does Agnes Leist Beebe belong, but on the contrary her pupils sing with a poise and surety which is an honest reflection of her own serenity and security, and they have stage bearing and manners which are excellent and which are to her credit, a copy of her own graciousness.

And they always sing well and thereby they still further do her credit, for they prove invariably her good judgment, her tact and her artistry.

On last Friday evening all these good qualities—and more—were in evidence at her Fine Arts Building Recital, and there was great pleasure there for everyone attending the interesting recital.

The program was well selected—it was full of variety and it was excellently presented. There was a fine enunciation of the English text, for the most part, and good accompaniments were furnished throughout by Mrs. Oscar Wagner except when she herself sang a group and Harry Polk played, beautifully as always, for her.

Mrs. Elsie Holbrook has a full and rich dramatic soprano and showed careful study and good taste in "Ala Stella Confidenti" (Robault) and a group comprising "Values" (Vanderpool), "Sorter Miss You" (Smith), two very popular new American songs, and "The Willow," a very unusual and wonderful song by Thomas.

Mrs. Lucile Comfort Oren, who sang "The East Wind," "The West Wind" and "The North Wind" (Mary Turner Salter), and the Mad Scene from "Lucia," has appeared often in concert and recital and showed the consequent routine. She has a clear coloratura voice and her singing was, at this time, as always, very much enjoyed.

Edgar Bechtold sang a group of songs by Burleigh, Cadman and Huhn, showing a well-rounded baritone voice of sympathetic quality.

Myrtle Kater chose some very brilliant songs of Corbet, Salter and Del Riego for the exploitation of a lyric voice of very pleasing quality and gave much promise of continued success.

Mrs. Oscar Wagner possesses a good voice of lyric quality and sang with poise and musicianship, while P. T. Macdonald, the possessor of a tenor voice, warm and sympathetic, sang with much intelligence a group by Tosti, Lang and Hawley.

The songs given were "To a Wild Rose," "Thy Beaming Eyes" and "A Maid Sings Light."

"Aida" with Besanzoni At the Metropolitan

The Opera

"Aida" With Besanzoni at the Metropolitan

Mr. Gatti-Casazza trained on New York last night the first Big Bertha of his new operatic campaign, to wit, Gabriella Besanzoni. This description applies not to the young lady's physique, but to her talent. Physically she is a pretty little woman. The big-wigs of the Metropolitan management have not been saying very much about their new contralto, but they have been looking volumes of wisdom. Secretly, no doubt, they have banked on a quick conquest of New York as soon as the young Italian should open her divine fire as the Princess Amneris in "Aida."

The bombardment began shortly after 8:00 last evening, and toward 11:30 it had reached such a pitch of effectiveness that just as the Princess Amneris went down to final defeat a howling mob behind the celebrated railings shouted an uproarious triumph for her impersonator. The Roman contralto seemed to have added little old New York to a list of conquered cities that already included the principal capitals of Latin America.

The most startling stories preceded the young woman to New York. In Paris a few weeks ago I met Giorgio Polacco, who had conducted for her in the spring season in Mexico City. "THE VOICE OF THE CENTURY, CHER AMI!" he cried. "THERE IS NO CONTRALTO LIKE IT—PERHAPS SCALCHI-LOLLI IN HER BEST DAYS, but that was before your day and almost before mine—perhaps Delna twenty years ago. BUT I HAVE HEARD NOTHING TO APPROACH IT. AND TEMPERAMENT!" Mr. Polacco had other things to say about this vermilion talent, but I will not quote him further.

So now the second Metropolitan audience of the season has heard the young woman and RAPTUROUSLY APPLAUDED HER. It seemed to like well the range and quality of her voice, its shifting colors and varied registers, to bask luxuriously at a discreet distance in its vivid heat. SHE IS A FIERY YOUNG SINGER, MISS BESANZONI, AND A FIERY ACTRESS, WHO SAWS THE AIR WITH WHITE-HOT METAL. Princely pride and princely raiment alike counted for nothing with her Amneris when the life of him she loved was at stake. A woman scorned, from the scorner she turned her fury on the priests marching out of the judgment hall, and, thanks to her knees and the Pharaonic ball gown, the Metropolitan stage could have no use this morning for a vacuum cleaner.

The huge audience seemed to enjoy most of the performance and became, as recorded above, very much wrought up over Miss Besanzoni's achievements in the last act.—PITTS SANBORN in the NEW YORK GLOBE.

New York Times: Miss Besanzoni disclosed a voice of power and richness.

New Yord Herald: Her voice is of fine quality, almost a mezzo-soprano in the medium register, but containing resonant low notes. Miss Besanzoni had a real success with a capacity audience.

Evening Telegram: Hers is a rich voice, under beautiful control.

Morning World: Her voice is of true contralto timbre, powerful and resonant. She is evidently as temperamental as a tiger cat.

Evening World: Her singing in the last act was impassioned enough to evoke a demonstration.

Evening Journal: Mme. Besanzoni presented a fitting picture, which vocally was quite in consonance with its histrionism.

SOME NEW SONGS

The new 1919-20 songs being brought out by Witmark and the success with which they have been greeted by discerning artists are added proof that the better class of songs will eventually outgrow, from the financial as well as the artistic standpoint, the so-called popular songs of the music hall type heretofore featured.

Last year this same firm brought out several delightful concert songs and ballads, among the most successful being "Values," "Smilin' Through," "Molly," and "Sorter Miss You."

The new series includes a delightful Negro Spirital, "Golden Crown," by Herman Gantvoort"; "The Want of You," by Fred Vanderpool, author of "Values"; "Dreamport," a charming lullaby by that equally charming tenor of concert fame, John Barnes Wells; an excellent ballad, "The Lamplit Hour," by Arthur Penn, the composer of "Smilin' Through," and a lovely Southern lullaby, "Ma Little Sunflower," another one of the many Vanderpool compositions.

Besides their intrinsic musical value, these songs are set to very lovely lyrics. Mr. Gantvoort used his own words, the others being by Marian Gillespie, R. M. Brinkerhoff, and the last, "Lamplit Hour," is set to a poem by Thomas Burke. It is an interesting fact that Mr. Brinkerhoff, who is responsible for the famous "Little Mary Mixup" drawing in the New York Evening World, has published his debutante lyric in Mr. Wells' song "Dreamport." Heretofore the artist had confined himself to designing the covers for his friend's songs, and although he still insists he is an artist and not a poet, he could not resist the temptation of going beyond the title page and breaking into the print between the covers.

"Fearing I might get a reputation as a lyricist," says the artist, "I have warned every singer who has shown an inclination to do this song. I have threatened them that if they sing it I will mix up a Little Mary drawing and send it by special post—with the admonition, 'Be it on your own head; if you sing it, Little Mary will come after you.'"

Both Mr. Penn and Mr. Vanderpool have always been catholic in their selection of lyrics, feeling that the success of their songs, as is usually the case, depends mostly on the poems. For, after all, the old trite saying that there would be no songs if there were no poems is all too true.

"I select my poems not only for the personal inspiration," says Penn, the composer of "The Magic of Your Eyes," "Smilin' Through" and many of the Witmark successes, "but for the appeal to the public at large; not, of course, forgetting the artist. Every composer who hopes for a real success must try to set a poem which will stimulate the mind of the artist, for it is the singer who acts as the medium to portray the poetical value and paint the musical picture."

Reinald Werrenrath has sung "Smilin' Through" at every recital since February and is still singing it. "Golden Crown" and another new song, "Heart Call," by Mr. Vanderpool, are being sung on every one of thirty-three recital programs by Amparito Farrar, also by Oscar Seagle, Arthur Middleton and other prominent artists. Walter Greene is featuring "Lamplit Hour" along with "Spring's a Lovable Ladye" and "Values." Paul Althouse is using "Values" and "Smilin' Through" on all of his 1919-20 programs, and Florence Macbeth has booked "Values" for thirty-three recital dates so far. Thomas Chalmers is using both numbers on each and every program of his for the coming winter tour. "Dreamport" and "Want of You" have both been taken up universally and programmed continually, the latter being featured by the Metropolitan Opera Company tenor, Charles Hackett.

THE SCHOOL FOR SERIOUS STUDENTS

ASK WHY!

HOUSTON, TEXAS

The musical season has recently opened with a larger list of coming attractions than ever before.

Following the lure of financial promise in the impresario business, nearly every one in Houston seems to have gone into it, from church dignitaries down to a wrestling club, consequently competition is keen. An oversupply of music in a town of this size is dangerous business, so all parties interested are watching the outcome with both hope and trepidation. The first event was the Chicago Opera Company, presenting "Aida" and "The Masked Ball." As this took something like $25,000 out of the town, the appearance of Matzenauer, under the auspices of the Treble Clef Club, was unfortunate. The audience was more notable for enthusiasm than for numbers.

Then, within a few days, came the Vatican Choir. The romantic tradition surrounding this ancient institution, which for the first time in sixteen hundred years had quitted its cloistered seclusion to tour the world, with the benediction of the pope in its wake, struck the popular imagination, and a crowded house greeted it. A predominance on the program of the austere polyphony of Palestrina rather dampened the enthusiasm of many who had hoped for a little of their favorite "Jazz" to compensate them for the $7 paid for tickets. The work of the choir, however, was fine.

The joint recital of Helen Stanley and Joseph Lhevinne was an event deserving more recognition than it received. It did not draw the crowd, but the "Cognescenti" were there, and when this select circle foregathers here an artist is sure of an intelligent appreciation that moves him to do his best. Under the urge of an enthusiasm unprecedented in Houston, both artists distinguished themselves.

Mme. Stanley had been heard here before, and her appearance at this time strengthened the former impression. Her voice, as before, was a responsive medium for the expression of an art so faithfully studied that it has become a skill of the soul rather than a dexterity of the throat—an art touched with imagination, suffused with color and emotionally warm, without overstepping the bounds of good taste.

As great as was her artistry, it, however, paled beside the playing of Lhevinne. No pianist since De Pachmann has held an audience here with such intensity of interest. His technic was dazzling, astounding if you will, but amid the glitter and glamour of technical display the spirit of beauty, transmuted into sound, was held inviolate.

It was hard to believe that dead wood and steel could exhale such witchery of sound as he evoked from the piano in the Shuts-Eyler arrangement of the "Blue Danube." The word is used advisedly, for under his touch this percussive instrument became the breathing voice of music.

The enthusiasm was so great that he was forced to double his allotted numbers with encores. The last concert of the week was Marie Rappold, sponsored by Dr. E. A. Norton, as were the above-mentioned artists. This last was altogether an enjoyable recital, the artist renewing the triumph of a former visit with the Montreal Opera Company. She not only sang superbly, but was lovely to look upon in a gown that set off her attractive stage presence unusually well.

CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,

Saturday, November 22

The concert of two weeks ago was a notable one, principally through the appearance of Leo Ornstein in the D Minor Concerto for piano, by Edward MacDowell.

This is a noble work, and as played by Mr. Ornstein it allows the hearer no feeling whatever that the Liszt E Major might be more brilliant or that either of the Concertos of Chopin could possibly be any more poetic.

Leo Ornstein has developed into one of the standard pianists of the world.

That freakiness of program selection and posing as a futurist composer has given way to the wonderful gift he always possessed for piano playing of the purest and most serene quality.

No pianist before the public has a clearer, more crystalline technic, and not one has a greater feeling for rhythmic flow and impelling tone quality.

The program otherwise contained a more or less uninteresting Overture by Bantock ("The Pierrot of the Minute"), the Beethoven Symphony No. 1, the very interesting Requiem of Rubin Goldmark, and the opulent "Marche Slave" (Tschaikowsky).

Saturday, November 29

This program was particularly beautiful in its presentation of the Symphony No. 4 of Glazounow and brightly frivolous in the Swedish Rhapsody, "Midsummer Wake" (Alfven), while the Mendelssohn "Fingal's Cave" Overture again proved itself a delightful piece of pure music.

Also there was much of the eccentric and mildly humorous to be found in the "Evocation," an extremely modern piece by Roussel and in the Introduction and Allegro by Ravel, and Symphonic Poem, Opus 35, by Carlos Salzedo, the last-named composer appearing also as harp soloist in the last two pieces.

Mr. Salzedo is an expert harpist, it is easy to believe, but he will certainly have to show Chicago his work in other and more directly appealing compositions before we can judge accurately on that point.

His poem is called "Enchanted Isle," and is, I suppose, intended to be poetic and atmospheric. It is the latter, all right, but far from being the former.

To me, almost all ultra-modern music is offensive, because of its very commonness—its vulgar cheapness.

Instead of the fanciful scene assigned this piece by the composer, its impression on my mind is indicated in the following analysis, which you will observe is strictly different from what Mr. Salzedo himself conceives his piece to be. The scene is a decrepit farm house, with a slovenly dooryard, adjacent to a barnyard, with a dusty road passing in front of the house and a hot July sun beating down on the whole picture.

Grunts and cackles emanate from the barnyard.

A woman emerges from the house with a pan of dishwater, which she throws into the yard.

A swarm of bluebottle flies arise and buzz angrily.

They settle down again.

An Automobile approaches in a cloud of dust.

In front of the house a tire explodes with a loud bang.

Man climbs out of auto, swearing a Blue Streak.

A solitary bird sits in a scraggly tree and croaks a few disjointed sentences.

Other birds (mostly jays) answer discordantly.

A cat yowls viciously in the distance and is answered by a sister, feline near at hand.

A boy comes down the road, spies a tin can, picks it up and gives it two bangs with a stick, drops it, kicks up a cloud of dust, vanishes. The dust settles down.

Nothing doing.

SIBYL SAMMIS SINGERS

Friday evening of last week Sibyl Sammis MacDermid presented Juanita Wicker, first soprano; Drace Danis, second soprano; Merlyn Pococke, first alto, and Doris Doe, second alto, in a delightful program at Barnum Hall, Fine Arts Building. This quartet of girls has been making a great success in the concerts they have given. In the morning this four gave a Cadman program at the Arche Club, and this is only one of the fine concerts within the city this season. Part of the program was a Cadman of duets, quartets and solos, and they were delightful.

Miss Pococke was heard in the "Shanewis" aria and "Canoe Song," and she did them well. Miss Wicker used her fine lyric soprano well in Ring's aria from "Shanewis," and later in Bemberg's "Nymphes and Shepherds" she made a fine impression.

Miss Doe won enthusiastic applause in numbers by Poldowski, Spross and Gantvoort-Graves.

Miss Davis was fine in three songs from a Cadman cycle.

A lovely quartet, and Mrs. MacDermid may well feel proud of the excellent ensemble and lovely vocal style displayed.

N. Y. AMERICAN

"Her pretty face, her youth, and her ingratiatingly naive manner are bound to add to the success which her unusual vocal resources insure. . . . High soprano voice of excellent quality and great natural flexibility. . . . Medium tones remarkably full and have considerable warmth, while her head-tones remind one more of a flute than of a violin. . . ."—Max Smith.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

"...Exceptionally fine coloratura soprano voice of extraordinary flexibility and natural beauty. . . . Josephine Lucchese achieved substantial success. . . . Charmed her audience with her sincerity, her gracious presence and the wide diversity of her prodigious program. . . ."

EVENING MAIL

"Why do people flock to hear coloratura soprani and furiously applaud them? Certainly Josephine Lucchese's audience was all ears to hear her. . . . Technic she has galore, and fundamentally she has a limpid, lovely tone quality and a style as fresh as an April morning. . . . She sings for the sheer joy of it. . . ." Katherine Lane.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

On Monday evening, November 17, Mr. Sergei Rachmaninoff gave a piano recital at the Grays' Armory. This recital was Mr. Rachmaninoff's first appearance before a Cleveland audience. He was received with great enthusiasm, and his hearers were successful in recalling him for two added numbers at the end of the program, the second of these being the "Minuet" of his colleague, Paderewski.

The symphony concert presented November 20 by Mr. Sokoloff and the Cleveland Orchestra won for them added laurels. The Cleveland Orchestra, with Nikolai Sokoloff as its splendid conductor, is indeed making a name for itself in the East and Middle West.

Only three numbers were on the program Thursday night, the first being Mozart's Symphony in G Minor. The second number, the Mendelssohn Concerto, gave the soloist, Toscha Seidel, the young Russian violinist, opportunity to achieve great success, and after being called back many times he notified his audience that he was unable to give the much-desired encore.

In the third number the symphonic suite, "Scherazade," of Rimsky Korsakoff, Louis Edlin, the concertmaster, had several conspicuous solos. This last number was indeed a great contrast to the first, with its great crescendos and tonal pictures.

The next concert given by this orchestra comes Wednesday evening, December 3.

A new musical instrument was introduced at the concert given by Modest Atlschuler and his Russian Symphony Tuesday evening, November 18. This instrument, the "tympanon," was revealed to us through the skilled playing of Sasha Votichenko, the soloist of the evening. The program given was, with one exception, all Russian music and was altogether very pleasing.

Saturday night, November 15, Amelita Galli-Curci, gave her second concert of this season in the New Masonic Hall. This program was very different from any previous program, proving to her audience that she was a lyric as well as a coloratura soprano. Mme. Galli-Curci was recalled many times and very kindly gave her audience several encores. At the end of the program the enthusiasm was so great that, after being recalled seven or eight times, she sang "Home, Sweet Home" to her own accompaniment.

She was assisted by Manuel Berenguer, flutist, and it may well be added here that very often in the obligatos it was difficult to distinguish between the voice of the great soprano and the flute.

Homer Samuels, Mme. Galli-Curci's excellent accompanist, was also the composer of the song, "I Saw Thee Weep," which the soprano sang.

Thursday afternoon, November 20, Mrs. McGehee gave the second of the series of lectures on the rise of Italian opera from the time of Palestrina and Monteverde to the present day composers. Thursday afternoon she spoke of four great opera writers of the first half of the nineteenth century, Rossini, Bellini, Donizetti and Verdi. This lecture was given before the members of the Woman's Club in the beautiful parlor of the Woman's Club home on Euclid avenue. Mrs. McGehee was assisted by several ladies who sang arias from the greatest of the operas of these composers.

HARRIET CARTWRIGHT PLAYS A PIANO RECITAL

Everyone who attends the Tew Musicales is impressed by the graciousness and rare intelligence of his accompanist, Miss Harriet C. Cartwright, as well as by the fact that she is a splendid musician, and all these, and others, were glad therefore to have the opportunity, on last Monday evening, to come to that same studio to hear her play a distinctive and beautiful program of piano selections.

Miss Cartwright is cool, sedate and certain of herself.

She has an excellent tonal sense, a fine technic and rare musical intelligence.

Beethoven received kind treatment at her hands in his Opus 27, No. 2, and the melodious A Flat Ballade of Chopin was delightfully given.

Liszt was represented in his "Nightingale" (most charming of melodies) and the Polonaise in F, which, though not so often played as a decade or so ago, still remains a premiere bravoura selection.

MacDowell, found on every program today, to the credit of all American artists at least, was shown to advantage in his cunning "Shadow Dance," and the brilliant "Hungarian." Miss Cartwright was most enthusiastically received, was presented with flowers and compelled to add encores.

Midway of her program she paused in her solo work long enough to provide her usual authentic and musical accompaniments for Edwin Iles, a young artist pupil of Mr. Tew, who sang, with much surety and style, the Clay "I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby" and the lovely lyric, "Eleanore" by Coleridge-Taylor.

EASTON, PA.

The music committee of the Women's Club of this city will present the following all-American artists on the following dates:

December 15—Paul Althouse, the great American tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York.

February 26—New York Chamber Music Society. An unusual artistic combination of instrumental music.

April 15—Albert Spalding, greatest American violinist, in joint recital with Ellen Rumsey, contralto.

The chorus has in preparation the beautiful cantata by Miss Frances McCollin, entitled "The Singing Leaves." The chorus is conducted by Mrs. George C. Macan, Jr.

AT THE MACBURNEY STUDIOS

A combination of good, rich voice, musical intelligence and fine stage presence with one of the excellent MacBurney programs, accompanied in his perfect way by Harold B. Simonds, could not fail to produce a delightful impression.

And this indeed was the feeling at the MacBurney recital of last Monday night, when Pauline Muehlhausen sang a list of twelve beautifully contrasted songs to an audience which filled the little theater and which expressed its approval of all that was done in no uncertain terms.

Miss Muehlhausen sang her entire program in English and introduced us first to two smooth old classics, "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair" (Haydn) and "As When the Dove" (Handel), the last named being a song so seldom heard as to be a genuine novelty.

The next group contained "Hymn to Night" (Campbell-Tipton), "Autumn" (Rogers) and "Mood" (Barnett), by way of novelty, and each proved a distinctively fine song in the handling of Miss Muehlhausen, these being followed by "Wind and Lyre," one of the most attractive of the entire output of songs by Rogers, and "The Skylark" (Gretcheninoff), one of the most charming songs ever sent us by Russia.

The last group, mostly American, comprised "Thy Heart" (Woodman), "Unmindful of the Roses" (Schneider), "Thy Songs" (D'Hardelot), "Serenade" (Branscombe), and that scintillant piece of work, "In Italy," by the Chicago composer, Jean Boyd. C. E. W.

One of the most delightful concerts of this season took place last night in the High School Auditorium, when Josef Konecny, the famous Bohemian violinist, assisted by Mary Tris, pianist, and Lola Murel Alley, soprano, made his appearance here. MARY HANSEN

At the Cosmopolitan School last Saturday morning, a musicale was given by violin pupils of Miss Mary Hansen. The program was throughout adequate proof of the sound and thorough qualities of Miss Hansen's teaching, and revealed, in addition, some distinct talent among the pupils. The program began with the less advanced students and progressed through the higher grades to the Gabriel-Marie "La Cinquantain," played by Richard Coyle, Dorothy Anderson, Elizabeth Lombard and Miss Lewis, cellist, assisting, in which the intonation was perfect and the technical skill steady and well developed. All the numbers were most interesting and worthy of praise from the standpoint of sincerity and conscientious study on the part of both teacher and pupils.

STORIES OF THE OPERA

"Rip Van Winkle," an All-American Grand Opera

(Reginald De Koven)

"Rip Van Winkle," one of the new operas to be produced by the Chicago Opera Company during the coming season, is truly and distinctly an all-American grand opera. It should be called the De Koven-MacKaye opera, as it is the outcome of the perfect co-operation of two master craftsmen—De Koven, composer of 'Robin Hood" and forty other American operas, and Percy MacKaye, the author of pageants like "Caliban" and "St. Louis Masque," witnessed by 150,000 people.

Mr. Reginald De Koven, speaking of the opera, said:

"This will be perhaps the first opera written in this country on a purely and distinctively American subject, and a subject, too, widely known by and of interest to the American public. There can, I think, be no question that, with the exception perhaps of New York, Boston, Chicago and Philadelphia, the American public wants opera in the vernacular, written by native composers. Rome was not built in a day, and a definite school of American opera is still somewhat in an embryonic stage, but American composers fitted to do this class of work are constantly turning more and more toward opera as a form of musical expression in order to bring their muse more in touch with the great music-loving public of this country. And I firmly believe that this great public is ready and willing to appreciate all honest effort in this direction, for this way—and this way only, lies the real development of American music, not only from the creative standpoint, but also from that of the cultivation of the popular appreciation and recognition of national artistic effort, which alone can beget a truly national art."

"Rip Van Winkle" may be said to be the first American legendary opera, and comes nearer to being like "Haensel and Gretel" than any other opera. It is a fanciful, poetic and picturesque story, and, with its children and its fairies, its phantom Dutch sailors, its suggestions of the supernatural, and its bubbling melody, will make a strong appeal to the children of our city and to the many grown-ups who have remained children at heart.

"Le Chemineau" (Xavier Leroux)

Among the farm hands of farmer Pierre, a vagrant harvester, called Le Chemineau, is the best worker and the most cheerful, a favorite with his employer, with his fellow workers and especially with the women. He is loved by Toinette, a village girl, and because of her complete trust in him she is his wife in all but name. She beseeches him to marry her, but Le Chemineau is wedded to the open road and refuses. Even the offer of the farmer to place him in charge of his best farm will not induce him to change his mind, while he declines to take Toinette with him on his wanderings. Toinette is also loved by another farm hand, Francois, but she will not listen to him, and as Le Chemineau is starting on his wanderings Toinette reveals to Francoic that she has been Le Chemineau's mistress, and swoons as the distant song of the wanderer is heard across the fields.

The second act occurs twenty years later. Toinette and Francois are married, and the latter is now an invalid, while their son, Toinet, is the victim of some secret sorrow, Toinet is really the son of Le Chemineau, and Toinette knows his secret, and that he loves Aline, the daughter of Farmer Pierre. When Francois learns this he upbraids Toinette for having withheld the truth from him. Toinet tells him that Pierre has sworn that he would prefer to see his daughter dead rather than married to him, and Francois asks Aline to bid her father to come to his sick room. Pierre comes and commands Toinette and her husband to leave his farm and threatens to reveal to Toinet that he is illegitimate. Francois staggers to his feet to attack Pierre and falls stricken by paralysis.

In the third act Le Chemineau again appears, and learns from former friends who recognize him the plight of his old love, Toinette, and her husband. Toinet has been drinking to drown his sorrows, and is recognized by Le Chemineau as his own son. When Toinette enters seeking her son, she recognizes Le Chemineau, who promises to induce farmer Pierre to withdraw his objections to Toinet marrying Aline, after a powerful scene in which Toinette reproaches him with being the cause of her and her son's misfortunes.

The last act takes place in Francois' and Toinette's house on Christmas Eve. Toinet and Aline are happily married and are about to go to midnight mass. Le Chemineau offers to remain with Francois, now very old and infirm, if Toinette will accompany her son and daughter to church. She does so, after saying that she hopes that Le Chemineau will never again leave them. Farmer Pierre, who has also wandered in, tells Le Chemineau that everyone hopes he will marry Toinette when Francois is dead, for he is hopelessly ill. Francois, who has overheard the conversation, calls Le Chemineau to him and expresses the same hope, even offering the beloved vagabond his wedding ring. But Le Chemineau cannot endure the thought of settling down, and while the bells of Christmas morning announce the conclusion of mass, and the songs of the carrollers are heard, he steps out into the snowy night and once more takes to the open road.

GERTRUDE JEANNETTE POLK

Gertrude Jeannette Polk, whose successful appearance at Valparaiso, Ind., last week is mentioned in another column of this issue of Music News, is here shown in a costume that she wears in one of her costume recitals.

GERTRUDE JEANNETTE POLK

Miss Polk was the principal feature of the program on Thursday night, November 20, at Crystal Hall, North avenue, when a local chapter of the O. E. S. entertained several hundred guests. Miss Polk read a cutting from the recent New York success, "East Is West," and the enthusiasm of the audience was so great that she was forced to respond to many encores. She was immediately re-engaged to appear for the same organization at an entertainment in the near future.

APPEARANCE OF MOISEIWITSCH DELAYED

The dock strike in New York is responsible for the delay in the arrival of a number of musical artists who were to have made appearances in New York in the near future. The first to be affected is the Philharmonic Society, who were to have presented Benno Moiseiwitsch, the new Russian pianist, for his first American appearance. Originally Moiseiwitsch made arrangements to sail from England November 3 on the Saxonia. The strike on this side of the ocean has kept the Saxonia at her dock in this city. Then Mr. Moiseiwitsch transferred his sailing to the Mauretania, scheduled to sail last Monday, the 10th, but instead of receiving a cable that she was on her way it brought the news that her sailing was delayed until the 18th. Consequently Mr. Moiseiwitsch will make his debut in Carnegie Hall in a piano recital on Saturday afternoon, November 29, and not with the Philharmonic, as originally planned. A later date is now being fixed for him to play with that organization. It is also reported Mme. Tetrazzini is a passenger on the Mauretania.

Miss Florence Hinkle gave her annual song recital in Aeolian Hall on Monday afternoon, November 24.

The Elshuco Trio will give its first concert in Aeolian Hall on the evening of December 8.

Mr. Albert Spalding left New York on Monday evening last to play a number of engagements in the Middle West en route to the Pacific Coast. This Friday and Saturday he is playing with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in Chicago. On the coast he will play with the Portland, Ore., Symphony Orchestra, the San Francisco Symphony under Mr. Alfred Hertz, and the Los Angeles Symphony under the direction of Mr. William Rothwell. In addition he will give fifteen recitals. His next appearance here will be in a recital in Carnegie Hall late in December.

NO SUCH THING AS A "RUINED VOICE," SAYS ALBERT RUFF

Restoration of the vocal muscular system after it has deteriorated or been weakened through misuse is a specialty of Albert E. Ruff, the famous Chicago voice builder, who recently moved to New York and has opened a studio in Carnegie Hall.

Mr. Ruff contends that there is no such thing as a "ruined voice"; that is, one that is injured beyond redemption. Voices get into bad condition through being used improperly, through a wrongly set muscular system, and Mr. Ruff has shown in many cases which apparently were beyond relief that, by the application of proper scientific principles, such voices not only can be brought back to their natural state, but so improved and fortified that the singers never will have the same trouble again.

This applies not only to the singing, but also the speaking voice. Many actors, orators and preachers who abused the vocal system have had their voices under Mr. Ruff's guidance.—From an interview in the New York Press.

WELGE SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The second studio recital of the Welge School of Music will take place on Tuesday, November 25, at 8 p. m., at the school, 5819 Erie street.

Miss Bertha Caspers will sing several songs, accompanied by Mr. Carl Weiss of the faculty. Miss Caspers is a graduate of the Chicago Musical College, where she was a student of Mrs. O. L. Fox. The following pupils will take part:

Piano—Virginia Ayers, Bernie Carter, La Vern Hanson, La Rue Olson, Helen Miller, Gertrude Linden, Frances Meyers, Jennie Meyers, Helen Krontz, Florence Forch, Blanch Adams, Mildred Harrington and Marie Johnson.

Violin—Henrietta Hulseberg, Ruth Carter, Alois Haid, Josephine Gnatz, Virginia Hall, Elwyn Hubbard, Lucille Rouse and Gladys Cable.

Vocal—Laura Romer.

Dramatic Art—Dorothy and Helen Miller, Laura Zuttermeister and Gene Sahn.

Miss Gladys Welge, violinist, and Miss Dora Owens, reader, both members of the faculty, will give a program this Friday at Fort Sheridan, assisted by Mrs. Cardy, accompanist, and Miss Libbe, contralto.

MILWAUKEE CONCERTS

Marion Andrews Bureau

Financially, the biggest event so far was the Galli-Curci concert, November 17, at the Auditorium, and the next two attractions announced doubtless equaled it in financial returns, as they are two of the biggest artistic attractions before the musical public today. Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink, with Frank La Forge at the piano, November 28, at the Auditorium, and Jascha Heifetz, whose marvelous playing has enthralled his audiences this season more than ever, December 2, at Pabst Theater.

Twilight Musicales

For the benefit of the Milwaukee County Nurses' Club four Sunday afternoon recitals, under management of Margaret Rice, will be given at the Athenæum. The attractions and dates are:

Flonzalay Quartet, December 7.

Rosita Renard, pianist, December 14.

George Rasely, tenor, December 28.

Porla Frijsh, soprano, January 4.

Liederkrantz Club, Sunday afternoon, November 30, at Pabst Theater, Otto Singenberger, director; Alma Hahn, soprano soloist.

Lyric Club, evening of December 11, at Pabst Theater, Albert S. Kramer, director; Ethel Benedict, soprano, of Chicago, will be the soloist.

GRANT HADLEY STUDIO

Miss Anna Brinda, pupil of Grant Hadley, sang "I Hear the Voice of Jesus Say" (Harris) at St. Paul's M. E. Church on November 23.

Mrs. H. E. Stone and Miss Pearl Hughes, sisters with very fine lyric voices, are preparing for professional work in duo form.

Mr. Hadley will be soloist at the Hawkeye Club on December 13, at the Hamilton Club.

Ferrari—Leonora Ferrari, soprano, appeared very successfully in recital at Galesburg on November 14.

AUDITORIUM CONSERVATORY NOTES

Pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Karl Buren Stein and Miss Anna Weske, piano, will give a recital in the Auditorium Recital Hall, December 4. William Schwartz, tenor, pupil of Mr. Stein, will be the soloist at the November 28 meeting of the Ambrose Women's Club.

Emily Kortak, also a pupil of Mr. Stein, was the soloist at the Royal Arcanum Tuesday evening. Irving Schuster, pupil of Mr. and Mrs. Stein, took the leading role in the De Paul University play given Monday and Tuesday evenings.

CLAUDE WARFORD
ENTHUSIASTIC TEACHER OF SINGING AND COMPOSER

Last week I found a fitting opportunity to spend some time in Claude Warford's studio to listen to several of the lessons. This man's energy seems boundless! "Do you teach with this enthusiasm always?" I asked. "I think I do," he answered, "certainly I begin the day with my inward fires burning, so to speak, and—well, the other day one of my new pupils was forced to change the morning period and asked me if I could take her in the evening, that day. During the evening lesson she remarked, 'Heavens! you have just as much enthusiasm at night as you have in the morning.' 'And why not?' I asked, and she retorted, 'I don't know, only I really was curious to know if you kept it up all day.'" "Of course," Warford continued, "much depends upon the pupil, whether her interest in the work is genuine, but it takes only a short time to find that out and if the student is really serious the work becomes pleasurable and easy and every day becomes filled with joyous hours. Yes, several of the young artists are doing excellent work. Just now I should prefer speaking of them rather than of many well known singers who have coached with me, as, after all, it is a great satisfaction to build a voice and watch it grow, to feel that the student is breathing properly, which, of course, is the first consideration. Then the voice must be 'placed' and then one can begin building up a repertoire. I begin with the beautiful old Italian songs, the easy ones first, naturally, then by working in some European songs and, finally, oratorio and operatic arias. It all sounds very easy and rather like rapid progress, but it does take years to become an artist. This season some of my students are making many worth-while appearances. Tilla Gemunder, soprano, now under Annie Friedberg's management, has her season well booked; Edna Wolverton and Elizabeth Eckel, two other sopranos, are also doing gratifying work. Of the contraltos, Mary Davis and Lola Gillies are especially busy, the former being booked for several recitals and as soloist with the new Euphony Society (the same concert with Galli-Curci) and with the Arion Society; the latter has seven professional engagements between November 15 and December 2. Edna Peard, another contralto, and Carl Palmer and John Leahy, tenors, are also in the professional ranks. In the light opera field are Bert Gardner, baritone, who is singing the leading juvenile role in "Flo Flo" for the third consecutive season; Mary Gardner is also singing in that opera. Martha Voigt, after successes as Beauty in 'Everywoman' and with Mitzi in 'Head Over Heels' is touring in 'O, My Dear' and Caroll Lynn and George Fulton are touring with other companies. Carl Rupprecht, baritone, who has made a name for himself in New York, is making a tour in the west and is contemplating settling in Chicago.

"And Warford songs? Yes, they are doing very well, thank you. Perhaps the 'Dream Song' and 'A Rhapsody' are the 'best sellers' because they are especially grateful for the soprano voice and, as we all know, there are more sopranos than any other kind of singers, but 'Pieta' is being programmed much this season as well as the children's songs, 'If I Could Fly' and 'The Stork.' For men's voices perhaps 'Earth Is Enough' and 'Waiting' (Japanese Sword Song) are the favorites; I'm certain the former is for tenors, as the programs I receive from time to time let me know that, but—I must stop; you have let me ramble on and have led me on and I have done little else but talk about my work. However, I'm more interested in that than in anything else and—that's what you came to see me about, isn't it?"

SECOND WEEK OF OPERA

Forrest Lamont Scores in Two "Butterfly" Performances—"La Boheme" Provides an Effective Introduction for Evelyn Herbert—Felix Borowski's "Boudour" a Sensational Success —Gall, Maguenat, Dufranne, Warnery and Others of the French Contingent Make Successful Re-entry in a Beautiful Performance of "Le Chemineau"—Mary Garden Scores in "Cleopatra," Excellently Supported by Fontaine, Maguenat, Eubank and Noe—"Aida" Given on Saturday Night to Enormous Audience

By CHARLES E. WATT

Repetitions of "Butterfly"

On Monday night, owing to illness of some of the singers in the "La Nave" cast, or for other reasons—"Butterfly" was repeated, and the same opera was presented at the special Thanksgiving matinee on Thursday

In both these the work of Forrest Lamont as Pinkerton was again exceptional, Miura pleased as always, and the balance of the cast was good.

"La Boheme"

It is not likely that the entire season will offer a more delightful bill than that of Tuesday evening, when "La Boheme" was given its first performance of the year and Mr. Felix Borowski's ballet, "Boudour," came to its world's premiere with great pomp and circumstance.

"La Boheme" was notable in the fact that it provided the debut of a new and very young American singer who, up to that time, had never appeared in any grand opera whatever and whose training has been wholly American.

And—beyond any question, she was the most convincing Mimi we have had on the Auditorium stage, and this was not alone because of perfectly intelligent and beautiful singing of the score, but also because in looks, dress and characterization she was the very Mimi of the story come to life again.

Such an achievement is notable and should go into history as a red letter event, for it proves so many things that are worth while and refutes so many false ideas as to what is possible in opera that it provides food for a thousand editorial articles.

For—if Miss Herbert could make this pronounced success under these circumstances, then it is folly to say that no other American girl could do the same.

Bonci was the Rudolph, and in his work with Miss Herbert provided an absolutely sympathetic ensemble and a perfect foil.

No Mimi and Rudolph in memory have ever worked together so beautifully or accomplished half so much.

The two arias (tenor and soprano) in the first act, with the following duet, were at a point of vocal perfection hard to realize.

The entire personnel of the cast was good —Lazzari sang the "Farewell to the Coat" very beautifully and joined with acclaim in the fun making of the four friends of the story, while Trevisan as Alcindaro raised that fussy part to a point of absolute art it has not often attained.

The opera was reasonably well put on—the tricky second act being well managed and even the snow scene having a semblance of verisimilitude it does not often attain.

The manipulation of the lights in the first act was done so badly as to be inexcusable. Such mishaps as occurred along that line would not be tolerated in any fourth-rate theater.

The beautiful orchestral score was treated very well by De Angelis—much better than he has treated any other score, and yet he frequently drowned out every singer except Bonci.

"Boudour"

Another American triumph was "Boudour," for, in spite of its oriental setting and dress, it was strictly "made in Chicago."

The participants were all of the opera company and all residents of Chicago—the costumes and scenery were made here, and the music, as you already know, was written by Felix Borowski, president of the Chicago Musical College.

And—beyond any question it was just as good music as any we have had from any source whatever devoted to this particular line of work, and the production in dressing and treatment was at a point of royalty never exceeded in this city—not even by the performances of the famous company from Russia, which so delighted us a few years ago.

To describe the gorgeousness of the setting or the beauty of the dancing adequately would be impossible, and, it is unnecessary, anyway, for every lover of such things will certainly see this one before the season ends, and it is safe to say that not one of these thousands will be disappointed either with the glitter and the glory of the miming, the dancing, and posing, or the dressing, nor will any lover of music at its most comprehensive best as regards appropriateness and synchronization with stage picture feel aught but joy in listening to the wonderful score written by Mr. Borowski.

"Le Chemineau"

Chicago is righly proud of "the French wing" of the Opera Association, and it is easily to be imagined that no better performance of French opera could be given anywhere in the world than was that of the wonderful opus by Xavier Leroux on last Wednesday evening.

The story of this opera is like a smoldering fire—it burns steadily but extremely slowly for many minutes at a time—but, every now and again it leaps up into a very wonder of flaming passion.

Not to detail the story any more than is to be found in another column of this issue of Music News, it yet seems in place to comment a little more on the wonderful second act.

Here Mlle. Gall, as the grown-up Toinette, is shown in the most homely of surroundings, doing the most ordinary of household labor the while she converses quietly with her bed-ridden husband.

This scene drones along for many minutes—but, finally the passionate entrance of the son (the wonderfully talented and potent Edmund Warnery) brings a gust

SYBIL COMER, Soprano
Management Louise Quealy, Cable Building WABASH 1853 CHICAGO

of excitement to the scene, and this grows in intensity with the wild outburst of his sweetheart Aline, and, still more, in the brutality and vulgarity of the accusations of her father.

The sick man listens to all this without word for a long time, but finally, though

FORREST LAMONT
as Tonio in "I Pagliacci" supposed to be unable to move—he gets up from his bed and with terrible imprecations and curses on the slanderer of his wife, totters to the middle of the stage, where he falls headlong, spent and apparently lifeless as the curtain goes down on the act.

It is a wonderful scene, and that special gift and development of the French artists—pantomime, is drawn upon heavily for its completion of colors.

The music of this opera is of remarkable fibre. It is unusually attenuated in bulk and yet is handled with utmost of effect.

There is absolutely nothing of the melodious about it in any old-time acceptance of that term, and yet each tiniest phrase fits the scene absolutely.

To sing such music and at the same time to portray such character is almost an impossibility, and yet Mlle. Gall, on her first appearance of the season, did it perfectly and again proved herself a consummate artist.

The re-entry of Hector Dufranne was no less propitious, and he, too, covered himself with glory, while Warnery, always artistic to the finger tips and a great favorite in Chicago, completed a trio of exceptional worth.

Nicolay played Thomas to the full power of that character for bucolic impressiveness.

Louis Hasselmans conducted with great skill and again showed those delightful qualities which made him so immediately a favorite conductor last year.

The scenic investure of the piece was admirable, and the stage management was seemingly perfect.

Amelia Conti, Harpist

A feature of the superb orchestra which attracts attention frequently and is productive always of keen pleasure is the beautiful playing of the harp in the orchestra by Mme. Amelia Conti, who is an artist in her line with few rivals.

In the beautifully meditative prelude to the second act of "Le Chemineau" on last Wednesday evening the playing she put forth was compelling and illuminative, while the harp solo which serves as an intermezzo between two of the acts of "Lucia" was on the Saturday evening performance of the first week so beautifully done as to win for this artist a great round of applause which she was compelled to acknowledge by rising and bowing her thanks.

"Cleopatra"

It is quite the fashion to say that "Cleopatra" is all right for occasional perform-

FELIX BOROWSKI
Composer of "Boudour"

ance, but the reason for such a statement seems very indefinite to this writer.

The Massenet music is no more disjointed than that of "La Nave" or "Le Chemineau," for instance, and beyond question immensely more melodious than either of those scores, and if one argues that this constitutes the real objection and that the music is, in truth, too saccharine, it still seems to me that this is a far-fetched conclusion, for cursory hearings of the opera disclose nothing of the sort, but on the contrary a sturdiness of motif and a brilliance of music color which are indeed rarely to be found in any opera.

And as to the story, it is thrilling (respects to one William Shakespeare), and as for the Chicago production of the work, nothing but the most elaborate of praise can be accorded, for it is brilliant, logical and effective to the end.

The performance of Thanksgiving night, witnessed by one of the largest as well as the most fashionable and, likewise, enthusiastic audiences of the season, brought the first appearance of Mary Garden for this season.

Such was her effectiveness that we hope to have her in a great many performances during the season, and we predict, easily, that she will be more popular this year than ever.

Cleopatra is a great part for Miss Garden. Part of the time it demands those elaborate costumes with the voluminous folds which she so loves to swish about the stage, and part of the time it provides her those opportunities for extensive undress, in which she so revels.

Then, it is a tragic story, with plenty of thrills, gasps, groanings, and the fiendish chuckle of which she is past mistress, and so, altogether, including the sensational feeding of the asp, it is one in which her magnificent equipment and variety of talents find full scope.

And, no matter what any teacher of voice who believes in restricted method may say, nor what any voice student who, as yet, thinks that just one way is "the only way to sing," may think, it yet remains true that Mary Garden, on last Thursday, sang with a power, variety and effectiveness which were amazing, and that at every moment of the opera she not only maintained the proper status of the character and the play, but that she also enveloped it throughout with luscious or sardonic vocalism, just as the passing moment suggested, and in so doing proved herself anew mistress of the vocal as well as the histrionic art.

No more handsome or dramatic figure walks the Auditorium stage than that of Alfred Maguenat, and he is also a superb singer.

His work as Marc Antony was an absolute companion piece to that of Mary Garden as Cleopatra, and in saying that no higher praise can be given.

Charles Fontaine, also a handsome man, is yet, in this opera, chained to dull colors and disagreeable action, rather than allowed the attractive heroics and stunning dress of the Maguenat part, but nevertheless his voice rings out with magnificence as well as artistry, and his action is, at every moment of the opera, truly consonant with the emotion and the scene.

VITTORIO TREVISAN
The incomparable comedian of the Chicago Opera Company

A very colorful part is that of the Inn Keeper, and this was done, as before, in perfect style by Constantin Nicolay.

Last spring, when "Cleopatra" was put on in New York, and in a hurry (as a big benefit of some sort), Mary Garden asked for Emma Noe in the part of Charmion, and the young Chicago singer went to New York especially to play that part.

The preference of Miss Garden for this

YVONNE GALL
Who scored a big success in "Le Chemineau" young artist was not difficult to understand when viewing her work last Thursday. She looks the part, she dresses and plays it perfectly, and her voice is both ample and beautiful for the score.

The Octavie of this performance was Lillian Eubank, who proved to be a great improvement, vocally, on the singer who has taken the part previously in Chicago.

Miss Eubank, though a contralto, has a voice which ranges throughout the soprano scale and which is not alone powerful at that altitude but is also clear and sweet.

She looked the part also, and though it is not a particularly grateful one, her performance drew much sympathetic approval from the enormous audience.

The same eccentric dances used last year, and very popular with most people, were again put on and again won approval, though to me they seem unnecessarily outre and angular.

Charlier made his first appearance of the season and conducted with authority, style and finesse.

"Thais"

At the Saturday matinee an exceptionally large and responsive audience heard Mary Garden in "Thais" with the same splendid support previously given her in this opera.

The orchestra did beautiful work throughout and was encored in the "Meditation."

"Aida"

After a week preponderantly French with two performances of the Japanese-American "Butterfly," the Italian wing of the opera company again came in evidence on Saturday evening and delighted an almost capacity audience with a splendid performance of "Aida," the cast being identical with that put forth many times in the past.

"Aida" was, you remember, the opening opera of our first season ten years ago, and it was put on at that time in unexampled splendor. We still have the scenery and the costumes intact, and though somewhat shop worn, they still make a brave show. The audience registered complete satisfaction.

Masked Ball

An extra performance was given on Sunday afternoon and for this "Masked Ball" was chosen for repetition, with a somewhat changed cast, Marie Classens doing the contralto part of Ulrica and Lillian Eubank, who sang that part at the first performance, being presented at this time as Amelia, the biggest part in the opera.

The part is a good one for her and Miss Eubank walked away with a decided ovation.

This singer, beautiful to sight and splendid in action, is the possessor of voice which, although listed as contralto, is most

AMELITA GALLI-CURCI
Who made her re-entry this week

certainly and emphatically mezzo-soprano to perfection and on Sunday proved itself dramatic soprano as well.

The lower tones were full and rich but the upper ones were thrilling in intensity and power, and especially in the concerted numbers, the trios, quartets and larger ensembles with which the Verdi score abounds she proved herself a magnificent artist.

Other Operas

On tomorrow (Saturday) afternoon Chicago will witness the first performance of the three short operas by Puccini which have been promised for a long time and about which great interest centers.

These are "Suor Angelica," "Gianni Schicci" and "Il Tabarro" called "The Puccini Tryptach" by the New Yorkers and which created a sensation on their first performance there last season.

In the evening, at popular prices, Mary Garden will give her first performance of the season in "Carmen."

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

Ruth Ray's appearance with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, Wednesday evening, November 19, under the personal direction of Conductor Stransky, proved a brilliant success. She chose the Lalo Concerto, in which number she fully demonstrated her interpretative and technical mastery. This engagement was a direct result of the complete success of her debut in Carnegie Hall, November 4. Miss Ray has already been engaged for various orchestral concerts in other parts of the country.

Advanced piano students of Heniot Levy, violin pupils of Adolf Weidig, and vocal pupils of Charles La Berge will appear in recital Saturday afternoon, December 6, at Kimball Hall.

Silvio Scionti gave a recital at Notre Dame College, South Bend, Ind., Monday, November 23.

The nonresident students of the American Conservatory were the guests of President and Mrs. John J. Hattstaedt at a social gathering at the conservatory, Friday evening, November 21. A short musical program was presented by Earl Blair, Louise Winter and Ramon Girvin, members of the faculty, followed by dancing. The conservatory was crowded with students, who had a delightful time.

EBBA SUNDSTROM

A trio for violin, piano and organ, written by Ebba Sundstrom, violinist, will be performed at Concordia Lutheran Church on Sunday evening, December 7. Miss Marion Levin will play the violin part, Mrs. G. A. Elliot the organ, and Miss Sundstrom herself will play the piano part. Several other trios for this combination of instruments will be performed at this occasion, which is a special musical service given by the choir.

BLACKSTONE MORNING MUSICALE

The musicale given on Tuesday morning, November 25, at the Blackstone was one of the most interesting and the most vitally important ever given on the Kinsolving Course. Two artists of widely different type participated, Mme. Nina Tarasova, contralto, a great interpreter of Russian folk songs, and Maurice Dambois, who is one of the greatest cellists before the public today. Dambois plays with a richness and limpidity of tone which is almost uncanny. In the upper registers it suggests very strongly the violin in its lyric beauty. And yet there was abundance, too, of imagination and of strength in the group containing the Bach "Aria" and the Schubert "Berceuse," and nothing could have surpassed the delicacy and artistry of his own compositions, of which he played two, "Reminiscence" and "Caprice Russe."

Of Mme. Tarasova's work there were many and varied opinions, but to the writer it appeared as a thrilling and vital message from a people whose life is teeming with passion and emotion still in its primitive and elemental form of expression. Tarasova is not only the mistress of a voice of great power and typically dark color, but is a wizard from the dramatic standpoint. Her interpretation of the harsh, passionate Russian folk lore, as sung to her by her nurse, was compelling, fascinating in every respect, and it seems to me that those among the audience who conceived her art as coarse and unrefined are sadly out of touch with the Russian point of view, in all mediums of expression, for it is always unfamiliarly but wondrously intense and passionate. Tarasova's reading of the group of English songs she gave was remarkably dramatic in no less degree. Mana-Zucca's "Great Bear" was cunning and childlike and "My Laddie" was never invested with more dramatic meaning. She is an individual artist in every sense of the word.

Fraser—Arthur Randolph Fraser presented a program of Old Christmas Carols at Chicago Commons on Tuesday afternoon, being assisted by Lyman Eldredge, soprano, and Elizabeth Harris, pianist.

VIRGINIA VAN RIPER

Virginia Van Riper, a dramatic soprano of great charm, sang on Sunday afternoon, November 30, at the Chicago Athletic Club. She opened her group with the favorite aria of Meyerbeer, "Roberto o tu Cheadoro," which is an adequate test for any soprano. Her voice bespoke itself plainly as of dramatic caliber, with that vibrant ring which grips with its brilliance, and a clarity which makes it sparkle. These same qualities were evident in the "Song of the Soul" (Carl Breil), a song excellently suited to her voice; "Clover" (William Stickles), "Sweet Little Woman o' Mine" (Bartlett), and the Veracini "Pastoral" from "Rosalinda" were all more simple in requirements and interpretation. She did each one with proper thought for its individuality and meaning, and conveyed much in facial expression and dramatic manner, as well as in the vocal reading. "What's In the Air Today" (Eden) served as a fitting and brilliant climax to the group, which was chosen with taste and ample consideration of variety.

Recent engagements of Mrs. Van Riper include an appearance at the Woodlawn Presbyterian Church, a recital with Amy Neill at the Woodlawn Methodist Church, a recital at the South Shore Country Club, and appearances at Pontiac and Port Huron. Mrs. Van Riper is both deserving and achieving success—a happy combination.

The opening of the musical season is well begun. Great interest was elicited in the Philharmonic Orchestra organization and its director-conductor, Walter Henry Rothwell, who has proven his ability as an organizer and a skillful batonist. The ensemble numbers ninety-two players, with each department head a musician of high artistic skill and experience with assistants of much merit as players. A half dozen or more specialists from the East have been engaged with the excellent available experienced talent willing to unite with an aggregation with such high aims and the support given by its founder, Mr. W. A. Clark Jr. Their first program presented Dvorak's "New World" Symphony No. 5 in E minor, op. 95. Its finished rendition left no doubt in the minds of a critical audience that a success was assured. Liszt's "Les Preludes," symphonic poem, Weber's "Oberon," overture, and Chabrier's Rhapsody "Espana" were the other selections. No soloist was introduced in the premiere program. The entire seating capacity of Trinity was sold out on the Saturday evening repetition of the program. A great ovation was given Conductor Rothwell. Mr. Clark Jr., the founder, and the orchestra, repeatedly arose at the beck of their leader and bowed their thanks. The second program gave Beethoven's Fifth Symphony in C minor Opus 67, Tschaikowsky's "Capriccio Italien," Opus 45, and Berlioz's Rakoczy March.

Clarence Whitehill, baritone, was the soloist and gave Verdi's "Credo" from "Otello" and an aria from Bizet's "La Jolie Fille de Perth." His singing was masterly and met with much favor. The second "pop" of the Philharmonic was equally enthusiastic, Tannhauser March opening the program. The soloist was our well known Dutch pianist, Brahm van den Berg, who played the Grieg "A minor Concerto." The concertmeister, Sylvain Noack, gave two solos, "The Deluge" (Saint-Saens), and the Bizet Suite from "Carmen." The first orchestra concert by Director Rothwell to high schools was a crowning success.

The Zoellner String Quartet, of which it can be said it is the equal of the very best, has opened its second course series of ten concerts to Los Angeles given at the Ebell Club House. The Haydn Quartet, Opus 76, No. 4, Sinding's "Serenade," Opus 92, and a quartet by Edgar Stillman-Kelley were presented at their second appearance. They merited a much larger patronage. The concerts are given alternate weeks. The third included Mozart's "Quartet in D minor," "Romantic Serenade" by Jan Brandts-Buys, a great work of color, quite modern type; Sinigalia's "Etude de concert" (first performance), and Rubinstein's "Malto Lenti," Opus 17, No. 2.

Mr. A. F. Fuller gave his twenty-first concert at the Gamut Club Auditorium to a large audience. His own part in songs and piano selections would have made enough for a program alone, but he had the assistance of the unique and popular entertainer, Miss Freida Peycke, in her genre songs and pianologues. The music was of her own composition, skillfully applied by her artful playing, with facial expression and song recitation.

The whistling chorus of thirty ladies, directed by Agnes Woodward, their instructor, was most heartily enjoyed. There was dancing by Anna Bess Carson in "Huntress just after the chase," and "Beau Marie." Sadie Halperin at the piano. Mr. Fuller presented his new piano prelude, No. 2, in A minor, for the first time. Explanation was given of the meaning of the composition, which harmonized with the auditory musical effect given out by the author at the piano. He also gave a Moszkowski number and Sydney Smith's "Dance de Fantomes." Six vocal solos were presented, and several encores. Handel's "In the Battle Fame Pursuing" from "Deborah" was a fine musical rendition; Ward-Stephens' "Dawn of an Indian Sky," Cadman's "Doe-Skin Blanket," Guion's "Hopi Indian Cradle Song," Spross' "Robin Sing to Me" and Metcalf's "Twilight Pale" were sung in good diction and color. The accompaniments were skillfully played by Miss Lillian Steeb, sister of the pianist, Olga Steeb. She absorbs some of her genius as a pianist and promises fine adaptability as an accompanist. Besides Mr. Fuller's bodily affliction, death has entered his home, his wife passing away about one month ago. He has many warm friends and they render kindly assistance to sustain his high aims in his music work.

The Music Teachers' Association held its monthly session October 20, the topic being "Music in City High Schools." Mrs. Gertrude B. Parsons talked on "Organization"; Mrs. Charles Edwards, "Co-operation of the Music Teachers' Association With the High Schools"; Miss Edna Ames, "An Artist's Course for the Students"; Miss Verna Blythe, "Music and Text Suitable for Chorus"; Miss Ida Bach, "High School Voice"; Miss Evelyn Stone, "Scope of Study." These talks were quite illuminating and productive of salutary results in unification of the private and outside work with that of the better organized work of the school session. The Association held a social session Halloween at the Flower Apartments to welcome the many new musicians who have come to our city this summer and autumn. Mr. Raymond Harmon, a very pleasing tenor from Chicago, sang a group of songs. Mr. Charles Ferry, a composer and pianist, of Cleveland, Ohio, who recently made his home here, played a finished accompaniment to his own songs sung by Mr. Harmon, and playing a piano work of his own composition. Mr. Van Pelt, baritone, gave a group of three songs, Mrs. Van Pelt being at the piano. They were well received.

The November meeting introduced special talent in a concert. Miss Ruth Hutchinson, soprano, the prize singer of the National Federation of Women's Clubs; Mr. Arthur Perry, composer and pianist, spoke on "Student Membership"; Mrs. Ruth Graham Putnam, "Reminiscences of Edward MacDowell, and the Peterboro, N. H., Pageant," and the president, Mrs. Abbie Norton Jamieson, who was president pro tem. at the same meeting, added pleasant incidents of the work done the past summer.

Miss Ruth Hutchinson, the prize winner, has been greatly in demand since her return from the Peterboro, N. H., convention. Miss Maude Howard accompanies with skill.

Mr. John Smallman, conductor of L. A. Oratorio Society, has greatly enlarged its membership and quality, and will soon present some of the great works. "Messiah," "Elijah" and "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast" are listed for a hearing. He has been taking several tours in recitals through the state with Charles W. Cadman, composer-pianist, and they have had enthusiastic receptions. The Cadman-Tsianina recital was most interesting and educative through the explanations given by Mr. Cadman. His Indian music was finely interpreted by the Princess "Red-feather" in mezzo-soprano songs characteristic of the Indian music. The second part of the program was devoted to the opera "Shanewis," which had its second year's presentation at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. The fine audience testifies to the high appreciation of Mr. Cadman as a musician, artist and composer.

The Woman's Lyric Club in its first concert of the sixteenth season opened very propitiously at the Trinity. The club has eighty select voices, under the baton of Mr. J. B. Poulin, who has been their continuous training master since it organized as the "Treble Clef" Club of Los Angeles. The program was one of excellence. Schubert's "God in Nature" opened the list, with Miss Ruth Shaffner at the organ, followed by G. B. Nevin's "Cradle Song," which had a repetition in encore call; Schindler's "Three Cavaliers," with Miss Annis Howell in the solo and obligato, which met with such favor it was repeated. The beautiful words of Charles H. Towne "To the Spirit of Music," setting by P. R. Stephens, was most effectively sung. The blending of voices and the emotional content was feelingly expressed. "Page Road Song," by H. O. Smith, was equally well rendered. "When I Walk in the Garden," by Schumann, a delicate recitative style, was beautifully distinct in enunciation, warm and romantic.

A special combination Instrumental Trio, Mr. Jay Plowe, flute; Mr. Robert Alter, violoncello, and Mrs. M. H. Robinson, piano, who also is the accompanist of the club, rendered a selection by R. de Boisdeffre, in three movements. It was a gem, artistically presented by these able musicians. Rossetter G. Cole's "Ashes of Roses," charmed in Alla Capella's rendition, as did also T. B. Aldrich's words "Sonnet" set by E. Horsman. The great effort of the program was the offering of Henry Hadley's Cantata, "The Nightingale and the Rose," a masterly composition for chorus for ladies' solo voices and in which the trio took part. Mrs. Helen Brown Read, soprano, was soloist. The high setting makes it somewhat an ungrateful task for the soprano voices. Mme. Read, a trained artist of large attainments, effectively essayed the role of the Nightingale. An event several weeks prior to the concert, in which all the officers of the club met and invited the press representatives to discuss plans to make the work of the club more effective and get the different viewpoints, assembled at a great Round Table, in the conter of which rested a bank of the choicest flowers. A bounteous luncheon was supplied at the Clark Hostelry. Mrs. L. J. Moyse was chairman. Mrs. Walter Goodfellow is president, and Mrs. Edith Wing Hughes press chairman.

The joint recital of Clarence Whitehill, baritone, and Winifred Byrd, a young pianist of wonderful technique and interpretative skill, was a great musical delight. The group of Chopin established her virtuosity. The second group was from Liszt, the final group from Grieg, MacDowell, and closing with the Schubert-Tausig "March Militaire." Each group had an encore. Mr. Whitehill's opening group was from Franck Massenet, given in French text. Mrs. Gertrude Ross, our popular composer-pianist, essayed the accompaniments with poise and adaptability, giving the soloist full liberty to interpret to the full extent. The second group, Duparc, Rachmaninoff and Gretchaninoff, were sung in fine taste, closing with four English songs. "My Madonna," by Mrs. Ross, words by Robert Service, was repeated in encore, and closing with Clay's "Gypsy John" in a superb full voice. Mr. Whitehill's in-breath and voice placing has his vocalism in full control, at times the faintest pianissimo. The double recital drew a large audience, full of genuine appreciation.

The Ellis Club opened its twenty-fourth season with a very interesting list of male chorus numbers, representing Sullivan, Protheroe, Schultz, Dekoven, Lester, Vorgrich, Boscovitz, Lighter's "Possession" and Wagner's "All Praise to God." Each season opens with Sullivan's "The Long Day Closes" in memory of Charles James Ellis, founder of the club in 1888. The audience reverently stands throughout its rendition. The soloist on this occasion was Maurine Dyer, mezzo-soprano, who made a fine stage presence. Her great effort was in Bemberg's "Aria" from Jeanne D'Arc. Gunsaulus' "Castilla" was well given. "Ballad of the Golden Sun," solo and obligato by Miss Dyer and chorus, was a fine selection.

Miss Modesta Mortensen, violinist, gave with fine artistry "Rigaudon" by Signy; the Bach "Air" for G string and Dvorak-Kreisler Slavonic Fantasy in B minor. Miss Dyer's second group was from Fox, Cadman and Gilberte. Bass solo by Mr. Edmund S. Shank in the Wagner number, with Mr. Ray Hastings at the organ, was an effective postlude to a finely prepared program; J. B. Poulin, director, and Mrs. Robinson the effective accompanist.

The Gamut Club banquets have a flow of soul and fellowship; they are a continuous delight, and always a joy to be present; they are an agreeable surprise.

A reception was given the new musicians of the orchestra, Conductor Rothwell, the founder, W. A. Clark Jr.; Vladimir Drucker, the trumpeter from Russia; Ilya Bronson, the cellist (the solo artist at home and abroad). Mr. Clifford Lott, in baritone songs, with his musical wife at the piano. Rosita Renard, accompanist to Farrar; Noack, concertmeister; Mr. Rhodes Ellis, tenor; Miss Hilda Nolte, piano virtuoso. Miss Trowbridge, accompanist to fine violin solos of Mr. Saunders. Miss Irene Mason, child protege in piano playing of classic music.

The Behymer Birthday Anniversary of 57 Varieties; woman's night; fines if you failed to bring wife, or lady. Arrested at the door if caught alone; taken to court presided over by Lady Judge. Quizzed to the limit; fined for contempt of court, if too impertinent or disorderly. Fund for good cause.

Turning the gavel to woman president, Mrs. Lobinger, who so wittily introduced the speakers and artist guests.

The fine program of local artists was in compliment to President Behymer and stranger guest artists. The ladies only occasionally are privileged to be with us, by special invitation, as it is primarily a man's club. Mrs. Levengoods' solos, with Mrs. Robinson at the piano, were entertaining. The Male Quartet, Messrs. Tibbits, High, Stone, Goldwater; Silvius at piano. The violin playing of Mary Goodrich Read was wonderful. Her mother presided at the piano. Ruth Hutchinson's, lyric-soprano songs; Raymond Harman's tenor songs; Harry Ershoff, beautiful baritone songs; Russian character songs by Eugenie Boyko. Last, but not least, enjoyable treat, the Merry Dance, where elderly and the youthful all take a swing and be happy. Who would not be glad for the recurring monthly gathering of the Gamuters?

Cadman and his Indian Princess in characteristic tribal songs. These make for fellowship and "camarderie" and friendship. The power of music in its wonderful harmony to make the world more human and life more worthy—to it full endowment.

A LETTER TO MR. RESSEGUIE

We were very much pleased with Miss Lowenberg's recital and the general opinion was that she was the best singer we have ever had for a tea. Her program, her voice, enunciation, manner and appearance were all most satisfactory, and the large audience was delighted with her, and proclaimed her a "find."

The low ceiling of the Gold Room and the poor piano furnished by the hotel might have seriously hampered some singers, but Miss Lowenberg was most gracious about these inconveniences, and by her personality and charming voice made the audience forget that all the conditions were not perfect.

Very cordially,
(Signed) RUTH BEACH HOWES,
For Peoria Amateur Musical Club.

ELIAS BREESKIN TO BE A MEMBER OF ELSHUCO TRIO

Elias Breeskin, the Russian violinist, has a very busy season ahead of him, for in addition to his recital and orchestral engagements, he will be a member of the Elshuco Trio, together with Willem Willeke, cellist, and Aurelio Giorni, pianist. He has just been engaged as soloist with the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, David Stanley Smith, conductor, on January 20.

———♯♯♯———

Lake View Musical Society—Monday December 15, at 2:30 p. m., at the Wellington Avenue Congregational Church, 617 Wellington avenue, there will be an organ recital given by the active members of the Lake View Musical Society. Mrs. John P. Annen and Miss Alice R. Deal, organists, with Mrs. George B. Nelson, harpist, and Mrs. Permelia Gale, contralto, assisting.

THE UNEXPECTED ALWAYS HAPPENS TO OLIVE NEVIN

Word has just come that Olive Nevin is filling two new roles, as usual, on an hour's notice, and continues to fill them creditably and well and satisfactorily to all concerned. The first she was called upon to fill is that of head of the voice department in a college.

OLIVE NEVIN

This came through the sudden and unfortunate breakdown of the former head, and, being a former student of the Pennsylvania College for Women before her four years at Wellesley, Olive Nevin jumped into the vacancy and is still taking charge there and teaching some fifteen voice students herself as well as keeping up her own concert work. Then, the second role is that of choral director. The Glee Club at this college does work far above the average college glee club, and a great deal is expected of them for the life of the college. This Olive Nevin is well fitted to do from much experience of her own along that line.

She says it keeps her jumping to add all this to her already filled time, but she is thoroughly enjoying herself. She was heard to great advantage not long ago in the big Seria Mosque, where she lent her services to the big Christian Citizenship week held there. All this time she is preparing for a big December in and near Chicago, as well as a detour to Huntington, W. Va., where she is to be soloist at a big Elk mass meeting.

She tells us that by far the most interesting thing she has done lately has been her work for the mental patients at the Military Hospital at Park View. "There is lots more intelligence there than we know about!" she stoutly declares. She and Miss Mackensy gave the very first concert to these newly established soldier patients there, and it is due to their work in making the boys sing that they now have, three times a week, a regular song leader for them. Olive Nevin says that having made those boys sing is "the best job she ever did." It surely is a proof as to her ability as a choral director, and bids well for the success of the Pennsylvania College Glee Club this year.

Edison Symphony Orchestra Gives Memorable Concert, With Paul Althouse as Soloist — Musical Friends and Haunts of Aurora

Reviewed by MARY CARVER WILLIAMS

On Monday evening, November 24, the Edison Symphony Orchestra gave a concert under the management of Mrs. Theodore Worcester, with Paul Althouse as soloist.

The evening found the Fox Theater filled to every available seat with an audience which responded warmly if somewhat conservatively to the interesting program presented. The orchestra was in finer fettle than when they presented some of the same numbers in Chicago last month, in spite of the fact that they were playing under the disadvantage of too small a stage for their numbers. The Elgar "Pomp and Circumstance" was done with great breadth, and the ballet music from "Faust" was full of color and delicate fancy. Mr. Eastman is especially sympathetic in his reading of numbers of this type, and they are especially adapted to the abilities of his orchestra—better adapted in the brilliant, effervescent qualities than the "Tosca" selections which followed. There is no doubt, however, upon repeated hearing, that Mr. Eastman is a conductor of talent and is fitted in a peculiar way for the work that he is doing.

Paul Althouse, who sang with them, did the "Celeste Aida" aria with distinction and a group of American songs with great charm. His voice is of fine timbre, and combines rare qualities of the lyric and the dramatic, and his personality is one which immediately wins. He was accompanied by Isaac Van Grove, than whom there is none better. Mr. Althouse's songs were Campbell-Tipton's dramatic "Crying of Water" and Hageman's appealing masterpiece, "Do Not Go, My Love," "My Heart's Country" (Clarke), written especially for Mr. Althouse, and the popular "Christ in Flanders" of Ward-Stephens.

Columbia Conservatory of Music

A visit with Mr. Detweiler served to assure us that the Columbia Conservatory, like all other musical and educational institutions, has never enjoyed so successful a year as this. Musical enthusiasm in general, and especially enthusiasm for the study of music has been steadily on the increase in Aurora for the past year, making it necessary to increase the faculty of the school and filling the time of every teacher to the limit.

Faculty

On the faculty of the Columbia Conservatory are several names familiar to Chicago. Among these is Rollin Pease, who was engaged this fall to fill the vacancy left by Lemuel Kilby on his departure for France. Mr. Pease, it is reported, has instantly won the hearts of his pupils and is meeting with great success, with a class which has exceeded all expectations.

Others on the faculty are Melita Krieg, Lucy Spencer, Rhoda Miller, Ruth Burnett, Margaret Hancock, Maude Bonslough, Ruth Breytspraak, Louis Shults, Milton Meigrath, Harriet Waterhouse and Margaret Rasmussen.

Melita Krieg

Miss Melita Krieg is a concert pianist of remarkable gifts, and is a holder of the certificate from the State Music Teachers' Association. Miss Krieg lays great stress on the value of class work for her piano students and conducts classes including work in theory, harmony, interpretation and appreciation.

Maude Bonslough

Miss Maude Bonslough is one of the very successful younger teachers of Aurora. She possesses a beautiful soprano voice and is one of the few voice teachers in Illinois holding a certificate issued by the State Music Teachers' Association for excellence in passing a comprehensive examination. Miss Bonslough also makes a feature of the class lesson in her work.

RICHARD DE YOUNG

The De Young Studio Triangle Club held its annual Thanksgiving dinner Wednesday evening, November 26, at the Brownleigh Club rooms, 151 North Michigan avenue. After a most elegant repast a program was given, which served to demonstrate the versatility and thorough schooling of the artists taking part. The following program was given:

What's in the Air Today.....Eden
By the Waters of Minnetonka.....Lieurance
Carmena.....Wilson
Esther Gielo
Without Thee.....d'Hardelot

CRAVEN STUDIO NOTES

Miss Corinne Simpson, contralto, who has been in concert work for forty weeks under the Radcliffe management, has returned to Chicago to resume her voice work.

Miss Helen Flack has been engaged to sing the soprano role in Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" holiday week in Ironwood, Mich.

Alfred Cushing, baritone soloist of the Emmett Briscoe Company, is singing this week in Des Moines, Iowa.

Miss Louise Breitweiser was engaged as contralto soloist in the quartet at Woolley Memorial Church Thanksgiving Day.

Mary Camp-Twyman, coloratura soprano, made a trip in the East, singing in Montclair, N. J.; Bayside, L. I., and Whitestone, L. I..

Miss Edna Worrell, contralto, has just returned, having given two recitals in Bellesfontaine, Ohio, and special soloist for three Sundays in First Presbyterian Church; one song recital and special soloist for one Sunday in the First Methodist Episcopal Church and special soloist for the county convention of the W. C. T. U. in Cygnet, Ohio.

LUCIE LENOX STUDIOS

Miss Harriet Krauth, soprano, will sing "Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes and Other Songs" at the Little Theater next Saturday morning and afternoon.

At the Hospital Auxiliary Benefit at the home of Mrs. G. A. Kreis, 5945 Washington boulevard, December 9, Miss Harriet Geiger, soprano, will give two full groups of songs, one miscellaneous and one of Japanese in costume.

Miss Hazel Meisterling, mezzo, sang the part of Celia in the production of "Iolanthe" at the Warrington Opera House in Oak Park Wednesday evening last.

ALEXANDER NAKUTIN PRESENTS PUPILS IN RECITAL

On last Sunday evening there was a capacity audience present at Kimball Hall to hear the fine concert given by the Nakutin pupils and to reward the participants with enthusiastic applause and many flowers.

The style of a Nakutin concert is always good; the stage is managed perfectly; the young women who appear are always in gala dress; the accompanist (Mischa Kottler, an artist pupil of Levy) is superb, and last, but not least, the choice of program is of remarkable variety and worth.

The current program was printed in Music News of two weeks ago, and will not be repeated here, but some special mention needs to be made of certain compositions.

True to his usual plan, Mr. Nakutin presented many Russian compositions, among them well-known works of Glinka, Korsakoff, Tschaikowsky, Rachmaninoff, Cui and Zimbalist, as also a very unusual and new song by Bagrinofski, all of these being done with splendid feeling for text and mood, and with true understanding also of the Russian musical mode.

There were also standard arias from the operas of Thomas, Mozart, Verdi, Massenet and Delibes; American songs by Lydia Coonley Ward, Clay Smith and others, and a miscellaneous lot of songs by composers of various nationalities, including "V' Shom'rn" in Hebrew (A. W. Binder) and short pieces by Pasternack, Brogi, Grodski, Mattei, Finden, Xavier, Campbell-Tipton, Jacobson, Podlowsky, and Charpentier.

All this made for infinite variety, as well as constant musical effectiveness, and to say that the Nakutin pupils had ample facilities and feeling for this varied repertoire and that he had trained them intelligently and well in the interpretative detail is but to express the actual truth of the matter.

Mr. Nakutin is fortunate in the fact of having so many talented as well as sincerely interested students as were in evidence on Sunday night, and the audience, a very large one, and also keenly alive to art and musical feeling, was thoroughly responsive to all that was presented.

Rose M. Panek, soprano; Helen Golden, mezzo-soprano, and Roy Bush, lyric tenor, the first three of the program, made nice premiere appearances, each showing good voice, and the English pronunciation and enunciation of each being exceptional, as indeed was the case with every pupil on the program.

Dorothy and Margaret Irvine, soprano and alto, were perfectly charming in some well-chosen and well-learned duets, each singing also well-chosen and beautifully given solo groups, and Mary M. Cassidy, a soprano with bright tone, proved her versatility in singing Hebrew text with authority, as well as doing some excellent English.

H. H. Hauge, a bass of good quality, and Matthew Power, a resonant baritone, added some masculine quality to the program.

Rose Bensing, soprano, had a well-chosen group, which she presented with skill, and Rose Tilska, a lyric soprano, was also very much liked in her unusual selections.

Minna Ysaeva, a dramatic soprano of remarkable power and intelligence, proved to be extremely popular, and Grace Judlin, a mezzo-contralto, not only showed very nice voice, but also distinguished herself by the unusual purity of her English.

June Sofye Schauls displayed a wonderfully sweet quality and good style, and Fannie Levin (another soprano) scored a very decided success.

Genevieve Schrader, an artist pupil who is already well under way in the professional world and who is the possessor of a remarkably broad and refined contralto voice, sang "Evocation" (Rimsky-Korsakoff), "The Song of the Robin Woman" (from Cadman's "Shanewis"), and "The Steppes" (Grechinoff) in a way to emphasize the good impressions made at other appearances.

Sarah Lessick, programmed as a lyric-dramatic soprano, proved that she has both qualities in unusual degree, and that her studies have advanced to the point where she is distinctly of professional style; indeed, her teacher has announced that before the winter is over she will be presented in professional debut.

The program ended, brilliantly and musically, with the duet from "Lakme" (Delibes), sung very beautifully by Rose Tilska and Genevieve Schrader.

Altogether, the evening provided by Mr. Nakutin was one of unusual achievement and very great delight.

HELEN HAWORTH

Helen Haworth, mezzo-contralto, was special soloist at Dr. White's church in Englewood last Sunday, singing in the morning "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings" (Liddle) and in the evening "The Voice in the Wilderness" (John Prindle Scott).

Mrs. Haworth sang at a banquet at the Sherman House on December 3 and will on Sunday afternoon, December 7, be soloist at the Twilight Musical at the Edgewater Beach Hotel.

White—Lida Browning White played before the Gary Musical Society in November, using the Chaminade "Faun" and her own Caprice.

LELA LOWE-PIERSON

At the Brownleigh Club recently Lela Lowe-Pearson was heard in several groups of intensely interesting numbers, played with sanity and the comprehension of a thorough musician. The first selections included Borowski's reverential "Adoration" and Serenata Amorosa (Leyton Potter), into which the artist instilled much warmth and color. Mrs. Pearson has a beautifully sustained tone in melody work and has great imagination in all her work. This was shown in the Hauser Hungarian Rhapsody and in the Carter "Caprice." Her feeling for tempo was singularly marked in the Serenata of Moszkowski and "Melody" (Dawes), and she is in every way a most finished artist as well as a gentle and ingratiating personality.

As to Our Directory Columns

The name of every Musician in the United States—every Composer, every Manager, every Publisher, every Teacher, every School, and every Manufacturer of Music Instruments, should be in the Classified Directory Columns of THE MUSIC NEWS.

It is a fact today that Managers, Directors of Schools, Program Committees, Festival Directors, Lyceum Promoters—in fact, everybody who has to do with Musicians, has formed the habit, when the address of a Musician is wanted, of looking in our Directory Columns for it.

We have been told again and again,

"Your Directory Is the Most Useful List Published in the United States"

Even if you have no intention of doing more public work—even though you are located where no change seems possible—it is still advisable to have your name in our columns in order that your friends, the managers, the publishers and the public at large may have a ready means of finding your address.

And—if you ARE in the field for increased engagements or activities of any kind you will find no medium so useful as this.

We have Classifications for every Instrument, for the Voice, for Publishers, Manufacturers, Composers, Directors, Ensembles, Theory Teachers, Dancing, Dramatic Art, Clubs, Choir Boy Training, Pageantry, Community Singing Directors, Managers, Accompanists, Public School Music Teachers, and others.

If we have not your Classification we will create a Department for you.

The cost of this service is only fifteen dollars a year, but the service itself is invaluable.

During the last season we carried in the Classified Columns hundreds of names. We want to carry additional hundreds this season, and expect to make the list as near complete as we possibly can.

Payment for this service can be made Annually, Semi-Annually or Quarterly—and, as we send THE MUSIC NEWS to each one whose name is in these columns, you need have no further expense for subscription.

Display Advertising in MUSIC NEWS is considered today the most useful in America, and you will—eventually—be in the field for that. But, meantime, you should not delay one week in having your name in our Classified Directory Columns, for this is AN INVALUABLE SERVICE.

YEATMAN GRIFFITH ARTIST PUPIL, HAZEL HUNTINGTON, SCORES SUCCESS ON TOUR

Hazel Huntington, an artist pupil of Yeatman Griffith in New York, has just completed a short tour in which she gave fifteen concerts in twenty days. That she was successful is indicated by the following press comments:

"Miss Hazel Huntington of New York possesses a coloratura voice of remarkable range and beauty, which she uses with great skill, and it is to be hoped that she will favor Ancon people with further opportunities to enjoy her singing. She comes from the studio of Yeatman Griffith of New York."

"Miss Hazel Huntington won the applause of all with the exquisite sweetness of her voice. The solos rendered by Miss Huntington were pleasing and well selected, penetrating every part of the house."

"It is impossible to put into words the charm of Miss Huntington's voice, which is clear and full of an indescribable quality that thrills one through and through. The people of the Isthmus have been fortunate in having Miss Huntington with them for a short time, and she will carry back to the States the well wishes of a host of friends."

"The program was closed by Miss Hazel Huntington, a visiting artist. Her voice is a coloratura soprano of unusual range and sweetness, and the purity and accuracy of her high tones are remarkable. She interprets with exquisite taste and vocalism, and was enthusiastically received."—Panama Star and Herald.

Vance—Mary Hesselgren Vance, soprano, was soloist for the Pennsylvania Club in its annual banquet at the Morrison Hotel on November 19, and sang on Monday evening, December 1, at the meeting of the Junior Auxiliary of the Birchwood Musical Club at the Woman's Club in Rogers Park.

FRANK LA FORGE AND HIS AR TIST PUPIL, CHARLES CARVER

Charles Carver, the man whose wonderful voice attracted the attention of Frank La Forge a year or so ago and who has since been steadily a pupil in the La Forge studios, is a young American for whom great things may be predicted.

Mr. Carver and Mr. La Forge gave a joint concert at Rockford, Ill., last week and scored one of the finest successes on record in that musical city.

The headlines of the Rockford Republic call the event "a triumph," and the review reads:

A return to his boyhood home is always the signal for an enthusiastic gathering of music lovers and admirers of Frank LaForge, celebrated pianist-composer-accompanist, but never has he won a greater personal triumph here than that of last evening, when Mendelssohn hall fairly resounded with thunderous applause accorded Mr. LaForge and his protege, Charles Carver, gifted young basso. This was the first program in which Mr. LaForge has contributed so liberally in the role of soloist in this city, and his playing was positively unexcelled.

Seldom does an artist of the piano command such rapt attention through every passage of his numbers as does Frank LaForge, and his is a true mastery of the instrument. Whether in the simple group of the Bach Gavotte, Haydn's Minuetto and Beethoven's Dance, or the delightful romance of his own composition and Liszt's magnificent Rhapsodie XII with variations on the theme, Mr. LaForge held his audience in a veritable trance as he gave expression to his genius.

Later in the same article (a column in length) we find this comment on Mr. Carver:

Charles Carver's initial appearance in this city was unquestionably a distinct success, and he enjoyed a great share of the honors of the evening. His voice is an exceptional bass, of a rich, refined quality, and especially delicious were his lower tones. He has an exuberant temperament and his facial expression is remarkably in sympathy with the song. The opening group included the Handel "Come Beloved," the Invocazione di Orfeo, by Peri, sung in Italian, a cheery Beethoven number, "The Kiss," Mozart's aria from the "Magic Flute," and an attractive "Warning," of Mozart. Of a more serious theme was the Rachmaninoff "Christ is Risen" and a note of passion was reached in "After the Battle," by Moussorgsky. More frivolous numbers were "Marie at the Lattice," by Franz, "Maidens are Like the Wind," by Loewe, and especially beautiful were the Brahms "In Summer Fields," "Marie at the Lattice," by Franz, and Jensen's "By the Manzanares." He was obliged to return, responding with "By the Waters of Minnetonka," by Lieurance.

A group of French songs also served to display his vocal acquirements and were given with splendid French diction. Mr. Carver's perfect enunciation is a pleasure. The "La Procession," by Cesar Franck, folksong "En Passant par La Larraine," and the unique "Alger le Soir," arranged by Julien Tiersot, and "Chevauche Cosaque," by Fourdrain, one of the most modern of French composers, won for him an ovation and he added an eighteenth century "Le Tambourineur," by Jean Baptiste, arranged by Weckerlin.

Mr. Carver is to give a recital at Aeolian Hall in New York on December 22 and at that time he will have the invaluable assistance of Mr. La Forge at the piano.

The accompanying picture shows Mr. La Forge and Mr. Carver in the New York studio of the former.

MAE GRAVES ATKINS

Two recent successes are to be attributed to Mae Graves Atkins, the popular Chicago soprano.

The first of these was in recital before the Freeport Woman's Club, and the second was in concert of the Community Series at Aurora. In reference to the last named appearance the Aurora Beacon-News states that one thousand people heard the concert, which was the best ever presented in the series.

The Chicago Mendelssohn Club, Harrison M. Wild, conductor, will give the opening concert of its 26th season Thursday evening, December 11, in Orchestra Hall. The entire program for this concert will be made up of compositions dedicated to the Club.

The assisting artists will be Theo Karle, tenor; Orpha Kendall Holstman, soprano; Madame Margaret Jiskra, harpist, and Carl Singer, cellist. A novelty on this program will be "The American Ace," written for the Club and Theo Karle, with harp and cello accompaniment.

Streator—"Messiah" is to be sung at Streator on Sunday, December 21, among the soloists being May Wall and Walter Allen Stults.

Goodsell—Pupils of Victoria Goodsell will play a piano recital at the Clarendon Beach Hotel on Saturday afternoon, December 6, at 2:30.

IRENE SKINNER

Miss Irene Skinner, who is well known as a successful reader, teacher and coach, has returned to her activities this fall with even more vigor and animation than usual. A summer of study in Boston and New York has, to use her own words, served on the one hand to replenish along literary, cultural and historical lines, while on the other the privilege of witnessing the rehearsing of several professional productions, not to mention the association with artists engaged, and incidentally catching a novelty number for Lyceum use, gave the ever needed modern inspiration. Judging from the attention which her own productions are arousing, her ever alert receptivity has absorbed from the two extremes.

Miss Skinner's report for the fall is that there is an increased appreciation for the value of amateur dramatics. Therefore, an increased demand will be the marked difference between this and other years.

NEW FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

The United Choirs (280 singers) of the New First Congregational Church, George L. Tenney, director, announces four great festival evenings.

"The Messiah" will be sung on Tuesday, December 16, and on Friday, December 19, at 8 p. m., by the United Choirs and Elsa Harthan Arendt, soprano; Lucy J. Hartman, contralto; John B. Miller, tenor; Frank H. Collins, bass, and Philip Manuel, organist.

The pageant of "The Nativity" will be presented on Thursday, December 18, and on Sunday, December 21, by the United Choirs and Adelaide B. Tenney, soprano; Lucy J. Hartman, contralto; Walter Diederich, tenor; Rollin Pease, bass; Dr. W. O. Campbell, tenor; William Morse, baritone, and Philip Manuel, organist.

There are five beautiful tableaux. The music is inspiring and the story of the Christ Child is unfolded in a most reverent and impressive way.

Admission is by free ticket, which may be had by sending self-addressed, stamped envelope to Mrs. Frances Somerville, New First Congregational Church, Ashland and Washington boulevards, Chicago.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

The second organ recital by Edwin Arthur Kraft was given on Monday evening, November 24, at Trinity Cathedral. Miss Joyce Banerman, soprano soloist, sang two numbers.

The second chamber music concert was given on Tuesday evening, November 25, in the ballroom at the Hotel Statler. An error was made in the last issue. These concerts are under the auspices of the Chamber Music Society of Cleveland, which Mrs. Franklyn W. Sanders organized in this city one year ago.

This second concert was given by the New York Chamber Music Society, Carolyn Beebe, pianist and director. The program presented by the society proved that its members are musicians of distinction.

PRIZE FOR AMERICAN COMPOSER

Edwin Franko Goldman, conductor of the New York Military Band, offers a prize of two hundred and fifty dollars for the best composition for band by an American composer. The composition must be an original one and one that has never before been played in public. No transcriptions or new arrangements of published works in other forms will be considered. The composition must be conceived originally for band and may be in the form of an overture, grand march or suit in three short movements.

GERTRUDE POLK

On Thursday evening, November 20, Gertrude Jeanette Polk was the dominant feature of a program given by a Chicago chapter of the O. E. S. for several hundred guests at Crystal Hall, North avenue. Miss Polk gave a splendid reading of the recent New York success, "East Is West," and the enthusiasm of the audience was so great that she was obliged to respond to several encores. Miss Polk was immediately engaged for their next program, which will be given in the near future.

RECITAL BY STUMPF PUPILS

The piano pupils of Miss Aimee Stumpf gave a recital at the First Swedish Baptist Church which, as usual when she invites her clientele, was attended well and vastly enjoyed by the audience.

Miss Stumpf has a special knack in attracting small children and in the quick development of their talents, and at this time —as always in her recitals—there were present many bright youngsters and much good piano playing, while musicianship was evident in everything that was done.

The following played well chosen pieces for children in a thoroughly appreciative way and with fine display of developing and developed technic, throughout doing much credit to Miss Stumpf: Florence Huegel, Rose Lewi, Teddy Peterson, Irma Huchberger, Eleanor Oeler, Mildred Schaefer, Bernice Wexberg, Margaret Miller, Stanley Dettlebach, Ruth Nieman, Dorothy Graham, Dorothy Feeger, Rhoda Zimmerman, Allan Dellheim, Adrienne and Arloa Springs, Virginia Berggren, Harriet Prosser, Elsa Soderlund, Clarence Lang, Edwin and Dorothy Ritter and Jane Gloor.

The numbers played by these pupils ranged through Rogers, Rubinstein, Grant-Schaefer, Merkel, Dvorak, Poldini, Massenet, Nevin, Lack, Grieg, Chaminade and other composers.

At the close four girls appeared who, a little more mature in years than most of the others, showed also a more settled technic and, naturally, a stronger musical conception of their numbers.

These four were exceptional in accuracy, style and finish and were a great credit to Miss Stumpf.

They were Marjorie Craft, who played the "Venitienne" (Godard); Edith Prosser, in Leschetizky's "Two Skylarks"; Dorothy Padden, playing the brilliant "Tarentelle" of Heller, and Lucy Shaw, who was heard in the C Sharp Minor Prelude by Rachmaninoff, playing it very well.

Assisting this large class of piano pupils was Irma Stead, a young soprano, who made a fine success in the "Caro Nome" from "Rigoletto" to the fine accompaniment of Aimee Stumpf.

WESTERN CONSERVATORY

Thursday evening voice pupils from the class of H. W. Owens, assisted by piano pupils of E. H. Scott, gave a recital at Kimball Hall. Mildred Davedson, a capable accompanist and pianist, was heard to good advantage in numbers by Chopin and MacDowell. Harry Berning has made much progress in piano work and was fine indeed in the Liszt Polonaise.

Edith Baughman and Mary Miller gave good support for the voice pupils. Comment upon the work of each will be made at some future date, but one can easily say they are working along good musical lines, and these recitals are the thing to develop ease and assurance before the public. Mr. Owens chooses always the best from the song literature, as will be noted by a glance at the program. Special mention must be made regarding the work of Mr. Alban in Handel's "Why Does the God of Israel Sleep?" His voice is of fine quality and he sings with understanding.

Mr. Grant was also musicianly and sure in Handel's "Sound an Alarm."

Miss Woods' work was effective in "With Verdure Clad."

GEORGIA HALL-QUICK

Georgia Hall-Quick, well-known pianist, gave a concert in Peoria, Ill., on Friday, November 28, Alma Peterson, Milwaukee singer, and member of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, being the other artist on the program.

Mrs. Quick, who recently gave a concert in Janesville before the Apollo Club, received an ovation on her appearance, as she is well known in this part of the country as an artiste par excellence.

The Janesville Gazette, in commenting on her performance, said "Mrs. Georgia Hall-Quick's playing of the Liszt E flat Concerto was the sensation of the evening. It was given with orchestral accompaniment and was played with masterly interpretation, and brought a response from the audience.

"Mrs. Quick, as a performer, is fluent and finished. She is master of the singing pianissimo, as well as the more robust selections. The audience longed for more of her playing."

Mrs. Quick, besides winning an enviable reputation as a concert performer, has also endeared herself to many Wisconsinians as an entertainer of real merit, giving many recitals in private homes.

WELGE SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The second of a series of monthly concerts by pupils of the Welge School of Music, 5819 Erie street, was given Tuesday evening, November 25. A program of piano, violin, vocal and reading selections was heard by an audience that, as at last month's concert, showed enthusiastic approval, which reached its high mark when Miss Caspers, vocal teacher of the faculty, sang splendidly a group of four songs.

That these recitals will be among the most popular of the season's musical events is indicated by the large attendance, which was a gratifying tribute both to the school and to Mr. Welge and Miss Gladys Welge. After surrounding themselves with a faculty of exceptional excellence, these two Austin teachers have established a school equipped to teach any branch of music and dramatic art. The Welge School has at once taken rank among the best, offering to Austin and Oak Park students the advantages of a complete organization and studio.

RODA MARZIO

Following her great successes in Brooklyn, New York and Elizabeth, Roda Marzio, the young American soprano, sang the role of Santuzza in "Cavalleria Rusticana" with the Newark Grand Opera Company at the Orpheum Theater, Newark, on Sunday night, November 30, under the direction of Maestro Carlo Paroni of the Scotti Grand Opera Company.

Miss Marzio, who is only twenty-two years old, literally jumped into fame overnight at Brooklyn, as prima donna soprano with the Lyric Italian Federation at the first performances of "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci," and is one of the real "finds" of New York's current musical season.

The last appearance of the young prima donna in New Jersey was at the Elizabeth Benefit Opera for the Italian War Refugees, wherein she repeated her earlier triumphs. Early in the new year Roda Marzio will give her song recital at Aeolian Hall, after which she will make a tour of the South, and later visit Italy.

LEO BRAUN RESUMES TEACHING

After a short respite at Lake Trip, Maine, from a long and strenuous season, Mr. Leo Braun, the well-known teacher of voice and repertoire, reopened his studios on October 15 in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York.

Last season his services as vocal teacher and coach were in such demand that by working even from early morning until late in the evening he found he could not make time for the constantly increasing number of students.

He was compelled to resign his post as conductor with the Society of American Singers early last spring, and devote himself entirely to teaching, and judging from the activity already prevailing in the studio, the coming season is going to be even busier than the past.

Mr. Braun was fortunate last season in having a great many students studying operatic repertoire in addition to tone placing and voice production, and he took advantage of this opportunity by forming operatic ensemble classes, which proved to be very popular, and of great value to all participating. These students had the rare opportunity to familiarize themselves with entire operas at the studios and to sing their whole parts together with other singers, like at a professional grand opera rehearsal, and at the end of the season they found that the concerted work had greatly improved their general musicianship. Owing to the many applications received, these classes are being continued this season.

Among Mr. Braun's pupils who are scoring successes before the public are: Leola Lucey, now filling a country-wide tour booked for her by the Edison Phonograph Company; John Merkyl, who played the leading role in Hammerstein's "Sometime" last season at the Casino, and is engaged this year for the leading tenor part in "The Magic Melodie"; Carmela Ponselle, the talented sister of Rosa Ponselle, dramatic soprano sensation of the Metropolitan last year; Helen Donahoe with The Society of American Singers; Nonette, prima donna with "Somebody's Sweetheart," Yolanda Pressbury with "The Love Mill," Hazel Washburn with "Ziegfeld Follies," Louis Spaulding with "Glorianna," Kathryn Yates, Minerva Coverdale, Adelaide Mesmer, and many others.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra's first concert of the season consisted of "Patrie" of Bizet, the Eroica Symphony of Beethoven; Petite Suite, Debussy; Intermezzo for Strings by Grieg, and Overture to "Tannhauser." They were accorded an ovation from a practically sold out house, much credit of which is due Margaret Rice as manager with the fine list of guarantors.

Needless to say, the same high standard was maintained throughout.

Mme. Charlotte Peege, contralto, and former resident of Milwaukee, gave a recital December 4.

The Arion Musical Club is one of the oldest choral organizations in the city and for years devoted itself almost exclusively to the giving of oratorio at its concerts. The last few years that has been abandoned for part-song work, and one soloist of note assisting. While having narrowed their sphere somewhat to public taste in that direction, there is no one organization doing just the same amount or kind of musical work in the city. A large body of children are trained each week in sight-reading and all elements which go to make up chorus work, in other words, doing what they can to remedy the lack of musical instruction throughout the city schools. Probably no large city in the country is so negligent of this work in schools.

The Arion interests have also extended to the point of organizing an orchestra for young people, which is directed every week by William Jaffe, concertmeister of the Milwaukee Symphony. They will all be heard in concert at the Pabst Theater in the early spring.

Mme. Galli-Curci, under the direction of Marion Andrews Concert Bureau, sang to a sold out house last evening. She gave a more typical recital program than in former hearings and is proving herself master in that field as well as opera. Many numbers were done in English with remarkable fluency. It is still with her remarkable execution and tremendous breath control that she astounds.

The second Chicago Symphony concert of this week was enhanced by the solo work of the harpist, Carlos Salzedo, who gave great pleasure in his artistic playing.

CHRISTINE LANGENHAN HEARD AGAIN IN AUGUSTA, GA.

This well known soprano, who was heard last April in Augusta, Ga., appeared again in that city on November 10th, at the Auditorium. The soprano delighted the capacity audience with her beautiful and clear voice and her interpretative power. She was obliged to respond after each group with an encore, besides the repetition of many programmed selections. A. Walter Kramer's "The Faltering Dusk" found most favor with the audience and had to be repeated by the artist twice. Floral tributes have been awarded to the artist.

The program follows:

Mrs. Lucille Hayley has been re-engaged as soprano at the First Baptist Church, Oak Park. For the past year she has been singing at Pilgrim Congregational Church. On Sunday evening she appeared in groups of songs at the residence of Mr. Bumstead, Oak Park.

The Choral Club is rehearsing every evening at 915 Kimball Hall. A feature of the meetings this year has been soloists. Miss Clara Shapiro, a pupil of Mr. Philip Schaeffer, played two numbers at the last meeting which were very much enjoyed. The club is now known as the Pershing Choral Club, the change from Russell Choral Club being a courtesy to their director. They have filled two successful engagements since October. They sang at Ormond, Ill., November 25, and will sing on the northwest side December 9.

Mrs. Pershing has accepted the junior choir at Temple Sholom.

Miss Mildred Fash was soloist at West Side Masonic Temple Saturday evening, November 15.

Mr. Harry O. Johnson, Grace Lutheran Church annual banquet.

The choir of Normal Park Methodist Church are arranging for special musical service December 7. Mrs. Pershing will have the assistance of the Choral Club.

Children's Concert — Second children's concert by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Frederick Stock conductor, will be given at Orchestra Hall Thursday afternoon, December 11, at 4 o'clock.

BERTHA ANN COOPER

Bertha A. Cooper has a coloratura soprano voice of unusual purity and sweetness.

She possesses great aritistic ability and sings with distinct enunciation and exquisite shading. Having studied under the most celebrated masters of this country, she has been recognized by musical critics and the public as a concert singer and oratorio singer of exceptional merit.

Miss Cooper recognizes the growing appreciation of Americans for good music, and has joined the belated move of English songs for English-speaking people.

The beauty of Miss Cooper's singing lies in the unusual bell-like quality of her voice, that in its every note thrills her hearers. There sounds through it all a freedom and spontaneity seldom equaled. One can only compare her singing to that of a bird, in its clear ringing tones and naturalness. There is no straining after effects. The exquisite shading and phrasing show the real artist.

One cannot refrain from comenting upon the charm of Miss Cooper's manner. She is wholly unaffected and natural, simple and unassuming. At the same time the mood of the music she sings is transferred in a most subtle, delicate and effective way to her audience. She puts into her voice all the meaning of the composer. It is difficult after hearing her program to decide whether one likes her best in the joyousness of an April song, the haunting melody of "Madame Butterfly" or the passionate, wild notes of the "Lorelei." It is rare indeed to find a singer of Miss Cooper's artistic worth.

Sterner—A most interesting pamphlet which has just come to hand lists the opera, concert, oratorio and church singers who, now professionals, were pupils of Ralph Leech Sterner at the New York School of Music. The list contains something like a hundred names, and many of them are known in a widely extended field.

INDIANA, PA.

Devotees of good music were given a delightful two hours' entertainment in Normal Chapel last evening by Miss May Peterson, one of the stellar artists of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York City. Possessed of a personal magnetism that attracted her hearers to a marked degree, of a charming disposition that quickly won her audience, and a commanding stage presence that worked for the wholehearted attention of followers of things musical, Miss Peterson's debut in Indiana (for she is coming back again some time) was marked with that degree of success which is seldom accorded artists even before large Metropolitan audiences. At once she held her audience with breathless attention, and the spontaneous applause with which her various numbers were greeted attested the supreme enjoyment of those in attendance.

Like all her Norse ancestry, her voice was pure, clear and bell-like; singing with an ease of expression and with perfect enunciation. Never a false note was heard, and at all times the volume of her tones was suited to the capacity of the chapel. The full power of her voice, which has charmed audiences in large auditoriums, can readily be realized. Miss Peterson can be looked on as an athletic singer. Her love of good physical exercise was manifested in her splendid physique. She boasts of the fact that for five years past she has had from sixty to eighty appearances each season, and not one had to be canceled on account of illness—a remarkable record.

Perhaps the most interesting number of her program was the aria "La Gavotte" from "Manon" (Massenet). In this number she showed her remarkable range in disposing of one of the most exacting themes known to operatic singing. The first numbers of the evening were of the more classical nature, and included numbers of Mozart, Wekerlin, Spohr, Widor and Sjogren. Part two of the program was devoted to the more familiar airs, including the ever-popular "Songs My Mother Taught Me" (Dvorak), "The Three Cavaliers" (Dargomijsky), "De Ol' Ark's a-Moverin'" (Old Negro Spiritual) (Guion), and "I'm Wearin' Awa', Jean" (Old Scotch). Miss Peterson was lavish with her encores, giving a number of dainty little bits of composition and ending with the true finale to every concert, "Comin' Through the Rye."

In fact, it was a most wonderful evening for those fortunate enough to hear Miss Peterson, and audible satisfaction was expressed by everyone.

The first number of the artists' recital course reflects great credit to those who sponsored it, and many are waiting for the concluding numbers.

A word must be said for the sympathetic and exacting work of Miss Peterson's accompanist, Stuart Ross, at the piano. An artist of accepted ability, Mr. Ross played with precision and exactness, rendering splendid support to Miss Peterson.—Indiana Evening Gazette.

Hanna Butler—Mme. Hanna Butler, the delightful soprano, sang a group of songs for the Musicians' Club of Women last Monday and won the enthusiastic approval of the audience. Her numbers were by La Forge, Wilson Loewe, Herold, Decreus and Leroux.

WILLIAM REHER, VIOLINIST AND CONDUCTOR

William Reher is a young violinist and an efficient conductor, who won recognition in southern California not only in the above capacities, but also as a musician of exceptional ability. Mr. Reher is a pupil of the famous Sevcik and is an excellent violinist whose tone is virile and the technic almost perfect. He has appeared in all the European capitals as concert master and violinist with the famous orchestra organizations. He has appeared abroad as soloist in the principal cities of Europe. In California he was known in the musical circles and there he organized a quartet, whose concerts were distinctly appreciated. As a conductor Mr. Reher has experience; at present he is located in New York in the capacity of first violinist with the New Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Arthur Bodansky conductor. It is his aim to establish in any musical community, and willing either to conduct an orchestra or to form a new organization under his leadership.

QUOTATIONS OF LAZAR S. SAMOILOFF, CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK

"Tenors are paid better than baritones. Therefore most of the male singers aspire to be tenors. Result, they are not paid at all; their voices are ruined by being pulled beyond their range."

"Temperament is often replaced by artists with temper. It is not the same."

"The song does not create the singer; the singer creates the song."

"Some sopranos are pretty and cold. I prefer them less cold."

"It is not bigness of voice that an audience pays for, but quality; yet the opinion still prevails that only people with a large volume of voice should take up vocal study."

"Rossini said, 'Three things are necessary to be a good singer: Voice, Voice, Voice.' That may have been true then; nowadays the three necessities are Voice, Soul and Appearance."

"Don't be satisfied with the usual applause you get in a concert hall. Some of the audience are your friends, some are polite, and the majority may be looking on in surprise. Get a storm with every hand-clapping."

"We teachers are dragging our pupils to the top of the ladder. When they get there they throw us down. Don't blame them, that is human. There are only a few exceptions."

MISS MACBETH JUSTIFIES NAME OF NIGHTINGALE

Still more striking successes attach themselves to the record of our great little American nightingale, Florence Macbeth, the youngest and most charming of all our native singers. Capacity audience after capacity audience greets her on her pre-opera tour with unfailing consistency, and everywhere she finds a growing enthusiasm that would turn the head of any but a sensible daughter of Columbia. Her latest triumph was at Denver, where in the Auditorium, packed to the door with 5,000 musical enthusiasts, she was acclaimed as a real nightingale. The local papers were impressed beyond ordinary, and one of them, the Denver Times of November 5, 1919, said in part:

"Dainty as the human doll in the 'Tales of Hoffman,' tiny Florence Macbeth made her bow last night at the Auditorium before a gathering of music lovers. Dressed in a lace beruffled blue silk dress with almost hoop effect, the prima donna from the Chicago Opera Company was easily one of the most attractive singers Denver has had the pleasure of hearing.

"Miss Macbeth is heralded as the Minnesota nightingale, and is quite worthy of being classed with that popular warbler. Her delicate handling of notes at the very top of her voice was artful, and whether fortissimo or pianissimo apparently was of no consequence to her—she played no favorites, showing a wonderful control of her tones.

"The program opened with an old Italian number, 'Quell Ruscelletto,' by Paradies, of the 1710-1722 period, and was followed by a lovely smooth number, 'Posate, Dormite,' Bassani, 1657-1716 period. A Mozart number closed this group, 'Con Vezzi Con Lusinghe,' from 'Il Seraglio,' and Miss Macbeth responded with a charming encore.

"Old English numbers, 'What's Sweeter Than a New Blown Rose?' from Handel's oratorio, 'Joseph,' 'Plague of Love,' by Dr. Arne, and 'Lo, Here the Gentle Lark,' by Bishop, were Miss Macbeth's next offerings. To this group Miss Macbeth responded with Cadman's 'The Land of the Sky Blue Water,' accompanied on the municipal organ by Mr. Whipp."

LENORA SPARKES FILLING MANY CONCERT ENGAGEMENTS

Notwithstanding Christmas activities and her performances at the Metropolitan Opera House, December will be a busy month for Lenora Sparkes. On the 4th she gave a joint recital with Phillip Gordon, pianist, as the second number in the Premier Concert Course at Carbondale, Pa. On the 9th she will be soloist with the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of David Stanley Smith, in whose oratorio, "Ode to Saint Bernard," she created the soprano part when the work had its premiere at the North Shore Festival, Evanston, Ill., two seasons ago. On the 14th she will be the soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra of Gloversville, N. Y., and on the 28th she sings the soprano part in the performance of "The Messiah" to be given by the Mendelssohn Choir of Greensburg, Pa., with Bertram S. Webber conducting. A second performance of the Handel opus will take her to Reading, Pa., on January 26. Miss Sparkes will give her first New York recital at Aeolian Hall on January 9.

LA GRANGE, ILL.

Emmanuel Choir of La Grange, sixty boys and men under the direction of William Ripley Dorr, sang a musical service in St. Andrew's Church, Downers Grove, on the afternoon of November 16. The largest congregation that ever assembled in the church turned out to hear the choir, and so many people were turned away that the rector immediately re-engaged the choir to come back after Christmas for a concert in a local theater. The Downers Grove Reporter said of the concert: "Those who gained admission to the edifice were rewarded by hearing some beautiful chorales exquisitely sung by a band of men and boys whose every measure showed the effects of arduous rehearsing under a skilled conductor."

Emmanuel Choir has just been engaged to give sacred concerts in the Union Church of Hinsdale on December 7 and in St. Elizabeth's Church in Glencoe the Sunday following, December 14. Special cars on the Burlington and Northwestern Railroads will convey the organization from La Grange to Glencoe.

J. WARREN ERB

An interesting recital was recently held in the studio of John Warren Erb, in New York, the well-known conductor, accompanist and song coach. Considerable talent was shown by the singers, who included Alice Madden, soprano; Steel Jamison and Harold McCall, tenors; Franklin Ford, baritone, and also two artist pupils, Maud De Voe and Vida Milholland, sopranos.

One of the guests, Kitty Cheatham, delighted the audience with several characteristic interpretations, which included "Lullabye" (Gaevert), "Fairies in Our Garden" (Lila Lehmann), and "With Verdure Clad" (Haydn).

At the concert given by the Society of Musical Optimists at Chalif's Auditorium on November 23, Mr. Erb played the accompaniment for Cecil Burleigh, composer-pianist. They played Mr. Burleigh's "Ascension Sonata," followed by "Halloween," "Hills" and "Heave Ho!" As an encore, Messrs. Burleigh and Erb gave an admirable performance of the former's delicate little composition, "Coloring."

GENEVRA JOHNSTONE BISHOP

Friday evening of last week Genevra Johnstone Bishop presented her pupil, Ednah T. Marxmiller, soprano, in recital at Chicago Musical College. Mary Wharton played good piano accompaniments.

Mme. Bishop is a teacher with singing experience to back up the work in the studio, and it is of great help to those who plan on the public platform. Mrs. Marxmiller displayed well-controlled vocal gifts and a surety and easy manner that counts in the singing of songs. Only two groups could be heard because of other concerts, but they were convincingly given.

"Pace, Pace mio Dio" (Verdi) was fine in dramatic work and good vocal control. A group by Huerter, Cator and Brown found Mrs. Marxmiller versatile and musically alert.

ALMA BIRMINGHAM ON THE PACIFIC COAST

Following are some press comments on the work of Alma Birmingham in San Francisco, where she recently appeared in joint concert with her mother, Lillian Birmingham, one of the best-known contraltos on the Pacific Coast:

San Francisco Examiner: Miss Birmingham has a tone of notable beauty and a technic both fluent and sturdy. Her dynamics are well controlled and her attack is assured and masterly. Her tone coloring is warm and her interpretations reveal a positive temperament.

San Francisco Chronicle: Miss Birmingham played accompaniments with utmost taste and facility. As a soloist she has facility and warmth of interpretation and evidenced an elasticity of style and capable readings.

Pacific Coast Musical Review: Miss Birmingham is unquestionably a serious artist. Her touch is flexible, yet firm; her technic is fluent and clean, and her phrasing judicious and tasteful. She succeeds in accentuating the poetry of Chopin as well as the power of Schuett and the color effects of Debussy. Indeed she is a real pianist and as such is well worthy of the success she has attained. —Adv.

ANNA GROFF-BRYANT

Anna Groff-Bryant, director of the School of Three Arts, Lombard College, Galesburg, Ill., and local concert manager, spent the Thanksgiving vacation in Chicago and at the opera.

The concert activities of the fall series were closed by the Sistine Chapel Quartet, which gave the last number of the series of concerts, which included Madam Galli-Curci, Madam Schumann-Heink, Jascha Heifetz and the Sistine Chapel Quartet.

The winter series of artistic activity is a new subscription series to be known as the Galesburg Musical and Allied Art Series, which shall have for its object the giving of the best in music, art and literature, for the greatest number of people, at the lowest possible cost.

Wilson—Making his first recital appearance in this city recently under the auspices of the Music Club, Raymond Wilson, the young American pianist, attracted an audience which filled the large auditorium of Purdue University. The pianist presented a program devoted principally to modern compositions, including the MacDowell Sonata, "Eroica," and a Russian group, which met with particular favor. Mr. Wilson had a most enthusiastic reception, the audience refusing to depart before several extra numbers had been granted.

ALHAMBRA THEATER, MILWAUKEE

Music again played an important part with special feature, "Blind Husbands" last week, a picture of gripping interest and beautiful photography. A special orchestra score accompanied it and besides this, which was very well done by the orchestra under George Lipschultz, a very unusual organ program was played by Frederic Rowley.

The numbers included were:

Christmas in Sicily.....Yon
Kammenoi Ostrow.....Rubinstein
Angelus.....Albert Renaud
Garden of Iram (Persian Suite).....Stoughton
Symphonie (two movements).....Edw. S. Barnes
At Twilight.....Ethelbert Nevin
Solitude on the Mountain.....Ole Bull
Bon Jour.....Reiff
Cathedral } Reverie } .....Debussy
Eu Bateau }
The Swan (arr. for organ by Frederic Rowley).....Alex. MacFadyen

Particularly beautiful was the "Kammenoi-Ostrow," its real depth and color finding expression through the organ and Mr. Rowley plays it with an originality that makes it more than ever attractive. He keeps an undercurrent of verve in the rhythm with a kaleidoscopic play of color that revealed new beauties in this composition. Of a different mood were the three Debussy numbers. "En Bateau," with its gentle wave motion and sustained chords, which no pedal can ever produce on a piano, was perfectly satisfying on the organ.

The Renaud, Yon and Stoughton numbers were as beautiful for the performance given them as they are for their composition.

The new Barnes "Symphonie," of which two movements were given, sounds interesting enough to desire better acquaintance.

Two exquisite little numbers were Nevin's familiar "At Twilight" and the Ole Bull piece arranged from a violin solo.

A new piece by Alex. MacFadyen for piano has been arranged for organ by Mr. Rowley and has a calm, dignified grace suggestive of its title.

Mr. Rowley plays with style and finish and does not resort to the "fakery" and flash many organists think is good enough for the picture house. He takes it for granted his audiences want the best and he gives it in selections and performance.

The Alhambra is by far the most comfortable and attractive theater in Milwaukee and a better place for an hour's rest and enjoyment has not been discovered in the entire city by the writer. Rest accompanied by good music cures any case of brain or bodily fatigue and there is always variety enough at the Alhambra to excuse attendance several times per week.

LELA LOWE PIERSON

The past month has been a very busy one for this popular violinist. On November 20 she was soloist at a salon musicale at the home of Mrs. Hal C. Bangs of Glencoe. She was ably accompanied by Miss Marian Lychenheim. Other dates as follows: November 10, musical at La Salle Hotel; November 11, Woodlawn Woman's Club; November 12, Congregational Church, Rogers Park; November 13, Southern Woman's Club; November 22, Rogers Park Woman's Club; November 23, musicale at the home of Mrs. Clarence Hough, Oak Park; November 26, 27 and 28, soloist at Dearborn Theater.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY CONCERT

The concert of last Saturday afternoon enlisted the expert services of Renzina Teninga at the organ and of John Sheehy, a young baritone of good voice and an intelligence which will unquestionably result in a continuance of satisfactory growth.

Miss Teninga is an honest and serious musician. She plays in a straightforward manner and with a whole-heartedness that is refreshing.

Her technic is admirable, her musicianship away beyond the average of young artists, and her musical conceptions are always fine.

For her opening numbers she played a Vivaldi Concerto, arranged for her by her teacher; some canons on the choral, "Our Father Who Art in Heaven" (Mendelssohn), which were distinctly fine, and a group of brilliant concert pieces, as detailed in Music News last week.

The Concerto involved a great deal of advanced technic and a wealth of intelligence in registrations, which were amply supplied by Miss Teninga, and in the canons she gave an exhibition of serious musicianship not often equaled by a young player.

By AGNES BELDON

The Seattle Concert Season opened brilliantly November 7 with the first of a series of ten Symphony and nine Popular Concerts, given by the reconstructed Seattle Symphony Orchestra of seventy men, under the baton of Mr. John Spargue, a very capable and earnest conductor, who is working indefatigably with his clever band of players at a number of the works of the greatest composers, to be presented on alternate Friday and Saturday evenings. Meany Hall, the spacious and imposing building on the beautiful campus of the University of Washington, has been chosen for these concerts, while the city car authorities are co-operating finely with the management, to provide a constant service of cars for the fifteen minutes' ride from and to town. Music News representative was one of the large throng of citizens who cheerily made their way out to the University district last Friday on a beautiful, springlike, Pacific Coast night, to be a warmly interested auditor and listener to the excellent program given by "Our Orchestra," as citizens proudly say. The well-filled bright hall; talented, alert and vigorous conductor; earnest, clean cut, energy-filled band of players; enthusiastic audience, made up a most pleasing, inspiring ensemble—and Music News correspondent wishes to thus publicly convey most hearty congratulations to Mr. John Spargue on the admirable results of his efforts for the cause of music in Seattle. Daily most strenuous rehearsals may be mentioned, as showing the true grit and faithfulness of Mr. Spargue and his men, thus attaining to the necessary co-ordination and smoothness requisite in great ensemble work. The excellent analytical program notes, contributed by Carl Presly, are thoroughly interesting and greatly appreciated. The great "Jupiter" Symphony, Mozart, exquisite "Frolic of the Waves," from Debussy's "Sketches of the Sea," and Bruneau's Symphonic Poem, "The Sleeping Beauty of the Woods," constituted the orchestral numbers; and Mr. Henri Scott, a baritone robusto of much vigor and power, appeared in Verdi's Recitation and Aria, from "Don Carlos," and "Air du Tambour Major" from Thomas' "Le Caid," rouisng salvos of applause, especially in the last, which suits his individual temperament far better than "Evening Star" Romance, Tannhauser, or the sweet strains of the "Toreador, non guard thee"—both were lacking in the requisite sentiment. So great and tragic an aria as Verdi's "Ella giammori m'amo" also did not convey the depths of pathos and hopelessness necessary, though Mr. Scott's rendition was very fine, and the orchestral accompaniment most able. The gem of the evening's program was Debussy's lovely sketch, and Mr. Spargue's poetical reading made it a genuine treat. "Old Triton Winding His Wreathed Horn," and gathering the sprites of the deep to gayest dancings, till the soft gong of Night disperses the revellers, came to mind while following this exquisite tone painting. These aesthetically beautiful numbers are "things of joy" to the hearers, and Mr. Spargue's poetical choice of such is greatly appreciated. Music News representative will be chronicler of the future concerts, and then have space to mention in detail the various notable qualities of the talented men Director Spargue has gathered together—meantime particularizing the sterling artistry of concertmaster Albany Ritchie, leading violinist, and Francis Armstrong, formerly pupil of the famous Hans Becker; the beauty of tone and rendition of the fine leading violoncellist, Mr. George Kirchner, one of famous Julius Klengel's brilliant pupils, and the excellent work of Mr. E. Hellier-Collens, as leading viola player. Manager C. E. White and assistants genially and most ably managed the thronging crowds. A goodly number of the faculty of the University were present, and of the city's most representative people, many of whom are solid guarantors that Seattle shall have the opportunity of hearing these concerts—and earning its legitimate right to be called a thoroughly musical city, able to appreciate to the utmost, and permanently to support, the Symphony Orchestra of the "Queen City."

Another interesting affair was the concert November 19 at the Norwegian Immanuel Lutheran Church, a beautiful little sanctuary with its white and gold decorations, and fine altar, in which a gracious figure of the Christ is enshrined. Mr. Arville Belstad, organist and choirmaster, had arranged an excellent and distinctive program, in which his fresh-voiced, youthful, attractive choir figured most creditably, especially in the alla capella "Prayer Perfect" by Stenson—a gem of sacred music—and fine Te Deum by Dudley Buck. Mr. Robert Reynolds Edgar has a sweet-toned tenor voice, of great promise, and an attractive manner and stage presence. His songs were artistically given, and beautifully supported by Mr. Belstad's excellent accompaniments. One of Mr. Edgar's best high notes was finely displayed in "Daybreak" by Daniels; while in "Pleading," by Elgar, he showed much of the requisite emotion, and temperamental qualities.

A genuine delight were the Sibelius and Grieg songs given by Miss Hildur Levida Lindgren, formerly of Chicago. A true Lieder singer, of very fine vocal powers, and bright personality, of whom her Chicago friends will be very pleased to hear—she is leaving soon for California. Much appreciated were her lovely songs; also the violin solo of Miss Frances Tanner, and Mr. Belstad's Organ Fantasia. He is to be congratulated on his earnest work and solid musicianship. Pastor and Mrs. Stub are a sincere, unaffected, charming pair, reminding one of fine characters in a Bjorson story—rememberable, gentle, and genial personalities, doing their life's work devotedly and happily, in their beautiful little church near the pretty harbor of Lake Union.

MARGARET O'CONNOR

Margaret O'Connor, the talented young harpist of Galesburg, recently achieved marked success in Pasadena, Calif., where she had a number of exceptionally fine appearances. Miss O'Connor has a splendid technic and a love for her instrument which is rare. She plays with great sympathy and artistic comprehension.

The following are quotations from press comments which she received during her stay in California:

Harp Music to Be Feature of Play—Miss Margaret O'Connor Will Play During Performance of Community Drama

Miss Margaret O'Connor, a gifted harpist, will furnish the music for the Community Players next week at the Community Playhouse. Miss O'Connor is visiting here and is deeply interested in the Community movement. She expressed her delight in having the opportunity to be identified with the Community movement of Pasadena.

The music of the harp to be heard next week during the presentation of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" will add greatly to the carrying of the message of the play, the harp having been chosen best to express that message.

In the overture the rich, soulful arpeggios foretell the bigness of the message of kindness. The "Message of Spring" and "Song Without Words" glimpse the joy that is to be brought by the Stranger. Then follows the beautiful prayer of Hasselman's "Priere," which falls like a benediction upon the changed viewpoint of all of the lives before the passing of the "Friend"—a "Stranger" no longer.

MARGARET O'CONNOR

"Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms," as played by the harp, gives the audience the sweet assurance that all have started life anew.

Miss O'Connor Is Favorite Harpist

Miss Margaret O'Connor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mart O'Connor, 715 Jefferson street, who is now visiting in Pasadena, Calif., has won much praise for her talent and splendid ability as a harpist. On Easter Sunday evening Miss O'Connor played at a musical program given by the best musicians at the Methodist Episcopal Church and won the highest commendation for her work.

She is now preparing to take an active part in the musical program to be given during the performance of the community drama and the Pasadena Star-News says of her:

"Miss O'Connor has already been proclaimed a favorite in musical and social circles in Pasadena."

BRUNETTE WALTER

The song recital given in Bissing School of Music Kimball Hall studio last Friday evening reflected a careful training on the part of the voice teacher, Brunette Walter. The latter part of the program brought forth several opera numbers. Miss Walter told briefly the story of each opera represented, particularly the events leading up to and including the numbers used, which added to the enjoyment of them. Pupils from the violin department will present the next program of this school the last of December.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

Frederick Gunster, Tenor, in Recital, Lakeview Musical Society, Chicago

Mr. Gunster, whose work has won him favor in the East, is the possessor of a voice of natural beauty, carefully schooled and skillfully used. It inclines rather to the suave, the ingratiating and the soft than to the robust, the resonant and the aggressive, but it is none the less a voice of good power and capable of effective dramatic expression.

Heard yesterday in a group of French songs and in five Grieg selections, he proved himself an interpreter of excellent parts. His diction is clear and accurate, yet free from exaggeration and affectation; his handling of the musical phrase discloses good musicianship and taste, and he grasps the poetic meaning of the text and makes it potent with his hearers. All in all a singer possessed of fine abilities, and one listened to with sincere satisfaction.—W. L. Hubbard, Chicago Daily Tribune, November 11, 1919.

Iowa Boy Joins Seattle Orchestra

Frederick Heizer Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Heizer of Sioux City, has been appointed second concert master of the Seattle Symphony Orchestra of seventy members.

Mr. Heizer canceled an engagement with a string quartet playing under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society in Honolulu to accept the Seattle position, preferring to remain in the United States. Mr. Heizer belongs to the Sons of the American Revolution. He served in the United States Navy the entire period of the late war. He is a graduate of the Heizer Music School in Sioux City and of the American Conservatory of Chicago, where he had training under Adolf Weidig. He has been heard in Des Moines upon many occasions and has a national reputation as a violinist of unusual ability.

Miss Letha McClure, a cousin of Mr. Heizer, also an Iowa musician, born at Burlington, heads the musical department of the Seattle public schools.

Mr. Heizer and Miss McClure are grandchildren of the late John Harper, a pioneer school teacher, who came to Iowa in 1841.—Des Moines Register.

Votichenko

The finest musical treat of the season was given Wednesday night in the Hamilton Theater by the Russian Symphony Orchestra before a large and most appreciative audience. At times the applause lasted several minutes. One heard only the most complimentary remarks. Each performer showed skillful training and one of the most pleasing features was the quiet manner in which Modest Altschuler conducted.

Sasha Votichenko, who introduced in this country the most fascinating instrument ever heard—the royal tympanon—a unique instrument of the XVII Century, was greeted most enthusiastically. Votichenko played in a very clever manner. The Stieff piano, which is the official piano of the orchestra, was used.—Lancaster Examiner, November 13th.

The country is engulfed in a wave of musical events, and Lancaster is fortunately enveloped in the breakers. The audience that assembled last evening to hear the splendid program given by the Russian Symphony was eager with enthusiasm awaiting the treat that was to be theirs.

It is seldom one hears so excellent an orchestra. One could never listen to a performance of compositions of Slavic origin played more admirably. Mr. Altschuler gave us Russian music as only Russians can play it and only as a sincere idealist can conduct it.

Tollefsen Trio Heard

Brooklyn music lovers were given a rare treat last night when the famous Tollefsen Trio gave a concert in the Music Hall of the Academy of Music. Through an association of severel years, the Tollefsen Trio has attained a unity and understanding that reaches almost to perfection and thoroughly delighted the large audience.

The program opened with the greatest of Dvorak's trios, the "Dumky," Op. 90. This work is given the four movements, Lento Maestoso Allegro, Andante, Andante Moderato and Allegro-Lento Maestoso Vivace, and is remarkable for the depth of feeling expressed.

Boellmann's superb "Variations Symphoniques," one of the greatest masterpieces of cello music, was played by Michel Penha. The wonderful ease and grace of his playing and the fire and intensity of his interpretation delighted his hearers.

Several solos for the piano, embracing a wide variety of subjects, were next played by Augusta Tollefsen. At the close of her impassioned rendition of "Allegro Appassionata," by Saint-Saens, she was accorded that greatest tribute among musical audiences—a complete half second silence, followed by a tremendous outburst of applause. Mrs. Tollefsen also played Bruno Oscar Klein's beautiful romance "In the Forest." Her splendid technique was shown to advantage in the brilliant "Etude de Concert," by Edward MacDowell, one of the greatest American composers.

Carl Tollefsen played as a violin solo d'Ambrosio's "Romance," a work of great depth of emotion. Mr. Tollefsen reached his greatest heights, however, in Aulin's "Gavotte and Musette." Though light, the work abounds in brilliancy and charm, depending more upon perfect technique and delicate, subtle shading for its appeal.

The program closed with a trio, Schutt's "Fairy Tales," Op. 54. The trio consisted of three movements, all in waltz form. The Tollefsen Trio was at its best in this fanciful, graceful piece.—Brooklyn Times.

Harold Henry's Most Recent New York Success

Harold Henry is no stranger to New York. Of the younger American artists of the pianoforte he is distinctly one of the most satisfying, especially in regard to the straightforward nature of his style, his poise and his musical intelligence.—H. E. Krehbiel, Tribune.

Harold Henry made an unconventional programme for his recital yesterday. Such rearrangements are positively revolutionary and altogether delightful. Mr. Henry played with beautiful tone and fine feeling. —Henry T. Finck, Evening Post..

It is notable that in each successive event he registers a more profound understanding of his art and the fulfillment of his early promises. The performance of a long and difficult programme resulted in considerable satisfaction to his hearers. He gave force and vigor to consequential passages. The poetic moods were disclosed with delicacy and taste.—American.

Tense earnestness and real enthusiasm characterized the playing of Harold Henry. He has more than the average imagination and poetry, moreover he is equipped with an excellent technique which serves as an admirable medium for his interpretative powers. His programme was an exacting one but he measured up to it. We should like to hear something more of Harold Henry.—Morning Telegraph.

He played a diversified programme with good show of technical skill and force. There was brilliance in Mr. Henry's technical display. He played with fine, even, finger technique.—Herald.

He showed sincerity and intelligence. Displayed dynamic power, dash in style and tonal variety.—Sun.

Is an earnest, sincere and capable pianist.—Globe.

Is a sound artist of fine technical ability, and plays in easy and convincing manner.—World.

He has dazzling speed and astounding digital dexterity.—Evening World.

Konecny at Raleigh

In spite of the competing attraction at the Auditorium, the recital by Josef Konecny and assisting artists at Meredith College drew a considerable and evidently a satisfied audience. The concert, which was both popular and artistic, was thoroughly in accordance with the Meredith standard.

Mr. Konecny is a serious, dignified man whose style of playing corresponds to his expression. In spite of his brilliancy and fire he is of the classic, intellectual type. His vibrato is little in evidence, and his vigorous temperament is under thorough control. It would have been interesting to hear what he would have done with Bach and Handel.

But the program was mostly modern, with not a bar of Bach, Haydn or Mozart, and with Beethoven and Schubert only in the extra numbers. Among Mr. Konecny's most interesting numbers were Paganini's Caprice No. 13, for violin alone; Schubert's Ave Maria and a Bohemian dance arranged by Mr. Konecny's teacher, Sevcik. Mr. Konecny prefaced the last of these with a brief introduction in which he recounted the part played by the Czechs in the destruction of Austria's military power.—Raleigh (N. C.), News.

May Peterson at Newport News

Those who attended the delightful concert given at the Academy of Music last night under the auspices of the Peninsula Music Club were indeed fortunate. The artists for the evening were Miss May Peterson and Louis Graveure, two delightful artists, and their success was insured from the first.

Miss Peterson displayed much taste in her selections and won her audience immediately. She possesses a beautiful voice, splendid breath control and great charm. "Allelujah," "I'm Wearin' Awa' Jean," and Crepuscule" showed splendid work. The final group was one by Miss Peterson in which she scored heavily, playing her own accompaniment in the last. Miss Peterson is a real artist. Her work showed an ability to interpret all she wished to express.—Daily Press.

Chicago Notices of Raymond Wilson

Beginning on a low emotional level (Fantasie in C minor, Mozart) it was some little time before the fact that Wilson really functions in a highly efficient manner, both digitally and cerebrally, became apparent. This was accomplished with a Nocturne and Scherzo, by Chopin, and with the MacDowell "Sonata Eroica."—Edward C. Moore, Chicago Daily Journal.

Everything he plays is nice, neatly executed and well-bred. In passages asking for a subdued tone his touch is very pleasing and the sentiment is gentle and refined.—Herman Devries, Chicago American.

A Vocal Triumph Achieved by Mabel Corlew Smith at Stamford

A very remarkable vocal triumph was achieved also, at this recital by Mabel Corlew Smith, a young lady from New York and Chicago. Her voice is a true soprano of most brilliant quality and remarkably wide range. This was particularly demonstrated in the aria "Here the Smugglers Dwell," from "Carmen." Equally pleasing were her two later numbers, "Morning Hymn," Henschel, and "The Awakening," Spross. Her voice is wonderful, exceptionally beautiful in the middle register, correctly placed and trained; and, governed as it is by artistic intelligence, it gives its possessor a high rank as a vocal artist. The city has seldom heard a greater vocalist. Her success last night justifies all the fine things the Chicago music critics have said about her. Her work was of a character to substantiate their laudations, for she certainly can measure up to the most critical demands of the art to which she devotes her talents.—Stamford Advocate, Stamford, Conn.

Gustaf Holmquist

A splendid audience attended the inaugural concert of the Women's Musical Club season, yesterday afternoon at the Fort Garry Hotel.

The artist for the occasion was Mr. Gustaf Holmquist, singing five groups of songs. In his first two numbers, "Hear Me! Ye Winds and Waves" and "Where'er You Walk," by Handel, Mr. Holmquist seemed to give a very pleasant demonstration of his style and power. His voice is rich and appealing, his tendency ever to love and elaborate the piano passages.

Mr. Holmquist is adorable in the simple ballad. He floods the hall with soft melody—wraps the audience about with sweet tones.

His singing is of the most finished type, his enunciation always strikingly pure.—Manitoba Free Press, Winnipeg, Canada.

Singing with rare interpretative power and remarkable richness of tone, Gustaf Holmquist, basso, captivated his audience at the First Presbyterian Church last night. There were few vacant seats in the big auditorium when the singer made his initial bow and before the first numbers of the program had been completed, every seat had been taken and many late comers had to stand to hear the concert.

Mr. Holmquist's program selections were happily chosen. They gave him an opportunity to reveal in full his artistic talent. Compositions by Handel, requiring unusual voice power and range, were sung with the same ease and interpretative ability that the artist displayed in his delightful renditions of Scandinavian folksongs.

"Where'er You Walk" (Handel), gave Mr. Holmquist ample opportunity to reveal his unusual range and voice power. He rose to the heights in that little gem "Eventide," by Backer-Grondahl, captivating his audience. "Boatsong," by Ware, was greeted by a roar of applause.—Everett Daily Herald, Everett, Washington.

May Mukle

May Mukle, the English cellist, was acclaimed with enthusiasm by the entire New York press at her Aeolian Hall recital on Thursday afternoon, November 20, 1919. Extracts from the principal papers:

A revelation. With perfect poise and control of apparently limitless resources, she proved the cello a most versatile instrument, capable of appeal in every form of artistic expression.—Evening Mail.

A player of unusual distinction and fine skill.—Richard Aldrich, Times.

Not only the best of English violoncellists, but the best of her sex anywhere. Throughout the afternoon she displayed her rare technical skill and artistry; her ingratiating tone, including the exquisitely limpid harmonics; her avoidance of excessive vibrato; her full-toned arpeggios, and her thrilling double stops.—Henry T. Finck, Evening Post.

The cello portion of the work stood out in all its pristine beauty.—Tribune.

Her playing is distinguished and her taste is admirable.—Evening World.

May Peterson in Home Town

Oshkosh, Wis.—As one manner of paying tribute to their former "fellow-townswoman," Oshkosh business men and professional men donned formal evening dress when they went to attend the homecoming recital by Miss May Peterson under the auspices of the Oshkosh Musical Club. But the tribute which Miss Peterson most appreciated was the fact that the "old town folks" received her just as if she had been away to college or to work in some other city for a few months or years rather than as a grand opera star with a long record of American and European triumphs.

"The baggageman said 'Hello, sister,' and almost broke my arm shaking my hand," she said. "Next morning the milkman craned his neck out of his wagon and called 'Hello, May,' across the street to me.

"If musicians are to belong to the public they must belong to the whole public, not just some little clique," she declared. "That means the plainest folk along with the rest.

"Some of the finest tributes are paid by men and women who have no musical education. They just say they like the singing. A man who had no program asked me after a concert about the number I had sung just after 'Down in Old Virginny.' He was quite taken aback when I told him it was by a man whose name he could not pronounce—quite put out at having admired something classical. But that is just the way we can educate the people to know and appreciate better music—sing what we know they like and what they know they like, and also show them that the classical is just as enjoyable if they will try to listen with patience and understanding."

Since her school days in Oshkosh Miss Peterson had trials and triumphs. She had little money when she went to Europe, but plenty of courage. She came back a star. She has proven herself in opera, oratorio and recital and as soloist with America's largest orchestras. Her concert tour will be broken several times this winter when she returns to New York to sing five roles she is contracted for with the Metropolitan Opera Company: Lakme, Violetta in "Traviata," Michaela in "Carmen," Mimi in "La Boheme," and Manon in Massenet's "Manon." These she has sung more than fifty times during the seasons 1913-1914 in leading opera houses in Europe. The last two named are her favorite roles. She has sung with Caruso, McCormack and other great stars. This was learned not from Miss Peterson, but from her manager.—Wisconsin Journal.

The Musician Is Worthy of His Hire

Only the other day a Baltimore minister emitted a wail that is still going around the land. He objected to "hired" (as if singers were taxicabs or hacks) choristers and soloists in the church, on the ground that they should donate their services to the congregation and the Lord. Without commenting on the absurdity of this archaic argument (advanced by a "hired" preacher), we turn to the article written by a prominent choirmaster and organist. This gentleman goes farther than the divine; he wants choirmasters and organists to receive a salary equivalent to that of the minister, on the ground that they are just as valuable to the cause of religion as the pastor. This is indeed a retort to the protest of the Baltimore foe of "hired" musicians.—Musical America.

Anne Gulick in Chicago Recital

Wednesday morning in the Ziegfeld theater, Anne Gulick, a pianist from Boston, gave an interesting and enjoyable piano recital. The young woman has a well developed technique, her scale and finger work being especially limpid and clean. The tone she wins from the instrument is lyric and unfailingly ingratiating, and she displays excellent taste, sympathy and musicianship in interpretation. She presented a Ravel sonatine with fine appreciation of its individual style, and in a large group of Chopin selections showed powers that included sane sentiment, poetic mood and excellent taste.—W. L. Hubbard, Chicago Tribune.

Miss Anne Gulick revealed one shining attribute among others that please—Miss Gulick treats her piano sanely. For that especially, I laud her.

I heard the young Bostonian pianist in the Bach English suite in A minor and in Ravel's Sonatine, in both of which she displayed the intelligence, sincerity and lack of mannerism that promise well for her advancement.

Miss Gulick possesses a facile and correct technique and her tone is of lovely quality.

Reverence was the satisfying keynote of her interpretation of the Bach suite. As for the cleverly written Ravel number, Miss Gulick lost none of its values.—Herman Devries, Chicago Evening American.

Anne Gulick proved herself mistress of a genuinely musical touch and in a Bach suite played all the notes with glibness and a nice sense of phrase. In the Ravel sonatine she showed a tendency to be poetic and gave real pleasure by her careful performance.—Henriette Weber, Herald-Examiner.

Miss Gulick in a group of Chopin pieces including the Variations Brilliantes, three etudes from Opus 25, the C sharp minor Fantasie-Impromptu, and the F major ballade, lately much in vogue among pianists, disclosed a sane musical judgment, a clear notion as to interpretative ideals, a technique which was adequate for her program, and a taste which is refined more than sentimental and orthodox as to musical feeling.—Maurice Rosenfeld, Chicago Daily News.

JASCHA HEIFETZ RECITAL

Mr. Heifetz made his initial appearance in Chicago for the season on Sunday at Orchestra Hall. The community took up its pleasant task just where it left off last spring. That task consists in filling every available inch of space with people, who listen with breathless intensity, as if under a spell, to the exquisite loveliness which drops from that marvelous violin and then applauds frantically, remaining unappeased when finally driven from the building.

Small wonder, even if one resents the excess of the ecstasy which pays no heed to the physical limit of an artist of intense temperament and insists on more and more after a generous program and many encores.

Into the presence of Mr. Heifetz there should be carried by the appreciative auditor a species of reverence for such a surpassing outpouring of the gifts of the gods. For, no matter what training and study have done, he is a player by the grace of God, one of those blessed mortals who have a heritage which sets them apart as of the elect. For such playing there is small need of analysis, discernment or comment. The voice to express emotion does not follow any set order—it has its own method, its own form, its own tone, its own color. And he is wise who does not seek for reasons for submitting to such a musical message, but accepts the new tones of voice in old phrases or enjoys the newer phrases with keen and grateful pleasure.

Mr. Heifetz was in every way admirable on Sunday, and whether in the elucidation of the lovable theme of the Cesar Franck Sonata or the pulsating, compelling rhythms of the Bruch Scotch Fantasie found exactly the right nuance to make moving the beauties of these two great works. They made up the major portion of the program and evidenced the most devoted care and feeling for the music itself. Again and again the sense of personality was lost and the music pursued its delightful course, carrying the fancy into fields of romance and fantasy unlimited. The graceful curves of the chief theme of the Franck were caresses with tenderness unbelievable, and the sweep of the cantabile of the Bruck of commanding yet enduring sweetness.

In the lighter pieces closing the program the impeccable tonal purity during the most extravagant dexterities remained phenomenally sure. All the tricks in a violinist's box are in the possession of this gifted man, and he has a lot of his own in addition. They win him favor and approval and are legitimately used. But they are not to be measured in the same breath with his remarkable warmth and tenderness and the singing tone which flows so surely, sanely, so enduringly lovely.

But why try to say anything. Why not better ask the gods and fates to be good to him still and keep him in physical perfection so that his days may be long in a land that needs him much. The mixture of all sorts and conditions of men in his audience shows how his message touches human hearts. Whatever he did was easily understood by critic or neophyte. He has the commanding simplicity of genius.

Another recital is announced by Wessels & Voegeli for January 18.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

EDWARD ATCHISON

During the busy season of Edward Atchison, tenor, two orchestral engagements are listed, the Detroit Symphony Orchestra at Detroit on November 30 and the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra at Minneapolis on December 28. These two unusual appearances are accompanied by three "Messiah" engagements and two recitals, making the aggregate as follows:

November 30—Detroit Symphony Orchestra at Detroit.

December 21—"Messiah" at Dubuque, Iowa.

December 23—"Messiah" at Mason City, Iowa.

December 25—"Messiah" in Auditorium, Minneapolis.

December 28—Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Minneapolis.

January 1 and 2—"Messiah" at Winnipeg, Canada.

January 6—Recital at Dubuque, Iowa.

January 11—Recital at Evanston University Club, Evanston, Ill.

Mr. Atchison recently had the privilege of singing the title role of Handel's Militant Oratorio, "Judas Maccabaeus," in the famous Mormon Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, Utah, upon the occasion of the State of Utah's memorial services given to their soldiers. The following press comments are the result:

"Edward Atchison, the tenor, proved his musicianship with his opening recitative and aria, and grew in favor with the audience as the succeeding numbers for tenor were given. His voice is resonant, clear, pure and his interpretation keenly intelligent. The aria, "Sound an Alarm," was strikingly rendered in true military spirit."—Salt Lake Tribune.

"Mr. Atchison has a remarkable dramatic tenor voice. His familiarity with oratorio was in ample evidence from the opening recitative to the close, and he was entirely at home in the most difficult requirements of the evening."—Deseret Evening News.

Mr. Atchison is tenor soloist at the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Eric De Lamarter organist, and John Timothy Stone pastor.

Josef Hofmann in Recital

So many musical events as that of the week ending November 23 New York has never witnessed. Besides the revival of "La Juive" at the Metropolitan and several other concerts, the brilliant Polish pianist appeared at Carnegie Hall on Saturday before a capacity house, which was sufficient proof of Mr. Hofmann's popularity. Not until the lights were dimmed did the audience leave the hall. And he played as only he knows how. It is superfluous to analyze his pianistic feats. Hofmann is today one of the world's masters of the keyboard. His program consisted of Schumann's Sonata in F minor, a Chopin group consisting of Nocturne in F, Polonaise in A, Mazurka in B, and the Scherzo in E. Besides, he added the Chopin waltzes in A flat, and the "Maiden's Wish." Then he offered Dvorsky's "Penguine," "East and West" and "Sanctuary." And again he gave us Strauss' "Bat," Rachmaninoff's Prelude, C sharp minor, Military, G minor, and compositions by Stojowski and Moussorgsky. I did not count the encores, but they were many. The recital was one of the early season's joys. The ovations, applause and demonstrative approvals of the audience reminded one of an eventful operatic debut a la Patti.

Sergei Prokofieff in Recital

This recital was the end of a perfect week. Operas with its debutants, several symphonic concerts, English opera at the Park, concerts and recitals of all sorts and qualities—can anyone complain of monotony in busy New York? And more, the audiences flocked in large numbers to greet their favorites, even if they are not so considered by the newspaper scribblers. How can we economize paper print if New York today gathers the world's greatest artists and musicians? The metropolis is the artistic mecca of the world. Whether you come for money's sake or not, many artists are welcome to reap the benefits. One of them is Sergei Prokofieff, the young pianist-composer. Someone whispered to me that young Sergei had a sore thumb, but his playing didn't show it. His speed is breathless and his technic is non plus ultra. As an interpreter he employs certain conceptions which are his own, nevertheless artistic. He is conventional and unconventional. More "un" when he composes. In the great chain of pianoforte manipulators this Russian pianist brings his own individuality. His program enlisted compositions by Schumann with his "Carnaval," a character sketch by Moussorgky called "Goldenberg and Schumyle," compositions by Borodine and Glazounoff. Mr. Prokofieff played his own "Toccata," "Grandmother's Tales" and "Sonata." The Aeolian was packed.

Constantino, Tenor, Dead

Florencio Constantino, the widely known Spanish tenor, died at Mexico City on November 19, after a long illness. The tenor sang for many years in the United States. He was a member of the San Carlo Opera Company, under Russell of the Boston Opera Company, and the Manhattan Opera Company, under Oscar Hammerstein.

William Zerffi Pupil Sings

It would not be just to comment in professional tones about the singing of Miss Emlie Spalding, contralto, until this young singer makes her debut in the professional concert hall, but there is so much promise about her that, without any extensive comments, one can predict for her an unusual career if she pursues her studies with great devotion. She is the possessor of a voice of excellent quality, and what is more, she is a capable interpreter of songs. The excellent schooling was also one of the pleasurable features. This is due to that splendid teacher, William Zerffi, whose abilities are beginning to be appreciated in the musical world. Recently established in New York, he already enjoys a following. Miss Spalding is an intelligent exponent of his method. The following program was interpreted by the singer, who was capably assisted at the piano by her teacher:

In the Dark, in the Dew..... Rogers

The French Theater

With the opening of the French Theater, New York has completed its milestone of entertainments. The French Theater bears the title, "Theatre Parisien," and the performances take place at the old Belmont, on West Forty-eighth street.

Monsieur Robert Casadesus is the director. Until the management lowers the prices, which are rather high for the masses, the attendance will be limited. For the opening week "Main Gauche" (Left Hand) was given, and followed by "Chonchette," a musical bouffe in one act from the pen of G. A. Caillavet and Robert de Flers, with music by Claude Terasse. Chonchette, a pretty laundress, is courted by a trio consisting of a photographer, a viscount and a baron, but Chonchette desires to embrace the theater, while in love with her photographer. The question to be decided lies between the stage and love. The latter triumphs, and so Chonchette marries her photographer. The music by Terasse is agreeable, and the comedy is wholesome. Lucien Weber played and sang the role of the photographer with skill and infectious comedy. Robert Casadeus, as the comedian who persuades Chonchette for the stage, was adequate vocally, and gave occasion for hearty laughter. Lucienne Debrennes as the Laundress disclosed a light but agreeable timbre. Felix Barre and Gustave Degreziane were both adequate as the ardent courtiers. The music was directed by Oscar Lifshey. Comments on the acting of "Main Gauche" by Pierre Weber is deferred for a later issue.

The "Yeomen of the Guard" at the Park Theater

Is Arthur Sullivan's "Yeomen" a comic opera? Hardly. To me it is grand opera, rivaling the best of the Latin repertore, and positively above many of the Italian modern works. There is some comedy, but very little of it. The pathetic death of the jester is positively emotional, though compensated by the reunion of the Colonel and his wife. The "Yeomen" is a jewel, and is the most serious composition that came from the genial and prolific pen of Arthur Sullivan. Since "The Daughter of the Regiment," by Donizetti, and "Martha," by Flotow, plus other works of similar genre, are on the boards of the Metropolitan, I believe that the "Yeomen" would not be out of place in Mr. Casazza's repertoire. Arthur Sullivan's music, interpreted and sung with good voices, would be as enjoyable as any of the bombastic Italian operas. In the performance of the "Yeomen" I enjoyed John McGhie's conducting more than anything else. The batonist showed us that there are many treasures in the score, and they were brought out so beautifully and so effectively that some of the mediocre singers were forgotten. Gladys Caldwell is being "starred" without a voice, and on this occasion she proved her inefficiency to conclusive points. Mr. Brainard, as the Colonel, sang agreeably. Frank Moulan, as the Jester, is adapted for the genuine comic operas, but not for serious parts. William Danforth again showed cleverness as a comedian. The balance of the cast consisted of

The Philharmonic Concert

The second concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on Thursday evening, November 20, at Carnegie Hall. Mr. Stransky conducted effectively the unfinished symphony by Schubert. A very interesting execution was Ravel's "Valses Nobles et Sentimentales," which was given for the first time at these concerts. Mr. Stransky was happy in his interpretation. Unlike in the past, he proved his familiarity with this French composer. Liszt came in with his bombastic Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes," which was also played, and it seemed that the audience liked it. Eddy Brown, violinist, played Beethoven's Concerto in D, Opus 61, for violin and orchestra. In spite of his numerous appearances, the violinist has not yet arrived where one could compare him with the capable fiddlers of the day. His intonation was uneven, his tone, at times, too small for Carnegie Hall, but he showed some interpretative ability.

"Nightie Night" at the Princess

Are risque farces a stimulus for the box office? "Nightie Night" is one. Will a risque farce provoke the sensibilities of the so-called reformers of the world?

I do not believe that a sensible public considers these farces a source of demoralization to habits and good morals. The wholesomest entertainment is the farce, when it is cleverly arranged. It has no pretense of philosophizing over problems, and it searches not for solutions. A farce has no moral to offer. A good farce is worth hundreds of comedies written by so-called moralizing authors. Adolphe Klauber presents "Nightie Night," and it may be said without reserve that it is the most entertaining play farce now running, as it gives more food for laughter than a half dozen of exaggerated successes. Whether it is copied from some French farcical writer or not, Martha Stanley and Adelaide Matthews deserve praise for evolving it. Francis Byrne, "the victim of circumstances," moves many a listener to forget his own troubles. Dorothy Mortimer, as the suspicious wife, acted capitally. The balance of the cast was satisfactory.

Concert of the American Music Optimists

A well chosen title. The active founder and president is Mana Zucca, composer and pianist. The indefatigable Lady is promoting the welfare of the much neglected American composer and his works. It is well to call this society "Optimists" because its organizer has always on her radiant face a smile which would win the most apathetic individual. I do not mean to be rude or destructive, but I hope that Miss Zucca will choose more capable soloists than the vocalists of Sunday afternoon, November 23. The concert was the eleventh one since the society had birth some three years ago, in the midst of troublesome days. The Chalif salon was the chosen location and it seems that the convenient hall, easy to reach from the farthest point, was a factor in attracting some five hundred music lovers. The program was opened by the excellent violinist composer, Cecil Burleigh. He played his own sonata "The Ascension" and again excelled with his formidable execution. Superb accompaniment by J. Warren Erb. Violin and piano never harmonized so well Mr. Nicola Zan, basso, had difficulty in recuperating from nervousness. Under normal conditions he may have disclosed a voice when he sang songs by C. Linn Seiler, Frank La Forge and Ralph Cox. I advise good vocalists to sing the Tirindelli songs; they are certainly worth it. A girl recited "Un segreto" and "Berceuse d'Amour." The composer proved to be an accompanist par excellence. Cecil Burleigh returned to the platform with "Halloween," "Hills" and "Heave Ho," dignified compositions for every respectable fiddler. And Warren Erb again delighted with his admirable accompaniment. Arthur Hadley, a tenor, sang

OCTAVE DUA, TENOR

Mr. Octave Dua, formerly tenor of the Chicago Opera Association, is now at the Metropolitan Opera House. Mr. Gatti Casazza, the journal director of the Metropolitan Opera, could make no better acquisition for the French repertoire than when he selected this excellent Belgian artist. I believe that the management of the Metropolitan Opera House has been looking for him for some time, and now we expect an improvement in the interpretations of the French operas. At the Chicago Auditorium he has made himself noteworthy through his various appearances in the characteristic roles of the French and the Latin repertoire. When I made my home in Chicago I attended the opera performances more often because of Mr. Campanini's love for the Gaelic music. I can't say exactly how many operas I have heard there, but some of the performances are still fresh in my memory, and it happened that this Belgian tenor was cast. For instance, in his appearances in the performance "Dinorah" he excelled not only through his charming voice and his splendid method of vocalization, but his acting was a delight to those who appreciate the art of acting drama and comedy on the operatic stage. And I also remember his splendid singing of the aria from "Herodiade," which was given by the tenor in a Hebrew text. This showed the young artist's versatility. On another occasion I remember his unique impersonation of Mime in "Siegfried." The part established him as one of the most valuable artists of the Chicago Opera Association. I don't care to know the reason of his leaving the famous Chicago organization, but I do know that in his departure from the company the manager of the Chicago Opera has lost one of the most valuable character artists not only in America, but in Europe. Somebody has to benefit, and therefore Mr. Gatti Casazza is the winner. At the time of the writing he has not yet appeared with the Metropolitan Opera, but shortly we shall have the opportunity to listen not only to his former successes, but to new ones too. Octave Dua was a pupil of Leo Van Der Haejhen, professor at the Gand Conservatory of Music. He studied under this famous master for two years when he was only 17 years of age. At 19 he took all the first prizes for comedy and singing. He had the honor to receive a prize of 5,000 francs from the Belgian government for his splendid achievements. He was selected among 46 candidates. At the age of 20 he went to Paris and studied with the celebrated baritone, Melchissedec, returning to Gand, where he had his first opportunity—merely a casual one—to sing in this opera house. He was called to substitute the regular tenor, and immediately achieved success in the role of Jose in "Carmen." Up to the age of 29 he was a member of the great Belgian Opera House, the Theater of La Monnaic. Later he appeared at Covent Garden under the management of Higgins. He would have remained there if the war had not interfered with the Muses. Mr. Campanini heard him in 1914 and immediately engaged him for the Chicago Opera, and he would have remained there if not for the engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House. It will be indeed a pleasure to hear him at the operatic temple of Broadway, and there is no doubt in my mind that he will bring prestige to a house which sadly neglected the French element. We will have the opportunity to review his performances.

MACBETH FOR FESTIVALS

Florence Macbeth is likely to get little rest during the summer of 1920 because her managers, Messrs. Winton and Livingston, are finding that she is in great demand for summer festivals. "Now do take this one" they phoned her the other day, "the committee is so anxious to have you that the fee is of no consideration." "Very well," she said, "but I shall have to split my holidays in half." And three days later her managers rang up again, "very sorry, but the Festival Committee of Bowling Green, Ky., has heard you have promised to go to——— about the time they wanted you, and now won't take no for an answer." "Oh, well, if that's the case, then I must go. I must call it my holiday and have a few days there. And where is there a sweeter place than beautiful Kentucky to spend a holiday?" she added. The latest bookings are at Macon, Ga., and Bowling Green, Ky.

Mana Zucca's "Rachem" Meets With Great Favor

The popular American composer has been gratified lately with unusual success when her popular song "Rachem" was featured by prominent singers. On November 11 the soloist, who appeared at Detroit, Michigan, under the auspices of the Central Concert Company, featured the above song and met with tremendous favor. It had to be repeated. Note should be made that Marcel Charlier of the Chicago Opera Association was at the piano. Reports come from various parts of the country that this song has been and is still being featured by such singers as Cantor, Rosenblatt, Harriet McConnell, Stracciari and many others. It is also reported that this song is on the programs of the Continental Concert Halls, viz., France and England. Owing to so many favorable reports we are anxious to hear it in New York, when we hope to be able to analyze the qualities of this new composition.

Evelyn Scotney—G. M. Curci

Some months ago the once famous baritone, Victor Maurel, said that America possesses the most beautiful voices to be found anywhere. I am not sure whether he commented on our methods of singing, but at a rehearsal which took place at the Metropolitan he uttered, "That's one American girl who can sing." He referred to Evelyn Scotney, born in Australia but raised and trained in America. You have read the comments of the New York critics after her debut at the Metropolitan where she sang the Princess in a worthy revival of Halevy's "La Juive." Must a success be credited to the teacher? I believe it must. Gennaro Mario Curci, brother-in-law to the famous diva, is the actual vocal tutor of Evelyn Scotney. He worked zealously until he accomplished that which the singer exhibited at her debut. But not all her qualities were in evidence, because the role of Eudoxia is only a limited one. By the time this appears in print Evelyn Scotney may make another triumph. She is to appear as Lucia. We are anxious to hear her cadenzas, staccatos, and the whole chain of pyrotechnical work with which the coloratura roles are invested. We wait to see what sort of an actress Evelyn Scotney is. By her debut she gives promises of becoming a genuine star. The mad scene will tell it all. Gennaro Mario Curci is to be credited with her initial success. Her future triumph will be a triumph for the teacher also.

At the moment of writing this review, I am totally ignorant of the other critics' opinions about Josephine Lucchese's voice and method of singing, but one undeniable fact stands out, she has brilliant and substantial material, not for an ordinary career but for an unusual one. Her top notes are of a ringing nature. A powerful timbre she possesses, and a voice of unusual quality is another asset of hers. At her age of twenty-two she already exhibits an excellent technic for the production of vocal pyrotechnics needed in the interpretations of the coloratura roles. Miss Lucchese is a coloratura soprano with a personality which is bound to win her a great number of admirers. She is simple in manners, unaffected, and in gestures she reminds one of the carefree child. And her appearance and stage presence were such as to fully warrant the name which has been given her—"The singer of happiness."

She possesses the grace and spirit to interpret Mozart's "The Magic Flute," and no one enjoyed the aria more than the writer. "Come per me Sereno" needed just a little more life than this to make it a capital rendition. While the French diction in "Vieille Chanson" by Bizet and "Les Filles de Cadiz" by Delibes was clear, it needed better accent to make the two arias atmospheric. The program contained "Charmant Oiseau" from "Les Perles de Brezil" by David. "Nina" by Pergolesi was sung delightfully. "Nel Cor Piu non mi sento" followed by "La Pastorella" (Schubert) were given with voice quality which was distinctly the best of the season. Miss Lucchese will surely accomplish the unusual. J. M. Acuna did not give adequate support at the piano, but his poor performance did not affect the singer, who was on the key at all times. The balance of the program consisted of an aria from "The Two Princesses" (Caballero), "Tu" (Fuentes), "La Capinera" (Benedict), "When I Was Seventeen" (Swedish Song in English), "Solveig's Song" (Grieg), "Swiss Echo Song" (Eckert), "The Want of You" (Vanderpool), "The Owl" (Wells), "You, Dear, and I" (Clarke), "The Fairy Pipers" (Brewer), and "Happiness" (Branscombe). Miss Lucchese was enthusiastically applauded by a large audience. Coincident with Thanksgiving Eve, the stage was beautifully decorated with flowers plus the florals bestowed upon the singer.

Marie Sidenius Zendt

Marie Sidenius Zendt, who is now more of a New Yorker than a Chicagoan, is constantly busy filling engagements. Notwithstanding her brief sojourn she has already made herself felt in the musical circles of the metropolis. She sang for Rufus King Chapter, National Society, at Jamaica, Long Island, on November 22. After her appearance the Brooklyn Daily Eagle made the following comments:

"Madame Marie Sidenius Zendt of New York has a soprano voice of lyric quality and unusual range and power. She puts so much feeling and expression in her delivery."

On this occasion the soprano sang the popular Vanderpool song, "The Heart Call," "Berry Brown," by Ward Stephens; "Out in the Open," by Frank La Forge; besides others. While in New York the soprano has been singing at the First Science Church. Shortly the Victor Talking Machine will place on sale some records which were made lately. After December 1, she leaves for the Pacific Coast, where she is to appear with the Anphion Society at Seattle, Washington. Following this appearance of December 9, she will be heard at Charleston, December 12. She will return to Seattle on December 14. On December 16 she will appear at Port Angeles and finally on December 17 at Tacoma, Washington.

Owing to crowded material the reviews of the above singers will appear in a future issue. All three of the recitalists gave their vocal recitals at Aeolian Hall the week ending November 30.

J. Campbell-McJunes, English baritone, gave a successful recital at Aeolian Hall on Friday afternoon, November 28.

Benno Moiseiwitsch, Russian Pianist, Makes His American Debut at Carnegie

How the music lovers learned of his fame I do not know, but one thing was quite positive, a capacity house came to greet a new Russian pianist, new to Americans. The writer heard him in London a few years ago and he was at that time impressed with his pianistic gifts. After several years the pianist was reheard at his Carnegie Hall debut, on Saturday afternoon, November 29. I missed the "Chromatic Fantaisie, by Bach, but my neighbor informed me that his rendition was an interesting one. When I entered the Hall, Mr. Moiseiwitsch was at the piano and playing Liszt's "Sonata" in B minor. Then he was heard in Schumann's "Carneval," opus 9. Mr. Moiseiwitsch used so much speed that some of the short pieces were marred by the rapidity. Brahms was featured with "Intermezzo in A major" and "Variations" on a theme by Paganini. The execution of the latter composition established the pianist among the best of the younger set. His technic was a most perfect exhibition, the cadenzas were marvelous. He rendered the composition with brio and a lovely tone. It was a superb pianistic exposition and the audience gave him an unusual ovation. As a Chopin interpreter he may be ranked with the elect. He made the "Barcarolle" in F sharp a thing to be remembered. Mr. Moisewitsch is unaffected, no mannerisms, and unlike many of his Russian colleagues, he compels respect by his poise, dignity and musicianship. With such keyboard manipulators, Russia's right spirit is still alive. Very few pianists have received such a tremendous reception as this young musician of some twenty-seven summers. His touch is graceful, delicate; his tone is limpid and clear. Then, it puzzles me why his Schumann was not a "tour de force." The balance of the program consisted of Chopin's "Nocturne" in E major and "Fantasie." He is worth hearing.

Kronold Plays for the Irish Musical and Dramatic Society

The excellent cellist was one of the numerous soloists who appeared on Saturday evening, November 29, at a concert given by the above organization. He played fantasies on Irish airs. Others were on the program of this Aeolian concert, viz., Marie Narelle, soprano; Cora Remington, soprano; Valentina Crespi, violinist; Elsa Fischer String Quartet; Colin O'Moore, tenor; Mabel Beddoe, contralto, and Earle Tuckerman, baritone. The program was all Irish music.

Metropolitan Opera—"Boris Godounoff"

The second week of opera, which was quite normal in the presentations of debutants, was opened with a performance of Moussorgsky's opera before a fair audience. Collectively the performance was rather monotonous, but individually it gave much pleasure. It is almost inexorable to have a striking conductor in order to depict and bring out all the qualities of this Russian opera. There were three debutants in the cast. The most conspicuous of them all was the Belgian tenor, Octave Dua, who sang the part of Simpleton, interpreted in the past seasons by a German singer. Vocally the part does not offer much, but artistically it gave Mr. Dua the opportunity to exhibit his gifts for comedy and characteristic acting. On the latter he was beyond criticism. Madame Berat made her first appearance as the innkeeper, and as in the previous season with the Chicago Opera Association she gave opportunity for fine singing and adequate acting. Adeline Vosari is too light, vocally, to interpret the role of Xenia, but she was satisfactory in her interpretation. Otherwise the cast consisted of Didur, Rothier, Orville Harrold, De Segurola, the superb contralto Gabriella Besanzoni, in the part of Marina, and Mlle. Delaunois.

On Wednesday evening "L'Oracolo" and "Pagliacci" were presented. In the first, the cast consisted of Florence Easton, Jeanne Gordon, Orville Harrold, Didur, Scotti and others. In the last, Caruso, Amato, Muzio, Roberto Moranzoni conducted.

The Barber of Seville"

Charles Hackett added laurels to his reputation. He sang capitally the part of Almaviva and acted with elegance and much spirit. De Luca made his first appearance of the season as Figaro and as in the past seasons his artistry was a delight. He sang and acted with brio. Mardone's glorious basso voice made "Don Basile" a living portrait in voice, makeup and action. Save for some exaggerated bits of comedy, Malatesta as Don Bartolo enlivened a performance which was notable as far as the cast was concerned. Mme. Berat as the old maid also brought a fresh and ringing voice. The orchestra score was also enjoyed.

Schumann-Heink — Mme. Schumann-Heink's tour is attaining a success extraordinary for even this mightily popular woman. The necessity of seating 400 persons of the overflow audience on the stage of the big Murat Theater in Indianapolis is only one example of this. In many places Mme. Schumann-Heink and her accompanist, Frank La Forge, have been asked to remain till the next day and repeat the performance, as the house could be sold out a second time. Mme. Schumann-Heink will interrupt her tour for a mid-season vacation at her home in San Francisco, where she will spend the holidays with the grandchildren she recently rescued from Germany. She will take up her tour again in San Francisco January 4.

Sturkow-Ryder—At the Sturkow-Ryder studios on last Saturday afternoon very interesting piano playing was done by Janet Friday, Roy Bergquist, Nellie Gordon and Sabina Soffer, and there was a fine group of songs by Brunette Walter, and a piano and violin sonata (Sjogren), by Mme. Sturkow-Ryder and Mme. Anne Hathaway.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.

Ann Arbor's musical activities, which naturally center about the University School of Music and the University of Michigan, have been most auspicious this year, since the exceedingly large attendance in both institutions made up of students coming from practically every state in the Union and many foreign countries, has necessitated the expansion of the work in music to a considerable extent. In order to provide opportunities for hearing a wealth of good music as well as facilities for securing the best instruction in all lines of music, many concerts are given each year.

In the Choral Union Series, two splendid numbers have been heard. On October 18, Geraldine Farrar, assisted by Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Rosita Renard, pianist, appeared before an audience of over five thousand, which taxed the capacity of Hill Auditorium. They offered a miscellaneous program of songs and arias, with sparkling piano compositions as follows: "Adelaide" (Beethoven), Mr. Arthur Hackett; Etude No. 5, Op. 10, Nocturne (Chopin), Toccata (Saint-Saens), Miss Rosita Renard; "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair" (Haydn), "In the Meadow" (Rubinstein), "Legend" (Tschaikowsky), "In the Silent Night" (Rachmaninoff), "The Snowdrop" (Gretchaninoff), "Mandoline (Gabriel Faure), "Nocturne" (Cesar Franck), "Dansons la Gigue" (Poldowski), Mr. Arthur Hackett; "Marriage des Roses" (Franck), "Au Printemps" (Gounod), "Si J'etais Jardinier" (Chaminade), "Ouvre Tes Yeux Bleus" (Massenet), Miss Geraldine Farrar; Etude de Concert (Liszt), "Blue Danube Waltz" (Strauss-Schulz-Evler), Miss Rosita Renard; "Dream Tryst" (Cadman), "Fair House of Joy" (Quilter), "Sea Lyric" (George C. Vieh), "O Cool Is the Valley Now" (Louis Koemmenich), "The Eagle" (Emil J. Polak), Mr. Arthur Hackett; Aria, "Un Bel Di" ("Madama Butterfly") (Puccini), Miss Geraldine Farrar. All of the artists were splendidly received and they were obliged to respond to many recalls. Piano accompaniments were ably played by Claude Gotthelf.

On November 17, the Detroit Symphony Orchestra of ninety men under the baton of Ossip Gabrilowitsch, with Mrs. George B. Rhead, of the faculty of the School of Music, appeared in the following program: Overture to "Oberon" (Weber); Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, in A Minor, Op. 16 (Grieg), Allegro Moderato, Adagio, Allegro Marcato; Andante Cantabile, Valse; Allegro Moderato, Finale; Andante Maestoso. At this, the orchestra's Ann Arbor debut, a profound impression was made. Mr. Gabrilowitsch, who has been heard here many times as a pianist, is a prime favorite and he won an ovation as a conductor.

On November 6 an extra concert was given by Alessandro Bonci, assisted by Eleanor Brock, soprano, with Unberto Martucci at the piano. In spite of the fact that Mr. Bonci was suffering from a bad cold, he gave a good account of himself and delighted a large audience, many of whom had heard him in Ann Arbor six years ago. Miss Brock proved to be an interesting singer. The following program was provided: "Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre," "Care Selve (Handel), "Lo! Here the Gentle Lark" (Bishop) Miss Eleanor Brock; "Pallide Memmole" (Trimarchi), "Il Pastore Canta" (Recli), "Ninna Nanna" (Ravasenga), "La Promessa" (Rossini), Alessandro Bonci; "Theme and Variations" (Prock), Miss Eleanor Brock; duet, "A Parigi ne Andrem," from "Manon" (Massenet), Miss Brock and Mr. Bonci; Aria, "Mio bianco amor," from "Dejanice" (Catalani), Mr. Bonci; Aria, "Qui la Voce," from "I Puritani" (Bellini), Miss Brock; "Menteuse Cherie" (Massenet), "Mignonne" (Bruneaux), "Wheels the Silver Swallow" (H. V. Mulligan), "To a Hill Top" (Ralph Cox), Mr. Bonci; duet, "Chiedi all 'aura lusinghiere," from "Elisir d'Amore" (Donizetti), Miss Brock and Mr. Bonci.

Three concerts have also been given in the Faculty Concert Series held Sunday afternoons in Hill Auditorium. The first on October 26, when Albert Lockwood, pianist, Samuel P. Lockwood, violinist, William Wheeler, tenor, with accompaniments by Miss Maude Okkelberg and Dorothy Wines, appeared in a miscellaneous program as follows: "Ask If Yon Damask Rose Be Sweet" from "Susanne," "Oh Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me?" from "Semele," "Let Me Wander Not Unseen," from "L'Allegro" (Haendel), Mr. William Wheeler; Sonata, E Minor (Veracini), Largo, Allegro con fuoco; Menuette and Gavotte (Giga), Mr. Samuel Pierson Lockwood, from the Song Cycle, "The Fair Magelone" (Brahms), "None Has Ever Mourned His Fate," "Are They Sorrow, Are They Pleasure?" "'Twas For The My Lips Were Burning," "Rest Thee, My Lady," "How Free and Fresh My Heart," Mr. William Wheeler; "Sonnet of Petrarch" (Liszt), Pastoral (Corelli-Godowsky), "Islaney," Oriental Fantasie (Balakireff), Albert Lockwood; Folk-Songs of the Hebrides Islands, arranged by Marjory Kennedy-Fraser, "Kishmul's Galley," "The Sea-Gull of the Land-Under-Waves," "Hame oor Bottachen," "Hame Cam' He," "Milking Croon," "Pirate's Song," Mr. William Wheeler.

On November 9 an interesting program in which Mr. William Wheeler again appeared as soloist was as follows: Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" (Nicolai), "Onaway, Awake, Beloved," from "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," (Coleridge-Taylor), Symphony, D Major (No. 2 of the old B. & H.) (Haydn) Adagio-Allegro; Andante; Menuetto (allegro); Allegro, spiritoso.

On November 16 a program of band music and audience singing with an interesting group of solos by James Hamilton, tenor, was provided. The University Band consists of about seventy-five players under the direction of Wilfred Wilson and ranks exceedingly high as an amateur organization, and on this occasion it demonstrated considerable ability as a concert band. Russel Carter, who led the audience singing, is new to Ann Arbor, and on this, his first public appearance, he demonstrated his ability as a leader. In his group of songs, Mr. Hamilton, an Ann Arbor favorite, made a decidedly satisfactory impression. The program was as follows: March, "Gallant Zouaves" (King), Overture, "Lustspeil" (Keler-Bela), Lullaby, "The Sleeping Beauty" (Tobani), University Band; "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" (Steffe), "The Great Red Dawn" (Sharpe), "Old Black Joe (Foster), "Love's Old Sweet Song" (Molloy), audience; "Sweet Little Woman O' Mine" (Bartlett), "Uncle Rome" (Homer), "Then You'll Remember Me"

In addition to the regular musical activities of the year, a number of student musical organizations flourish in Ann Arbor this year on account of the wealth of excellent material assembled, due to the exceedingly large attendance which has made it possible to bring these organizations to a very high standard. Capt. Wilfred Wilson and his Varsity Band, in addition to participating in outdoor student activities, will be heard a number of times during the year in concert. The University Glee Club, made up of about one hundred men's picked voices, under the direction of Russel Carter, contemplate in addition to a series of concerts in Ann Arbor, performances in other cities in the middle west as well as a brief journey to the Pacific Coast. The Varsity Girls' Glee Club, under the leadership of Miss Nora Hunt, is similarly organized. The Michigan Mandolin Club is led by Frank Taber, who also directs the Freshmen Glee Club. The Girls' Glee Club of the University School of Music is led by Miss Maude Charlotte Kleyn. A. R.

Refinement of Tone and Delicacy of Touch

Are the Distinguishing Features of the

Baldwin Piano

IT is these features that lend confidence to an artist when playing a recital. Nothing is so inspiring to even the amateur as the sympathetic tone and the wonderfully responsive action of the Baldwin.

THE CHICAGO TRIUMPH OF

LEO ORNSTEIN

Leo Ornstein appeared for the first time as soloist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, playing MacDowell's D minor Concerto, Nov. 21 and 22, Frederick Stock conducting, and received FROM BOTH AUDIENCES "many recalls after each movement of the Concerto, and at its conclusion there was frantic applause."

From the press—unanimous praise!

Culled from the comments of the Chicago Evening Post (Mr. Hackett):

"He gave a brilliant reading of the Concerto . . . he demonstrated yesterday that he has a thorough grounding in the music of the older school . . . he gave a broad, vigorous interpretation."

The Chicago Daily Tribune (Mr. Hubbard):
"He played with genuine feeling and with admirable musical intelligence and taste."

The Herald-Examiner (Miss Weber):
"The second special thrill of the afternoon came with Leo Ornstein's brilliant playing of a MacDowell Concerto. This young genius, about whom so much has been written because of his startling contribution to modernism in music, both as performer and composer, is rhythm personified. His swing was fairly contagious, so that there was a unanimity of musical expression between him and the orchestra that is seldom accomplished, and it won for him instant recognition."

The Chicago American (Mr. Devries):
"Never has MacDowell's Concerto so pleased me, because never have I heard it played with such skill as by Mr. Leo Ornstein yesterday.

"The young soloist is one of the big men of the pianoforte. He gives his tone elegance, warmth and at times exceptional beauty.

"Especially is this evident in his pianissimo, which is of haunting delicacy and loveliness. His dynamics are never hard. The man never pounds. He plays.

"Mr. Ornstein's technic is a delight in its surety. His attacks are vigorous but always well pondered. Never does one lose sight of the personality of the young pianist, for it colors every phrase. It 'makes' his playing. Of course his success was complete and spontaneous, and the many demands for his bows were very justly earned."

The Daily News (Mr. Rosenfeld):
"Aeroplane speed and lightning brilliance combined to make Leo Ornstein's piano playing at Orchestra Hall yesterday afternoon something out of the ordinary in the matter of the soloists who appear during the season with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

"His selection for the afternoon was the better of the two piano concertos, the second, in D minor, by Edward MacDowell, the American composer, and not since Carreno performed it here has it had such a thrilling, astoundingly propulsive rendition as that which Ornstein gave it.

"The young American pianist—he might well be called that, for most of his life has been spent in this country—chose well in selecting this, one of the most typical of American compositions, for no piano concerto in our literature so aptly and so completely represents the American spirit as does this piece.

"Ornstein is a very gifted young pianist who has caught the intentions of the composer completely and has just the right temperament, the remarkable technical command and the rapid digital fleetness for its proper interpretation. The presto was played with such sure and steady rhythm that it fairly throbbed with life and motion and sounded as though it were played in a more deliberate tempo than that indicated. On the other hand, the allegro molto, which followed, was taken at a terrific speed, driving all [illegible] it with its impetuosity. There were [illegible] its of sustained musical beauty also, a[illegible]ne contrasting slower sections, in which some fine tonal weaving was brought out.

"The entire effect of his playing was gripping and he was given enthusiastic applause and frequently recalled. The orchestra under Mr. Stock gave him excellent support."

Who Scored a Phenomenal Success as the Duke in "Rigoletto"

Orville Harrold

Makes Impressive Debut at the Metropolitan as "LEOPOLD"

In a Memorable Revival of "La Juive" on Saturday Matinee, November 22

Following Are the Press Comments:

"It was a pleasure to welcome Orville Harrold as Leopold, a difficult role, even when robbed of its particular jewel, the 'Serenade.'" —Pitts Sanborn, New York Globe, November 24.

"Remarkably good was Orville Harrold. The scene with Rachel in the second act gave him an opportunity to reveal impressively the full and mellow resonance of his voice. He obviously won the undivided admiration of his auditors. He is undoubtedly a valuable addition to Signor Gatti Casazza's Company."—Max Smith, New York American, November 23.

"Orville Harrold's voice furnished a pleasant surprise to those who had been led to believe that this fine voice has lost much, if not all, of its pristine sweetness, strength and fresh vigor. Those who have heard his occasional efforts in minor vocal enterprises during the few past years joined enthusiastically in the general applause which rewarded his singing of the 'Duet' with Rachel, and at the conclusion of the performance there was a unanimous desire on the part of the crowd to make quite a demonstration over the indubitable fact that the tenor, Harrold, had not only 'come back' but has come back 'to stay.'"—John Raftery, Morning Telegraph, November 23.

"His pronunciation of French was unusually correct. There were in Mr. Harrold's impersonation qualities so excellent as to make him a promising factor of the company."—Richard Aldrich, New York Times, November 23.

"Orville Harrold reflected credit upon himself. He sang brilliantly in the moments of climax and acted his part admirably."—Paul Morris, New York Herald, November 23.

"Orville Harrold sang and acted with splendid fervor. In diction and in style he seemed, indeed, as if born in the French school."—New York Tribune, November 23.

"He sang effectively. Mr. Harrold made an excellent impression."—James Gibbons Huneker, New York World, November 23.

"Orville Harrold, whose tenor voice is flexible, capable of wide expression and emotional fervor, sings French with a perfection that few Americans achieve."—Katherine Lane, New York Evening Mail, November 24.

Jeanne Gordon

MEZZO-SOPRANO

in a triumphant debut at the Metropolitan Opera House as Azucena in "Il Trovatore" on Saturday Evening, Nov. 22.

Following are the Unusual Press Notices

JEANNE GORDON

"One of the emphatic successes of the season's first week at the Metropolitan Opera House was the debut on Saturday night of Miss Jeanne Gordon. This young contralto made a great effect on the crowded house by the beauty of her voice in the difficult role of 'Azucena.' "—Pitts Sanborn, New York Globe, Nov. 24.)

MISS GORDON A SURPRISE

"The feature of the performance was the debut of Jeanne Gordon, contralto. Miss Gordon was a delightful surprise. Her voice is a beautiful organ and the audience was not at all backward in recognizing her art and talent. She is welcome to the local operatic ranks."—(James Gibbons Huneker, New York World, Nov. 23.)

NEW CONTRALTO WINS GENUINE TRIUMPH IN METROPOLITAN DEBUT

"A new contralto appeared last night at the Metropolitan Opera House, and before she had sung a dozen bars the huge audience realized that a new artist of the first magnitude was among us. Miss Gordon sang 'Azucena' in 'Il Trovatore' last night, and her triumph was instantaneous. Her voice is one of the most remarkable organs the Metropolitan has heard in many years, a voice of extraordinary range and a uniformity of timbre, of ample power, warm, rich and firm in texture. It is perhaps rather a mezzo-soprano than a true contralto, yet the lower register is none the less of almost equal beauty. She produces her tones with unusual ease and fluency. After the second act Miss Gordon was greeted with tumultuous applause, mingled with cheers."—New York Tribune, Nov. 23.)

CHURCH CONTRALTO IN YEAR BECOMES OPERATIC "FIND"

"Miss Gordon is a real operatic 'find'; she is possessed of a voice of unusual beauty, strength and range, sings with that freedom which the operatic star requires and she has the ability of a histrionic character. She was heard as 'Azucena', which she interpreted creditably while she sang it brilliantly. Her success with a sold out house was deservedly great. She is a valuable addition to the contralto section of the Metropolitan."—(Paul Morris, New York Herald, Nov. 23.)

ANOTHER CONTRALTO DEBUT

"She has a full, mellow, contralto voice which she uses with that delicate balance between a free outpouring and artistic restraint which not all singers possess."—(Katharine Lane, New York Mail, Nov. 24.)

AS HUA QUE IN "L'ORACOLO"

"Miss Jeanne Gordon confirmed the remarkably favorable impression she made on Saturday night as 'Azucena'; a voice of beautiful quality presented to good advantage and an intelligent participation in the action, on the whole, an unusually promising accession to the company."—(Richard Aldrich, The New York Times, Nov. 27.)

Vol. 11 Chicago, December 12, 1919 No. 50

Editorial

PASSING COMMENT

And the very best of "The Triptych" was at the very end! For on Saturday afternoon last, at the Auditorium, after we had listened to forty-five minutes of uproarious comedy (Gianni Schicchi) in Italian, which we could only understand through previous reading of the libretto or because of the excellent pantomime and vocal inflection of the singers, Carlo Galeffi stepped to the footlights and in English (IN ENGLISH, YOU UNDERSTAND) recited for us the clever and witty "tag" which Puccini had placed in his opera.

And it was good English, too, and we thoroughly enjoyed it.

And we wished for more of it. Bravo, Mr. Galeffi, and thanks.

. . . . . .

If we may offer a word of advice to certain young men violinists of Chicago, it would be this: Stop imitating the bodily contortions, the knee bendings, the writhings on the stage of certain "phenomenal boy violinists" who have come to us from abroad to show us how, and look instead at the stanch uprightness, the military repose of Albert Spalding when he is on the platform.

The latter attitude is much the more attractive and will get you just as far, provided you can really play.

. . . . . .

Conditions in Chicago have been very bad the past fortnight and, as usual, the musicians have had the hardest burdens to bear.

What with cold studios, limited light, bad transportation and what not, chaos has reigned in the music world.

It has been exceeding difficult to do reportorial or editorial work on Music News, for instance, and if you notice a difference, blame conditions.

. . . . . .

One of the finest news items of the week has been that noting the action of a certain Chicago hotel in voluntarily lowering its prices, in face of the universal tendency to raise them.

As we have said before, the vicious chain of circumstances now binding us is made up of alternate links. First, increased cost of living and then increased cost of labor, and this carried on indefinitely will inevitably result in dire disaster.

Somebody, somewhere, must break the chain.

Music News has advised musicians not to increase rates of lessons or of appearances, for the step is but another link in the slavish chain which binds us all.

. . . . . .

Not alone those who are interested in opera as such but also everyone in Chicago who is interested in music in any way, is intensely concerned and very sympathetic toward Mr. Campanini in his serious illness.

All of musical Chicago sends greetings to him and earnestly hopes for his speedy recovery.

Two corrections are necessary. In the article on page 8 of last week's Music News the article headed "Two Recitals by Jacob Moerschel Pupils" should have the addition "In Milwaukee."

The article on the Auditorium Conservatory on page 12 should have contained the name of Anna Weske, pianist, who was also one of the artists appearing at the Hospital Concert.

. . . . . .

W. L. Hubbard, in The Tribune, is not afraid to ask for opera in English. His editorial of a week ago Sunday was masterly and it is already bearing fruit.

Music News also will leave no stone unturned to accomplish this desirable end, for only when opera is given in English will American singers have an equal chance with the foreigners, and they must have that chance.

. . . . . .

The following quotation from Musical America is timely:

"It is a graceless and unprofitable task to hazard an artistic estimate of the opera season from the beguiling advance notices issued in the early fall. Invariably there is a great discrepancy between the cheerful promise and its eventful fulfillment. Last winter, for instance, was prefaced by all manner of benign auguries. Yet there has been no less interesting season in years, and in this respect the Chicago company was at one with the Metropolitan. Things this autumn wear a better look, which may mean little or much. Some measure of consolation may be gleaned from the fact that if the coming season is not artistically more compensative than the previous one it can hardly be less so."

. . . . . .

From an interview with Frank La Forge in Musical America we quote:

"My principle is that all accompaniments should be 'worked out' just as thoroughly as piano pieces are, and not merely 'read off'; that the duty of the player is not merely to keep with the singer, but to play his music as an integral part of the song. In many numbers the greatest part of the composition, musically speaking, is entrusted to the piano."

. . . . . .

The following contribution from Eleanor Everest Freer gives timely explanation on a very important subject:

"It seems axiomatic to say that the future of France depends not only on the courage, energy and health of the present generation, but also on the health and strength of her children. We are so cognizant of this fact at home that it is astonishing how apt we are to forget the tremendous needs in our sister republic today and for years to come. The Paris-Chicago Hospital is to open its doors to all who suffer. We need not, necessarily, wait until a whole and magnificent modern hospital be built, but can put up one small building or department at a time, and ultimately have, perhaps, in this way the more perfect hospital. A most necessary unit is a department for facial, dental and plastic surgery. If the late Dr. Morestan performed 12,000 facial

"We are never beaten, father," says Gina in "Eyes of Youth" at The Playhouse, "until we think we are."

operations during this great war, it is but evident how much there is still to be done. We could start each separate department with $25,000 and it seems as though we ought to have one or more immediately. We have all been interested in national enterprises, but the citizens of Chicago and Illinois should be, primarily, interested in this gift, which is essentially one from Illinois to France. Internal medicine, facial and plastic surgery, departments for women and children, and one for general surgery, can be suggested as the most necessary departments at the start.

"The musicians of Illinois should also join in endowing a bed for musical students from our city and state studying in Paris. One thousand dollars names a bed. Six thousand dollars endows a bed.

"I am indebted to everyone who has assisted in any way in this plan, feeling that, later, one and all will take a pride in Illinois' representation through such a needed and philanthropic gift. Our debt to France can hardly be paid, but we can show our gratitude, appreciation and sympathy in this gift.

SCHOOL MUSIC—TOP-NOTCH HOSPITALITY

Our suburban neighbors to the south are worth knowing. The schools in the villages along the Illinois Central are delightful to visit. Those who are acquainted with school life realize that there is a distinct schoolroom atmosphere. Just as surely as an individual creates a certain atmosphere about him, so each school has its peculiar atmosphere. It is not wholly the teacher who creates that indescribable something which makes for the comfort or misery of all. Each child is actually helping to form it. The attitude of a teacher toward his pupils begets confidence or suspicion, good fellowship, co-operation and similar qualities.

In one of the one-building school systems in which I recently had the good fortune to be a guest, the atmosphere savored of unusual good will. The principal was in charge of the room containing the grammar grades. The building contained just three rooms, three teachers and a fine group of students, who from the tiniest tot to the most overgrown, awkward boy in the eighth grade had the "homey" feeling which put everyone into the finest working trim.

Our large city schools, packed to overflowing, lose much of this air of being at ease which our more fortunate smaller institutions enjoy. One felt in this school that feeling of freedom, without in the least destroying the eagerness to achieve and true application to the work in hand. Were it not for the modesty of the corps of teachers, I should like to make known its identity, but since they gave me a most cordial invitation to return as often as I could find time, I shall refrain.

Their eagerness for information and suggestions upon school music problems made me feel as though I were of some use in the world. They were carrying on this subject to the best of their ability and, in the main, with excellent results.

"The way to a man's heart is through his stomach," so the saying goes, but I guess that applies equally well to a woman's heart, for when I found there was no eating place in town for a noon lunch, one teacher who was going home for lunch kindly invited me to go with her. The nearness of my train time made that impossible, when lo! to my surprise and joy a generous lunchbox was opened by another teacher, who most hospitably shared her lunch with me. The principal came in too and ate with us, sharing his as well, and such a delightful chat we had that noon! Why can't we all be more human? In my visits I have found schools that contrasted very strongly with this one which showed such ideal hospitality.

CONTRALTO

Makes Brilliant Debut at Aeolian Hall

On Thanksgiving Evening

Following Are the Press Comments

The soloist disclosed a fine, natural contralto voice, which she uses with much intelligence. Miss McConnell's dramatic instinct and her power of expressing the emotions are well developed and they lent variety, color and charm to her concert. A large audience enjoyed her singing.—The World, November 28.

For her recital she had chosen a program of interesting variety, which displayed her voice, with its unusual range and lively dramatic expression, to excellent advantage.—New York Herald, November 28.

Miss McConnell is an experienced singer, with a powerful voice.—New York Evening Journal, November 28.

Her voice has already wide range and a rich middle register, as well as considerable variety of style.—New York Times, November 28.

Her voice is a real contralto of depth and power. Naturally she is best equipped for the dramatic style, though her art in some of the pure lyrics was most grateful. Miss McConnell's superlative interpretative sense was convincingly shown.—New York Evening Mail, November 28.

The strength and bigness of her voice are already rounded to an infusing warmth. There is plenty of temperament behind the instrument, too, of that robust sort which is to be expected but is not always found in a contralto.—New York Evening Sun, November 28.

At the Aeolian Hall in the evening Harriet McConnell achieved artistic success which deserves more than passing comments. This richly gifted young artist is possessed of one of the noblest young vocal instruments disclosed in recital here for a long time, and her method of tone production, her utterly easy and yet potent manner of singing won for her a richly deserved success with her audience. Here is an artist who, for all of her opulent native gifts of voice and temperament, has left nothing to chance in either the schooling of her instrument or in the accuracy and naturalness of its utterance. Her diction is extremely clear, and she has the delightful elasticity so much striven for and so seldom attained by contraltos. A wonderfully diversified program kept the audience fascinated, and the charming personality of the singer, her unaffected joy in song and her ways upon the stage completed the enjoyment of her hearers as well as the consummate success of her recital.—New York Morning Telegraph, November 28.

Her voice, luscious and powerful, has a dramatic force.—New York Tribune, November 28.

Good Pianos are made slowly

It takes a long time to build a really good piano. Pianos which are hastily constructed are usually poorly constructed.

Every Cable-made Piano is many months in the making. After the wood has been thoroughly seasoned, expert workmen form and shape the piano—slowly, painstakingly, exactly. Then expert tone builders begin their careful work.

The result—an instrument of supreme beauty—one which will give you for a lifetime a full measure of satisfaction.

DEARBORN SCHOOL OPERA EVENINGS

A series of interesting events was successfully begun on Wednesday evening by the Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts, of which Richard De Young is an intense motive power. They are called "Opera Evenings" and consist of a lecture and vocal illustration which covers the plot and detail of the score and reproduction of certain scenes with correct costume and surroundings. A very large audience enjoyed the first one and showered Mr. De Young and his associates with applause and commending words.

Miss Florence Cathcort unfolded Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" with an admirable brevity which yet noted many small details of motif and orchestration. She had so well absorbed the atmosphere that she transferred it, which leaves nothing more to be said.

Ethel Geistweit Benedict sang the allotments of Chio-Cho-San and Esther Muensterman was Susuki. Together they made capital ensemble and were surprisingly effective in their limited environment. Mrs. Benedict in particular threw herself at once into the music's moods, singing the score with ample volume and contrasting tenderness. The lovely flower duet had the best sort of attention also and a distinct success is the tribute to be offered all who participated or were concerned.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

EDISON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

In its program of December 4 the Edison Orchestra revealed its usual ability to make the lighter orchestral music pleasing to the ear. One or two of the more classical variety were also done with facility and thought. The Introduction and Prayer from "Rienzi" had evidenty been well studied and the ensemble was good. The cello solo in this number was especially well done. Mr. Eastman was evidently in a mood for gratifying the people, for he supplied them with numerous encores of the popular variety, as well as inserting one or two "take-offs" in the same style on the program proper. The house was very well filled and the audience enthusiastic.

Elsa Kressman, who sang the Gounod aria "La Reine de Saba," made an excellent impression. Her voice is vibrant and dramatic and her reading musicianly from every other standpoint.

She was accompanied by Miss Grace Grove, whose work is always characterized by the sympathetic and the artistic.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Votichenko—Sasha Votichenko, who has been on tour with the Russian Symphony Orchestra, has just returned to New York and will shortly announce his next public recital. Mr. Votichenko's instrument was welcomed as a great novelty by those who had never had the opportunity to hear the tympanon before, and his original compositions received many favorable comments from the press.

LYCEUM ARTS CONSERVATORY

A trio of good teachers at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory combined last Tuesday night to give a pupils' recital, and it proved to be a program of interest and sufficient contrast. Seven pupils of Edward Clarke appeared in song groups and with voices of distinctly different timbre gave proof each in his own way of the wisdom and sanity of the teaching he had received. The voices of Roy Hess, Bernice St. John and Katheryn Foster were all characterized by ease and freedom of tone production, and the diction was to be praised in every instance.

EDWARD CLARKE

Velma Tike, a pupil of Rachel Steinman Clarke, assisted in two violin solos and some obligatos, and revealed good tone and sincerity of purpose, with a steadily growing technic, though her intonation was not all that could be desired.

Miss Agnes Bogardus, from the Jeanne Boyd Studio, gave an interesting reading of the Rameau-Godowsky "Tambourin," preceded by a well-planned preliminary explanation. Her playing was clean technically and well considered in the matter of phrasing and dynamic effects.

BETHANY REFORMED CHURCH

A church with one of the most successful nonprofessional choirs in the city is Bethany Reformed Church of Roseland, where Miss Renzina Teninga is organist and director of music. A most delightful Thanksgiving service was given there on November 30, in which the most important item was Maunder's grateful cantata, "Song of Thanksgiving." This is a choral work which is especially well adapted for occasions just such as this. It is not too long nor too difficult, is vigorous in its rhythms and suavely melodious, and it was very happily rendered.

There were a number of other solo and quartet selections, of which one of the most notable was Richard De Young's rendition of "Thus Saith the Lord."

Miss Teninga proved at all times the versatile organist and the intelligent accompanist. MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

The Playhouse—One evening last week the remarkable "Eyes of Youth," which, as a play, had a great vogue at the Princess Theater last year, was seen in pictures with Clara Kimball Young (eyes and all) in the leading role. There was a wonderfully effective, spoken prelude, and the orchestra did good accompanying. A pronouncedly fine feature at the Playhouse is the unusually skillful artistic organ playing of Mildred Fitzpatrick, who, at this time, as always, showed the most unerring individuality and effectiveness and an uncanny feeling for the spirit and the intent of the picture.

Langston—Madame Marie Stone Langston, well-know Philadelphia contralto, reports extraordinary success with Arthur A. Penn's song, "Smilin' Through." When it is programmed it always brings an encore; when she uses it for an encore, it brings a second. Madame Langston's rich voice is just suited to the quality of this.

Values—The popular Vanderpool song "Values" had a place on the program of the Chicago Musical College concert last Saturday morning.

THIRD WEEK OF OPERA

Marinuzzi Proves to Be a Remarkable Conductor — Galeffi a Sensation in "Rigoletto" — Morgana Scores in "Carmen"—Schipa Discloses a Wonderful Voice—The Puccini Trilogy a Success—Cyrena Van Gordon, Louise Harrison Slade, Mina Hager and Other American Singers Make Excellent Impressions—Johnson and Herbert Again Please—"Carmen" and "The Juggler" Given with Mary Garden—Repetitions of "La Nave" and "La Boheme"—Galli-Curci Makes First Appearance and Is Royally Welcomed.

"La Nave"

The third week opened with a repetition of "La Nave," which was heard by a large audience and vastly appreciated.

Each set of season ticket holders will want to hear and see this magnificent production and each should have opportunity.

Again did Arthur Boardman sing his part excellently and again proved his own talent and worth as well as the fidelity and skill of his teacher, Mr. Borroff.

FLORENCE MACBETH
American coloratura soprano who will sing important roles during the season

"Juggler of Notre Dame"

On Tuesday evening the only performance for the season of "The Juggler" was given. At least it was announced as "the only," but if the public at large read Mr W. L. Hubbard's review in The Tribune on Wednesday at all attentively there will be such a demand for another performance as will make it almost a necessity.

The Juggler, as said in Music News many times, is Mary Garden's best part, and really a wonderful thing.

Dufranne was superb also. The Intermezzo was played wonderfully well by Mr. Charlier and the performance as a whole was a delight.

"La Boheme" and "Boudour"

The double bill again attracted a numerous audience and again was there sincere appreciation and applause for the work of Evelyn Herbert in "La Boheme."

The repetition of "Boudour" disclosed again the gorgeous effectiveness of the Auditorium production, and on a second hearing the value of the music seemed greatly enhanced.

"Rigoletto"

A night of debuts and ovations was last Thursday, when Galli-Curci made a reappearance in one of her favorite roles, Tito Schipa made a sensation at his first appearance, Galeffi scored heavily as the Jester, and Gino Marinuzzi, as conductor, made a most pronouncedly favorable impression, one indeed which presages that he will become a supreme favorite with this public.

GINO MARINUZZI
The brilliant new conductor of the Chicago Opera Association

Mme. Galli-Curci was in delectable form and again thrilled the audience, especially in "Caro Nome," in which, truly, she seemed to sing better than ever before and which, perforce, she had to repeat in spite of the program admonition of "no encores."

Tito Schipa, awaited with interest, stepped on the stage and immediately charmed all who saw him with the grace of his appearance and acting, and so soon as he had sung he swept the audience as by a whirlwind.

His voice is full and powerful and yet is dominated by an utter beauty and sweetness.

His musicianship is abundant and his artistry beyond any adjectives to magnify.

It is easy to predict that this attractive young tenor will become one of the very greatest favorites ever known in the Chicago company.

With such consummate artists as Galli-Curci, Schipa and Galeffi in the ensemble, it seemed a great pity to have the famous Quartet marred as it was by the coarse, unmannerly and altogether disagreeable singing of the Maddalena of the cast.

Edouard Cotreul made a most auspicious debut as Sparafucile, showing both voice and brains. Nicolay made a dignified Monterone, Trevisan a good Ceprono and Beryl Brown a lovely Countess.

Chicago has seen and heard many Rigolettos and some of them have been excellent indeed, but never have we had a finer singer of the part than Carlo Galeffi, or one who understands its dramatic import better than he.

His makeup was unusual; his action superb and his singing of the long and imposing score at a point of artistic and vocal perfection.

There was new scenery, a splendid chorus, fair ballet and good stage management throughout.

LOUISE HARRISON SLADE
Chicago contralto, who made a very successful debut in "Sister Angelica"

The orchestra, under Marinuzzi, made something new and very wonderful out of the Verdi score and, as said above, the dominant Rigoletto was admirable and in most respects far superior to most of his predecessors.

The Puccini "Triptych"

So many individual successes were made last Saturday afternoon and there was such a wealth of novelty and merit on exhibition that it is difficult in short space to do more than baldly chronicle actualities.

The occasion was the first Chicago performance of the three short operas by Puccini, and the casts were as fine as the splendid roster of the Chicago Opera Company affords. Merely as productions, very little was left to be desired except in the case of the first of the three, which had scenery which very indifferently portrayed the idea set forth in the libretto.

There was an enormous audience and unbounded enthusiasm, a great per cent of this being again for the conductor, Gino Marinuzzi, who has certainly caught the fancy of musical Chicago.

The music of the three operas leaves a

CARLO GALEFFI
Who scored a great success as Rigoletto

vague impression on one hearing. Certainly it is not so melodiously beautiful as "Tosca," "La Boheme" or "Butterfly," but it is strictly in accord with the modern idea of fitness as between words and music and is thoroughly logical as well as effective.

On a first hearing "Sister Angelica" seems the best music of the three.

The stories are varied and fascinating. In "The Cloak" we have a new variant of the young man who indiscreetly loves the wife of an older one and comes to grief through a mix-up in signals.

In "Sister Angelica" we have a heart-rending picture of mother love deprived of its object, even though the mother is a nun and the child a nameless one.

The last is a rollicking farce built around a very gruesome subject, nothing less in short than the masquerading as a dead man in his very bed of one who thus plans an elaborate scheme of fraud.

In "The Cloak" the three principals were played by Galeffi, Jardon and Edward Johnson, all being good histrionically, the last named being also gorgeous vocally.

In "Sister Angelica" Rosa Raisa has a part well suited to her and opportunity is

TAMAKI MIURA

Cyrena Van Gordon's stateliness and glorious voice fitted the part of the Princess admirably and Louise Harrison Slade, who made her operatic debut at this time, scored a pronounced success both on account of her decided gift for acting and because of the beautiful voice which has so often charmed in church and concert and which now finds congenial employment in opera.

Unquestionably Mrs. Slade has proven her right to place on Auditorium stage and her future growth will be awaited with intense interest by all of musical Chicago.

Another Chicago singer who made her debut at this time was Mina Hager, whose fine voice and excellent style have long been known to a wide circle of admirers.

Esther Walker also did a colorful bit exceedingly well, and Emma Noe, as is her habit in all her parts, scored success in the part assigned her in the elaborate mosaic of this opera.

In "Gianni Schicchi" Mr. Galeffi disclosed new gifts and graces and in the large group of relatives "sorrowing" for the dead man there was found colorful and effective employment for all the comedians of the company.

In this motley crowd, however, Vittoria

EDWARD JOHNSON,
American tenor

Trevisan was easily the leader, just as he always is wherever comedy and farce are wanted.

The furious fun of this opera is brought into contrast with the two gracious young figures, Rinnucio and Lauretta, these being played delightfully by Edward Johnson and Evelyn Herbert, the voices being also beautiful in solo and thoroughly exceptional when heard together.

A host of lesser characters appeared in the three operas and there was not a badly cast person in either of them.

And at the close Mr. Galeffi came to the front of the stage and delivered the epilogue in English, and the joy with which this was received was evidence enough that Chicago wants and will appreciate grand opera in English.

STORIES OF THE OPERA

"Il Tabarro," "Suor Angelica and "Gianni Schicchi"

The three one-act operas completed by Puccini early in 1918 and first produced in New York in the same year were deliberately designed and written by their composer to be performed in trilogy, and may be publicly performed in no other way. Not that they have any connection or resemblance beyond the musical idiom of the composer, but together they make up an evening's entertainment ranging, in the poet's words, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe."

The first of the three is "The Cloak," a thrilling drama in which an episode of how life on the banks of the Seine in Paris is dealt with. The story is a terrible version of the theme "crabbed age and youth cannot live together." The master of the Houppelande, a man of fifty, morose as well as elderly, has a young and pleasure-loving wife. She has been attracted by a young stevedore or boat hand in the employment of her husband. The latter seeks to win back his wife's heart by recalling the happy past, but she repels him, the truth dawns upon him, and suddenly he finds himself with the proofs of his wife's guilt. He is sitting brooding, and lights a match, which is a signal the wife has arranged with her lover. The lover approaches and is seized and strangled by the husband. Then the wife approaches and the husband has barely time to conceal the dead body between his knees in his cloak. She is oppressed by fears, tries to conciliate her husband with soft words, and asks him if there is still room for her within the folds of his cloak. He drops it down and she sees the dead face of her lover, the husband hurling her upon the body.

"Suor Angelica" is a story of renunciation and self-immolation, and is quietly and gently moving without harrowing the feelings. Interest centers entirely in the one character of Sister Angelica, confined within the walls of a convent in expiation of her sin and frailty. She has loved not wisely but too well, and has been forced by her angry parents to enter a convent, her infant having been torn from her arms at its birth. For seven years she has been waiting to hear from her family and friends. The Abbess announces the arrival of Angelica's aunt. The princess coldly tells Angelica that she has come to ask her to sign a document renouncing claims to the family estate in favor of a younger sister, who is about to be married. Finally she says that the baby whom Angelica has seen and kissed only once is dead. Left alone, Angelica is distraught, and brews from herbs a poisonous tea, which she swallows. Then she recollects that suicide is a mortal sin and prays to the Virgin not to let her soul perish. A vision of the Madonna appears to the dying sister, and the child with her walks to his dying mother, while a choir of angels and nuns sing the hymn, "Thou Art Saved."

"Gianni Schicchi" is a riotous farce. Schicchi is a shrewd Tuscan peasant of the thirteenth century. Rinuccio, a young Florentine, madly in love with Lauretta, Schicchi's daughter, asks his prospective father-in-law's advice over the will of one Donati, who has just died and left all his money to a monastery, despite the protest of his relatives who had gathered round the dying man's bed. Schicchi says there is but one remedy; he will impersonate the dead man, whose demise is as yet unannounced, and make a fresh will. The relatives are delighted at the idea and send for a notary, and to him Gianni Schicchi, from Donati's bed, dictates a will bequeathing all the dead man's property to himself save a few unimportant pieces of property. The relatives do not dare protest for fear of the law. The young lovers are, however, made happy by the wily Schicchi, and the piece ends on the note of romance.

Rossini's "Italiana in Algiers" was given for the first time last Friday at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York.

Mustafa, Bey of Algeria, tired of his favorite wife, has decided to marry her off to an Italian slave, Lindoro. Despite the lamentations of Elvira and her attendant, Zulma, he commands his vizier, Haly, to go out with his band of pirates and abduct some beautiful Italian woman to take the place of the cast off Elvira. Lindoro, who has been lamenting his separation from a sweetheart in Italy, agrees to accompany Elvira on her journey away from Algeria.

The scene changes to the seashore, where Haly and his pirates come upon a wrecked vessel and capture both Isabella, beloved of Lindoro, and Taddeo, a hopeless suitor for her hand, who poses as her uncle. Learning that they are destined, one for the seraglio, the other for a slave, Isabella begins to scheme for their escape, not knowing she is to find Lindoro.

A second act returns to the palace of the Bey. Upon Isabella's entrance Mustafa is deeply smitten with her, and for her sake saves the life of Taddeo. At the same time, Elvira and Lindoro come to say farewell. Isabella and Lindoro recognize each other, and she demands that Mustafa renounce his plan to marry Elvira to Lindoro; that he take back his own wife, and that he give Lindoro to Isabella as her slave. The act closes, with general consternation and admiration for Isabella's boldness, in a famous musical finale.

In the third act, Mustafa, boasting of his ultimate success with Isabella, rewards Taddeo for his niece by making him a Kaimakan, an officer whose duty it is to fetch the bride. In the next scene, Isabella has taken the others into her confidence and they hide when Mustafa enters. Taddeo exasperates him by not withdrawing on signal of a sneeze. Isabella suddenly calls in Elvira and confronts Mustafa with his true wife.

Then Isabella's plot unfolds. Mustafa is induced to become a member of the order of "Papataci," an imaginary society whose members eat, drink and slumber. By way of initiation, they compel him to sit mumbling and eating, totally blind to the fact that Isabella, Lindoro and Taddeo are making good their escape. When all are gone, singing their famous "Pensa al Patria," the Bey decides to take Elvira back.

Chicago Musical College—On Saturday morning the fine program printed last week in Music News was given at Ziegfeld Theater to a big audience. Gertrude Mandelstamm, substituting for Kathryn Whitfield, who was ill, did splendid work in a group by Brahms and Debussy, as did also Elsie Barge, an artist student, who closed the program with an Etude of Liszt, the former being a pupil of Mr. Raab and the latter of Mr. Mickwitz. Harold Ayers (Sametini), a talented and brilliant youth, played wonderfully well, but would make better impression did he refrain from the constant tuning of his violin. Robert Doremus (Wedertz) and Anna Vogner, pianists, played with excellent technic and style. Marian Hopkins (Defresne), Oregonia Hildebrand, Mary Louise Lloyd (Thatcher) and Isabelle Gannon upheld the vocal credit of the college splendidly, the latter showing a big contralto voice, as is quite proper for one bearing the magic name of Gannon.

THIRD WEEK OF OPERA

terization of Carmen last Saturday night, and it is perhaps superfluous to say that she covered herself with glory in both her vocal and her histrionic portrayal of Bizet's bewitching heroine. She was in better voice than she has been in years and, as usual, fascinating, original and every bit "our Mary" in her action. She was surrounded by a splendid cast, in which Fontaine portrayed the part of Jose.

Nina Morgana acquitted herself well as Micaela. Her voice is a good one and her histrionic work was excellent. Her tone quality is very pleasing. Frasquita and Mercedes were well sung and Nicolay and Daddi added signally to the humor of the situation. Others impressed favorably as the minor officers.

The outstanding star of the occasion was, however, with the possible exception of Miss Garden, Gino Marinuzzi, the new conductor, who repeated his success of "Rigoletto" earlier in the week and created sensational comment regarding his remarkable memory (he conducts with score) and his perfect understanding of and sympathy with the music in all its details.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Other Operas

Saved for future comment are the Sunday "Lucia" (Galli-Curci) and the operas of Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

On tomorrow (Saturday) afternoon, Galli-Curci will be presented in "Barber of Seville" and in the evening Evelyn Herbert will again be seen (and for the last time) in "La Boheme," and the performance will include also a repetition of the gorgeous "Boudour."

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AND THE SCHOOLS

"When can the needed change be made?" These are the final words of an article by W. L. Hubbard, clipped from the Chicago Tribune. It should make us not only think but act. If the Symphony Orchestra is ready to listen to any such installation of orchestra concerts in the schools, we should certainly leave no stone unturned toward making it a possibility. St. Louis has been doing just this thing for its school children for some time, with a 10-cent admission.

Perhaps this is a problem which the Chicago high school music teachers' organization could handle. They are a body of aggressive, helpful people and I believe we have a right to expect them to cope with this in the near future, to the benefit of all. Very evidently the "kiddy koncerts," as one reporter styles them, are not going to meet the demand. Orchestra Hall is not large enough to seat a third of those who wish to attend, as comment in the daily press shows.

Peterson — May Peterson, soprano, sang "Smilin' Through" (Penn) at her very successful recital at Raleigh, N. C., in November.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

The United Choirs (280 singers) of the New First Congregational Church, George L. Tenney, director, announce four great festival evenings.

"The Messiah" will be sung on Tuesday,

LUCY HARTMAN

December 16, and on Friday, December 19, at 8 p. m., by the United Choirs and Else Harthan Arendt, soprano; Lucy J. Hartman, contralto; John B. Miller, tenor; Frank H. Collins, bass, and Philip Manuel, organist.

The pageant of the nativity will be presented on Thursday, December 18, and on Sunday, December 21, by the United Choirs and Adelaide B. Tenney, soprano; Lucy J. Hartman, contralto; Walter Diederich, tenor; Rollin Pease, bass; Dr. W. O. Campbell, tenor; William Morse, baritone, and Philip Manuel, organist.

There are five beautiful tableaux. The music is inspiring and the story of the Christ Child is unfolded in a most reverent and impressive way.

STRAND QUARTET

The Strand Quartet, the personnel of which is Mr. and Mrs. Karl A. Kaynor, Edna Walgrove Wilson and Clay Hart, have been compelled to return to Chicago, due to illness. This necessitated canceling several weeks' booking in Cleveland, where they have scored great success. They have been engaged to sing with Armin Hand's Orchestra December 14, at Turner Hall, this being a return engagement.

Mees — Arthur Mees, after many years' service as director of the Worcester (Mass.) Musical Festival, has resigned that position.

AUDITORIUM CONSERVATORY RECITAL

Mr. and Mrs. Karl Buren Stein's immense following filled Central Music Hall last Thursday for one of the finest recitals ever given in this place, so popular with the public artist. Students of the Vocal, Dramatic Art and Piano Departments of the Auditorium Conservatory united in giving one of those interesting and enjoyable programs for which this school is noted. Evidence of the highest ideals and the most intelligent training on the part of the instructors was shown in every number, and each student deserves special credit for both his technical skill and interpretation. Edna Wolfinger and Gladys Grove, sopranos; Marie Kordo and Janet Havens, contraltos; Merle Morgen, baritone, and Irving Schuster, tenor, possess unusually fine voices and are already good concert singers, while the trio of professional pupils, Helene Dahly, contralto; Emily Kortak, soprano, and William Schwartz, tenor, are young artists whose splendid work secures them bookings in the loop theaters and in the leading clubs of the city. Their art of solos, duets and trios was a rare treat. A feature of especial interest was the singing by Mr. Schwartz of a manuscript copy of a new composition of Dr. Stein's. Though in a serious minor strain, the beauty of the song made an immediate appeal to the audience and won distinct success.

The piano students were presented by Miss Anna Weske, who possesses genuine pedagogical instincts. Rose Salzman, Helen Priesmeyer and Irene Kraus played with much of the same brilliant skill that Miss Weske herself shows so splendidly at the piano. As for Mrs. Stein's pupils, one seldom hears such intelligence of interpretation and naturalness of expression as well as the ability to hold the audience, as shown by Lucile Fisher, Harriet Nilsen, Emma Olson and Anna O'Malley, and the play, which formed a fitting climax to a wonderful evening, given by Janet Havens, Anna O'Malley, Louis Stolarsky and Irving Schuster, compared most favorably with the best ones given at the city theaters.

CHICAGO WOMAN'S MUSICAL CLUB

The Chicago Woman's Musical Club delighted a large audience with a fine program, beautifully rendered, on last Thursday in Recital Hall, Fine Arts Building. The artists participating were the Misses Eleanor Eastlake, soprano; Katheryn Kiernan, contralto; Amalia Schultz, contralto; Lila Groff, violinist; Beatrice Dorion, pianist, and Vierlyn Clough, accompanist.

Mrs. Marie Edwards-Von Ritter is chairman of the programs, which bespeaks good programs throughout the year.

The club has recently added over a hundred new members to its list and is making much of the social hour at the close of the program, which promotes a feeling of good fellowship among its members. Mrs. Lucian W. Strong is the social chairman. The student department gives a program preceding the artists on each first Thursday of the month. Mrs. Mazie Odell Cardy is chairman. Mrs. Byrde Kitson-Schwarz is president of the club.

Madame Borghild Langaard a Thoroughly Interesting Figure of the Opera

By CHARLES E. WATT

In a suite of rooms at the Congress Hotel which through individuality and good taste of the occupants, Mme. Borghild Langaard and her brilliant husband, B. Lindvig, have been converted into a genuinely homelike spot, was found the Norwegian soprano, and in a short conversation there was revealed the fact of thoroughly interesting and charming personality as well as the outline of a career which has been a notable one.

So far, Mme. Langaard, who came to the Chicago opera a complete stranger, has appeared at the Auditorium only as Amelia in the Verdi opera, "The Masked Ball," but such is the extent of her repertoire and such her acquired routine in grand opera that we may confidently expect many other rare treats when she appears as other characters.

Amelia is a sedately moving character and the vocal score assigned her by Verdi is not so fine as that given to other operatic heroines, and yet so statuesquely beautiful is this new singer and so admirably in hand is her lovely and sympathetic voice that she made of the part in our opening week something to remember with pleasure and gratitude.

Mme. Langaard was born at Christiania, Norway, and made her debut at the Aspestrand at a very early age, singing first of all Brunnhilde, as well as many other of the Wagner roles, in which she was signally successful.

So young indeed was she at this time that she was called by the press "The Baby Brunnhilde."

Shortly after her Christiania debut she had a season at Covent Garden, London, and there made a repetition of her Norwegian successes in Wagner and other operas, a memorable occasion being that in which she made her first appearance as Santuzza in "Cavelleria Rusticana," the Turridu of the occasion being none other than John McCormack, who was also at the moment singing for the first time in the opera and practically as an entirely unknown personage.

It is easy to surmise that with such a propitious beginning (for Mme. Langaard was phenomenally successful both in Norway and in London in these premiere appearances) her fame extended rapidly and reached, very soon, far afield, and Mme. Langaard within a few years had sung in English, French, Italian, Hungarian, Norwegian and German opera and her repertoire rapidly grew to the place where it included "Tosca," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Aida," "The Masked Ball," "Gioconda," "Lorelei," "Carmen," "Faust" and many others, including the soprano roles in all the Wagner operas.

"In all countries other than England and America," said Mme. Langaard, "the people ask for opera in their own tongue, and it has been an interesting experience to learn the various texts.

"I remember especially my experiences in learning the Hungarian language and the consequent brilliant successes at Budapest, where I was received with unusual enthusiasm and the populace was good enough to pronounce me a great success."

"And," continued the singer, "there is nothing I would rather do than sing in English to the American public, for certainly complete understanding of opera in this or any country waits upon the hearing of it by the people in their own language."

And, of a surety, we should love to hear Mme. Langaard sing in English, for her pronunciation of the language is remarkably exact and her enunciation is beautifully clear, so good, in fact, that it could be used as an object lesson by many of our own singers whose enunciation of English is slovenly.

During her years in the famous opera houses of Europe Mme. Langaard has, of course, sung with scores of the world's greatest singers, and she is enthusiastic as well as most generous in her comment on all her brothers and sisters in the operatic art.

She adores Mme. Galli-Curci, whom she heard years ago in Milan, and is enthusiastic in praise of De Luca, Martinelli and many others since famous in America, whom she knew and sang with before they came to this country.

And, while her experience and routine in opera are so exceptional and so complete, it is true also that Mme. Langaard has had an exceptional career as a concert singer and that she is keenly desirous of showing her art in this line to Americans. Incredible as it may seem, her concert repertoire includes more than 600 songs and these can be used (and have been used by her) in every language in which music is ever presented.

"And," said she, "I am certainly fascinated with the many American songs I have been trying out since my arrival in this country and will certainly present very many of them. It seems almost impossible to give you a list of those I consider 'best,' for there are so many of them, but I may say, I think, that there is no one American composer whom I have found more musical or more altogether intelligent and logical in his songs than is Frank La Forge."

Good-bys were said to Mme. Langaard with the feeling that hers is a most ingratiating as well as vitally interesting personality, and the conviction was strong that in her the Chicago opera has a great attraction and a voice which will be heard with delight in a variety of operas.

"IOLANTHE" IN OAK PARK

On last Wednesday, on approach to the Warrington Theater in Oak Park, it seemed that every automobile in all the western suburbs was parked on Wisconsin avenue or on South boulevard, and that was because most of the people of those suburbs who attend high-grade entertainments were, at the moment, in this theater listening to a performance of the

ARTHUR RANDOLPH FRASER

Gilbert and Sullivan opera, "Iolanthe," by the men and girls of the choirs of Grace Church, Oak Park, under direction of Arthur Randolph Fraser, to the accompaniment of the Sunday School Orchestra, reinforced by Miss Margaret Farr, an exceptionally good and effective pianist.

Thirty years ago, when Gilbert and Sullivan were putting out a comic opera annually, and had had their phenomenal success with "Pinafore" and a somewhat lesser one with "Pirates of Penzance," they evidently "came a cropper" on "Iolanthe," for, at the moment, it did not have an extravagant success such as had been predicted for it.

After a rather short vogue it was shelved, and no more was heard of it for years.

But, within the past few years, this opera has been "revived" a number of times, and in each revival it has seemed to grow more and more noteworthy.

Its story is, of course, caviare to the American public, and its political allusions entirely incomprehensible to us, but such is the droll humor and the ready wit of many of the speeches, and such the utter delightfulness of the music, that it has attained a distinct popularity, even in these times so remote from its birth.

On Wednesday evening it was given a sparkling presentation, and everyone connected with the event may well feel thoroughly elated over the success attained and the appreciation bestowed by one of the finest audiences ever assembled in Oak Park.

Rollin Pease had been specially engaged for the part of Strephon—he of the fairy upper half and the mortal legs, and not only in his singing, which was excellent, but also in his speeches, which were delivered clearly and with great drollery, he stampeded the audience.

Hazel Meisterling, Sarita Marie Allen and Caroline Bagley were beautiful and melodious "fairies," and Sarah Pruner Fox was a nice-looking Queen.

Helen A. Bagley made a most attractive figure of Iolanthe, looking the part of a seventeen-year-old fairy to perfection and singing well.

Geneve Cadle, an artist pupil of Ellen Kinsman Mann, was delightful as Phyllis, showing both histrionic ability and fine voice.

Maxwell E. Nickerson as the Lord Chancellor was an effective figure, and Paul Gervais as his Footman was beyond question the most successful comic figure of the cast.

Harry Slater as Lord Tolloller showed a very beautiful tenor voice, and H. Edmund Luff as Earl Mountararat was also agreeable, both in solo and ensemble.

Charles L. Chenoweth did the one famous song of Private Willis with much effect.

There was a whole bevy of charming Fairies and a well-trained chorus of Peers.

The costumes were unusually rich and attractive, and the stage management was at a point of authority throughout, much credit for this being due to Margaret Dixon, dramatic coach.

Mr. Fraser, to whose untiring initiative and direction the whole function owed its impulse and artistry, held the baton throughout the evening and kept the forces always at a high musical status.

It is understood that a very substantial sum of money was realized for the benefit of the Grace Church Parish House.

DWIGHT EDRUS COOK

Dwight Edrus Cook, the local tenor, who appeared recently as soloist with the Edison Symphony Orchestra, was engaged to sing for the Englewood Sunday Evening Club last Sunday. There was a large audience in attendance, in response to the call of this organization, whose purpose is, in its own words, that of "furnishing to the community each Sunday evening a popular service which in the true spirit of religion will be a social, moral and spiritual uplift."

Mr. Cook not only added to his former laurels in his appearance Sunday night, but did credit to the spirit of the entire service. He sang two solos, "Fear Not, Ye, O Israel" (Buck) and "Seek Ye the Lord" (Lynes), both at once classic in style and popular in appeal. Mr. Cook is an ideal church singer, well schooled in the routine and with a broad and varied experience back of him, which makes him vocally very adaptable and personally in close sympathy with the demands of his audience, whatever they may be. He possesses an organ of power and warmth, with a strong robusto quality, which lends a pronounced flavor of the dramatic to his work and gives strong conviction to the declamatory passages so prevalent in church music.

Mr. Cook is well known in Chicago, and has been heard at many of the most promi nent churches.

EDGEWATER BEACH HOTEL TWILIGHT MUSICALE

In the series of Twilight Musicales being given on Sundays at the Edgewater Beach Hotel by Miller, Resseguie & Tufts, none has been more attractive and few so popular as the one of last Sunday when, with the excellently pianistic and sympathetic accompaniment of Beulah Taylor Porter, Helen Haworth presented a splendid program of songs and Lorraine Earnest was heard in beautiful violin numbers.

Mrs. Haworth is a young singer of great personal beauty and the most charming of stage manners, and these assets, added to a voice of unusual power, flexibility and beauty, have within a very few months brought her prominently to the front among young Chicago singers.

She is a contralto with full mezzo range as well and with a smoothness of scale and an ease of manipulation which are remarkable. She is featuring American songs on her programs with great success.

She sang first "The Awakening" (Spross) and "Amour viens aider" (Samson and Delilah) with the utmost of musical values and intelligence of interpretation, and closed the program with an English text group including the vivid "Ah Love, but a Day" (Gilberte), "Little Playmates" (Tuckfield) and the brilliant "Birthday Song" (MacFayden), a group full of variety and charm and one which was sung beautifully from every standpoint by Mrs. Haworth and in which also all values were greatly enhanced through her purity of enunciation.

The middle group of the program was devoted to Irish songs, and this was given added color through the keen appreciation of Mrs. Haworth for this genre of song.

The songs were "Irish Folk Song" (Foote), "Little Mother of Mine" (Burleigh) and "Milkmaid's Song" (Parker), these providing ample opportunity for the display of that very human humor and that touch of naivete so definitely possessed by Mrs. Haworth.

The audience, an unusually large one, was enthusiastic in the extreme, and the young contralto may well feel that she has added many more to her list of admirers.

Miss Earnest, an artist pupil of Sametini at the Chicago Musical College, is 15 years old but is already a decidedly impressive artist. She has technic in abundance, musical intelligence of the finest sort and musical feeling very far beyond the average. She was thoroughly successful on Sunday in several groups of attractive short pieces for the violin.

LOIS JOHNSTON WITH THE DETROIT ORCHESTRA

Last month Lois Johnston, soprano, now resident of Chicago, appeared in her home city (Detroit) with the Symphony Orchestra, this being her fourth engagement as soloist with this organization.

Her success was extraordinary, hundreds being turned away from the new and very large Auditorium and the comment of the press being remarkably favorable.

Following this engagement Miss Johnston went on tour wtih the orchestra to several points in Canada, and such was her success she has been engaged as soloist for another tour in February.

TITO SCHIPA

One of the most interesting personalities of the current opera season at the Auditorium is Tito Schipa, a young, eager and altogether attractive tenor, who irresistibly reminds one of Bossi when that singer was young, good looking and sang like a lark.

Schipa made his first appearance in Chicago in the opera of "Rigoletto" in conjunction with Galli-Curci and Galeffi and with Marinuzzi at the conductor's desk, the combination being quite irresistible.

Since then he has appeared in "Tosca" and "Manon" and will be heard tomorrow in "The Barber," all this proving his wonderful versatility.

His voice is very youthful, very beautiful and altogether one of the finest ever heard with the Chicago opera.

His stage presence is most handsome and his acting a marvel of correctness and effectiveness.

A wonderful career has been his, for, in spite of the fact that he is not yet thirty years of age, he has conquered in so many of the world's great opera houses that the immediate subjection of the Chicago public became a matter of course and a perfectly logical sequence of all that had gone before.

Born at Lecce, Italy, he was, as a boy, assigned to the service of the church, and up to his sixteenth year fully expected to become a priest in the Catholic Church.

However—the gift for music was inborn, and at that age it became so intense that he could no longer resist the call and he therefore took up the study with the definite end of a professional musical career.

His first study was in his home town, and his operatic debut was made at Vercelli, Piemonte, and the opera was "La Traviata"—from this point his fame rapidly spread throughout Italy, and he appeared, in rapid succession, in Rome, Milan (La Scala), Naples (San Carlo), and afterward at Lisbon, Portugal, and Madrid, Barcelona, and Monte Carlo.

All these appearances were crowned with success and were followed by four seasons in South America, where he became a prime favorite in his entire repertoire, consisting of the leading tenor roles in "Manon," "Rigoletto," "La Sonnambula," "Barber of Saville," "Werther," "Don Pasquale," "Fra Diavolo," "L'Elisir d'Amore" and "Donne Curiose," the last named unknown in America save for a performance or two at the Metropolitan in New York.

Mr. Schipa has sung mostly in Italian, but has a repertoire in French and Spanish as well, and (he told me) is very keen to become proficient enough in English that he may sing to us—in Chicago, in our own language.

He is a thoroughly companionable fellow and a charming conversationalist, and is very eager in his talk about America, Chicago and various other topics, including his own compositions, of which he showed me several.

His early training has given him a decided leaning to churchly music, and he has composed an elaborate mass, which he expects shortly to have published.

A march, dedicated to King Alfonso, has been published and achieved much popularity, and a gavotte, written for Pavlowa, has been used frequently by her in her entertainments.

The contract for Schipa's appearance in Chicago was signed by Mr. Campanini three years ago, but its fulfillment was delayed until this year by the war.

Chicago, however—has now welcomed the brilliant young tenor with open arms, and it is safe to say that he will be one of the greatest favorites ever introduced to this public by the astute impresario.

CHARLES E. WATT.

MARIE LIGHTHALL AND EUGENE DRESSLER

Sunday afternoon, November 29, at Edgewater Beach, Marie Lighthall, soprano; Eugene Dressler, tenor, and Beulah Taylor Porter, accompanist, gave a program of fine artistic worth before a good sized audience.

Mr. Dressler opened the program with the fine aria from "Carmen," by Bizet. His voice is of lovely quality, and the delivery of the work at hand is accomplished with artistic ease and assurance. In the second group works by Spross, Foster, Speaks and Reichardt won enthusiastic approval. "My Menagerie" and "Yesterday and Today" were especially good.

Miss Lighthall made a fine impression, singing with ease, assurance, and displaying a voice of fine range, especially good in the upper register. Her first group was noteworthy by her splendid singing of the "Boheme" aria and "Tes Yeux," by Rabey. In the second group "Bon Jour, Ma Belle" won warm approval, and the rendition of the Waltz Song, "Romeo and Juliette," brought her the sincere enthusiastic applause of her audience.

Miss Lighthall and Mr. Dressler did the "Carmen" duet so well that they were compelled to repeat it.

RUDOLPH REUTER'S CHICAGO RECITAL JANUARY 7

Mr. Reuter will give his annual Chicago recital this year under the management of Carl D. Kinsey on Wednesday morning, January 7, at the Ziegfeld Theater, playing substantially the program which aroused such favorable comment in New York recently.

Mr. Reuter recently gave recitals in Springfield, Ill., and Indianapolis, both concerts being re-engagements, and was enthusiastically welcomed by large audiences. His two-piano recital with Edward Collins in LaCrosse, Wis., recently drew a packed house at the LaCrosse Theater. Their concert will be repeated in Chicago on February 11, under the management of Carl D. Kinsey.

SOPHIE BRASLAU IN CHICAGO RECITAL

A singer who has made fine success in opera and is yet so superb in recital as is Sophie Braslau may well be counted as one of the big musical assets of the country and a singer of whom America can well be proud.

Her recital at Orchestra Hall on last Sunday afternoon came in competition with Galli-Curci at the Auditorium and was yet attended by a goodly audience and was the scene of unbounded enthusiasm.

Miss Braslau had the invaluable assistance of Eleanor Scheib at the piano, there being no better known accompanist to the American concert platform.

In a group of folksongs, arranged by Reiman, there was unbounded variety and interest and splendid musical values were given them by Miss Braslau.

Of these songs, representing moods of many countries, the Gypsy Song was most striking and was effective indeed.

In the classical group, including numbers by Handel, Mozart and Beethoven, there were beautiful musical qualities, and in "Nature's Adoration" of the last named superb power and virility as well as nobility of interpretation.

In a group of Russian songs Miss Braslau found a very sympathetic medium for some of her best interpretative work, and the five English text songs were productive of both extreme musical pleasure and fine racial mood and feeling.

This unique and brilliant list included the new "Fog Wraiths" of John Alden Carpenter, "Consecration" (Charles Manney), "Rest" (Cecil Forsyth), "Greatest Miracle of All" (David Guion) and the Robin Woman's Song from "Shanewis" (Cadman), a number which Miss Braslau sings with great spirit and authority.

EPIPHANY CHURCH

On Sunday evening the monthly organ recital of Dr. Hemington was given to a goodly audience.

The program opened with a brilliant transcription of the Overture to Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," introducing a wealth of material, including the tricky and charming elfin music.

This and the First Concert Etude of Yon, with its bravoura pedal passages, were played in masterly fashion by Dr. Hemington, who was in the pink of condition.

Musical bits like Johnston's "Evening Song" and an Intermezzo of Gounod were beautifully played and there was scintillant delight in crashing numbers of Guilmant and Elgar and fine piquancy in Nevin's "Will o' the Wisp."

Two songs were well presented by Mrs. Mabel H. Allen, dramatic soprano, and the hymns were well cared for by Dr. Hemington as usual.

A complete Choral Evensong is announced for Sunday evening, December 14.

Kerns—Grace Kerns, soprano, is featuring on her programs a group of American songs which reads as follows: "Snowflakes" (Mallinson), "Dawn" (Curran), "Values" (Vanderpool), "When Your Dear Hands" (La Forge) and "Robin, Robin, Sing Me a Song" (Spross).

STURKOW-RYDER

A talented pupil of Mme. Theodora Sturkow-Ryder played at the Hippodrome this past week with great success. Miss Sabina Soffer is a young pianist whose gifts are marked and who should go far in her profession. She plays with a brilliant technique, which she makes full use of, but she possesses as well a clear touch and a warm, sympathetic tone. She played the Liszt arrangement of the Faust Waltz, an elaborated arrangement of "Old Black Joe," and the Fourteenth Rhapsody of Liszt, all works making demands both on the young artist's skill and musical intelligence.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The chief number of last week's program was the Tschaikowsky Symphony No. 4, which was played at a point of excellence to proclaim the men at the very climax of the season's efficiency and Mr. Stock in the finest of mettle.

The soloist for this week is Benno Moisewitsch, pianist, who will play the Beethoven Concerto No. 5, E flat Major.

CLIFF DWELLERS' CLUB

On December 4 there was given at the Cliff Dwellers' Club a minstrel show that will not soon be forgotten, and a "whiff of grand opera," bearing the lucid title "La Tobasco," a combination creation of Mr. L. L. Lazelle and Mr. George A. Colburn. It would not do to omit mention of the heroine on this occasion, who created an enormous sensation in the person of Mr. Arthur Bissell.

Among the minstrels may be mentioned the illustrious names of Mr. Arthur Kraft and Mr. Frederick Wessels, end men, and Messrs. Herbert Miller, James MacDermid, Herbert E. Hyde, Alfred Kanberg, Harold Hammond, John D. Black, Rudolph F. Legerle and T. K. Pond, among the singers; grand conductor, Mr. George A. Colburn; grand pianist, Mr. Kurt Wanieck, and violin principal, Mr. Leon Marx.

Numerous of our most honored composers wrote songs for the occasion—productions of the highest order of the ragtime variety. Among these were Herbert Hyde's "My Greenhouse Love" and "Music and Meals," and Mr. MacDermid's waltz, "Come Dance with Me."

O'Sullivan

Conquered the Canadians when he sang "Werther" at Montreal on November 22nd and December 2nd

Following are the Press Comments:

"Mr. O'Sullivan has the vocal strength to sing in the heroic style. His wonderful breath control, due in part to the reservoir which Nature has given him, and in part to the practical training he has received, is alone worthy of attention; but Mr. O'Sullivan is more than just a singer; he is an actor and a musician who seems to have but one object, namely, to make the character he is impersonating a living figure."—The Montreal Daily Star, November 23.

JOHN O'SULLIVAN REPEATS SUCCESS. TENOR STAR SHINES AGAIN IN MASSENET'S OPERA, "WERTHER"

"When Mr. O'Sullivan sings there is no temptation to comparison unfavorable to him; there is no ruminative wondering how another might handle the same score; one is fully satisfied with Mr. O'Sullivan's treatment of it. Everything he does is convincing. In his art, singing and acting are beautifully balanced. When he carries the line of a long phrase up or down in a sweeping curve, he stands in exactly the attitude or uses precisely the gesture that conveys the same idea. It is through sight, as much as through hearing that his work must be examined. The perfect freedom of his singing is equaled in minute details, in his gallant and romantic bearing, in facial expression and his command of the vocal and histrionic situation."—The Montreal Daily Star, December 3.

"John O'Sullivan was cordially applauded and the audience compelled him to repeat the several arias of the opera. His voice is warm, strong and appealing. His action is irreproachable."—Le Canada, December 3.

"Mr. O'Sullivan's singing and interpretation were faultless. His voice was in good shape and he sang remarkably well. The audience demanded many encores."—La Presse, December 3.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. On Maria Winetzkaja

. . . . In the cast is a mezzo-soprano who is going to duplicate Galli-Gurci's sudden rise to World's prominence and the States' papers will have another chance to demonstrate and point out the excellence of the American Conservatories.

The personage is Maria Winetzkaja.

She is purely a product of the American School, studying for five years in New York. In this period she studied and mastered harmony, theory, piano, composition, voice and learned French, Spanish and Italian, a noteworthy feat.

Her first season, and this is her third, she sang small parts in the Boston Opera Company.

Since this is an Italian Opera Company, Bracale has changed her name to Vinetta, but that cannot change the quality of her liquid Russian tones. —Star and Herald, Panama, November 17, 1919.

Mrs. Crosby Adams

Mrs. Crosby Adams of Montreat was today (November 29) elected president of the State Music Teachers' Association.

Mrs. Crosby Adams is well known in music circles in this state, and the honor conferred upon her today is a just recognition of her efforts to promote a general interest among the musicians of the state in teaching the younger people.—Asheville, N. C., Sunday Citizen.

Press Comment on May Mukle

Miss Mukle's technique has lost none of its brilliancy. Her fingers grasp the strings with extraordinary energy and security, and her management of the bow is as remarkable as the fleetness and precision of her fingers.—New York American.

Miss Mukle's tone is broad and warm, and there is vitality in it.—New York Evening Sun.

The truly great English violoncellist delighted a large audience with a notable display of her well known genius.—New York Morning Telegraph.

Press Comments on Miss Nina Morgana's Debut in "Lucia," Chicago Opera Association, November 22

Miss Morgana has a voice of the true coloratura variety, light in weight, but sweet and pure in tone and with the flexibility which is essential for such a voice. She does many things well, and her scale is fairly clear and swift, and with further experience her florid ornamentation will develop and improve.—W. L. Hubbard in the Chicago Tribune.

Diminutive in physique, but big in artistic stature, Nina Morgana, an American coloratura soprano, made her Chicago debut at the Auditorium Saturday evening in the title role of Donizetti's well known opera "Lucia," and achieved an estimable success with her vocal rendition of this difficult operatic part.—Maurice Rosenfeld in the Chicago Daily News.

Nina Morgana made her debut with the company as Lucia and sang very well. She had a clear tone of pleasing quality; the runs and arpeggi were cleanly produced, and she sang with understanding. There was some nervousness apparent, but for the most part she had herself well in hand and made a favorable impression.—Karleton Hackett in the Chicago Post.

Nina Morgana, remembered as Caruso's partner in his concert here last May, sang the title role, lending an excellent coloratura to the florid music. Her voice is lovely, of warm timbre, and she is a praiseworthy actress.—Herman Devries, in the Chicago American.

In the evening Nina Morgana as Lucia sang innumerable flutelike tones; did much of the difficult Galli-Curci role prettily, and some of it beautifully, and altogether proved herself a very capable young artist.—Henriette Weber, in the Chicago Herald.

Hans Hess' New York Cello Recital at Aeolian Hall

. . . He had chosen a program of musicianly charm, and throughout he used a clear, genuine tone and a technic more than capable.—The Sun, October 23, 1919.

His technic is excellent, his fingers are well trained and thoroughly reliable messengers of his will and through his finely balanced and steady use of the bow he invites admiration. . . . He played in a manner distinguished by beauty of tone, refinement of phrasing and warmth of expression—The American, October 23, 1919.

. . . A cellist of musical taste as well as technical equipment. . . . His performance throughout disclosed seriousness and musicianship.—The Times, October 23, 1919.

. . . He proved to be an earnest musician in all that he played.—The World, October 23, 1919.

Chicago Recital at Kimball Hall

. . . Mr. Hess' playing showed genuine artistic traits, a clean resonant tone and a predominance over his instrument's technical resources.—Daily News, March 21, 1919.

. . . In the Lalo concerto Mr. Hess not only had the notes under his fingers, but he had the grasp of the music. In the "Oriental" of Cui and the "Village Song," by Popper, he had the true virtuoso touch, tossing them off with an ease and beauty of tone that made them delightful.—Evening Post, March 21, 1919.

Hans Hess' recital last night gave us proof once more that a serious artist never stops growing. Mr. Hess is one of these. Hess belongs to Chicago, and is today one of the representative violoncello talents of the middle west. His tone is very vibrant and resonant.—Chicago American, March 21, 1919.

Hess is a local musician and a good one.—The Journal, March 21, 1919.

Mr. Hess displayed a sonorous tone, and the range of his technical equipment was superb—The Herald-Examiner, March 21, 1919.

RACHMANINOFF'S SECOND SYMPHONY

The following analysis of the Symphony to be played this week by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra was translated from the Russian for Music News by Alexander Nakutin.

The Second Symphony was written by the composer shortly after having forsaken the confines of his native land—Russia. He settled abroad, where the surroundings and conditions were more congenial for creative work.

As a work it is astounding in its completeness and abundance of detail of phonetic material. Every single movement of this vast symphony sounds full and beautiful.

It starts with a calm, broad Largo, with the strings flowing in light waves, supported by the woodwinds. For a moment the peaceful waves are stirred to higher intensity, presently to subside again to give place to the main theme (allegro moderato), reminding us of Tschaikowsky with its mournful construction.

Now the theme is with the violins, with a background of the clarinets and alto. Gradually the volume of sound increases, passages from the introduction are heard, and finally the second theme appears.

The concluding passage, as is the whole work, is concise and brief, even laconic, the work growing exceedingly on that account.

In the elaboration of the work from the material of the theme the author exhausted all possibilities, at least all that seemed to him possible.

The second part is allegro molto. Its themes are brilliant and characteristic.

The trio is very sweet and contrasts excellently. The return to the main theme and gradual accelerando is brilliant and pleasant.

The third part (adagio) starts with the entry of the singing stringed instruments leading to the main theme (clarinets), characteristically Rachmaninoff's type, to which the small contrapuntal theme of the altos conforms.

In the first part of the finale (allegro vivace) is discernible a likeness to the theme of the second part. However, it is, by itself, animated and stirring.

The second theme is whimsical in its construction and this whimsicality is emphasized by the nuance of the author.

As a whole the finale produces a favorable impression by its melodiousness and consistency.

Ps choanalysis and Music

By DANIEL BONUS, B. M., and EDW. N. SCHOOLMAN, M. D.

INTRODUCTION

(All Rights Reserved.)

At the outset, it is well to understand that our object in connecting two subjects of such apparent diverse interests as Psychoanalysis and Music is not that of the fiction writer. Our purpose in "going into print" is not to entertain the reader with some Utopian fantasy, but to bring to the attention of the musical worker certain valuable observations gained in recent psychological research. That the inspirational efforts of writers, composers, etc., usually center about their own life's problems and dreams has long been recognized. But here we must lay aside the personal element and view our material with the scientific interest that seeks for "things as they are."

This is difficult when we consider the personal resistances toward ideas that make us uncomfortable, disturbing the traditional attitudes that we have held with firm faith.

Psychoanalysis goes to the bottom of our motives of conduct, showing us with unerring accuracy many impulses and tendencies that we prefer to hide, even from ourselves. It reveals that which is unpleasant to contemplate, but furnishes us, at the same time, with the means of living happier and more useful lives. It is not a method of moralizing or suggestion offered as the solution of our difficulties, but drives home its lessons by uncovering the conflicts that interfere with the furtherance of our work.

One cannot direct oneself intelligently when one is ignorant of the material dealt with. Psychoanalysis may best be approached by contemplating the dictum: "Know Thyself." "What!" exclaims the individual, "do you mean to say that I do not know myself; I, who have been conscious of the workings of my own mind?"

You express the limitations of your knowledge of yourself in the word "conscious." Conscious attitudes do not express the vast, instinctive, unconscious mental strivings which you have "packed away" in your mind since birth. It is not with the conscious mental life that Psychoanalysis busies itself, but it is the "unconscious" that the analyst investigates. It is here that enough disturbance may be found to destroy happiness, health and efficiency.

As Bergson puts it: "In reality, the past is preserved by itself, automatically. In its entirety, probably, it follows us at every instant; all that we have felt, thought and willed from our earliest infancy is there, leaning over the present which is about to join it, pressing against the portals of consciousness that would fain leave it outside. Doubtless we think with only a small part of our past, but it is with our entire past, including the original bent of our soul that we desire, will and act. Our past, then, as a whole, is made manifest to us in its impulse; it is felt in the form of tendency, although a small part of it only is known in the form of idea."

Yvette Guilbert in Recital

The unique diseuse is not growing older, at least Mme. Guilbert won't admit it and her art is as exquisite, elect, aristocratic, fascinating and highly entertaining as ever. One may weary of musical entertainments, but never of her singing, mimicry, dances and her personality. A very distinguished and appreciative, also large audience, came to the Maxine Elliott on Sunday evening, November 30, to pay a tribute to the diseuse. She sang and danced "Le Menuet d'Exaudet" and "L'Autre jour m' allant promener" (XVIII century). In these two she had the accompaniment of an orchestra directed ably by Sam Franko. I noted among the executants: Signor Marchetti, oboist with the philharmonic; Daniel Maquarre, flutist of the Symphony; Buldrini, contra bass of the Philharmonic; Alberto Bachmann, concertmaster of the Rivoli Theater, and others. With such excellent musicians no one can but enjoy their playing. Their work was more artistic than that of the entire Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Franko is a true musician and conducted very effectively and correctly. Mme. Guilbert sang other songs which her admirers love. She is absolutely without equal for instance in "Les Belles Manieres" and "Le Lien Serre." She sang also "Ah Vous Dirai-je, Manan." There were other supplementary offerings. Messrs. Maquarre, flute, Marchetti, oboe, and a clarinetist, whose name escapes me, played artistically "Caprice" by Saint Saens. Maurice Eisner, an accompanist with only few equals, assisted them in a manner to make many a pianist pall. His accompaniments for Mme. Guilbert were delightful. Emily Gresser, violinist, assisted by the small orchestra, played Vivaldi's "Concerto" in G minor. Her abilities are limited and extended comments are superfluous. Other numbers announced on the program were not heard by the writer.

Pupils of A. Russ Patterson Filling Engagements

Nora Kronold, a pupil of Mr. Patterson, after her successful appearance in November has been re-engaged at the First Congregational Church of Jersey City. On the evening of November 28 she delighted again a large audience. Rose Dreeben, lyric soprano, appeared as soloist at the Rand School on October 18th and on November 16th at the Hotel Astor she sang for the benefit of Hebrew Orphans. Harry Holbrook, bass, was soloist at the First Congregational Church of Jersey City on October 24. He has been appointed soloist of the Calvary Methodist Church of New York City. Arthur Smith, tenor, has been engaged as soloist of the temple Beth El of New York and director of the music course at the Ridgefield Presbyterian Church of Ridgefield Park, New Jersey. Mable Swick, alto, was soloist at the Hotel Astor on November 25 when she sang for the Daughters of the Revolution, and also has been engaged as soloist at Beth El of New York City. George Ballard, tenor, has been engaged to do recreation work for the Edison phonograph. On November 3, Miss Esther Hirschberg, contralto, was soloist at the Commodore Hotel; Edwin Beckman, tenor, was soloist at Brooklyn on September 26. This elaborate list speaks well for the teacher.

Fernando Carpi Sings in Paris—Due Here December 15

Fernando Carpi, the brilliant tenor of the Metropolitan and Chicago Opera Association, communicates interesting news about himself. In justice to the tenor it may be added that they are confirmed by the Parisian press. Mr. Carpi intended to sail for New York on December 4 per steamer La Fayette. He is expected in New York about December 15.

Although it is not definitely announced, the tenor will appear in recital at Aeolian Hall some time in January. As he has been re-engaged in the Metropolitan Opera House he will fulfill several performances and naturally in that repertoire which made him the admiration of the New York and Chicago audiences. While in Paris he appeared with striking successes in the "Barber of Seville" at the Lyrique, which performance was conducted by Maestro Polacco. He also expects to sing in Paris next Spring when presentations of various operas are reported as under plans. If the enterprise comes to a successful conclusion he is expected to sing in "Traviata," "Don Pasquale," "Elixir d'Amore," "Matrmonio Segreto" and other operas.

Harriet McConnell in Recital

There is a good crop of mezzo-sopranos and contraltos this season and one of the most remarkable voices is that of Harriet McConnell, who appeared in recital at Aeolian Hall on Thursday evening, November 27. The middle west and western people know more of her than the easterners knew when she appeared at her recital, which was practically her debut. Miss McConnell has been gifted by nature with a mezzo-contralto voice of native beauty and distinct quality. Her powerful organ knows no obstacles in any difficult song or operatic aria. Miss McConnell's voice is truly an exceptional human organ and she proved to be also an ideal interpreter of songs emanating from the various standard schools. Being musical and a musician she imbued her interpretations with the proper moods required either by the text or the composition. Her diction also is commendable. Miss McConnell has before her two choices to make. Either to embrace the opera field or the concert halls. Any way she chooses she is bound to conquer for the same reasons given above, as well as for her genial personality. A much too generous program, but an enjoyable one. It would be difficult to analyze every song, but briefly speaking they were all well interpreted and properly vocalized. She featured the following:

But the Lord is Mindful of His Own (from St. Paul)	Mendelssohn
Ah! Mio Cor	Handel
Il mio bel foco	Marcello
Le Miroir	Francmesnil
Oubli	Samuel Roussaean
Deun Etoiles	Cesar Cui

Louis Simmions' Pupil Sings and Is Commended by Miss Anne Morgan

The singing wave is taking great proportions. Not only professional singers but also pupils who expect to follow a career more or less successful are beginning to appear and give exhibitions of their abilities, which is also a proof of a teacher's competency. On November 23 Miss Bertha Harmon, dramatic soprano and an artist pupil of Mr. Simmions, appeared successfully at a concert given at the Strand Theater. This event was under the auspices of Miss Anne Morgan, who arranged it for the benefit of devastated France. Miss Harmon sang "Il est doux, il est bon" from "Herodiade" by Massenet. Her singing was commended in a letter of congratulation from Miss Anne Morgan, chairman of the American Committee for devastated France. A few days later she appeared at the Hotel Astor for the benefit of the Theater Club.

May Peterson Sings Witmark's Publications

May Peterson, the charming soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, at her appearance on October 22 at Raleigh, North Carolina, featured Frederick Vanderpool's popular song, "Heart Call," and Arthur Penn's "Smilin' Through." At this concert she was assisted by the excellent harpist, Salvatore de Stefano. Amparito Farrar also sang Vanderpool's "The Heart Call" at Reading, Pennsylvania, on November 17, under the auspices of the Musical Art Club. On this occasion Gantvwort's "Golden Crown" was also interpreted by the same soprano.

Mary Jordan in Recital

The excellent American contralto gave her annual recital at Aeolian Hall, Friday evening, November 28. Excellent phrasing, intelligent employment of her voice, clear diction and quality were in evidence in the interpretations of the songs she featured. In order to give a proof of versatility she presented a generous program, besides several encores which were the sequence of the public's applause. She was greeted by a very large audience, this proving her popularity as a recitalist. She featured songs by Felix Fourdrain, "La Chanson Des Cloches" (first time), "Fileuse" from "Gwendoline" (Emmanuel Chabrier), "La Vagabonde, (Ernest Bloch), "Le Jardin Des Rambous" (first time) (Pierre Alin), "Credo" (Alexandre Geroges), "Come Hither, Lyttle Childe" (Albert Spalding) (first time), "Wull Ye Come In Early Spring" (Dorset dialect) (John Alden Carpenter), "I passed by Your Window" (May Brahe), "Come Up, Come In With Streamers" (Carl Deis), "Kazoe-Uta" (Japanese Counting Song) (Koscak Yamada), "Komori-Uta" (Cradle Song) (Koscak Yamada), "Russalka" (Little Russian), "The Timid Lover" (Little Russian), "My Lord, What a Mornin'" (Negro Spirituals), "Balm in Gilead" (Negro Spirituals), "Hard Trials" (Harry T. Florence Hinkle is well known as a splendid oratorio singer, but her abilities are in no way only confined to sacred music. She can interpret songs of all the schools with unusual skill. Lack of space compelled a postponement of this review, but a good recital such as hers, given at Aeolian Hall on Monday afternoon, November 24, cannot be ignored. Her soprano voice is today just as beautiful as it was, the medium especially is one distinctive beautiful register. The upper is ringing and resonant, clear and pure. She began her recital with Haendel's "Angels Ever Bright and Fair" from "Jeptha." She followed with Donaudy's "Four Airs, in the Old Style" (first time) and proceded

MAESTRO DONATO PARADISO AND HIS ENGLISH OPERA

It may sound queer to our fellowmen that the foreign element in America has made a more strenuous propaganda for operas to be sung in English than many an American who derives the idea of presenting the operas in the vernacular. Naturally, the foreign element which is assimilating the American habits, customs, is propagating the presentation of works in the English language with a purpose of popularizing them among the masses. Notwithstanding his nativity, Maestro Donato Paradiso is not only the champion of opera in English, but he is at present organizing his own company with the purpose of bringing the operas to the hearts of the masses. His plan is justifiable at a time when American arts and its interpreters are endeavoring to gain the attention of the American public.

Mr. Paradiso wishes to announce that he is now making arrangements for the permanent establishment in the city of New York of English opera. It is his aim to give popular performances, which means popular prices for every music lover. I have no details to hand about the means and the ways of bringing his plan to a successful conclusion, but those wishing to be enlightened about the enterprise can communicate with him directly. Singers aspiring to an operatic career will be given voice trial. Those who will prove efficient for the work will receive a complete training. Mr. Paradiso hails from Milan, where he has been singing in opera and devoting his time to teaching also. He is established in New York, where he enjoys a large following. His pupils have appeared in various musical entertainments. He is one of the youngest, but very efficient vocal pedagogues.

Robert Schmitz Plays

One Polish pianist was heralded by some musical critic as being an ideal interpreter of Debussy. If this be true he should have heard Robert Schmitz play "La Cathedrale Engloutic" by Debussy and then . . . The program had it as Prelude, A minor. This performance took place at the Aeolian

ROBERT SCHMITZ

Hall on Saturday matinee, December 6, when Robert Schmitz made his season's appearance. The recital brought a program which was different than others. He began with "Tableaux d'une Exposition" by Moussorgsky. The technic displayed in this composition reminded one of the man who played simultaneously on four pianos. There is in this French pianist the force of the historical giant Ursus. Such wonderful agility, such powerful effects, only few masters of the keyboards exhibit in their recitals, and no one would suspect that he is capable of modulating, tempering and subduing his instrument, but this was in evidence when he played Debussy's "Reflets dans L'Eau." I never heard such a suggestive, colored and characteristic execution. Both "Pavane pour une Infante defunte" and "Toccata, E minor" were superb executions. He featured "Fete Dieu a Seville" and "Eritana" by Albaniz, also "Danse des Seizes" and "A Los Toros" by Turina. He returned to Debussy when he played "Three Etudes." The program was concluded with "Au Convent" (Borodine), and "Lesghinka" (Liapunoff). Indeed an unconventional program but a worthy one. The recital was attended by many notable pianists and at least one famous pianist contributed generously to the warm applause of a capacity house. The writer saw him do it and followed his example. Mr. Schmitz will be welcome to Aeolian Hall whenever he chooses to return.

He impersonated the Painter with great vocal beauty and brought also an improvement to his actions. Geraldine Farrar and Scotti were the other principals. Roberto Moranzoni conducted.

"L'Italiana in Algeri"

For the sake of operatic history, no one should blame the Metropolitan for having presented a work which was unknown to our generation, but for the sake of its music no one will regret its long rest. "L'Italiana in Algeri" was given in New York some time in 1856; since then Rossini's music enjoyed a healthy sleep and I am sure that after the Metropolitan has defrayed its scenic expenses, which proved costly, the opera will be sent back to the sleeping chambers. Rossini's score is infantile, even admirers of the "Barber" were bitterly disappointed. "L'Italiana in Algeri" is a miniature of the "Barber" but with a score that is too inferior, too monotonous and devoid of any originality. Bits of notes, fragments of sounds, lack of consistency and a poor text contribute to its dullness. The story is printed on another page of Music News. The action is nil, the orchestration is weak, the solos and ensemble music are mediocre. "L'Italiana in Algeri" is an insignificant bodyguard of "The Barber of Seville." The management selected a very excellent cast, but, even so, the opera was too glacial. Gabbriella Besanzoni as Isabella displayed again her superb contralto timbre, but the score lies too low on her beautiful organ. Why Rossini wrote his provincial female score for a contralto I don't know. Besanzoni was an adorable picture to the eye. De Luca as Taddeo acted gayly, but there were no Figaro bits in the singing because Rossini has provided none. He was again in fine voice and acted, what action there was, with spirit. Charles Hackett's tenor voice was delightful. He has proved again a master of interpreting the "light" operas. Millo Picco's baritone timbre was heard to the best of advantage in the part of Haly. What there was for him he did extremely well. Adamo Didur as Mustapha and Marie Sundelius as Elvira were both satisfactory. Kathleen Howard completed the cast. Temperamentally, Maestro Papi is perfectly adapted to Rossini's works and with his devotion he attempted to bring a bit of life by his energetic beat. There was some ballet, arranged by Rosina Galli. She danced it with her partner, Bonfiglio, but Galli never was a creative dancer. She is always agile, and good looking. The scenery was designed by Pogany and painted by James Fox. As I said, the scenery is elaborate and costly and so are the costumes, but some of the colors are too greenish and unattractive to the eye. The performance was attended by a capacity audience but the reception was mild. Even coal aplenty couldn't have warmed up the apathetic audience.

J. DE V.

"Il Trovatore"

Old "Trovatore" is still the beloved opera, if the large audience of the Saturday matinee is a criterion. The performance enlisted the services of the Canadian mezzo-contralto, Jeanne Gordon, who, some weeks ago, took a Saturday night audience by storm in a triumphant impersonation of the gypsy in the same opera. At her reappearance she confirmed the beautiful and lasting impression. If there is a more beautiful, ringing, and more superb quality of a mezzo-contralto voice than that of Miss Gordon's, we would like to listen to her. Miss Gordon acted Azucena with so much animation and conviction that the balance of the cast was outdistanced. Her impersonation was a careful and skilled interpretation. And what made her more conspicuous in the eyes of the critical listeners was the splendid use of her exceptional organ. No doubt Miss Gordon will be heard in many other roles, for with two Azucenas she establishes a name that is bound to carry all over the universe. Next in vocal honors was Guilo Crimi, who has gained many admirers by his clear and resonant tenor voice. He acted and sang Manrico with power and excellent effects. That Crimi can overcome the poor acoustics of the Metropolitan there was no doubt after the fiery rendition of "Di Quella Pira."

"Carmen"

You do not have to go to the Opera Comique of Paris to listen to a genuine orchestral rendition of "Carmen." The most felicitous choice in years is Mr. Gatti-Casazza's selection of Albert Wolff as conductor for his contemplated French repertory. On Thanksgiving matinee, Bizet's great opera was given before a very large audience. The honors were taken by the French conductor. No need to look into the musical dictionaries to find out the year of "Carmen's" premiere at the Metropolitan, for never has Bizet's music been so magnificently conducted as on this day. No conductor at the Metropolitan has ever put in so much life, vigor, flavor as Albert Wolff. This French conductor is not an absent-minded musician for he never drowns the cast with loud and unwelcome noise. Chorus, artists and orchestra are directed simultaneously by a hand that is real magic. "Carmen" was revived, as it is being every season, but "Carmen" this time was the kind that makes the Opera Comique of Paris nearer to us than at any time. Skill, knowledge, musicianship, authoritative, effective, brilliant, sparkling, all these were employed to make the performance eventful, at least from an orchestral point of view. Ensemble and all went with animation. Take one instance; the quintet of the second act, was capitally directed and capitally interpreted by the artists, though not all of them were first class singers. Mr. Wolff seems to inspire even singers with limited vocal powers. It was a triumph, a glory, a single-handed conquest for Albert Wolff. Bravos to Mr. Gatti, who deserves more credit this year for having selected so many good elements among the newcomers. There is a great improvement at the Broadway house and we welcome it. Farrar as Carmen was in better vocal shape, Martinelli as Don Jose showed fatigue, for Tuesday night he sang Rhadames at Philadelphia. Marie Sundelius was satisfactory as Micaela. Robert Couzinou's "Escamillo" was his best performance since the beginning of the season. Octave Dua as Remendado was capital and Ananian was also superb as Dancaire. Rothier's Zuniga is always brilliant. Rita Fornia and Mellish were the two gypsies.

LUCIE LENOX STUDIOS

Frances Coates, costume song interpreter, will present "Musical Etchings," Old English, Dutch and Scotch at the Austin Woman's Club Monday, December 15. After Miss Coates' program at the Men's Club of River Forest Mr. T. H. Holmes wrote to Oak Leaves: "Miss Coates is a most charming entertainer, a clever mimic and a sweet singer. Every one was loath to have her curtsey herself off the platform." Among the bookings made for this charming young artist by Mrs. Lenox are recitals at the Hamilton Park Woman's Club, the North End Woman's Club and the Woodlawn Club.

Miss Harriet Krauth is repeating, by request, the "Chinese Mother Goose and Other Songs," which she so beautifully rendered at the Little Theater last Saturday, at Grace Episcopal Church in Oak Park this (Friday) evening, December 12.

Miss Harriet Geiger, one of Mrs. Lenox's younger singers with a lovely soprano, will appear in "Toy Tunes of Holland" (costume) at the Little Theater December 20. Miss Geiger sang "Japanese Lyrics" for the benefit entertainment at the home of Mrs. Kries on Washington boulevard Tuesday afternoon. Miss Winifred Tompkins accompanies.

Rockwell—Helen Rockwell, soprano, will give a farewell recital at the Ballroom of the North Shore Hotel in Evanston on Monday evening, December 15. Miss Rockwell is moving to Colorado.

ROBERT SCHMITZ

The Distinguished French Pianist in a Brilliant Exposition of a novel program exhibits his various gifts at the AEOLIAN HALL ON DECEMBER 6

Following are the press comments of the New York press:

"E. Robert Schmitz appeared in his proper guise as an artist before a matinee audience that not only filled Aeolian Hall but found keen interest in his new works of the composers of France."—New York Times, December 7.

"The audience, which included many local musicians and music students, was large. The player has an admirable technic and an intelligent grasp of the music he performs. He is evidently a player of high artistic ideals, and all his work is imbued with sincerity."—W. J. Henderson in New York Sun, December 7.

"Mr. Schmitz is essentially intelligent in his playing. Mr. Schmitz is an admirable musician, thoughtful, imaginative. He asks his audience to listen to him as an interpreter, and in this role he is supremely successful."—New York Tribune, December 7.

"Mr. Schmitz has a technic extraordinarily brilliant and fluent. His work commends itself to serious consideration."—New York Herald, December 7.

"Mr. Schmitz proved to be a pianist of high order."—New York World, December 7.

"E. Robert Schmitz, a musician of surpassing scholarship as well as a pianist of consummate skill and intelligence, gave another of his delightful recitals before an expectant audience, attracted by his past performances and more than satisfied with the beautiful playing which he gave to another well-chosen and edifying program."—New York Morning Telegraph, December 7.

Lack of space compels the elimination of other similar comments of the New York press.

CHRISTINE LANGENHAN
In the South Among the Cotton Bales

NORRISTOWN, PENN.

The second meeting of the Octave Club took place at the Ersine Club house on the afternoon of November 19. The meeting, which was a musical and dramatic entertainment, was presided over by Miss Nelson C. Cressman. The program was opened with a melodramatic number by Miss Mildred Barrah Crawford, who recited the beautiful poem of Alfred Tennyson called "Enoch Arden." The musical fragments by Richard Strauss were sung by Harry A. Sykes. Following this number there was some community singing. Mrs. Frederick Weber and Mrs. Robert M. Yahn delighted the audience in a piana duet by Johann Strauss which consisted of "Voices of Spring." Miss Alvin Beyer gave some soprano solos exquisitely sung. They were "I Can't Help Loving Thee," by Clayton Johns; "A Birthday," by R. Huntington Woodman, and "Dear Little Boy of Mine," by Ernest R. Ball. Mrs. Hatfield gave appropriate accompaniment to the piano. The final number consisted of "Home Sweet Home," directed by Miss Marion G. Spangler. We are promised some musical entertainments and I will report them at the proper time.

THE CASINO MUNICIPAL AT CANNES, FRANCE

On December 11 the Casino Municipal opened with a series of opera performances. "Manon," "La Mascotte," "Thais," "Lakme" and other operas will be presented. The orchestra conductors are Andre Messager, not unknown to American music lovers, and Reynaldo Hahn, the composer. The season is under the management of Messrs. Cornuche and Fichfet. Details about the performance will follow in the near future.

Myrtle Masonic Temple—A new series of orchestra concerts at Myrtle Masonic Temple has been begun with an orchestra under direction of George Dasch. At the concert of last Friday evening the numbers were the March from "Boabdil" (Moszkowski), the "Peer Gynt" Suite (Grieg), Andante from the Fifth Symphony (Beethoven), "Reverie" (Waldeteufel), Meditation from "Thais" (Massenet), Intermezzos from "The Jewels of the Madonna" (Wolf-Ferrari), Serenade (Drigo) and a "Scotch Jig" from the Ballet "Henry the Eighth" (Saint-Saens).

EMMA ROBERTS IN THE SOUTH

Emma Roberts, the New York contralto, has been repeating in Greenville, S. C., and Raleigh, N. C., the great successes which she had last spring at the Richmond Festival and in Norfolk, where she sang with the Russian Symphony Orchestra. On November 25 she gave a recital at the Grand Opera House, in the Greenville Lyceum course, to an audience which brought out the "Standing Room Only" sign. In reviewing the concert, the Greenville Daily News said in part:

"The concert by Emma Roberts was all that was claimed for it, and Miss Roberts gave one of the most delightful programs possible, much to the delight of an 'S. R. O.' house. Miss Roberts' voice is one of great power, and at the same time is one of great beauty and smoothness. All her registers showed a mastery of tonal color. Her diction and phrasing were exquisite in nature. She has the power of making one understand a song. She is highly endowed musically and mentally and puts not only tonal color and phrasing in her songs, but also intelligence and heart."

On Thanksgiving night Miss Roberts sang at the Academy of Music, Raleigh, and again gained the unstinted approval of the critic of the Raleigh News and Observer, who wrote:

"It was a powerful voice, swelling easily to tremendous volume, yet retaining the soft, smooth tones of the contralto, and again dropping down to the lower register with still that smoothness, that softness and adherence to contralto characteristics. But even without a great voice, Miss Roberts' interpretative genius would mark her apart as a gifted singer."

LUCILE WYNEKOOP AND G. MAGNUS SHUTZ AT THE EDGEWATER BEACH HOTEL

The twilight musical of November 23, under the management of Miller, Resseguie & Tufts, was given by Lucile M. Wynekoop, mezzo-soprano, and G. Magnus Shutz, basso-cantante, with Sylvia Bargman, accompanist.

Mrs. Wynekoop, whose lovely voice and charming personality always win her audience, gave two groups of songs and an aria with a variety of style and tone color that was a delight to hear. She is at all times artistic and in each song gives a message to her listeners.

Mr. Shutz, basso, an artist who has been heard many times in Chicago, again displayed his voice to advantage in his two groups and an aria, showing beautiful quality of tone, interpretative ability and sound musicianship, which make his singing worth while.

Both artists were cordially received and were ably assisted by Sylvia Bargman at the piano. She is well fitted for fine pianistic work.

JOHN QUINE

Baritone

Again Wins Approval of New York Critics in Second New York Recital, Aeolian Hall, November 17, 1919

AN AGREEABLE RECITAL OF SONGS AT AEOLIAN HALL BY MR. JOHN QUINE

(By H. E. KREHBIEL, New York Tribune)

"His voice is of fine quality, and his use of it, as with his treatment of text and music, gave evidence of the possession of intelligence and sensibility of an order which it is a pleasure to welcome."

DEBUT RECITAL—JANUARY 17, 1919

JOHN QUINE HEARD FOR FIRST TIME—YOUNG BARITONE HOLDS INITIAL RECITAL AT THE AEOLIAN HALL

"It is a pleasure to welcome a young singer who offers so much towards the enjoyment of lovers of lyric interpretations. Mr. Quine has a voice of good quality, capable of delicate musical moderation and pleasing expression. His pronunciation was admirable, especially in the purity of the vowels. But still more important were the youngster's style and taste. He delivered each song with a nice sense of its musical character, and in his interpretative methods he displayed appreciation and a knowledge of effect."—W. J. Henderson, New York Sun.

"A young singer of exceptional taste and intelligence. Possessing a baritone voice of good quality . . . he uses it artistically. He also possesses a strongly dramatic sense."—New York Herald.

JOHN QUINE'S NOTABLE RECITAL

"Immediately wrote himself down as a concert singer of importance. His is a voice of good natural ability. Over it he has achieved a control that is altogether admirable, for he can realize a wide variety of tone and color. He has also a rare command of his head voice. His an artistic attainment. He is one of those rare singers who gets his songs over."—Brooklyn Daily News.

"He has shown great diligence, and the working up of his voice is beginning to reap the reward of his labors. The quality of it is light, but it is flexible, and he uses it skillfully."—Sylvester Rawling, New York Evening World.

"John Quine made a good impression at his first recital."—New York Times.

"Mr. Quine possesses a good voice, particularly pleasing in its middle and lower register; commendable method, finesse and style. His diction was admirable."—New York American.

"Mr. Quine's very pleasing baritone voice showed much flexibility in a varied program. He sang with sincerity, and there was a sort of warm affection in his interpretation of Massenet's 'Chanson de la Touraine.' His diction was agreeably clear."—Katharine Lane, New York Evening Mail.

"He sang much that was graceful, combining the representative schools, to make a varied and pleasing program."—New York Sun.

"He made a successful debut."—New York Globe.

SECOND ANNUAL RECITAL NOVEMBER 17, 1919

Quine's Song Recital Pleases Audience

"What was said of him last winter could be well reprinted today. His intelligence and musical taste were again made manifest, and his recital was worthy of commendation."—Morning Sun.

JOHN QUINE'S SONG RECITAL

"No one who had the good fortune to be present could have listened even to one group without yielding to the spell of his sweet voice and simplicity of manner. Mr. Quine's whole French group was excellent; his diction was admirable."—Morning Herald.

QUINE'S VOICE PLEASES

"He has a light, pleasing voice of much resonance, youth with skill and finesse."—Morning World.

"He has a light voice which he used with taste and an appreciation of style and in old and modern French pieces."—The Times.

"John Quine entertained a considerable audience at Aeolian Hall with an interesting program well sung and of sufficient diversity and value to satisfy all the expectations of his hearers."—Morning Telegraph.

"His agreeable voice, his clear enunciation and his understanding of songs made him worth hearing."—Evening World.

"He sang agreeably and with taste; his diction was good both in French and English, and he displayed decided interpretative ability."—Tribune.

"Mr. Quine is favorably remembered from last season, and his singing yesterday was such as to maintain his reputation."—Evening Journal.

"The intervening months have rounded his voice and given it a good, warm resonance, and have improved his style to a point where it is highly pleasurable. Yesterday's audience found it so, it was evident, and made him repeat a number of his choices."—Evening Sun.

"His singing has the prime merit of intelligent delivery; a song in his hands is a text to be conveyed to his audience and not a means for tonal effusiveness."—Brooklyn Eagle.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

A dramatic recital will be given Saturday afternoon, December 13, at Kimball Hall by advanced pupils of the School of Expression.

Advanced pupils of Letitia Kempster Barnum of the Chicago School of Expression will present W. B. Yeats' play, "The Land of the Heart's Desire," the following taking part: Ruth Bartholomew, Jane Chunn, Miriam Gordon, Jessie Daggett, Dorothy Estabrook and Constance Penney.

Advanced pupils of Miss A. Louise Suess will appear in the one-act farce, "The Happy Day" as follows: Mrs. Boman, Miss Kirchner, Miss Branyan, Miss Walters, Miss Benson, Miss Curtis, Miss Tuck. Miss Fritz will recite "Pauline Parlona," by Aldrich, and Mrs. Wagner, "If I Were a King," by McCarthy.

Members of Adolf Weidig's ensemble classes will present a program of chamber music Saturday afternoon, December 20, at Kimball Hall.

Renzina Teninga and John Sheehy, who appeared in joint recital last Saturday afternoon at Kimball Hall, conclusively proved their ability to enter the professional class. Miss Teninga displayed remarkable powers as an organist, presenting an exacting program with absolute command of all technical requirements and fine artistic discriminations.

Ravenswood—The first concert of the season by the orchestra, under direction of George Dasch, in the Ravenswood Community Series, was given at the M. E. Church in Ravenswood on December 4, when a fine program of orchestral numbers was received with much acclaim, and there was also a brilliant success for Anna Burmeister, soprano, who was soloist and used as her numbers the Aria from "I Pagliacci" and a group of short numbers.

DASCH ENSEMBLE AT FULLERTON HALL

How the people do love music and how they crowd the places where it is available! The five dollar habitues were at the Auditorium last Sunday, the intermediates at the recitals, and that great big, splendid, honest, self-respecting group of hungry ones crowded to overflowing the two concerts at Fullerton Hall, where the admission is but 10 cents. And the quietest, most intense moments of the afternoon were those when Mr. Dasch unfolded the beauties of a slow movement from a Beethoven piano Sonata which he had arranged fascinatingly for his ensemble. He has done something effective and convincing and it won immediate, decided approval. The other numbers were equally satisfying. He shades the work of his small body of players, secures charm and melodic line always, and knows how to suit his program to the needs of his audience. These concerts are of the most important of the winter's cycle of events. And Mr. Dasch is growing along with his opportunity and his following.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

Refinement of Tone and Delicacy of Touch

Are the Distinguishing Features of the

Baldwin Piano

IT is these features that lend confidence to an artist when playing a recital. Nothing is so inspiring to even the amateur as the sympathetic tone and the wonderfully responsive action of the Baldwin.

Honored by Greatest Awards at International Expositions

FORREST LAMONT

Tenor, Chicago Opera Association

Scored Great Success in "An American Ace" with the Chicago Mendelssohn Club

Gino Marinuzzi

Hailed as Great Musical Genius as Conductor of Chicago Opera Association

He is both masterful and magnetic. Everything was held in strict proportion by a strong hand; the wave of melody ebbed and flowed unhesitatingly and certainly. At times there was the merest whisper of tone from orchestra and singers, at another there would be a most inspiriting climax. He is a great director and a great musician. They occur infrequently, and they are worth cherishing when they do.—Chicago Daily Journal.

Mr. Marinuzzi was again at the helm, and the Massenet score became a thing of delicate beauty, of sensuous charm, and captivating grace under his masterly baton.—Chicago Daily Tribune.

Dominating the entire performance, however, and towering over everything else in point of relative importance came the conducting of Mr. Marinuzzi, who on this occasion made his bow to Chicago and America.—Chicago Examiner.

MARINUZZI'S TRIUMPH

And now, in closing, let me record a triumph of the evening—the scholarly direction by Marinuzzi.

The new conductor is a savant and a wizard with the baton. He makes no display. He is not the familiar whirl of gestures. He wilts no collars.

But he is a tremendous force. Quiet, perfectly poised, he conducted the entire score without notes, making his potency felt in every compelling gesture, every glance.—Chicago American.

Gino Marinuzzi was at the baton, a great conductor at the head of a fine performance. It was a study in the art of conducting to hear how the orchestra was constantly flexible, rising and falling in its own waves, creating its own climaxes, never overwhelming the singers, yet always vital.—Chicago Daily Journal.

"Tosca" came to hearing at the Auditorium last evening for the first time this season and proved a presentation of excellence. Mr. Marinuzzi was again at the helm and as usual unfolded the orchestral score in all its subtleties and beauties, conducting with the fine discretion and sensibility that characterize all he does and yet falling short in none of the climaxes. The manner in which he sweeps his instrumentalists up to tonal and dynamic heights and yet at no time overpowers or obscures the voices of the singers is as masterly as it is exceptional.—Chicago Daily Tribune.

Editorial

AN ASTOUNDING EDITORIAL FROM THE TRIBUNE

Mobbing Kreisler

The hounding of Fritz Kreisler, the violinist who fought in the Austrian army, must give decent Americans a pain and a sense of shame. From day to day there are reports of his interrupted concerts, of the violence threatened him and the humiliation put upon him. This is nationalism in its most abject form.

Kreisler, as an Austrian, was caught in the mobilization of the Austrian reserve. He was wounded by a Russian lance. The world is the better that the lance did not kill him. This wonderful artist can give pleasure to thousands of Americans and is trying to do so. He is a man of fine character, a chivalrous man who has not been changed by the fact that his country went to war or that he was a soldier in that war.

We know that Americans are not the only people who could produce fanatics to mob a man because they hated his country, but we wish that this country were one that could not do it.

Music News disagrees in toto with the above, which was printed as an editorial in the Chicago Tribune last week.

Certainly, America is big enough and great enough to accept the music of the whole world at its face value, and we are today accepting and judging on its merits all that is offered to us.

But—are Germany and Austria to pay no price whatever for the error, the stupidity and the endless cruelty of the great war?

Are we to accept here citizens of those countries on the same basis as the citizens of our Allies or our own people?

Emphatically, No.

Music News has not one iota of prejudice against any German or Austrian who wishes to live in this country and to become an American citizen, but we insist on the latter step if recognition on our concert platform is desired.

Artistic merit has nothing to do with the case. Kreisler is an Austrian (and a soldier during the war on the side of our enemies) and he has expressed no intention of becoming an American citizen.

Are there not enough American artists to fill our concert positions and absorb our attention, and if not, are there not enough of the artists of our Allies to meet every requirement?

Verily, Yes.

AMERICAN WORKS APLENTY

If any one in attendance at the concert of the Mendelssohn Club Concert at Orchestra Hall on last Thursday evening is in doubt as to the possibility of getting together a program of all-American compositions, he is indeed a difficult person to convince.

The entire program was made up of pieces written especially for, or dedicated to, the Chicago Mendelssohn Club and the list included some extremely fine works.

"An American Ace" (Stevenson), proved to be a piece of work at once vivid and musical, thrillingly effective as well as solidly worth while and altogether comparable with the very best work that has been sent us from Europe in many years. And as sung by Lamont, an American tenor, it was thrilling.

It suited our temperament and our nationalistic feeling too, and in the complete artistry in which it was presented by the Mendelssohn Club and the American soloists employed for the solo scores, it was brilliant indeed.

"The wounds I might have healed.
The human sorrow and smart!
And yet it was never in my mind
To play so ill a part!
But evil is wrought by want of thought,
As well as by want of heart!"

—Thomas Hood

America Needs American Propaganda for American Musicians on Concert Stage

The following interview with Warren Proctor was written for the Quebec Press by George H. Pickering:

"If I had a million dollars I would use it to exploit worthy American singers so that they might have an equal chance with the singers of foreign birth to interpret their art before the public." This was uttered by none other than Warren Proctor, the gifted American tenor of the Gallo Comic Opera Company, who graciously received the writer in his dressing room after the performance of the "Chimes of Normandy" on Tuesday night at the Providence Opera House. "The young American singer is not dealt with justly," added Mr. Proctor as he fastened a bar pin into his soft collar, "for preference is given the foreign singer nine times out of ten. Why, an impresario in Chicago once told me he would rather have a 'rotten' Italian tenor any time than a good American one. If the young artist of American birth and American training hasn't the funds to finance his career he has no chance at all; he can only struggle along with very little hope of advancement."

Mr. Proctor's theory is that American audiences have not the confidence in their own singers that the audiences of other nationalities have so strongly. They prefer to go into ecstasies over some second rate artist who has been acclaimed in Milan or Paris, while the American singer is forced to go without even a hearing.

What America needs, according to Mr. Proctor, is American propaganda in behalf of Americans who can and are doing things on the concert stage and in the operatic field quite as well as their foreign contemporaries.

"Were you not at one time a member of the Chicago Opera Company?" asked the writer.

"Yes," replied the young tenor, "but there was no chance at all! Nothing but small parts were assigned me and I grew weary of subordinating myself to singers who were often inferior."

This was the cause for Mr. Proctor's emigration to New York, where he was engaged to sing the leading tenor roles with the Gallo Company for a limited number of weeks. He leaves the company in a fortnight to make his New York debut with Madame Luisa Tetrazzini, November 23, and from thence he is to make a coast to coast tour with the famous diva.

Mr. Proctor was born in Iowa and received his training entirely in this country. He possesses a lyric tenor voice, brilliant in the upper register due to an abundance of overtones, and sings with a smooth, velvety legato which reveals a lovely beauty

LUCIE LENOX PUPIL SCORES BIG SUCCESS

At the Little Theater on Michigan avenue last Saturday morning lights were dim and the 11 o'clock ruling was holding sway generally, yet the theater itself was crowded and all eagerly awaiting the first program of the day. It should have begun at 11, but the never-disappointing Bissell pianos had not arrived, and after long waiting Manager Clement "started things," e'en though there was lacking that music which always carried the picture-story, the song or dance upon its creative current. But one among that number lost not her patience nor her art, and she was the singer of "Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes" and other songs—Miss Harriet Krauth of Oak Park. This young singer went onto the stage and without a note of accompaniment sang her group of six songs and did their incidental dancing—and carried the restless audience by storm into an atmosphere of delight, making them forget their previous impatience and receiving herself an ovation of applause.

When one remembers the poise which Mrs. Lenox teaches from the very first lessons it is not surprising that one of her pupils should so successfully meet what would have crushed many a professional artist.

Miss Krauth is but seventeen, and is singing charmingly, and we prophesy for her a brilliant career. After the program many visitors brought congratulations to Mrs. Lenox, who was teaching in her Fine Arts Building studio at the time.

The 3 o'clock program was in perfect accord, with Miss Winifred Tompkins at the piano.

FORREST LAMONT

Here is a personality and an artistic entity worthy of the admiration of all his countrymen.

He is among that valiant throng of American singers who have entered the operatic life in open competition with the whole foreign field and has, by his personality, intelligence and artistry, made a place for himself comparable to the best of them.

For three or four years Mr. Lamont has been one of the most dependable and one of the most popular tenors of the Chicago Opera Association. It is probably the fact that he has sung a longer list of roles than any other man singer of the company, and in everything he has undertaken he has scored complete success.

Often at very short notice this exceedingly dependable singer has gone on and sung the most exacting roles, and whether in a part for which he had been long announced or in one in which as a favor to the management he had accepted on a few hours' notice, he has proved himself invariably a master of routine and style no less than the possessor, always, of a voice of the utmost musical charm and musicianly value.

. . . . . .

And not alone is Mr. Lamont so popular and so successful at the Opera House, but also by his appearance with the Mendelssohn Club last Thursday evening he proved himself incomparable in concert also.

He was heard, naturally, in some operatic arias and also, quite naturally, he scored a big success in these.

But the surprise of the evening came at the close, when he came forward to sing the tenor solo score of the new piece by Frederick Stevenson, "An American Ace," and by the intelligent musicianship displayed as well as by the opulence of voice and the intensity of dramatic feeling proved himself a master of the situation.

"An American Ace" is a wonderful piece of work—nothing finer has come to us in many a day from any source—and Mr. Lamont proved himself, in the big part of the composition, to be a very great singing artist as well as a superb actor.

. . . . . .

Mr. Lamont is a most companionable man to meet and talk to. He has no affectations, no fads and no fancies.

He is just a straight-away American, who has devoted himself to his art and who, while he retains all the charm and force of the American man at his best, is also in artistry so finished and so altogether effective as to hold his own in competition with the best that the world can produce of singing-actors.

CHARLES E. WATT.

Carlo Galeffi, the Remarkable New Baritone of the Chicago Opera Association

By CHARLES E. WATT

Carlo Galeffi is just as fine looking and just as interesting while being interviewed in his apartments at the Congress Hotel as he is when on the stage at the Auditorium and, as all opera-goers of this season know, he is intensely magnetic and thoroughly artistic in the last named place.

Since our season began he has appeared in such diverse parts as that of Renato, the jealous husband in "Masked Ball," the sedate Germont Sr. of "La Traviata," the wonderful figure of the Jester in "Rigoletto," the splendid character part of Michale in "Il Tabarro," and the romping Gianni Schicchi in the opera of the same name, as well as the insouciant Barber in Rossini's gleeful "Barber of Seville," and in every one of these parts he has shown himself a consummate actor and a beautiful singer.

His courtliness in "The Masked Ball" made of him a most impressive and handsome figure, his adaptability and originality shone forth in "Rigoletto," and his gayety and abandon made of the new Puccini farce, as also of the old Barber, wonderfully attractive pictures.

In "The Masked Ball" his presentation of "Eri Tu" was at such a point of vocal beauty as to mark him a very great singing artist; in "Rigoletto" his handling of the difficult and elaborate score, especially where in duets it came in contact with the Gilda of Galli-Curci, was masterly, and in all the other operas he has shown steadily and consistently a rarely fine singing voice, excellent technic and a musicianship which places him in the very front rank of the company.

We had heard a great deal of Galeffi before his arrival here, but his real worth was still to be determined and Chicago, always able to judge for herself and knowing exactly how to express to an artist the fact that he is well liked, has shown this great singer in no uncertain way that he is very much appreciated here and that we will hope to retain him indefinitely in our company.

Carlo Galeffi is one of the very few Italian singers who went into actual service during the war, and he has to his credit three and a half years of real fighting at the front.

He is an unusually fine appearing man (as all who have seen him on the stage will testify) and observed at close range is most agreeable and entertaining.

Except for one appearance in New York some seven years ago, in "Traviata," his career has been made entirely abroad.

He created the leading baritone role in "Isabeau" and those in "Il Tabarro" and "Gianni Schicchi," these latter having had their premiere performance in Rome two years ago.

His repertoire is practically limitless and includes the leading baritone roles in "Isabeau," "Il Tabarro," "Gianni Schicchi," "Masked Ball," "Barber of Seville," "Traviata," "Nebucco," "Ernani," "I Pagliacci," "Favorita," "William Tell," "Parsifal," "Love of Three Kings," "L'Africaine," "Rigoletto," "Lohengrin" and "Othello."

He has to his credit resounding successes at Petrograd, Milan (La Scala), and in the leading opera houses of France, Spain and Portugal.

A Revelation as Figaro in The Barber of Seville

In the title role, Carlo Galeffi gave us the best Figaro heard here in years.

There is no better impersonation than the dash and gayety of his own. His voice is a smooth, richly warm organ, of which an agreeable element is the easy linking of the low, medium and high registers.

His production is a marvel of ease and evenness. He gave us some beautiful low A naturals and a high A natural in his "Largo al Factotum," which is, for a baritone, a feat of some consequence. Of course, his success with the audience was great. — Chicago Evening American.

. . . . and with Mme. Galli-Curci an ideal Rosina, with Tito Schipa in a role absolutely fitted for him, and with Galeffi the best Figaro heard in years, not to mention the old doctor.—Chicago Herald-Examiner.

Carlo Galeffi made a brilliant Barber both in his singing of the music and playing the part. One could easily understand how so capable and insinuating a person would have had in his fingers the threads of every intrigue of Seville. —Chicago Evening Post.

Carlo Galeffi appeared as Figaro, likewise moving his role up to an unaccustomed plane. He knew how to sing the music; he also knew how to act the part, making Figaro youthful, vital, shrewd, the very picture of the good-humored, keen, graceless plotter of the text.—Chicago Daily Journal.

GALEFFI AS THE BARBER

Galeffi's Figaro is a good humored, pleasant, intrigant, quick in action and resourceful and also commendable vocally, though not distinguished. He gave a fine, though not impressive, rendition of the "Largo al Factotum," and his singing throughout was meritorious.

The Figaro of Mr. Galeffi was the delight of the afternoon. His fine baritone and his schooling fit him for excellent rendition of the music of the part, and he acted it with the rollicking good humor, the suggestion of infinite resourcefulness, and the grace and lightness which it demands. It was a portrayal recalled with true pleasure.—The Chicago Tribune.

STORIES OF THE OPERA

"The Birthday of the Infanta"

By John Alden Carpenter. (A new ballet pantomime.)

Not the least among the many sensations planned for the coming opera season will be the new ballet pantomime by the Chicago composer, John Alden Carpenter. It will be called "The Birthday of the Infanta," and is based on Oscar Wilde's tale. The poetic story tells of a misshapen fantastic, Pedro, who dances happily at the birthday of the Infanta, amid plaudits, only to discover his own terrible grotesqueness. Adolph Bolm, famous both as a mime and art director, will appear as Pedro, assisted by Ruth Page, Margaret Leeraas, Caird Leslie and Alexander Oumansky. The ballet as a whole will offer many delightful opportunities for the groups of merry children who gather at the party. Robert Edmond Jones, considered by many as the American wizard of light and costume effects, will take charge of the scenery, costumes and properties, while Mr. Bolm will stage the production.

Mr. Carpenter's music has more than once been written for exquisitely chosen poetry. His sound musicianship, his delicate refinement, his broad culture, his poetic insight and his wealth of lovely sound, have made him a master musician and composer, and a truly great representative of all that is best in American music and American traditions.

The first scene of "The Birthday of the Infanta" is laid in the garden of the royal palace of Spain. There is a terrace at the back of the stage, leading to which are two staircases, right and left. The occasion is the birthday of the royal Infanta.

The little Princess, dressed in a costume of the Velasquez period, emerges from the palace alone. She is sad and depressed. She is convinced that her birthday has been forgotten. But she is interrupted by her old and ample nurse who comes to prepare her for The Great Surprise. Almost at once the children, her birthday guests, begin to arrive — in twos, in fours, and finally in one gay and noisy flock. They run, they dance, they play. At the climax of their excitement a trumpet, a signal, is heard from behind the scene. Eager curiosity! Something is going to happen! A strange procession marches upon the stage. First come two enormous Major-Domos, with clothes and gesture, bizarre and alike. They are followed by a file of solemn servants, each bearing a birthday gift, covered with mysterious wrappings, but large and satisfying.

The spectacle begins. First there are gypsy dancers, followed by a juggler and a tight-rope walker, a curious pair, the one tall and meagre, the other short and much too fat for his delicate profession. Then follows a bull fight, the best kind of all, a make-believe one with boys on hobby horses and a wonderful bull in plush.

Then comes the climax of the party. A weird and fabulous creature is brought in. He has been caught in the forest and appears grotesque and misshapen. He is the last offering at the feast. At first he is timid and shy. His dance is one of strangely shifting moods, of fear and confidence. But in the end he achieves a dance of wild and absorbing abandon. The children applaud widly, and the Princess in her excitement throws her handkerchief to the fantastic. He is filled with extraordinary emotion. He wonders if it is a sign that she has found him beautiful. He wonders if, maybe, she loves him.

The cook now comes out, a great fat creature, carrying a birthday cake with sixteen candles. There is great excitement among the children and they follow cook into the palace. Pedro, the fantastic, cannot bear to be left alone. He follows and is repulsed by the Major-Domos. It is growing dark, so he clambers up to the palace windows. The scene changes, but the music does not stop and almost at once Pedro is seen entering one of the palace chambers. It is gloomy. He can barely see. Suddenly he sees something coming towards him. He stops. It stops. Pedro has never seen a reflection, but suddenly the terrifying consciousness comes over him that this monstrous, grotesque image may be his own. He holds up the handkerchief, and lo! it, too, appears before him. This is the last blow. He recalls with inner agony the effect he must have made on the Princess. He repeats his dance, only in perverted form, in the way he thinks it must have seemed to her, and he falls, broken-hearted, and dies. The children are seen in the background passing the door, as they play some game. Finally they come in, but they do not see the prostrate form. But the Princess enters and at once detects the huddled shape of Pedro lying in the shadow to one side. She steals up quietly to his side and kneels. She makes a mute appeal. Finally she touches the handkerchief in his hand, but, finding no response, starts back in horror and slowly steals away.

"L'Heure Espagnole" (The Spanish Hour)

The Chicago Opera Association has added a one-act French opera to its list of interesting novelties for the coming season. "L'Heure Espagnole" (The Spanish Hour), a one-act opera, was produced with great success at the Opera Comique, Paris, on May 19, 1911, and was performed with tremendous eclat at Covent Garden last summer, with a cast that included Pauline Donalda and the fine artist, Maguenat. The action lasts hardly more than forty-five minutes. The poem is by Franc-Nohain and the music by Maurice Ravel, the modern French impressionist. The opera takes place at Toledo, in the eighteenth century.

The scene passes in the shop of Torquemada, an absent-minded shop keeper. It is his day for attending the public clocks, and it is the one day of the week when his wife, Concepcion, with her husband away, can hope to enjoy a bit of freedom. But it so happens that as the clockmaker is going, Ramiro, a muleteer, enters to have his watch repaired. Friend Husband asks him please to wait. In despair, the wife wonders what to do with this unexpected intruder, and he, quite as much in despair, and not knowing what to talk about, offers to carry to her room one of the large clocks which Torquemada has just declared to be too heavy to carry.

Enter Gonzalve, a lover. He is hidden in the remaining clock during Ramiro's absence. There follows an amusing interchange of clocks, and Gonzalve is carried by the unsuspecting muleteer across the threshold of milady's room. Enter lover, Inigo, the banker. He, too, is hidden in a clock, and there follows an interchange of clocks and lovers. But the muleteer, by his prowess and strength, has won the admiration of the faithless wife, and at length she asks him to go to her room "without a clock." He does so. Enter the clockmaker, to find the two dejected lovers hidden in his clocks, and enter also the wife, and Ramiro!

AN UNUSUAL CONCERT AND A PRONOUNCED SUCCESS

Unusual to the last extreme was the concert given at Kimball Hall on Sunday afternoon by Mme. Gilderoy Scott, contralto, and Miss May Mukle, cellist, and just as pronounced in its success.

The event was under the direction of Nelly Aylward, a new impresario in Chicago, and she is to be congratulated on her skill and acumen.

MISS MAY MUKLE

May Mukle, an English player of the unusual solo instrument, the cello, has just returned from abroad and has, in New York and elsewhere, created a furor by the beauty of her musicianship and the charm of her solo playing.

Chicago willingly adds herself to the list of ardent admirers of the Mukle art and hopes for many repetitions of the pleasure of Sunday afternoon.

The program, as intimated above, was an exceedingly "different" one.

Boccherini, a most graceful Italian composer of the Eighteenth Century, was drawn upon for his Sonata in A, as Miss Mukle's initial number, and this she played with classic simplicity and constantly fine tone.

Following came the serious and very highly colored "Variations sur un theme rococo," by Tschaikowsky, and proved a most exhiliarating example of Russian cello literature, while the last group introduced a virtuosic piece by Popper, the prince of writers for the instrument; an arrangement by the eccentric Percy Grainger of a Sussex Christmas Carol, and two delightful gems out of Miss Mukle's own brain.

MME. GILDEROY SCOTT

The first of these was "The Light Wind," and was graceful, soothing and altogether musical. The second was "The Hamadryad," and in this Miss Mukle caused us to see the little tree creature in all his shy modesty and graceful movement.

All this (and some suave encores) was played with a wealth of beautiful cello tone, a sweep of real musicianship and a sense of song valuations and harmonic and canonic intuitions which were remarkable and just as beautifully impressive and pleasing as it was remarkable.

Mme. Gilderoy Scott, who has been heard in Chicago considerably the past few years, is now, to the regret of a wide circle of friends and admirers, about to take up her residence in the West, but the hope is a very sincere one, after hearing her fine work of Sunday afternoon, that she will return to Chicago for public appearances often.

Like Miss Mukle, she chose her program from widely varied sources and had in mind throughout the very highest ideals.

She favored the Russian School in her exquisite reading of Rachmaninoff's "Lilacs," and in the wonderful song of Tschaikowsky, "None but the Lonely Heart," she disclosed the very finest sort of tonal and interpretative values, being joined in this and Goring Thomas' charming "Time's Garden" by the beautiful cello obligato of Miss Mukle and the uncannily sympathetic piano accompaniment of Isaac Van Grove, who indeed played for every number of the program and throughout the afternoon proved himself a master.

Mme. Gilderoy Scott sang a group of French songs by Chausson, d'Erlanger and Panizza with style and authority and made the group still more vitally beautiful by the inclusion of "Nuits de Juin," by Mme. Violet Holmes-Tidy, an Englishwoman who after long residence in Paris has become a member of the musical life of Chicago and who will, beyond doubt, rapidly reach a very high level in popularity here.

Two of the famous "Sea Pictures" of Elgar were given splendid reading by Mme. Gilderoy Scott and two American works held their own with the best that had been given.

These were the touching "When I Am Dead, My Dearest," a very potent song by Felix Borowski of Chicago, and "Joy," a gay, rollicking and altogether brilliant piece of work by Walter Kramer of New York.

Minna Kaufmann

SOPRANO

Scores Success in New York Recital

PRESS COMMENT

Minna Kaufmann, an American soprano with evident liking for the songs of Scadinavian lands, which she sang with relish and for serious airs, exemplified in Beethoven's "Ah, Perfido," appeared after three years' absence in a recital yesterday afternoon, in Aeolian Hall. She has good stage presence and a voice that brightens as it takes its higher flights.—New York Times, November 15, 1919.

Minna Kaufmann's song recital at Aeolian Hall in the afternoon pleased a considerable audience by its diversity and the engaging manner of the singer's display of a well-trained voice. She sang numbers by Handel, Sibella, Duparc and La Forge with happy lyric certainty. —Morning Telegraph, November 15, 1919.

She has a voice of pleasing sweetness and used it with good results.—New York Herald, November 15, 1919.

Madame Kaufmann is both sincere and ambitious. Her program was most exacting in its demands, which in a measure, were met by the singer.—New York American, November 15, 1919.

Her voice is light but pleasing. It was best in the modern songs. New York Evening World, November 15, 1919.

Case—Anna Case has returned from a six weeks' western tour, appearing at the Biltmore on Friday, December 5, with Toscha Seidel. On the same evening Miss Case sang at a musicale at the home of Charles M. Schwab on Riverside Drive and Seventy-fourth street.

Chicago Musical College—Edna Kellogg, student of Chicago Musical College, made her debut with the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York in Puccini's "Madame Butterfly."

TITO SCHIPA

Scores Brilliant Success with Chicago Opera Association

"RIGOLETTO"

Tito Schipa is easily the best Italian tenor who has been heard here in years. His voice is of a velvet smoothness, he colors it to suit every shade of emotion, is a good actor, makes every moment vital, and has remarkable control of the art of phrasing. His singing created a splendid impression, and more than once he completely brought down the house.—Herald-Examiner.

Schipa is far and away the best Italian tenor for such roles as the duke in "Rigoletto" that the Chicago Opera Association has ever had on its roster. He has youth, good looks and a voice of most remarkable suavity and flexibility.—Chicago Daily Journal.

Schipa is a man of about 30 years, whose ease upon the stage comes of having sung in most of the leading theaters of the world. He uses his voice with consummate art and his mezza-voce and diminuendi are absolutely the last word in bel canto.—Chicago American.

"MANON"

He acted the part in a very boyish manner, far more so than any of his predecessors in the role, carrying out the idea consistently throughout.

Vocally, he had some triumphs all his own. The "Dream" song of the second act was expected to be ideal for him, and it was. The suave, velvety voice which is his gave it a lovely rendition, and it was repeated by unanimous consent.—Chicago Daily Journal.

Mr. Schipa as Des Grieux assumed for the first time here a French role and did admirable work.—Chicago Daily Tribune.

AS JULIAN IN "GRANADINAS"

Hail Tito Schipa as Great Tenor

Edward Moore in Chicago Journal

"LA TOSCA"

Tito Schipa had his particular rewards for his splendid singing of his two big solos, and he was dramatically so convincing in his rebellious outcry of victory against the machinations of Scarpia that he made his climax one of the distinct thrills of the performance.—Herald-Examiner.

The solo, "E lucevan le stelle," was another thing of beauty. It was repeated at the expressed desire of his admirers.—Chicago Daily Journal.

Tito Schipa, the new tenor, evidently is a man who will bear watching, for he is of the rare tenor breed who has brains and uses them. He played the role in such fashion as to make Cavaradossi not merely a sort of lay figure but a vital part of the drama. . . . If he does the sort of thing he has done at his first two appearances, he will make a name for himself in this country.—Chicago Evening Post.

"BARBER OF SEVILLE"

If Mr. Schipa continues in the artistic pathway of his singing of Almaviva he will become what I prophesied in my review of "Tosca"—one of the sensations of the season.

The almost riotous applause that rewarded him Saturday was well merited.—Chicago American.

What a delight it was to hear the delicate graces of the old music, the floridities, the flourishes, the suave melodies, sung by a man who knew how! Schipa dashed through it as gayly and easily as Mme. Galli-Curci sang Rosina.

What with his lovely, velvety voice and his extraordinary air of disdainful ease, his performance was a masterpiece. In fact, he did one thing that I have never heard attempted by any other tenor. That was when he took up a guitar in the first act and played his own accompaniment to the serenade.—Chicago Daily Journal.

The Elderly Person

Said the Organist:

I can't tease you, Elderly, because there are not many laughing matters in the world just now for those who think ahead a little as they look around. But I am constrained to ask if you feel quite as chipper as you are apt to express yourself in print? Don't you find it pretty stiff to contend that all's right with this topsy-turvy world?

"Not at all," replied the Elderly Person. "The value test of all conviction is the way it wears when the bottom seems to be knocked out of it. Nothing is so good for a belief as to have holes punched into it, to be dragged in the dirt, to be pulled at, pushed at and buffeted. If it comes up smiling under a body blow or a black eye and goes on serenely while it nurses and heals the bumps and bruises, that's sure proof that it has real stamina.

"I know something about a reconstruction period. I am quite sure you have forgotten, if you ever remembered, that when I ventured some comments early in the war process there was stress laid on the fact that the after-the-war years were harder to meet than those 'endurin-the-wah,' as Uncle Ned used to say. In many ways one living in a Southern State after 1865 had hardships which we now nowhere approximate, in spite of our strikes, bolshevism, unrest and sugar shortage. While everything is outrageously high in price, it is apt to be good in quality, and there is plenty of work, with high wages paid promptly. Perhaps before we get through we'll have a panic. It may be the only way to take the inflation out of the price tags. But when I am looking around for bright spots one of the first I alight on is our present banking system. When you want to throw stones at the Administration hold back some in memory of President Wilson's fight for and victory in the Reserve Banks, by which no solvent storehouse of money is allowed to get into a tight place without receiving the united support of every strong bank in the country. And every solvent business can obtain assistance in emergency. Not help to expand in wild speculation, but loans on good security to meet legitimate wants. Business, honestly conducted, is safe and sound, and there is no need for fear in making investments. That's far better than it used to be when it could not be predicted what a day might bring forth because some strong man had come down hard on a small man and forced him to the wall; when banks could not realize on their collateral and had to close their doors even while their stronger friends had 'money to burn,' as the saying is. I often think of the old fellow who came to his banker in a frenzy, saying excitedly: 'I vant my monies right avay if I can't have it. Ven I can have it, I don't vant it at all.' That's just what made panics. One who has seen failure and ruin just because of lack of confidence rejoices in the Big Brotherhood of Business. The other name is Co-operation as differing from Competition. And there isn't any sentiment in it, but it is brotherhood all the same.

"And that's the gist of all that I might add to warrant my cheerfulness, because if business is safe you can keep going. If you get brotherhood into the world on a business basis, evolution will do the rest. Finding we do well in business, we will enlarge the field and go further.

"Just now, an observer holding himself in check finds explanation in many conditions and can keep cool. A war upsets all established order and becomes a law unto itself. And one of the penalties of all fighters is that they have to pay dearly for their quarrels. After our civil war there was any number of newly rich men. Government contracts. No one who gets a war contract ever dreams of charging a reasonable price for his goods. He tacks on all it will stand and then some more. And the goods are generally paid for with borrowed money. Governments as well as people are apt to waste borrowed money. It never goes as far as earned wages. It would be a funny thing to find a fair priced war contract.

"Naturally making money fast is a contagious disease. We've had four years and more of it, and it's got to run its course. Everybody is germ bitten, and inflation and extravagance is the result. Those who have made a lot want to keep up the process until they make a little more. Those who have done pretty well want to do better. It's awfully catching.

"The war is over and the special demand which excused the excess charges is removed, but people who have tasted the dragon's blood which infects their own, lose all sense of judgment or desire of discipline and want to keep up the merry game right along and hope to get through. But they won't. Some of them will get badly caught.

"One of the things which keeps an elderly person undisturbed is something you young people know little about. You have really known no discipline or hardship, for there has been twenty-five years of continuous prosperity in this country. You don't know what it is to do without. You have not learned to decide what is important and discipline your mind, your desires or your body—particularly your body. You want to live on the fat of the land and can't understand why you should be asked to accept any lean portion. And thereby you lose one of the big elements of the making of a man. Discipline is real muscle, blood and iron in the system. If you stop to think about it you do most things and have most of your desires because of what some one else does or has. It's a childlike trait and I do not censure it. We are only grown up children. But the father who told his children not to do or want what other children had but to make the other children do or want what they had, obtained the real insight. For you should discern for yourself what you need—not let anyone else tell you. The man I spoke of is the one who laid awake at night because of intense suffering with a broken arm and deliberately thanked God for pain. It helped him to master the pain when he knew he must discipline himself to bear it without fret.

"These are the verities of life, my lad, and nothing need disturb composure when they are with you. In their train come the ministering aids to keep one steady in a wobbly world. Certain things endure and abide.

"Sure, I wish you a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. If your home doesn't carry the atmosphere of itself you can't bring it in from the outside with the holly and mistletoe. It will shine out from the wreaths in your window if you put them up right. Can't help it. Go to it. Be merry, be happy and make it all right with your part of the world and the Old Fellow will be all right in due time."

Emmanuel Choir—Emmanuel Choir of La Grange, sixty boys and men under the direction of William Ripley Dorr, gave a sacred concert in the Union Church of Hinsdale Sunday afternoon, December 7, at the invitation of Mr. H. R. Vail, the musical director of the church. Among the anthems sung were "Fierce Was the Wild Billow," by T. Tertius Noble, which was sung unaccompanied, and Martin's "Ho, Everyone That Thirsteth." In the Martin number Mr. Blake Wilson of the Union Church was the assisting soloist. Mr. Arthur C. Youngberg of Emmanuel Choir was the tenor soloist, and David Meyers and David Linn were the soprano soloists.

Emmanuel Choir will give a concert in Dicke's Theater, Downer's Grove, on Friday, January 23. So many were turned away from the musical service given by the choir in St. Andrew's Church at Downer's Grove that Rev. H. M. MacWhorter, the rector, immediately re-engaged the organization for a concert in a larger place.

Northwestern University School of Music

The School of Music offers courses in Piano, Organ, Violin, Violoncello, Voice and Theory of Music leading to degrees and diplomas. Also a diploma course in Public School and Community Music. RACHEL JANE HAMILTON

Rachel Jane Hamilton, a charming coloratura soprano, who has rapidly been making friends in Chicago ever since her arrival here from New York a few weeks ago and who is to have an appearance at the Playhouse later in the season, has gone to Indianapolis to remain until after the holidays, and while there will fill a number of professional engagements.

She has sung during the past week or so for the Englewood Woman's Club, for the D. A. R. at Beverly Hills and at the Wilmette Woman's Club.

Miss Hamilton was, before going to New York, a pupil of Mrs. Max Leckner in Indianapolis, and to her ascribes much of the routine and the technic on which have been built her great successes.

During her residence in the East Miss Hamilton made many appearances with orchestra and in concert in New York, Baltimore and Washington, and everywhere, as in Chicago since her arrival here, her beautiful personality and lovely voice have won for her great numbers of friends and continual success.

SANTA MONICA, CAL.

H. D. Mustard, baritone, who has been a teacher here and in Los Angeles for the past four years, gave a farewell recital at the Santa Monica Bay Woman's Club House December 1. He left the next day for New York, where he expects to have his light opera, "The Saltseller," produced.

Mr. Arne Nordskog presented Mr. Eugene Dalton, nineteen-year-old pianist, in recital at the Hotel Windermere Recital Hall Saturday evening, November 29. To add to the wonderful rendition of the piano numbers, there was over $100,000 worth of Thomas Nash's paintings on exhibition. The scenes were wonderful and revealed something new in the art of painting as well as giving the large audience an inspiration.

PROKOFIEFF AND RACHMANINOFF CONTRASTED IN THE NATION

A recent article in The Nation, devoted to music, contrasted the two, Sergei Rachmaninoff and Prokofieff and the Russian spirit which they represent. "Rachmaninoff," it says, "belongs to the old Russia, the Russia of the Romanoffs, with its ardent romanticism and gorgeous pageantry. Prokofieff, on the other hand, is distinctly a product of the intellectual and elemental forces now in upheaval. There is a primitive simplicity and strength about him so strangely at variance with the complexities of modern existence that at first he is difficult to classify. The critics call him a Bolshevist, and to carry out the simile proceeded to find in his playing and in his compositions all the bestiality lately associated with Bolshevism. But ugliness is not bestiality, and in spite of, or perhaps because of, the critics the large crowds who came out of curiosity to hear ear-splitting noises and terrifying cacaphonies remained to applaud vigorously the enchanting melodies, the exquisite nuances and marvelous rhythmic effects evoked by the superb virtuosity of this tall, slim, blond young man."

MORGAN KINGSTON

Acclaimed at Hippodrome, With Metropolitan Opera Quartette, and in Recital With Frieda Hempel

WITH METROPOLITAN OPERA QUARTET AT NEW YORK HIPPODROME
(New York Evening Sun)

Morgan Kingston substituted for Charles Hackett, ill of a sudden cold, and won the heartiest applause of the occasion. The amazing moment of the evening, however, was when Mme. Alda and Mr. Kingston, in brave contempt for the Sunday anti-acting laws, went through all the gestures and walked off the stage arm in arm, wafting top notes of the "Boheme" duet over their shoulders exactly as per. They enjoyed it very much.

ALDA AND KINGSTON ACT A "BOHEME" FINALE TO HIPPODROME THRONG
(New York Times)

Morgan Kingston replaced Charles Hackett and quickly won the applause of the vast throng, and when he and Mme. Alda encored a "Butterfly" duet with the first act finale of "La Boheme," walking off stage arm in arm, the house made them come back and do it again.

FOUR METROPOLITAN STARS AT HIPPODROME
(New York American)

Like most musical events at the huge Sixth Avenue theater, a double audience was present at the concert last night and honors were equally divided among the quartet of singers. Morgan Kingston achieved a triumph in the aria from "Boheme."

GREAT ARTISTS HAVE BIG DAY AT HIPPODROME—SUBSTITUTE CAPTURES AUDIENCE
(New York Morning Telegraph)

Morgan Kingston, who appeared in place of Charles Hackett upon short notice, instantly won and held his hearers by his brilliant, poetic and exquisitely tender singing of the "Che Gelida Manina" aria from "Boheme," and the recalls which followed him were so spontaneous and so insistent as to amount to an emphatic triumph for the stalwart Welsh tenor, whose towering voice seemed to be unleashing new splendors in the vast reaches of the Hippodrome.

IN JOINT RECITAL WITH FRIEDA HEMPEL
(Buffalo Courier)

Morgan Kingston is another distinguished artist and won a share of the honors with his cultivated musicianship. In an aria from "Boheme" his sonorous voice, with skill in tonal color and feeling for nuance, aroused great enthusiasm. His second aria from "Tosca" was another artistic blending of vocal and dramatic art. In two groups of songs he won encores and his closing number, "Nervana," was a superb effort.

JOINT RECITAL WITH FRIEDA HEMPEL
(Buffalo Express)

Mr. Kingston was heard in two arias from "Boheme" and "Tosca." His clear and resonant voice was very satisfying and his utterance very convincing in these operatic numbers, characterized by authority and artistic fervor. His other numbers comprised the air from "Elijah," "If with All Your Hearts," in which he proved that oratorio as well as opera was familiar ground to him. His command of a beautiful mezzo voce was displayed in Kurt Schindler's arrangement of a Welsh Choral Ballad, and his ability to build up an impressive climax was shown in Goring Thomas' "A Memory" and Fay Foster's "The Americans Come," which followed as an encore. Mr. Kingston was made to feel that the audience thoroughly enjoyed his fine singing and art.

SOPRANO OF THE METROPOLITAN AND MORGAN KINGSTON OF SAME ORGANIZATION GIVE DELIGHTFUL CONCERT
(Buffalo Evening News)

Mr. Kingston is an artist of fine qualities, serious in his work, fervent and never unworthy in his treatment of the music he is to present. He gave much pleasure last night in his singing of the Puccini arias, and especially the air by Mendelssohn and the Welsh Choral Ballad, arranged by Kurt Schindler.

THE MENDELSSOHN CLUB

This year marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Mendelssohn Club, and it was but fitting, therefore, that the first concert of the season, at Orchestra Hall last Thursday evening, should be a gala occasion both in content of program and in the presentation of the same.

There was a capacity audience and unlimited enthusiasm for the work of the club, which was at a point of excellence to prove that this year is to be a banner one in artistic achievement. The program was made up entirely (in so far as choral numbers were concerned) of pieces written especially for the club, and was, of course, entirely American.

This is quite as it should be, for of all the loyally American clubs of this city, none is more devoted than the Chicago Mendelssohn.

For this reason, Mr. James MacDermid dedicated his wonderfully fine and impressive "Land of Mine" to the Mendelssohns and it was sung at this time, as it has been several times in the past, in truly inspired and inspirational way.

In addition to this the program included "Blow Ye the Trumpet" (R. Huntington Woodman), the set of four pieces, Opus 53 and "The Night of a Star" (Protheroe), the beautifully suave and touching "The Reaper and the Flowers" (John S. Fearis), "Morning" (Frederick Brueschweiler) and the immensely stirring "Plainsman's Song" (Paul Bliss), which proved to be such a favorite that it had to be repeated.

In addition there were two pieces written especially for the occasion by Frederick Stevenson of California, the first being a wonderfully sedate and intensely impressive setting of "The Omnipotence," with a stirring soprano obligato sung beautifully by Orpha Kendall Holstman, soprano, and "An American Ace," in which Forrest Lamont and Mrs. Holstman sang the solo parts, and there was agreeable addition to the organ and piano accompaniment of harp by Margaret Jiskra and cello by Carl Singer.

This work is impressive beyond words to tell; the text, wonderfully vivid and blood curdling, is by James Church Alvord, and to this Mr. Stevenson has added music which thrills and stirs.

The club rose to the occasion and sang the choral bits excellently, and Mrs. Holstman sang a very high obligato extremely well.

The brunt of the work, however, fell upon Mr. Lamont, and in its delivery he acquitted himself with great style and distinction.

His enunciation was perfect, the feeling for the text was positive, and the musical values such as only a great artist could supply.

In addition to this remarkable piece of work, undertaken on short notice after word reached Chicago of the illness of the announced New York tenor, Mr. Lamont sang as a solo number the "Narrative" (Rudolpho) from "La Boheme" and did it so extremely well that the audience would not let him go until he had added the "Lament" from "I Pagliacci," which was given a reading, and for intensity and effect has not been surpassed in Chicago.

Mrs. Holstman sang also a song group, which she announced most delightfully, and in which her singing was at a point of great artistic beauty.

Her numbers were "Love This Little Flower" (Ronald), "Sometimes Ah Feel Like a Motherless Child" (H. T. Burleigh), and "Sometimes I Watch Thee in the Desolate Night" (Huhn), with a very beautiful encore addition.

Splendid organ support was afforded throughout by Allen W. Bogen and Harrison Wild was at every moment of the concert a truly inspiring and authoritative figure at the baton.

GINO MARINUZZI

The New Conductor of the Chicago Opera Association
A Man of Infinite Talent and Glowing Personality

By CHARLES E. WATT

It is not easy to carry on a conversation with an Italian who can speak but very few words of English, when you yourself can speak no Italian whatever except "si" and "no" and must depend wholly on an interpreter, but such is the super-cleverness and the absolute rapidity of thought of Gino Marinuzzi that he seems to sense everything that is said in his presence, in whatever language, and so full of intelligence is he that even through a second person he can give an interviewer an infinity of material to think about.

Personally he is a remarkable man, slight as a boy of 20 and with an extraordinarily mobile face. His eyes and his ready smile assist him, as also his expressive hands, in making himself understood and appreciated.

And he is a really wonderful man, this new acquisition of the Chicago Opera Association—composer, player of many instruments and director extraordinary.

His "Jacquerie" will be a sensation when given in Chicago, just as it has been a sensation in South America.

He was intended by his parents, people of distinguished Italian family, for the law, and in fact was deeply immersed in that study (though spending much time always at music also) when the assassination of King Humbert awoke the latent spark of composition and impelled him to write a commemorative Mass, which won for him immediate recognition.

When it was definitely decided to give up the study of law and turn to music professionally, the gifted young man, born at Palermo and having studied there extensively with Zuelli, director of the Conservatory, went to Bologna, where his education in music was completed and where he began his own professional career.

The famous conservatory in this city was founded by Rossini, as is well known, and although its directorship was offered to Marinuzzi after his graduation, the statement of his acceptance of that post as made in some American newspapers is a mistake, for, his work rapidly developing at its best into operatic conducting, he became a citizen of the world and in rapid succession made splendid successes at the Costanzi, La Scala and San Carlos Theaters, and later in South America.

He conducted altogether six years in that part of the world, dividing his year between Italy and South America.

It was twelve years ago that he conducted his first opera, this being "Poliuto," at Catania, Italy, and since then he has conducted almost the entire Italian and French repertoire of operas, old and modern, and has to his credit also some of the most successful performances of "Parsifal" and other Wagner operas ever given anywhere.

In Trieste, a year before the war, he made so pronounced a success that he was presented publicly, by the orchestra, with a beautiful medal, which he values very highly.

Bologna and Trieste are his favorite Italian cities musically, but he likes Brazil also exceedingly, "for," said he, "although there they accept a new work or a new conductor only poca-a-poca, they are certainly enthusiastic enough when once aroused."

Signor Marinuzzi likes America also very much, and is happy in his work at the Auditorium, where he feels that appreciation is immediate and keen.

He is living in a homelike apartment at the Congress and showed me, there, pictures of his two children who are now in Italy.

Antonio, a handsome boy, is 9 and has much musical talent. Lia is but 4 and is a very beautiful little girl.

Mme. Marinuzzi is with her husband, and in the intervals between rehearsals and performances he is composing another opera.

The press of Chicago has been unanimous in acclaiming this remarkable young conductor as one of the most significant personages ever added to the Chicago Company, and the public has found him glorious in every opera he has conducted.

For, using no notes at all, he seems to have an unlimited knowledge of scores and an uncanny ability to induce everyone under his baton to do the most skillful and artistic work that it is possible for them to do.

Yes, Chicago likes Marinuzzi very much indeed, and we are glad that he likes us so well and happy in the prospect of a term of years of operas under his alert, resourceful and altogether artistic baton.

AUDITORIUM CONSERVATORY

Mrs. Stein's Players, Janet Havens, Emma Olson, Harriet Nilsen, Lucile Fisher, Irving Schuster, Emmet Flood and Merle Morgen, gave an interesting comedietta, "By Accident," at the Brentano Neighborhood Association Thursday evening.

Emily Kartak, soprano, artist pupil of Karl B. Stein, and Gaetano Viviani, baritone, are singing at the Winton Hotel, Cleveland.

Ruth Helene Dahly, contralto, assistant to Mr. Stein, was soloist at the Norwegian Choral Society Sunday, December 6, and at the Ambrose Woman's Club on December 12.

Janet Havens, artist pupil and assistant teacher of Mrs. Stein, will be the reader at the Warren Avenue Presbyterian Church December 22.

Other pupils of Mr. Stein who have appeared recently are: Marie Nugent, soprano, soloist at the Sydemar Club, December 10. Mabel Brown, soprano, at the K. C. University Council, December 12. Irene Loehr, Cora Lindemann, Arthur Iles and William Ehnert have been singing quartets this week at the Majestic Theater in Waukegan.

TEW STUDIOS

An exceptionally interesting program is being prepared for the Christmas At Home of Whitney Tew's pupils next Sunday, December 21, from 4 to 7 o'clock.

Two quartets from Madame Liza Lehmann's "Daisy Chain" will be sung by Miss Jeanette del Barrios, Miss Hazel Renninger, Mr. Edwin Iles and Mr. Lawson Reid. Miss Lucy Levy at the piano.

Pinsuti's "Goodnight, Beloved," will be sung by Miss Emma Berg, Mrs. Mabel Hildebrecht, Mr. Iles and Mr. Tew.

Nevin's quintet, "Wynken, Blynken and Nod" (Words by Eugene Field), will be sung by Mrs. Gertrude Sweet, Miss Gertrude Clark, Miss Mabel Grieves, Mr. Iles and Mr. Tew. Misses Cartwright and Scrimgeour will play the pianoforte part.

A chorus of ladies will do the trios, "The Flower Greeting" (Curschmann), and "Dawn's Awakening" (Grieg).

FOURTH WEEK OF OPERA

The French Singers Score in "Le Chemineau" and "Manon"—Galli-Curci Splendid in "Traviata" and "Barber of Seville"—A Fine Performance of "Tosca"—"La Boheme" Repeated with Success—Schipa Creates a Sensation in "Traviata" and "Barber of Seville"—Galeffi Fine as Germont Sr. and the Barber—Marinuzzi Becomes More Popular with Each Appearance.

"Lucia"

The fourth week opened on Sunday afternoon with a capacity house and unbounded enthusiasm for the art of Mme. Galli-Curci, who at that time gave her usual beautiful reading of the score of the unhappy Lucy Ashton.

Excellently disposed in the vocal sense and with an even added charm of naturalness and simplicity, the famous soprano

FORREST LAMONT
American Tenor

charmed her audience in just a little more intense way than ever before in the same role.

She was splendidly supported by Alessandro Dolci, who at this time not only offered the best work he has done this season, but also gave one of the most impressive and beautiful vocal exhibitions he has ever shown in Chicago.

The two voices complemented each other admirably, and in the extended duet singing of the first act there was a wealth of beauty which simply electrified the audience.

Both artists were recalled and encored at every opportunity, and the "Mad Scene" was stopped in the middle, as usual, until the audience had secured a repetition of that part in which the voice and flute together perform that piece of glittering musical joy which stands to the everlasting credit of Donizetti, and which no composer, in writing for coloratura soprano, has ever surpassed.

C. E. W.

"Le Chemineau"

Mlle. Yvonne Gall and her artist associates, Dufranne, Warnery, Nicolay and the rest, repeated on Monday evening their beautiful reading of "Le Chemineau" and delighted the usual big Monday night audience.

This opera, strangely lacking in anything approaching individual display, is yet, in scene, action, pantomime and—very emphatically in orchestral score, a very mosaic of music beauty and of histrionic delight.

To have a part in it and to do this part so well as does Mlle. Gall is a very distinct achievement.

"La Traviata"

On Tuesday evening "La Traviata" brought another capacity house to hear Galli-Curci in a part which she makes charming and musical, even if it never rises to any special histrionic importance.

Galeffi was excellent as Germont Sr., and Dolci as Germont Jr. again showed the fine form and beautiful qualities which made his Edgar notable.

The production as a whole was only fair; the ballet was good; the orchestra better than sometimes.

Again the loud talking behind the scenes, a thing which is certainly a discourtesy to the audience and must, inevitably, be annoying to the artists on the stage.

"Tosca"

A very large audience witnessed the performance on Wednesday evening of "La Tosca" and much enthusiasm was in evidence.

Not so very many years ago Chicago was entirely indifferent to the charms of this vivid Sardou lady, but we have grown to appreciate both the drama and the music and today it is one of the favorites of the repertoire.

The writer thinks "Tosca" the really greatest of the Puccini operas, and one of the greatest of all those of modern composition.

The play is so vitally intense and the music so beautiful as to place the opera head and shoulders above the vast majority of those we hear night after night.

But, to be thoroughly enjoyed, "Tosca" must have not alone an exceptional setting, which it certainly had on Wednesday night, and magnificent direction of the musical forces, which was unequivocally provided by Gino Marinuzzi at this time, but further, there must needs be a magnificent Tosca, Cavaradossi and Scarpia.

Tosca suits Rosa Raisa exceedingly well, and as Cavaradossi, the fine young tenor, Tito Schipa, was a revelation, nothing less, but the Scarpia of the cast was so far short of what a Scarpia should really be as to leave a definite feeling of disappointment on the part of everyone who witnessed the performance.

And this state of affairs is inexcusable, for there are several baritones in the company who would do the part very much better than it was done at this time.

Last year when Rosa Raisa made her first appearance in the role of Tosca Mr. Polacco was in charge of the performance, and through temperamental disagreement between the two there was much unevenness in the performance and the famous "Vissi d'Arte" came perilously near being a fiasco.

On Wednesday last, however, with so superb an accompanist as is Mr. Marinuzzi and with such good singing as that offered by Miss Raisa there was nothing but harmony and splendid effect.

Schipa, ideal as the duke in "Rigoletto," found also in the part of Cavaradossi one which he was able to invest with the greatest of charm and, at times, with absolutely thrilling colors.

TITO SCHIPA

The aria of the first act was beautiful; the defiance of Scarpia in the second act was intensely thrilling, and the aria of the last act at a point of vocal beauty and dramatic intensity which it has never before enjoyed in Chicago.

Constantin Nicolay is, invariably, good in whatever he does, but it is doubtful if there is any part in his repertoire in which he shines to such splendid advantage as that of Angelotti in "La Tosca."

The same may be said of Vittorio Trevisan, for inimitable as is his humor in other operas and suave as is his acting of character parts, there is no one of them so utterly fine as his Sacristan in the Puccini opera.

"Manon"

The performance of "Manon" last Thursday evening was one of the most brilliant in

EVELYN HERBERT

scene and pageantry and among the most beautiful, musically, of the entire season. The guiding hand was again that of Marinuzzi, the always intelligent and supremely artistic conductor. Conducting, as usual, entirely without score, he was keenly alert to every need of the singer and subordinated the orchestra with exquisite taste, though never losing sight of fine moments of accentuation and power.

Yvonne Gall in the title role was enchanting to look upon and vocally brilliant. Histrionically, she is always clever and pleasing.

Schipa added to his laurels of the past week as Des Grieux. He was in glorious voice and his dramatic powers were displayed to the utmost. For in the formality of his costume he was called upon to exert all the depiction by facial expression and restraint of action, of which he is such a master. In the "Dream Song" his voice rose to heights of lyric beauty with which few tenors could compete.

Maguenat, Warnery, Huberdeau and Defrere in the smaller parts were all that could be desired, and Edna Darch, Emma Noe and Mina Hager formed a charming feminine trio of subordinates.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

"La Boheme"

The second repetition of "La Boheme," occurring on Saturday night, was witnessed by a very large audience and not only did the clever Murger story and the graceful Puccini music please mightily but also each of the principals of the cast found full favor at the hands of this discriminating audience.

Evelyn Herbert, admired for her girlish beauty and fine acting no less than her lovely voice, again scored heavily and the cast throughout was accepted as ideal, each in his own part, and the entire ensemble was as happy as heart could wish.

"The Barber of Seville"

Chicago never gets tired of "The Barber" and when Galli-Curci sings in this melodious old piece by Rossini we are quite apt to wax exceedingly enthusiastic in approval.

And on Saturday afternoon, the charming soprano was again at her best and again did she please every hearer of the graceful score and again, as was expected, she delighted us with her brilliant and melodious interpolations.

The part of the Count was taken gracefully, melodiously and with full dramatic valuations by Tito Schipa, who thus added one more to his list of pronounced successes in Chicago.

The music suits his voice perfectly and the dress and action are such that he can carry them off with great eclat.

A wonderfully versatile man is Schipa and in "The Barber" he gave us one more cause for joy.

Vittorio Trevisan as Dr. Bartolo was superb as always in the part and never allowed the fun to lag for one moment when he was on the stage. Galli-Curci also has a very definite and very pretty sense of humor and her comedy scenes with Trevisan were delightful.

Other Operas

Tonight (Friday) will witness the premiere of "The Spanish Hour" and "The Birthday of the Infanta" (Ballet).

On Saturday afternoon "The Masked Ball" will be given with Florence Macbeth in the part of Oscar.

Saturday evening at popular prices, Galli-Curci in "Traviata."

BESSIE BOWN RICKER

Mrs. Bessie Bown Ricker makes a specialty of the recital of child verse. The art of her work consists not merely in the production of the child voice and gesture, but in throwing into the portrayal an underlying tone of maturity which forms a most effective background to the child imitation — this, coupled with an exceptionally pleasing personality and address, gives her work a charm that is peculiarly its own.

Her repertoire includes selections from Riley, Field, etc., and many anonymous and original monologues. Mrs. Ricker also gives clever impersonations in French and negro dialects and a number of pleasing society sketches.

Ricker—Bessie Bown Ricker, interpretative reader, making a specialty of child readings, has filled numerous engagements in St. Louis since her return from a year's entertainment service in France. At the Missouri Athletic Club on December 22 she directs a special Christmas entertainment, when she has under her charge one thousand children.

CENTRALIZING SCHOOL

The children's Christmas program at the Centralizing School was an hour of delightfully good fun as usual. Under the supervision of Miss Irene A. Skinner it was worked out consistently and with distinct originality from a dramatic standpoint. The program, in its three parts, is quoted:

'TWAS THE NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Music—Christmas Bells
Miss Pendry

A Surprise for Santa Claus.....Best
Helen McDougall

HANGING the STOCKINGS (With incidental music by Wilmarie Hosier)
Mary Jane Kevil, Sylvia Ostrovsky, Alta Christensen, Harriet Goodrich and Selma Simon

Shirley Greenlaw

St. Nicholas Day in the Morning.....Martin
Charlotte Torgerson

Hail Ye Time of Holiday.....Branscomb
Mr. Charles Weeks
Accompanist, Mrs. Charles Weeks

*Student of Mrs. E. C. Walton

The last part only was heard by the writer, who noticed particularly the keen enjoyment which the children themselves seemed to have in their work. Not only was it good work but very enthusiastically done This is peculiarly characteristic of the programs of the Centralizing School, a sense of the fearlessness and eagerness of those taking part. When this takes place a feeling of informal intimacy is invariably established between the audience and the performers which is very gratifying.

Nevin—A visitor of Tuesday was the charming soprano, Olive Nevin, who had an engagement in private musicale in Chicago on Tuesday evening. Miss Nevin had just returned from Huntington, W. Va., where she made a highly successful appearance as special soloist at an Elks' memorial service, singing to an audience of three thousand people, and from Chicago she went to La Crosse, where—in conjunction with Edna Gunnar Peterson, pianist, she appeared in concert on Wednesday evening. Miss Nevin has a very full season, and is doing church work and teaching in addition to the numerous list of recital and concert engagements she is fulfilling.

Chalmers—In a successful New York appearance last week Mr. Thomas Chalmers, baritone, sang, as an encore, the popular "Smilin' Through" of Penn and scored a fine impression.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

A dramatic recital by advanced students of Letitia K. Barnum and A. Louise Suess was the event last Saturday afternoon in Kimball Hall. A reading, "Pauline Pavlowa" (Aldrich) was given by Miss Esther J. Fritz, and a cutting from McCarthy's "If I Were a King" was done by Mrs. John J. Wagner. Following this were two short one-act plays. The first, the ever obscure but ever alluring "Land of the Heart's Desire," by Yeats, was done under Mrs. Barnum's direction. All the parts were very well understood and thoroughly studied. The Fairy Child, in the person of Constance Penney, was especially attractive.

In contrast to the rather haunting sadness of the Yeats fantasy was given a farce, "The Happy Day," by pupils of Miss A. Louise Suess. The principal characters wore all the air of the blase daughters of high society preparing for an elaborate wedding, while the country cousins were typically perfect in behavior and equipage.

Edgewater Beach Concert—The concert given at Edgewater Beach Hotel last Sunday will be reviewed next week.

Borghild Langaard

Dramatic Soprano

COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Borghild Langaard was certainly the most youthful "Brunhilde" ever seen on the Covent Garden stage. She has a finely sympathetic voice and much musical feeling added to keen dramatic instinct.

For the first appearance in such a part, it was astonishing and she will in time be a great "Brunhilde." Neither Yernina nor Gulbranson have done more than that the first time they sang the part.—Morning Leader, London.

CHRISTIANIA

Mme. Langaard's "Tosca" was a magnificent impersonation. Never has the glory of her voice been greater.

Her beautiful appearance is just as striking, and her dramatic acting is overflowing with strength of feeling, passion and tragic pathos.

The whole impersonation was of monumental dimensions and shows what this, our foremost singer, is in possession of.—Morgenbladet-Siewers.

IMPERIAL OPERA, VIENNA

Mme. Langaard, as her name indicates, a northern singer, traveled last night to the hottest and most dramatic south by singing "Aida" to a Vienna public.

We tell immediately with great success and all the applause given to a welcome artist.

Mme. Langaard is tall and beautifully built, the real dramatic, and has a beautiful carrying voice, that is at its best in the high register. It will be very interesting to hear this artist in Wagner parts.—Fremdenblatt.

COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

An excellent impression was made by Mme. Langaard as "Sieglinde." Her voice has rich volume and resonance and her impersonation testified to dramatic perception and excellent training.—Referee.

The lyrical freshness of the duet was made exceptionally attractive by the clear and finely sustained tone with which Mme. Langaard sang the music.—Daily News.

With Mme. Langaard as "Sieglinde" the beautiful music of the first act and the great closing duet went supremely well and deeply impressed the enormous audience.—Era.

COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Borghild Langaard at once arrested attention by the purity and richness of her voice. She has the almost priceless quality of freshness, and while her acting showed natural aptitude, the charming finish of her vocal phrasing made her interpretation thoroughly distinctive.

Her success was complete and seldom has the somewhat theatrical part of "Santuzza" been played of late with such a full appreciation of its infinite pathos and with such unexaggerated emphasis of its leading features.—The Standard, London.

THE ROYAL OPERA, COPENHAGEN

Mme. Langaard's "Elsa" in Lohengrin is such an excellent performance that it would be an honor and glory to any of the first operatic stages in the world.

Madame uses her incomparable, velvety and even voice so quite natural and yet so very artistic. Our own singers, even the foremost of them, would be able to learn from Mme. Langaard's superior and virtuosic manipulation of the glorious voice God gave this Norwegian diva.

REED MILLER FAMOUS "MESSIAH" SOLOIST

There is undoubtedly no tenor before the American public who has a greater reputation as a 'Messiah" singer than Reed Miller, who has appeared as soloist in Handel's famous work over one hundred times. He also holds the remarkable record of having sung for eight consecutive seasons with the New York Oratorio Society and many times he has sung return dates during the same season with the same organization. The Handel and Haydn Society of Boston is one of the societies that has engaged Mr. Miller for many seasons, and this year is no exception. He will sing there during Christmas week when they give "The Messiah," and will also sing the same work with the New York Choral Union when his wife, Nevada Van der Veer, the popular contralto, will appear with him. During the same week Mr. Miller will appear in "The Messiah" in Newark with Arthur Middleton and Emma Roberts.

PRESS AT LARGE

Snubbing the Heroes

Chicago, Dec. 8.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Nineteen musical eliters haughtily objected to sitting in the same room with seventeen maimed heroes. Turned up their pudgy noses at seventeen of the bravest sacrificers God put on earth.

One can picture these jewel-bedecked women huddled in groups with scented handkerchiefs to their faces, with all signs of disgust for these dandy fellows. Not one of them showed the slightest earmarks of a mother. They couldn't have been and show such a lack of American patriotism.

They cannot endure the smell of iodoform. The spirits of some of our real Red Cross martyrs should rise from the fields of France to tell these women of the mangled limbs and gashed bodies they had cared for; all this so that these same eliters could be free Americans and not slaves of the Hun.

Their names should appear in the press, but such as they would be delighted at the free publicity. Your policy of patriotism should cause you to print this.

Legion Post to Inquire Into All Concerts

No concert or theatrical performance will be held here in the future until it has been given a careful scrutiny by the newly formed Woodlawn Post of the American Legion, which yesterday attempted to stop a concert at the Blackstone Theater, where Bruno Steindel, cellist, appeared with the Steindel trio "for the benefit of German war orphans."

"We intend to look into these affairs—every one of them," said N. W. Cain, 6104 Kenwood avenue, today, speaking for the post. "The next one we are interested in is the Chicago appearance of Fritz Kreisler. We don't know the date, but we're going to find out. Chicago doesn't seem to take to that sort of thing the way they do in New York."

Mr. Cain said he expected definite action on future plans of the post to be taken at a meeting tonight.

Riot at Kreisler Concert—Legion Members Turn Out Lights and Clash with Police

[By the Associated Press]

Ithaca, N. Y., Dec. 11.—Police were called out last night to quell an incipient riot which attended the concert given by Fritz Kreisler, Austrian violinist, under the auspices of the Cornell University music department. In the middle of the performance the electric light wires to the hall were cut by an angry crowd of members of the American Legion and their friends, who had been driven back by the police when they tried to force an entrance into the building.

Kreisler continued playing for forty minutes in the dark, while his large audience countered with cheers the shouts of "Hun! Hun!" from the crowd outside.

Carver at Rockford

To interpret the stately measures of Handel's "Come, My Beloved," from "Atalanta"; "The Invocation of Orpheus" by Peri, and the beautiful aria from "The Magic Flute," or, again, the merry theme of "The Kiss" of Beethoven and "The Warning" (Mozart), demanded versatility which Mr. Carver displayed along with his other gifts, and withal he sang them with a smoothness of utterance infrequent in the voice of a basso. His dramatic powers were displayed in the Rachmaninoff "The Lord Is Risen" and in the more tragic theme of the other Russian, Moussorgsky, "After the Battle." The audience would not cease applause until Mr. Carver returned.—Rockford Morning Star.

Cancel Kreisler Concert—Lynn Mayor Threatens to Have Violinist Arrested

A concert by Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, which was to have been given tomorrow (November 29), was canceled today. Because of protests by the American Legion, Mayor Creamer refused a permit for Kreisler's appearance, but State sanction for a "sacred concert" was obtained.

When the mayor announced that he would have a jury of twelve musicians determine whether Kreisler played other than "sacred music" and would have police present to make an arrest in the event of violation of the permit for such a concert, the proposed appearance of Kreisler was canceled and other players will be substituted.—New York Times.

The Medinah Temple Concerts

The new management which undertook to give Chicago something it had never had will probably finish out the season, and at the end be wiser if sadder than when first launching on the step that was to bring music to the masses at twenty-two dollars the series. This in itself showed how little the management knew about Chicago. If it will not patronize shows offered by the old established managerial people who have tried out the temper of the public years past, it is not supposed it will have more than perfunctory interest in a new enterprise, especially when the place of venture is far away from the beaten tracks, and not of the best acoustically. At least, so it seemed to the present writer, who, in a side seat close under the stage, could manage to see the artist when as imposing as Matzenauer. But Medinah Temple is too unwieldy for artists to make their best effects. Those who sat in the center of the house in the dress circle had, however, a rare treat, and never has the noted soprano sang with more opulence of love or more dramatic skill. It was the epitome of art. Nothing she attempted could have been improved upon, for she is one of the greatest singers of the century. Everything she does has for background brains. She brings to each aria and song musicianship, intelligence and lovely voice. Of course, she looked superb and was gracious as ever. Max Rosen assisted and with all the charm for which he has won golden opinions. He is one of the young talents of whom America can well be proud.—Musical Leader.

REGINALD DE KOVEN

One of the Most Distinguished of American Composers

By CHARLES E. WATT

"I am happy to have my 'Rip Van Winkle' first presented in Chicago," Mr. De Koven told me, "because I honestly think that this is one of the most appreciative of all American music centers and one which is absolutely unbiased in the forming of an opinion and unafraid in voicing it.

"'Rip Van Winkle' is so typically American in subject and in development that a real American audience cannot fail to appreciate it at its proper valuation, and so I am confident that Chicago will do me and my opera full justice."

Mr. De Koven was found comfortably ensconced in apartments at the Auditorium Hotel and was most gracious as well as thoroughly charming in his personality and in his expression of pleasure with the way in which the Chicago Opera Association has treated his opera and with the preparations which are so well under way for its premiere performance.

And of a truth De Koven is far removed from being a stranger to us, and to listen to agreeable music from his pen on the operatic stage will be no new experience, although "Rip Van Winkle" is the first of his grand operas to be presented here.

Mr. De Koven was born in Connecticut, but he came to Chicago and spent eight years of his early manhood in business offices in this city, and it was here that he married (a Chicago girl of course) and here that he has kept up a wide circle of friends through all the years since he removed to New York.

The call to composition was insistent in his case first (also) in Chicago, and his first opera, "The Begum," was written in this city.

It was presented first, however, in Philadelphia (and shortly in New York), the year being 1887 and the producer McCaull, this being followed very soon by the famous "Robin Hood," which had its first Chicago appearance at the old Chicago Opera House in 1890, when it was presented by the famous Bostonians.

Needless to tell anyone who knows musical history in America that this and subsequent operas of Mr. De Koven had splendid successes and incredible "runs" throughout the country.

REGINALD DE KOVEN

And impossible as it may seem, it is yet true that these early beginnings were but the precursors of a most amazing list of operas, the grand total of those which have been produced reaching the astounding figure of forty-three.

Probably the most significant of the list is "The Canterbury Pilgrims," which was most successfully produced at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York just before the war, when it was given many performances in one season and would doubtless have been carried over successfully to the next year, save for the fact that war conditions sent away from the Metropolitan several artists who were indispensable to the success of this opera.

To dwell more fully on the writing of Mr. De Koven is unnecessary at this time, for volumes have already been written along that line, and it is equally futile to say more about "Rip Van Winkle," except to express once more the belief that in this we shall have another very successful American opera.

. . . . . .

"And," said Mr. De Koven, "who will know when the really great American opera does arrive?

"'Faust' and 'Carmen' were failures at their premieres, and many another opera has had to be given a good many times before its worth was determined.

"And so, as the new American works come along we must listen appreciatively and sympathetically to each in its turn. We must whole-heartedly commend what seems good and must so encourage and accept that there will be a constant growth in the art."

And all this led, naturally and easily, to Mr. De Koven's very strong ideas about music in general and about opera in America in particular.

This experienced composer (and successful as experienced) believes implicitly in melody and grace. He cares not for the eccentrique, the bizarre or the far-fetched, and to him the simple, flowing melody and the graceful motif at the first appearance of the character in the opera and emphasizing his personality and importance at each successive one, mean everything.

And he is very emphatic and very persistent in his attitude of Americanization of music and the fact that we, as a nation, should assert ourselves and refuse longer to be dominated by any foreign country.

The idea that we could not manage our own opera is to him a ridiculous one, and that we should be the only country in the world, except England, which submits to having opera in other languages than our own is preposterous in his eyes.

In this connection he told me of a conversation with Gatti-Casazza in New York, wherein the New York maestro told him that the Metropolitan was such a high grade institution that nothing but the best art ideals were permissible.

"Undoubtedly," said Mr. Gatti-Casazza, "any grand opera has a finer effect when sung in the language in which it was conceived and written."

"That sounds all right," replied Mr. De Koven, "but let's get down to real facts.

"You, for instance, made your fame as an impresario at Milan in presenting to the Italian people wonderful readings of the Wagner operas, did you not?" Mr. Gatti admitted that it was even so.

"What language was used in Milan?" shot out Mr. De Koven. "Italian, of course," reluctantly admitted Mr. Gatti-Casazza. "Well then," clinched Mr. De Koven, "my argument is safely won, for if Wagner could be successfully sung in Italian at Milan, if you yourself won great fame in this exploitation, there is no reason in the world why we should not have all operas, of all countries, sung at the Metropolitan, in New York, in English."

And the Italian maestro had to admit the truth of the argument.

"The United States is ripe for opera in the vernacular," continued Mr. De Koven, "and this will soon become an accomplished fact throughout the country. Just before the war, investigation which I put on foot proved that there are scores of cities in the country that are keen for it and will support it. In fact, but for the war, a nation-wide movement would have been inaugurated. And now, when conditions become thoroughly normal again, we may safely expect the movement to be revived. And when we have thus nationalized our opera and have thus provided an outlet for many more of our American musicians than can now find employment in opera, we shall, at last, be on the high road to real success in real American music, for American opportunities of production will stimulate American composition to its highest possibilities and American composition at its best will mean more interest in music throughout the country and a higher status for all musicians."

. . . . . .

Last spring (as at many another time) Mr. De Koven was the only critic in New York who dared to give an unbiased review to the American operas presented at the Metropolitan, and he is not afraid, at any time, to fully accredit any American artist with whatever of good work he may accomplish.

With a few more such loyal Americans in the field of composition and on the reportorial staffs of the great daily newspapers, we shall come, some day, to that musical millennium in America where we know what is good when we hear it and where we shall not be afraid to condemn or praise foreign music on its absolute merits, and where we shall also not only withhold our commendation from any American music which is cheap or banal, but will just as readily and unreservedly approve and commend all that is good, even though it have the label "American."

MACBETH TO APPEAR AS OPHELIA IN "HAMLET" WITH THE CHICAGO COMPANY

Florence Macbeth, one of the few American principals with the Chicago Opera Association, is soon to appear in several important roles at the Auditorium, one of them being Ophelia in "Hamlet" and another as Martha in "Martha."

Her successes in opera last year, particularly those as Gilda in "Rigoletto," which earned ovations reaching to the high-water mark in the annals of the Auditorium, were a source of pride to all who have the development of American music at heart. As Anna in "Lorely," too, her charm of voice, always sweet, pleasing and true, dispelled any doubt as to her right to the highest place among native exponents of coloratura song, and further, to prove that our American masters can produce singers who, when given the opportunity, are overshadowed neither in work nor art by comparison with the best that other countries ever sent us.

MacBURNEY STUDIO

Monday evening Thomas MacBurney presented Emma Bracken, soprano, in a fine program at Fine Arts Building. Harold B. Simonds, accompanist, did excellent work, both artistically and musically.

Miss Bracken has good quality of voice, a charming manner and an easy, sure delivery in vocal style that made her songs thoroughly worth while. A group of French songs by Ferrari, Paladilhe and Fourdrain were given with rare vocal charm and simplicity of style. A Russian group was lovely indeed. Especially did I like "Lilacs" and "Hushed the Song of the Nightingale." In four American songs by Carpenter and Spear there was displayed good interpretative thought and good tonal shading.

Miss Bracken made much also of numbers by Scott, Douty, di Rogero and Ferrata, being compelled to respond to enthusiastic applause at the program's close.

VALPARAISO, IND.

The following program was given by the University Symphony Orchestra on December 4 under the direction of Professor Stephan and won the unqualified indorsement of press and public alike:

Overture—Freischultz ..... Weber
Symphony No. 1, E flat (B & H) ..... Haydn
  Adagio; allegro con brio; adagio; andante with violin solo and variations
  Menuetto and Trio—
  Allegro con spirito
Aria, from La Boheme ..... Puccini
  Mr. John B. Miller
Violin Solo—Romance ..... Svendsen
  (With orchestral accompaniment)
  Mrs. Edith L. Stephan
Autumn and Winter ..... Glasounow
Vocal Solo—
  Plaintive ..... Elgar
Ecstasy ..... Rummel
  Mr. John B. Miller
Overture—Maritana ..... Wallace

The local press in comment on the event had this to say:

The first orchestral concert given by the University Symphony Orchestra December 4 in the Auditorium was one of the finest musical treats Valparaiso has had, the orchestra surpassing all its former achievements. Not every orchestra could attempt a program as formidable as that presented, and the ease with which the players surmounted the enormous technical difficulties, while at the same time never sacrificing beauty of expression, was a great tribute to leadership and training.

Undoubtedly the program was a heavy one, but the verve and grip of the musicians in the various climaxes, alternating with exquisite shading of the more delicate portions of the various compositions, cannot have failed to appeal to those unaccustomed to the heavier work of the classics. The playing of the orchestra under the fascinating baton of its director was of an excellence we have come to expect from this body of musicians, and was worthy of the high reputation it already holds in the musical world.

OSHKOSH LIKES MAY PETERSON

(From the Oshkosh (Wis.) Daily Northwestern)

"Hello, May."

It was a driver of a milk wagon who called out that salutation to Miss May Esther Peterson, just as that famous young woman was leaving the home of Miss Maria Hay this morning to go to the studio of Clarence E. Shepard for a rehearsal of her program for tomorrow evening. And "May" answered in kind with a cheery "hello" and a wave of her hand.

"Isn't that just perfectly splendid?" she asked of her companion. "Oh, it does seem so good to get back to Oshkosh and meet people who know you by your first name. Is it any wonder I just fairly lose all control of myself when I come back here. The people are all so lovely to me and they are no more glad to see me than I am to see them."

It may not be a difficult thing for newspaper representatives in other cities to interview Miss Peterson—excuse me, she chided me for not calling her "May"—but it is not easy for a newspaper man in Oshkosh to do so. Some way or other, the conversation persists in running into chats about people in this city, rather than regarding the artiste.

This much was learned. Miss Peterson is planning for a very busy season. She has contracts which will take her on a singing tour through the southern states with some grand opera engagements interspersed between concert dates after the holidays.

Mrs. Mary Peterson, her mother, has come here to be present at the concert tomorrow evening and is staying at the home of Mrs. Lillian Lovell, 158 Jefferson avenue, where the Peterson family resided for many years. Her sister, Miss Clara Peterson, is most successful in kindergarten work at Boston, near which city the family resides.

Then the conversation drifted back to the professional side of Miss Peterson's life. "I am using a considerable amount of American compositions and am also trying to bring out some of the Scandinavian gems by introducing one or two into my programs," said the famous Oshkosh girl—for she still maintains that she is an Oshkosh girl. "I have been particularly fortunate in my receptions this last year, but it is when I come back here that I am most anxious.

"To look into an audience and see many, many faces of those one knows personally is an inspiration to do one's best, but it brings regret that the best is so little. I always wish I could give them ten times as much, because the loyalty and friendship of the people of my own home city is my most cherished possession. I wish I could explain just what I feel. I enjoy kindness of people elsewhere but there is a quality of sympathy about the audiences in Oshkosh which takes hold of me in a way I can not explain."

CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The performance of the Rachmaninow Symphony in E minor on last Saturday evening was one of the finest pieces of work ever put forth by Mr. Stock and the men of the orchestra.

There was a glorious tone quality, magnificent interpretative sweep and a wealth of artistic detail.

Such a performance is a benediction to every one who hears.

The Rabaud "La Procession Nocturne" (Symphonic Poem) was also interesting and well done.

The soloist was Benno Moisiewitsch, and whatever his charm as a recital giver may be his full acceptance as an artist by this public awaits a solo appearance for, the Beethoven Concerto, Opus 73, in which he made his initial bow to Chicago, seemed, for some unaccountable reason, to be deadly dull and altogether perfunctory both as a composition and in the rendition accorded by the soloist and the orchestra.

The accompaniment of the latter was not even accurate, to say nothing of its utter lack of inspiration, and while Mr. Moisiewitsch proved himself very fine in his ability to evoke beautiful tone from the piano and in his wealth of nuance, he yet was singularly devoid, at this time, of any dramatic fire or any show of music color.

The program this week introduces as soloist Edward Johnson, American tenor of the Chicago Opera Association, and it reads as follows:

Overture—The Elopement from the Seraglio....Mozart
Preghiera, Vergin tutto amor.....Duranti
Lasciar d'amarti .....Gasparini
Symphony, D minor.....Franck
Lento; allegro non troppo
Allegretto
Allegro non troppo

CARL E. CRAVEN

Carl E. Craven is engaged as special soloist Sunday evening, December 21, at Grace M. E. Church, singing the tenor role in Maunder's "In Bethlehem."

Miss Francis Grund, contralto, an artist pupil of Carl E. Craven, is engaged to sing the "Messiah" next Sunday evening at the Church of the Redeemer.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE NOTES

There will be no concert given by the Chicago Musical College in Ziegfeld Theater Saturday, December 27, owing to the Christmas vacation. The program will be resumed January 3, with a concert by students in the piano, vocal and violin departments.

An informal studio recital was given on Wednesday by students of Esther Baumgartner and Ethel Woodstock.

Leone Kramer, student of Burton Thatcher, was one of the soloists at the concert given at the Arche Club last Friday, under the direction of C. Gordon Wedertz.

Robert Barron, student of Max Fischel, gave a recital in Portland, Ore., last week. Mr. Barron is one of the first violins in the Portland Symphony Orchestra. Herbert Kirschner, also a student of Mr. Fischel, is making a concert tour of Germany and expects to return to America next season.

Theodora Troendle, student of Harold V. Mickwitz, played Cesar Franck's Variations for Piano and Orchestra with great success in Milwaukee last Friday and Saturday.

Aeolia Martin, student of Max Kramm, was first prize winner at the American Festival held recently at Lockport, N. Y.

George Roth, student of Edoardo Sacerdote, was soloist last Sunday at the concert of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, Cincinnati.

The concert that will be given this Saturday morning by the Chicago Musical College will be presented by students in the piano, vocal and violin departments. The program will be given at 11 o'clock, in Ziegfeld Theater, and will be as follows:

Piano—Polonaise, C Sharp Minor.....Chopin
Lulu Whisnant (Chicago)

WILLIAM PHILLIPS

William Phillips, baritone, has resigned his position at First Presbyterian Church, where he has been for the past year, to accept a position in First Congregational Church of Oak Park. This was offered him on the occasion of his being a guest soloist a few weeks ago.

He was soloist at a delightful affair in the Crystal Ballroom of the Blackstone recently and gave a stunning program before the Chicago Literary Club.

SEATTLE, WASH.

Kirk Towns Gives Recital

Seattle is exceedingly fortunate in having Mr. Kirk Towns, the well-known vocalist and pedagogue, as a resident artist.

The Seattle Times excellently reports as follows on the remarkable program and artistry of Mr. Towns:

"The singer's highly cultivated voice responded unerringly to the mental concept of his numbers, as was particularly evident in his singing of Hahn's delicate 'L'Heure Exquise' and Sydney Homer's contrasting 'Pauper's Drive.' Milligan Fox's 'Foggy Dew' and Hollaender's 'The Reprieve' were examples of Mr. Towns' ability to clothe his songs with personality and vitality of interpretation.

"Well handled dramatic effects, used with tasteful reserve, and an excellent command of mezzo voce were attributes of Mr. Towns' singing."

Music News' correspondent had the pleasure of a very interesting interview with this genial artist and hearing about the excellent work being done under him in his fine studio downtown, where gather students from the best social circles to take advantage of his splendid tuition. Of handsome presence and dignified bearing is Mr. Towns—a man of keen, vigorous personality, inspiring and encouraging these rising young western singers in most earnest fashion. Frank Meeker, tenor, winner of Mr. Towns' free scholarship out of a large number of contestants, is a young singer with a future before him, combining genuine musical feeling and warm temperament with a powerful voice, which, under Mr. Towns' critical guidance, is rapidly being developed into a very attractive and appealing concert voice.

Mr. Towns also appeared before the members of the Musical Art Society November 9, giving a very able and interesting address, and following it with delightful renditions of six famous songs, and one of Miss Marian Coryell's very attractive compositions. Miss Coryell is a very talented, versatile lady and remarkably fine accompanist, especially in the group of French songs.

Seattle Musical Art Society is an interesting organization, formed by a number of the lady vocalists, pianists and teachers of the city, with very progressive, public-spirited aims and earnest desires to aid music in Seattle vigorously. They are promoting a series of three ensemble concerts under the direction of the distinguished violoncellist, Mr. George Kirchner, with Professor Claude Madden, one of the leading violinists of the city, and Miss Anna Grant Dall, a very accomplished pianist, as the assisting artists, in trios by Beethoven, Dvorak, and others of the great composers.

AGNES BELDON.

SYBIL COMER

Sybil Comer, the increasingly popular soprano, reached Chicago a few days ago, having entirely recovered from an illness which forced her to cancel a western tour and detained her two weeks in Fremont, Neb.

This past Sunday afternoon she was the soloist at the Chicago Athletic Club and was received with more than the usual enthusiasm and forced to respond to encores.

Miss Comer was the same day warmly welcomed on her return to her post at the First Presbyterian Church.

LUCIE LENOX STUDIOS

Harriet Geiger will sing both morning and afternoon at the Little Theater Saturday. Miss Geiger, who is one of the younger Lenox sopranos, has been appearing with splendid success and will at this time sing "Toy Tunes from Holland," a group of six songs, in Dutch costume.

Miss Harriet Krauth is to be the special soloist for the Christmas Festival at the First Congregational Church parlors at Oak Park next Monday evening. Miss Krauth is the possessor of a splendid soprano, about which many nice things are being said.

Mrs. Lenox presents Miss Frances Coates, costume song interpreter, with the George Dasch Orchestra at Irving Park January 2. Miss Coates gave a four-group program under the auspices of the Austin Woman's Club at the Masonic Temple in Austin last Monday afternoon, and will appear in "Musical Etchings" at the North End Woman's Club in that same suburb March 9.

Hazel Meisterling, mezzo-soprano, will give a program at Humboldt Park Masonic Temple this Saturday evening with Winifred Tompkins at the piano. Compositions by Bizet, di Nogero, Alvarez, Ferrata and Chaminade will be sung.

Miss Meisterling will be soloist in the special Christmas music at the First Methodist Church of Oak Park Sunday morning. Mrs. Lenox is soon to present an "All in America" program in Fine Arts Recital Hall.

BLACKSTONE MORNING MUSICALE

The program of Tuesday, December 9, met with the most enthusiastic response of any this season, though the audience was not as large, due to the oncoming of the Christmas season and the opening of the Atlantic City Board Walk Bazaar at the Coliseum. The artist co-partners were Paul Althouse and Josef Lhevinne, both exponents of the foremost rank.

Lhevinne possesses a technic which is nothing short of stupendous, and his exposition is clear, decisive and finished to the last degree. And, notwithstanding the absolute perfection of his technic, there is in all his work a poetic quality which compels admiration because of the fineness and delicacy of expression. To hear Lhevinne is to hear a perfectly conceived balance of the intellectual and emotional attributes which go to make up the master art expression.

Paul Althouse is keenly intuitive and searching in his interpretation of songs, not of one kind, but of many; and his good musicianship and intelligence in the use of his tools, which are extraordinary in themselves, is rare. His own personality is winning, but not dominating, which is as it should be to mark an exceptional artist.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

JOSEF ROSENBLATT

The second appearance of the Jewish cantor at Orchestra Hall met with the same success as that of last year. The singer was recalled many times and the audience, which filled the house, was most enthusiastic. The program contained, besides two well known arias and a group of folksongs in English, several compositions of Mr. Rosenblatt in the Hebrew, written in the old modes and delivered in the recitative style of the Jewish music.

BURTON THATCHER SCORES

On Wednesday morning at the Ziegfeld Theater Mr. Carl Kinsey presented Mr. Burton Thatcher in recital, with Edgar Nelson at the piano. To vary the hackneyed order of things, we will begin by saying that Mr. Nelson proved to be a most indispensable and delightful feature of the program, and will then proceed to the artist responsible for the caption of this article.

Mr. Thatcher is a baritone of distinction and a well-known favorite of Chicago audiences. But, if there were any doubts heretofore of his sound musicianship and sane artistry of interpretation, they were promptly dispelled Wednesday morning. His program was one to merit comment as an artistic whole, and his singing was wholly satisfying from the standpoint of voice and interpretation. The classic numbers at the opening were done in fitting style and directness of delivery, and the difficult "Buccaneer" song story of Wiedig was invested with considerable interest. From this the singer reached a splendid climax in the closing numbers, which made many demands on the vocal and dramatic abilities of the artist.

BURTON THATCHER
(Snapped while on Chautauqua tour)

The program is quoted:

Come Blessed Cross, from St. Mathew Passion....Bach
Che Fiero Costume....Legrenzi
Lungi dal Caro Bene....Secchi
Pensee d'Automne....Massenet
The Buccaneer (A Song Story)....Adolf Weidig
The Sailing
The Meeting
The Wooing
The Marriage
In the Sunrise
The Parting
A Maid Sings Light....MacDowell
Long Ago....MacDowell
Your Voice....Laura D. Harris
King Charles....White
Air of the Drum Major, from The Cadi....Thomas

WILLIAM PHILLIPS

William Phillips, who in addition to his many activities in the musical life of Chicago is head of the vocal department at Lake Forest University, conducted the choral number at the Christmas Musicale of the University Women's Chorus last Saturday evening.

Alice Phillips (Mrs. William Phillips) is his assistant and ably conducted the chorus at the annual Christmas vespers last Sunday, at Ferry Hall, where she is in charge of the choral work.

Rankel—John Rankel, baritone, sang at La Grange on December 11 for a patriotic meeting and on December 3 at the Sherman Hotel for the Western Confectioners' Association.

EDWARD JOHNSON HAS HIS FORTUNE TOLD

Had Edward Johnson, the new American tenor with the Chicago Grand Opera Company, studied palmistry when a boy he would have seen that his fate line, instead of rising from the wrist or the plain of Mars, curves in from the Mount of Luna, and he would have known that in spite of parental plans for a vocation in any other direction an artistic career would eventually claim him.

There is recorded on both the head and life lines a period in which the will was not free to choose a course. Something confined the head line to a narrower channel than complete freedom demanded. This is shown to have been caused by the influence of relatives. And one other influence line on the Mount of Venus points to the same thing—interference. This "interference" ceases at the age of twenty, when his relatives relinquished the idea of his following the career they had chosen.

EDWARD JOHNSON

After this the head line makes a scoop down the palm to wonderful happiness and success. The fate line does the same in its direction up, but in its straight course to the Mount of Saturn it is crossed once by a great sorrow.

On the Mount of Apollo Mr. Johnson has the tripod which promises success in art.

All artists should look at the mount which lies at the base of the third finger. If it is marked with a star or tripod they will be famous; if with a cross they will meet with disappointment. When this mount is unmarked the fate line tells the story.

Mr. Johnson's hand records a remarkable and uncommon thing—the marrying of his true fate love. An opera singer married the first time, to his one true affinity in all the world!

This union, to which one child is born, is a happy and brilliant one, but the marriage line turns down and the heart line is broken, showing that death interposes. The hand contains great happiness and great sorrow.

Ahead of Mr. Johnson at this time is a straight, unchanging fate line for several years. His success is to be even greater than it has yet been.

Generally speaking, Mr. Johnson's hand would be classified as the spatulate. People who have this type are the advance agents of thought. Artists with this development will break rules of precedent, and assert a marked individuality, not through eccentricity, but simply because they have originality.

This type is critical both of self and of others. They never build castles which they cannot some time occupy, having in regard to this an uncanny intuition and power of analysis.

Artists have faults like other people, and since Mr. Johnson promised he would not censor this, one may hint that vocalizing, learning roles and rehearsing are irksome to him. In verifying this he used the word LAZY, but a palmist would hesitate to say so harsh a thing about so amiable a gentleman.

To all lovely matrimonially inclined ladies in the opera or out of it it becomes my painful duty to announce that Mr. Johnson is marked to remain a widower all the days of his life.

At the age of fifty there is to be a change of locality, at which time he will go abroad and spend the remainder of his life there. He will sing until he is sixty.

TOURING DIFFICULTIES VANISH BEFORE SCHUMANN-HEINK'S GOOD SPORTSMANSHIP

Many are the titles that have been used to describe the incomparable Schumann-Heink throughout her distinguished career, but perhaps none is more indicative of the human side of the great artist than that of "good sport." Under any and all circumstances Madame is a good sport. The life of an artist on tour—particularly when one sings in a different city on the average of every other night—is not exactly a "happy" one. There are such trifling inconveniences as traveling in day coaches because the Pullmans are cut off, of finding that the best suite in the local hotel is a favorite playground of little gray mice; in short, to quote the words of Schumann-Heink herself, "the hotels, meals, rooms and 'beer' are all fierce. I can hardly eat or sleep; in fact, all I can do is sing." Of this last statement there is no doubt, judging by the press eulogies that follow her every triumphant appearance. A sense of humor that never deserts her is in evidence in a recent letter to her managers telling of her difficulties which she ends with, "And so it goes, but otherwise, so far, we are still alive," and then showing her spirit of fun still further she draws a caricature of herself at the bottom of the page and labels it Schumann-Heink "the beauty."

BERTHA ANN COOPER

A letter just received from Mr. H. J. Martin of Vermontville, Michigan, who read of Miss Cooper in the columns of Music News, comments on her appearance some time ago in Olivet under his direction. He says of her, "Bertha Ann Cooper is a splendid soprano, and socially as intelligent and attractive as musically."

MAY PETERSON SINGS FOR HER HOME TOWN

If May Peterson had any more to give, Oshkosh would have received it last evening. It was not her first appearance in the city since she attained greatness in the musical world, and at no time has she stinted her audience. But last evening she overreached any past efforts both in quality and quantity. She was among her own people, those who love and admire her for what she has achieved, as well as for her charming self, and she threw herself into her program with an abandon which fairly carried everybody off his feet. It was by far her best effort in every respect.

Her voice has developed and grown. It is richer and more full than ever, and she has lost every vestige of self-consciousness. She demonstrated, as never before, her ability to exercise wide latitude in interpretation, without exaggeration. But the greatest charm of the whole concert was the way she sang for—rather than to—her audience. Miss Peterson was greeted by an audience even larger than that which was present for John McCormack. Not only was every wall seat occupied and the gallery packed, but there were nearly 100 persons on the stage.—Oshkosh, Wis., Daily Northwestern.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS TO SING "MESSIAH" IN OAK PARK

William Phillips will sing the "Messiah" at First Congregational Church of Oak Park on the evening of December 21. He has just recently accepted the position of bass in the quartet of the above mentioned church.

His appearance not long ago before the Daughters of New England at the Blackstone Hotel was an unqualified success. He is to sing for the Birchwood Country Club on January 14.

Byxbee—Beatrice Byxbee was accompanist for Charles E. Lutton at the Colony of New England Women banquet at the Blackstone Hotel last week, and for Helen Rockwell at the North Shore Hotel in Evanston on Monday evening of this week.

HELEN ROCKWELL IN FAREWELL RECITAL

Helen Rockwell, an artist pupil of Miss Alta Miller of the Northwestern University School of Music, gave a song recital at the beautiful new North Shore Hotel (Ballroom), Evanston, on last Monday evening, which, to the regret of a numerous circle of friends, took the form of a farewell, as she is removing almost at once to Colorado.

Miss Rockwell has been prominent in church and concert work and has grown to be a great favorite on the North Shore.

On Monday evening she drew a very large and a thoroughly distinguished audience, and there was constant appreciation and enthusiasm for the charm of her program and the beauty of her work.

Miss Rockwell has a friendly manner, a very nice appearance and an earnest and honest attitude both toward vocal art and the interpretation of songs.

Her voice is rich, full, musical and under fine control—to me, it seems a voice tending distinctly toward the dramatic soprano range and style and was most effective in the big, brilliant numbers, which were sung with great eclat.

Lighter songs were fine, too, and—as Miss Rockwell has extraordinarily fine enunciation, each of her numbers carried charm and conviction.

The program was excellently chosen and contained a great deal of superlative beauty.

Among the most emphatically charming of the list were "Song of India" (Rimsky-Korsakoff), "Chanson de Florian" (Godard) and "Twilight" (Glen), and, if I am accused of a tendency to like the purely saccharine in this list of favorites, there is the unanswerable argument that the audience agreed with me to the extent of applauding these three with especial vigor.

There were other songs of Russia than that mentioned, i. e., Korsakoff's "Song of the Shepherd Lehl," "Over the Steppes" (Gretchaninoff), and a Reverie by Arensky, these assisting materially in giving sturdiness to the program.

The French group, exquisitely sung, contained, besides the Godard number, a Romance of Debussy and the "Printemps Nouveau" of Vidal.

The "Vissi d'Arte" (Tosca) was well thought out and well done from both technical and interpretative standpoints, and the final group was a rare delight, including (besides Glen) "My Love Is a Muleteer," a very stirring bolero by Di Nogero; "The Wind Speaks," a thrilling little bit by G. A. Grant-Schaefer; "Butterflies," a difficult trifle by Seiler, and Sanderson's gay "Valley of Laughter," in which last Miss Rockwell was particularly effective.

The encores and recalls were numerous—among the extras being "An Open Secret" (Woodman) and "The Birthday of a King" (Neidlinger), thoroughly beautiful and equally appropriate to the time.

Miss Rockwell was assisted by Beatrice Byxbee, who not only played pianistic, sympathetic, artistic and altogether logical accompaniments, but was heard, too, in a piano group which proved her the possessor of both concert technic and style.

The Rachmaninoff Serenade in B Flat Minor was given broad, free tone, while at the same time it was kept to an exquisite quality. MacDowell's "To a Water Lily" proved, as always, attractive and Carl Beecher's "Scherzando" was much liked.

PARIS, FRANCE

Opera News

The week of November 24 was of especial interest to readers of Music News. Thanksgiving afternoon we attended the Paris premiere of "Gismonda," by Fevrier, which was first given last January at the Auditorium. Thanks to the French desire for ensemble in opera we witnessed an interesting, smooth performance, well conducted by M. Catherine, and decidedly pleasing to the eye.

Mme. Brunlet in the title role commanded our attention thruout. Excepting for an occasional hardness of quality, due perhaps to overanxiety, she revealed a splendid soprano. The leading male characters were adequately cared for by M. Lapelleterie as Almerio, Albers as Zaccaria, and M. Azema as "Sophron," the latter possessing a particularly pleasing bass.

The applause and exclamations of approval at the close of the impressive finale seemed to augur well for continued approval at the repetitions of "Gismonda" by the forces at Opera Comique.

Paris opera lovers are hearing opera now at "Le Theatre Lyrique and Vaudeville," due to the successful intentions and efforts of Messrs. P. B. Gheusi and M. A. Deval. They plan to present as many new operas and singers as possible We could not hear the first performance, which was an excellent production of Massenet's "Cleopatre." Two singers well known to Music News readers, Mary Garden and Maria Kousnezoff, have been heard in the title role. In all the performances M. Renaud is a dominant factor in the role of Marc "Antoine." The orchestre, chorus, and scenic effects are more than adequate considering the limits of the theatre.

Of especial interest also to Music News readers is that Georgio Polacco is leading the "section Italienne" of the Theatre Lyrique forces. Owing to our late arrival in Paris we could not attend the first performance of "Il Barbiere de Siviglia," but we did hear an excellent rendition November 24, Polacco as usual being the dominant personality.

The cast was remarkably well balanced, including two artists familiar to Music News—Fernando Carpi and Vanni Marcoux, the latter creating a strong impression by his vivid impersonation of "Basilio." Mlle. Paretto as "Rosina" and Badini as "Figaro" were more than adequate.

"Tarass Boulba," by Marcel Samuel-Rousseau, received its first hearing last week, and created much favorable comment. Inability to secure seats will prevent reviewing it until next week, when we shall also send news of the Grand Opera.

JENNIE F. W. JOHNSON

Jennie F. W. Johnson, contralto, will give a program of 30 Christmas Carols of 18 countries for the Bryn Mawr Club December 22, and on December 28 will repeat the same program at Trinity Church, Bay City, Mich. On the night of December 28 Miss Johnson will give a private song recital at Bay City.

LESTER GROOM AND BLANCHE TRELEASE

In an analytical organ recital at the Church of the Ascension last Tuesday evening Mr. Groom distinguished himself both as an artist and a student. His program was one of difficulty and great variety, which (if we are not mistaken) was played entirely from memory, and his explanations of the various numbers printed on the program were scholarly. Among his numbers were the Bach G Minor Fantasie and Fugue, the "Hallelujah Chorus" from "The Messiah" and the Cesar Franck A Minor Chorale.

The five movements of Goldmark's "Rustic Wedding" Symphony were given, the first three having been transcribed and arranged for organ by Mr. Groom—another glimpse of this artist's versatile accomplishments.

The program was excellent and prepared with a thoroughness which is seldom evident.

Mr. Groom was assisted in the vocal numbers by Mrs. Blanche Trelease, contralto, who sang the sacred solo, "He Was Despised," from "The Messiah," and two secular songs, "The Last Hour" (Kramer) and "Vale" (Russell). Mrs. Trelease has a telling voice of beautifully smooth, flowing quality, which is particularly adaptable for church work. She was very artistic and true to tradition in her delivery of the "Messiah" aria and showed an eager sensibility of the dramatic in her interpretation of the smaller songs.

Mrs. Trelease is contralto soloist and director of the choir at the First Baptist Church, Fiftieth street and Drexel boulevard.

APPRECIATION FOR AUGUSTA COTTLOW

That Augusta Cottlow, the gifted American pianist, is equally gifted in imparting her knowledge to others is shown in a few extracts from letters received from a grateful pupil, Miss Joy Keck, a well-known teacher of Riverside, Calif., who came east last summer to study with Miss Cottlow. As Miss Keck had studied abroad, Miss Cottlow appreciated all the more the splendid lines.

"I am trying to teach exactly as you suggested, and everyone of my pupils realizes and appreciates the value and worth of such analytical study.

"My one regret is that I did not have such study years ago. But I can never thank you adequately for the help you gave me this summer, and for making me feel for the first time in my life that there is a scientific technical foundation for piano playing.

"Musically, I received far more than I thought it possible for me to obtain in so short a time.

"Your teaching was the kind I wanted and needed ever since I began to study. It goes to the root of every difficulty and a pupil simply must progress. Every day I marvel at the results it brings."

The Philharmonic at the Hippodrome

No better proof of the Philharmonic's popularity could be given than the overflowing audience which overtaxed even the stage Sunday evening, December 7. Mr. Stransky appeared with his organization at the Hippodrome at the concert given by the Hurok Musical Agency. The opening number was Beethoven's overture, "Leonore," No. 3, followed by the same master's Concerto in D Minor, Op. 61, for orchestra and violin. The soloist was Mischa Elman. The second part of the program enlisted Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries," Wotan's "Farewell" and "Magic Fire Scene," Overture 1812, and Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," with Mischa Elman as the assisting artist.

Yvette Guilbert Again

Perhaps the diseuse will be inclined to reappear once more this season. Her second was announced as the last, at least for the winter season. She was heard by the writer in her two famous songs, "La Legende de St. Nicholas" and "C'est le mai." Her success was great, and she was warmly applauded by a capacity house assembled at the Maxine Elliott on Sunday evening, December 7. She gave an encore which consisted of "La Passion du Christ." Useless to analyze her work. Sufficient to say that she is remarkable. A chorus trained by Mme. Guilbert sang effectively "Le Chant des Flagellants" (Eighteenth Century). I was told that the ladies had only a five weeks' training, but the singing was artistic. Several assisting artists were on the program—Mrs. Bloomfield, soprano; Mildred Dilling, harpist; Emily Gresser, violinist, and Virginia Fox Brooks. Maurice Eisner was at the piano. Mme. Guilbert sang also modern songs.

"The Gondoliers" at the Park

Even if a first-night revival of the "Gondoliers" is not all that one may wish, the performance was pleasurable in many respects. The first honors should go to John McGhie, who worked magic with his musicians. If the Sullivan music is not sung properly, the text is always a treat of joy. Danforth was a correct inquisitor and Moulan an adequate Duke. If Miss Caldwell had a voice in measure with her graceful acting she would be entitled to more praise. Craig Campbell was agreeable, and Peacock a better Gondolier than any role he attempted so far. Irene Williams sang well, but more action would have improved her performance. Brainard, Cora Tracy and May Naudain completed the cast.

Sophie Braslau Soloist With the Symphony Society of New York

The afternoon concert of November 11 given by the Symphony Society of New York under the leadership of Walter Damrosch enlisted the services of Sophie Braslau, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera House, to commemorate the memory of Miss Mary Rhinelander Callender, a director of the Symphony Society, who died a few days ago. The Symphony played Grieg's Funeral March, and the tribute was followed by the audience, who stood up rather in mournful reverence. Miss Callender while alive helped needy musicians, and Mr. Damrosch's tribute deserves praise. Miss Braslau, who was in splendid trim, sang "Ah, Quel Giono," from Rossini's "Semiramide," and three songs by Moussorgsky consisting of "Serenade of Death," "Au Bord du Don" and "On the Dnieper." In the latter Miss Braslau proved to be the mistress of Russian songs. Her interpretation was admirable and the use of her voice was skillful. So far she has not made her appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House, but from her afternoon's work we may expect even better things than in the past. Other orchestral numbers on the program were Charpentier's "Impressions d'Italie" and the Intermezzo and Perpetuum Mobile from Moszkowsky's Suite, Op. 39.

The Overture of "William Tell" Played at the Opera of Algiers After the First Act

A very amusing report comes from Algiers. The management of the opera announced in the local press that the overture to "William Tell," by Rossini, will be played after the first act so as to permit the audience to listen to the celebrated music of the Italian genius. The manager certainly has only little faith in his audiences by introducing this novelty, but it reminded of Victor Hugo's saying, "Well, when the music is too long let us have dancing."

"Samson and Dalila"

Saint-Saens' spectacular and superb opera occupied the boards of the Metropolitan on Wednesday evening, December 10. A capacity house listened to the performance, which enlisted the last year's cast save for Gabriella Besanzoni in the part of Dalila. She was in superb voice; the lower register as well as the medium were a delight to the ear. Indeed, Mme. Besanzoni's voice is one of rare and exceptional charm. The impersonation did not materialize to be a striking one. Other Dalilas (like Matzenauer's) gave us an opportunity for everlasting impressions. Mme. Besanzoni needed a bit of more expression and conviction. Caruso was Samson and sang well. Robert Couzinou was in excellent voice and made out of the grand pretre a conspicuous impersonation, vocally and histrionically. Leon Rothier as the old Hebrew was, as always, in the traditions of the opera. Albert Wolff's conducting was a source of delight. If skeptical and envious minds doubted his abilities, his work was the best answer. Everything went like magic under his supreme baton. The Bacchanale was never so beautifully handled as by Mr. Wolff on this occasion. And he was without any doubt the most conspicuous figure of the performance. The chorus and ballet contributed much to the performance.

"Lucia"

The masses do not seem to tire of Donizetti's tuneful opera. They prefer it to many a good modern masterpiece like Montemezzi's "L'Amore dei Tre." A capacity house listened to the old melodies on Saturday evening, December 13. Curiosity and interest centered in Evelyn Scotney's appearance in the title role. It would be odious to compare her interpretation with many others who paraded before us in an attempt to convince us of their abilities. Miss Scotney revealed a superb upper register, clear, ringing, pure and of distinctive beauty. Her medium is also of excellent quality. A coloratura soprano without technic is not worthy of the opera house, and Miss Scotney possesses it in abundance. The staccatos and cadenzas, the fioratura work is such as to give promise of an eventful career. Her singing of "Regnava" in the first act was a superb exhibition from all points of view. And the audience tendered her an unusual reception. Then came the Mad Scene and the finale aria which followed it.

Miss Scotney's voice will grow in legato and her acting will gain force with frequent appearances. Giulio Crimi, Pasquale Amato, Giovanni Martino, and Angelo Bada were the other interpreters, and Papi conducted. The chorus sang well, the scenery looked good, but the work of some of the soloists was far from satisfactory.

The Theater Parisien

Since December 1 and for as many days as the attendance will permit, the French Theater is presenting "La Gueule du Loup," the wholesome farce by the genial Maurice Hennequin and his excellent collaborator, Paul Bilhauld. This year's contingent lacks brilliancy and distinction. We miss Charles Dullin, Louis Jouvet and Blanche Van Doren. The present cast, if not exceptional actors, at least are satisfying. A wife suspects her husband's attractions for another, but the end explains all. The comedy is wholesome and amusing. Those who pleased most: Lucien Weber, who finally seats himself on the judicial bench; Henriette Delannoy, who acted and looked charmingly as Mme. Planturel; Robert Casadesus, the company's director; Felix Barre, a good and entertaining domestic, and Suzanne Caubet, who acted sweetly as the maid.

"Nothing but Love" at the Forty-fourth Street Theater

It is rather hard to be amused nowadays. The plays are mediocer, the musical comedies are antiquated and everything else is artificial. I am so accustomed to be disillusioned about musical shows that I am glad to say that "Nothing but Love" pleased me. If you wish to forget the accumulating troubles, see it. The book is amusing, the music is agreeable and the cast is excellent. Credit for the show should go to Frank Stammers for the book and staging, and to Mr. Orlob for the music. And there is at least one good singer, in the person of Ruby Norton, who has also personal charm. The comedy is well dressed by Andrew Tombes. The scenery, chorus girls and the balance of the cast make "Nothing but Love" a wholesome entertainment.

Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra at the Hippodrome—Emmy Destinn Soloist

Expectations of a red letter Sunday ran high, but the results were disappointing. When big names are advertised in black type we meet sometimes with disillusionment, and so it happened on Sunday afternoon and evening, November 30.

The Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, with Eugene Ysaye, appeared at the Hippodrome in the evening. In brief lines the orchestra cannot be compared with the respectable symphonic bodies. The quality of the violins and the reed instruments fell below the standard orchestral organizations. To build up an orchestra takes time, and besides there must be good musicians. Eugene Ysaye is a good conductor. He has elan, vivacity and knows the music. But a good conductor leading a poor orchestra is like a father's efforts to bring up his children to a degree of honor who fails because his sons don't grasp his intentions. He was heard in the Overture to "Der Freischutz" (Weber) and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, called "Eroica." The orchestra gave only a miniature performance of Beethoven's masterpiece.

Emmy Destinn was the soloist, and I must admit my disappointment against my expectations. She still possesses a voice, the medium is brilliant and fresh, and the upper is agreeable, but the latter was produced with effort and with evidences of difficult breath control. No aria is so ineffective in concert as the one from "La Juive" (Halevy), revived lately by the Metropolitan. As an encore she gave the aria from "La Tosca," but it was far from being an ideal interpretation. The soprano and Mr. Ysaye were given cordial applause. The balance of the program was not heard, but consisted of "Fantaisie Wallonne" (Theodore Ysaye) and the ballet suite "Sylvia" (Delibes) by the orchestra. Emmy Destinn sang an aria from "Trovatore" and a Bohemian song.

Grace Kearns Sings "Values"

At the High School Auditorium of Lockport, N. Y., and under the auspices of the Lockport City Teachers' Association, Frederick Vanderpool's "Values" was interpreted by the charming American soprano, Grace Kearns. The singer featured also the same song at a benefit performance of the day nursery of the Flatbush Boys' Club and was applauded vehemently. There is no better proof of Mr. Vanderpool's popularity than the frequent presentation of his song, which is indeed a truly remarkable composition.

"Greenwich Village Follies" at Nora Bayes Theater

The show is certainly far from being a Ziegfeld performance, but there is one man in these Follies who deserves many lines of praise. And this is James Watts. His characteristic impersonations are splendid caricatures. The satirical caricature of Gounod's "Marguerite" was one of the artistic events of the show. In fact, Mr. Watts was the show in itself. Bessie McCoy has only little to exhibit and Al Herman could have spared us the vulgar and indecent jokes. Ted Lewis and his jazz band also deserve a note of praise. The costumes are good, the scenery is worthy of commendation, and I heard better voices in this show than in a hundred musical comedies. A. Baldwin Sloane imbued the musical score with strains which are agreeable and catchy. He deserves attention for excluding the inspired songs for which Broadway is known to be so keen. The Follies contain other pleasant scenes.

CONCERT OF THE PAULIST CHORISTERS

On last Friday evening the Paulist Choristers, at Orchestra Hall, under direction of Leroy Wetzel, gave an excellent concert to an almost capacity house and elicited unbounded enthusiasm.

Mr. Wetzel announced, early in the evening, that a wave of "colds" had engulfed his boys and that the soloists were particularly "under the weather."

The effects of all this, however, were scarcely noticeable and, on the contrary, the work of the choir was at a particularly fine status, showing excellent personnel, great intelligence in interpretation, beautiful shading and tone color and a general excellence quite in consonance with what we have been taught to expect of the Paulist Choirs.

Mr. Wetzel directed with authority, skill and musical art, and both in his choice and arrangement of program and the conduct of the same (including the fact of his playing many fine accompaniments), he was worthy of the greatest praise.

One criticism only is to be made, and that relates to encores. With a program of nineteen numbers there should have been an ironclad rule of "no encores," and it should have been enforced, for once it was allowed it was bound to extend throughout the list of soloists, with the result that the program was very much too long.

The ecclesiastical numbers of the program were beautifully conceived and executed, notable among them being the lovely "Benedictus" of J. Lewis Browne, which was sung at this time "by request"; others being fine numbers by Waddington, Schnetky, Grieg and Rachmaninoff.

Lighter pieces were by Leslie and Zolotarieff, and besides a Bohemian Christmas carol, delightfully sung, there were splendid readings of Elgar's "As Torrents in Summer" and Tschaikowsky's "A Legend."

There was a delightful organ number by Hugo Goodwin, who in the Concert Variations of Bonnet displayed superb technic and both in that and in a Serenade of Rachmaninoff disclosed musical values of high grade.

Frank Barnard sang an aria (tenor) from "The Creation" and assisted with incidental solo and obligato, as did also Joseph Molengraft, Charles Carter and Masters Arthur Donovan and William Moran.

The small boys who appeared in solo numbers covered themselves with glory.

Arthur Donovan sang "Come Unto Me" and William Moran "He Shall Feed His Flock" ("Messiah") very beautifully, and the latter showed fine tonal quality in "Such a Lil' Fellow" (Dichmont).

Albion Benning was pleasing in a well made Reverie of Leroy Wetzel, Kenneth Polley sang a light song very well indeed, Henry Wachter was musical in "The Cuckoo" (Lehmann), and Julian Marhoefer (who is about 5, I think) brought down the house with his clever reading of the cunning song "Three Little Chestnuts" (Page).

Frederick Blum, of riper years, was well liked in "An Irish Noel" (Holmes) and the exceedingly popular "Smilin' Through" (Penn), and the Messrs. Barnard and Molengraft distinguished themselves in a duet from Mercadante's "Seven Last Words."

THIRD SEASON

Leading Tenor Chicago Opera Ass'n

RECENT PRESS COMMENTS

LUCIA

(Chicago Daily Journal)—Forrest Lamont, as Edgardo, gave the role THE BEST SINGING IT HAS HAD OF ALL THE TIMES THE OPERA HAS BEEN GIVEN SINCE THE COMPANY WAS FIRST ORGANIZED. He is an artist to be reckoned with.—Ed. C. Moore.

(Chicago Evening Post)—Forrest Lamont was the Edgardo, and his steady improvement was again noticeable. He is taking his profession seriously and working hard to perfect himself in all departments of the many-sided technic of the operatic stage. Mr. Lamont has made himself a MOST USEFUL MEMBER OF THE COMPANY AND IS GOING AHEAD ALL THE TIME.—Karleton Hackett.

(Chicago Evening American)—Forrest Lamont, EXCELLENT AS EDGARDO, was heartily applauded and recalled many times by the audience.—Herman Devries.

BUTTERELY

(Chicago Daily Tribune)—Forrest Lamont was Pinkerton, and his manly, steady, smooth tenor LENT ATTRACTIVENESS AND AUDITORY COMFORT TO ALL HE SANG, while his acting raised Pinkerton as far from the insufferably caddish as anything could. It is a role nothing can make admirable or sympathetic, but Mr. Lamont did all that was possible.—W. L. Hubbard.

(Chicago Daily News)—Forrest Lamont, the American tenor, sings as though his name were Lamonti, FOR IT IS THE WARM AND FULL-THROATED UTTERANCES of a singer of Italy.—Maurice Rosenfeld.

(Chicago Herald and Examiner)—Forrest Lamont as Pinkerton gave the sincere, intelligent and vocally effective interpretation to the thankless role with which he has coped so successfully on previous occasions. THIS TIME HE SANG BETTER THAN EVER BEFORE, AND WELL DESERVED THE TREMENDOUS APPLAUSE HIS GOOD SINGING WON FOR HIM.—Henriette Weber.

Makes Instantaneous Hit

at Mendelssohn Club Concert on December 11 at Orchestra Hall

(Chicago Daily News)—Forrest Lamont, a leading tenor of the Chicago Opera Association, gained new laurels as a concert singer. He was particularly fine in the Frederick Stevenson setting of "An American Ace." This is a stirring war song, with realistically dramatic text. Mr. Lamont SANG THE SOLOS ADMIRABLY, WITH FINE TONE SHADING AND POWER.—Maurice Rosenfeld.

(Chicago Evening Post)—Forrest Lamont was singing as I entered, and he made a great success with the audience. His voice was FULL AND CLEAR, AND HE SANG WITH FEELING. He had to bow several times and sing an encore.—Karleton Hackett.

(Chicago Daily Journal)—Forrest Lamont, one of the Chicago Opera Association's excellent tenors, sang "Che gelida marina" for his solo number, and made a STRIKING IMPRESSION WITH IT. For an encore he sang the "Lament" from "Pagliacci," and his FINE, VIGOROUS VOICE AND EMOTIONAL INTERPRETATION WERE EVEN MORE EFFECTIVE THERE. He also triumphed in the Stevenson number.—Edward C. Moore.

(Chicago Evening American)—When I entered Orchestra Hall last evening the fine, ringing tenor of Forrest Lamont was delivering the "Racconto" from "La Boheme." The young American SANG WITH PERFECT ART AND BEAUTIFUL TONE. Many recalls won from him the "Lament" of "Pagliacci," given with the same finish.—Herman Devries.

of tone and a pure style. His singing is governed by intelligence and a rare discrimination and at no time does he sacrifice words for tone.

"I love beautiful tone," continued Mr. Proctor, "but I make it a point always to get the story over. If my audience hears my words I feel satisfied. One of the greatest compliments I ever received was when I went back to the town of my boyhood days and where I gave a song recital. After the program was finished an old lady who had known me all my life came up and said, 'Warren, we all loved your voice, but what pleased me most was that I heard every word you sang.' That is the secret of a song recitalist; to get the words over to his audience."

Mr. Proctor is a firm advocate of singing his program in English. "When I go on tour with Madame Tetrazzini I intend to sing one aria in French and the rest of my songs in English. I want my audiences to understand what I'm singing and they can't do that unless they hear a language with which they are all familiar. When the American public ceases to rave about foreign opera and foreign singers and begins to recognize American products, just so soon will the young singers of this country of ours be given a chance to show what they can do. His keen interest in the future of American music and its interpreters furnishes him a platform from which he undoubtedly will send forth his message."

TAX THOSE FOREIGNERS WHO DO NOT BECOME AMERICAN CITIZENS

The following is from an interview with Charles Wagner in Musical America:

"I believe all foreign artists, who have been in this country from three to five years, getting our money, and have shown no inclination to become one of us by taking out their American papers, should be taxed unmercifully, and suffered to pay much larger income taxes for them than for our own citizens whether born or adopted.

"Why should an artist be willing to sing at Covent Garden for half or less than he demands in the United States? I simply ask you why. Any singer that cuts his fee for Covent Garden in future must cut his fee for the United States if he expects to be managed from my office."

A Chicago teacher broke into position on the first page of one of the evening papers one day last week with the statement that if music were introduced into the mines and other places where masses of men work there would have been no coal strike, and that there would be no other industrial disturbances in the future.

We should like to accept this ingenious thought in toto but must restrict our indorsement to the general statement of belief that music everywhere is an ameliorating influence.

But that it would pacify the coal workers is too remote a possibility for serious consideration.

But, anyway, it was a good advertising idea of the teacher in question.

. . . . . .

Likewise Miss Kinsolving has had thrust upon her some most unwelcome (?) advertisement of her Blackstone musicales through the publishing of the fact that certain society women, patrons of these exclusive functions, objected to Miss Kinsolving inviting convalescent soldiers to the concerts on the grounds that the odor of disinfectants brought along was disagreeable to the sensitive nostrils of the aforementioned ladies.

Miss K. came back with a most spirited defense of her generous action in providing the tickets for the soldiers and made no bones whatever of accusing the society women of insincerity in their pose of last year, which was, as we all know, distinctly one of patronage to all soldiers and sailors.

Chicago applauds Miss K. in her action and stand, and of a truth emphasizes once more that this city is one which cannot and will not tolerate snobbishness and affectation.

A Letter

Chicago Symphony Orchestra,
220 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago, Illinois.

Gentlemen: Noting the article in the musical section of yesterday's Tribune in regard to the series of children's concerts, it is not perfectly clear whether no tickets whatever are to be put on sale at the box office until after mail orders are taken care of. I think many people would appreciate a little more definite information on this point.

In this connection it seems that in fairness to the children, if these concerts are really intended solely for their benefit and education, all adults should be absolutely excluded, because escorts from sixteen to eighteen years of age could be found to take care of children too young to go alone, and escorts of the ages mentioned would come within the limits of those for whom the concerts are intended. In cases where, occasionally, such an arrangement could not be made, the adult accompanying the child could either wait in some waiting room until after the conclusion of the concert or could go out and transact other business and return in time to take the child home.

Even with the very strictest possible limitation of the sale of tickets only a small fraction of the children could avail themselves of the benefits offered; the Daily News Almanac for 1919 on page 930 shows that the seating capacity of Orchestra Hall is but 2,570; if ten concerts were given and every seat in the house were occupied at every performance by a child, only 25,700 children would have had an opportunity to hear the orchestra, even if a child attended only one performance. The Daily News Almanac on page 902 shows that the enrollment in the Chicago Public Schools in 1918 was 368,225; there are probably at least enough more children in private and parochial schools to bring the total number of school children in the city to approximately 500,000. This means that with the very fairest and most careful handling not more than one-twentieth of the children could hear the orchestra at all.

Possibly as equitable a plan as is practical would be to assign a certain number of tickets to each public, private, parochial or music school for distribution where they would be most appreciated and do the most good. If it is deemed wise to permit a child to attend more than one performance, then sell him all the tickets he will be allowed to purchase at one time, to save trouble in distribution of tickets.

The above is offered in the way of a suggestion by a sincere well-wisher of the children, in the desire to secure for every one who desires the privilege of atnding these concerts a fair show.

Yours truly,
(Signed) H. S. GORTON.

Advertising Columns as a Vote

The number of advertisers in a magazine might be called a vote by the advertising class on the merits of a journal as a business bringer. And a publication cannot bring business unless its reading matter is of a class and quality that attracts readers.

Consequently, one generally can determine the value of a publication by its advertising matter—by the quantity of persons who have knowledge of and faith in its possibilities.

The "Saturday Evening Post" might be cited as an example. It can present the reading matter it does only because of its quantity of advertising. The advertisers are there because of the interest of the people in the magazine.

While no musical magazine can be compared to the "Post" in circulation, or in advertising rates, $6,000 a page, in the musical field the same truths as to advertising hold good. The musical public shows by its vote where its confidence is.

To show the standing of THE PACIFIC COAST MUSICIAN in this regard, we may be permitted a few words of comparison with our esteemed contemporaries, based on the number of persons advertising in the various journals.

Our nearest competitor in this respect seems to be a Chicago musical paper, which numbered 173 advertisements in its last issue. Then comes a New York journal of national circulation which had 160 in the issue examined.

The regular edition of a western musical magazine has 107, and its annual special number has 170 persons advertising in it. And now we are going to put in capitals that the last number of THE PACIFIC COAST MUSICIAN had persons advertising in it, and this not counting the Directory Page cards of those who advertise elsewhere in the issue. If they are counted the grand total would be 383. The largest music journal in the country had only two more than this number, counting its directory cards.

But the fact remains that in our November issue we had 215 advertisements outside of duplicate Directory cards; while our nearest competitor, in the East, had 173. And our number was "not a special edition, either," but the regular number with no unusual effort given to it by the business office.

That, in effect, is a vote as to what the musical profession of the West and the music publishers of the East think of THE PACIFIC COAST MUSICIAN as a "business bringer." For while there are a few persons who use the advertising columns as a matter of legitimate pride in their work, the large majority does so that the public may know more about it and that its prestige, reputation and consequent income may be enlarged.

We have been waiting for our aforesaid "esteemed contemporaries" to "hand it out" to us along these lines; but owing to their modesty in the matter (a delicate reticence that possibly may be pardoned), we are forced to give this diminutive toot on our own little horn.

Thank you!

Count Again Brother Colby

The showing of the Pacific Coast Musician is certainly a good one; undoubtedly the best of any musical monthly of the country.

But the comparison with weekly papers is a wrong one, for every weekly paper has many special ads. which, during the course of a month, would inevitably make its average greater than the number appearing in any one issue.

The Pacific Coast Musician refers, undoubtedly, to Music News in its comment on "a Chicago musical paper," but it certainly did some poor figuring.

The issue of Music News of last week, which was in no sense a special, for instance, contained eight hundred and sixty-five separate advertisements, exclusive of duplications, i. e., advertisers using both display space and Directory Cards, and of these there were about three hundred, so that the total number of advertisements printed in the issue was upward of a thousand.

VERY SUCCESSFUL PUPILS' RECITAL GIVEN BY LAZAR S. SAMOILOFF AT THE HOTEL McALPIN IN NEW YORK

A Mendelssohn duet, sung beautifully by Jeanette Harris and Elsa Wulp, opened the program. Both girls possess beautiful voices, the first a lyric soprano and the second a mezzo-soprano of charming quality, and both enunciate their words clearly.

Mary School sang the "Romana" from "Faust" and an Indian Song for an encore with a clear voice and fine pronunciation. She showed splendid ability.

Miss Elta Farrier, a bell-like coloratura soprano, sang the "Chanson Provencale" and the "Will o' the Wisp" for an encore. Her high E flat was as clear and as beautiful as all her middle register.

Jeannette Arens sang the Aria from "Faust" (Gounod) and a Coo Coo Song for an encore, as an advanced pupil of the Samoiloff Studio, with nice voice and feeling.

Jeanette Harris sang, a little timidly, the song "Apres un Reve," by Faure, with clear enunciation and brilliancy of voice. In her encore, "The Irish Girl," she showed more freedom and technical ability.

Angelo Foster, a young Italian with the temperament and voice naturally born in his race, then sang the gorgeous Aria from "Andrea Chenier" and Tosti's "Ultima Canzona" for an encore. His voice is a dramatic tenor of clear quality and he gave nice expression in his delivery.

Elsa Wulp charmed the audience with the gorgeous song by A. Walter Kramer, "The Last Hour," and for an encore she sang another Kramer song.

Miss Helen Benson has been heard before in the Samoiloff concerts. Here she, as well as all the others heard before, showed remarkable progress. Her voice is splendid and her singing is beginning to have the proper color of a professional.

The two more advanced pupils of Samoiloff, Jean Barondess, soprano, and Constantin Bouketoff, baritone, literally "brought the house down," as the theater people say, with their solos and the beautiful duet, "Nina." Miss Barondess, who is giving a recital in Aeolian Hall on December 23, showed art and excellent voice placement in her songs by Tschaikowsky and Nevin.

Mr. Bouketoff, a priest of the Russian Cathedral, sang the Prologue from "Pagliacci" with exceptionally wonderful voice, and took G and A flat with an ease that would make many a better-known baritone green with envy.

The audience packed the large ballroom of the Hotel McAlpin. Artists, musicians and managers were on hand. Even other singing teachers came to hear Samoiloff's pupils. Flowers and applause seemed never ending. Mr. Samoiloff was heartily congratulated by all the guests for the success of the afternoon, which was not unusual, as great success generally attends anything that Mr. Samoiloff undertakes.

Shaffer—Miss Roma Mulford sang for the Woodlawn Woman's Club on Tuesday, November 18. Miss Mulford and Miss Jean Inglis, pupils of Miss Helen Louise Shaffer, sang several of the MacDowell songs at the MacDowell program given by the Centralizing School of Music November 22. The songs given were "To a Wild Rose," "Thy Beaming Eyes" and "A Maid Sings Light."

ST. PAUL, MINN.

A Thanksgiving Festival, participated in by six hundred school children, pupils from the social center classes, was presented at the Auditorium, under the auspices of the Mothers' Clubs and Parent-Teachers' Association of St. Paul.

Every seat was taken for the two performances given Thanksgiving Eve and a matinee performance Friday. The grade school orchestra, under the direction of Louis Jacobi, played, and the pageant was depicted in five episodes.

Thanksgiving services were held in the churches in the morning. The colors carried by the Marines at the head of the parade and twenty elaborate floats added their festal note to the line of march along Summit avenue, the celebration concluding with a general meeting at the Auditorium.

The accompanying program was given by James A. Bliss, pianist-composer, at the Y. W. C. A. Auditorium Monday evening, November 2. Mr. Bliss has joined the teaching staff of the St. Paul Musical Academy and in presenting him they also afforded a large audience the delight of hearing Mrs. McElroy Johnstone, as assisting soloist. It was a keen regret that but the last two groups were heard by the writer, for Mr. Bliss' Indian Songs were of rare charm and the accompaniments he provided were most fascinating.

The pianist succeeded admirably in making the "Witches' Dance" (MacDowell) a masterly climax to the group.

The first free municipal concert at the St. Paul Auditorium under the auspices of the Department of Parks, Playgrounds and Public Buildings was the occasion Monday evening, November 3, of the giving of the cantata "The Rose Maiden" (Frederick H. Cowen). Leopold Bruenner, the director, achieved some fine work with his chorus, handicapped though he was for the want of a substantial orchestra. Mrs. J. L. Whitaker, soprano, always charms with the finish of her delivery and general artistic style. Miss Alice Dailey, contralto, revealed a voice full, resonant and round in all registers. Here is a voice with a future, and she sings with the utmost ease. Special praise goes to Walter Mallory, tenor, for the fine quality of his singing and his excellent diction. Francis Rosenthal, baritone, was also in fine voice. The chorus is in training now for a big Christmas song festival.

Carol Robinson, Chicago pianist, gave great pleasure to a large and enthusiastic audience of Schubert Club members at their fortnightly recital given at Junior Pioneer Hall Wednesday afternoon, November 19. To those who had heard something of her work the pianist gave all the more convincing proof of her musicianship in the finely chosen program she presented. No finer opening for a program could one desire than the Brahms numbers as played by Miss Robinson, lofty in conception and with tonal mastery—withal a profound and noble utterance. The seldom played Chopin group was too unfamiliar to find the audience wholly responsive. The Nocturne was nevertheless a finished gem. Miss Robinson's commanding technic was evidenced throughout her playing. In the final group the delicate tracery of the F sharp minor Etude (Bortkiewicks) was of alluring charm. The audience was indeed grateful for the MacDowell sketches and the magnificent playing accorded the "Widmung" (Schumann-Liszt).

Mildred Langtry, contralto, always a favorite, was assisting soloist with Katherine Hoffman accompanist. To a voice of real beauty and power Miss Langtry brings an unusual power of interpretation to her art that is the making of a most interesting recitalist. Sincerity is the keynote of her art, and she is an ideal church singer.

The program is here given:

Romance, Opus 118, No. 5....Brahms
Capriccio, Opus 76, No. 2....Brahms
Mazurka, A minor....Chopin
Nocturne, F major....Chopin
Barcarolle, Opus 60....Chopin
Novembre ....Tremisat
Le Benion....Old Breton, arr. by Rhys-Herbert
L'heure d'azure ....Holmes
Chanson Norvegienne ....Fourdrain
I Will Walk With My Love....Old Irish
The Wind Speaks....Grant-Schaefer
My Love Is a Muleteer....Di Nogero
Rhapsody, F sharp minor....Dohnanyi
Etude, F sharp minor....Bortkiewicz
Etude, C sharp major ....Bortkiewicz
Winter, Opus 32, No. 4....MacDowell
Br'er Rabbit, Opus 61, No. 2....MacDowell
Widmung (Schumann) ....Liszt
Rhapsody No. XIV....Liszt

Harriet Allen, secretary of the Minnesota Chapter of the American Guild of Organists, gave a twilight organ recital, her first under the guild auspices, Saturday afternoon, November 11, at the Masonic Temple.

The program was replete with qualities that go to make up fine organ playing—incisive rhythm, skillful registration and good technic.

She succeeded marvelously in gaining fine effects in registration without deviation from original tempos, and in the Scherzo (Pigout) also, which calls for rapid change of manuals. Praise goes to Miss Allen, who has attained so fine a degree of artistry as an organist, as well as her teacher, George H. Fairclough. Following is the program she gave:

An important resolution was adopted by Board of Examiners of Minnesota Music Teachers' Association.

The Board of Examiners of the Minnesota Music Teachers' Association transacted some important business on Monday evening, November 17, at a dinner held in the Forest Room of the Radisson Hotel, Minneapolis. Among those present were J. Victor Bergquist, Myrtle Weed, Elsie M. Shawe, director of music in the St. Paul public schools; T. P. Giddings, director of music in the Minneapolis public schools; Harry Phillips, chairman of the board, together with President George H. Fairclough, President-Elect James Lang, and Secretary-Treasurer John A. Jaeger.

The special business of the evening was to consider and act upon an important resolution which was discussed by the members of the Minnesota Music Teachers' Association at the annual convention held at Northfield, Minn, last June, and which was upon motion referred to the Board of Examiners for action. This resolution provides that the Progressive Series of Piano Lessons, edited by Leopold Godowsky, Josef Hofmann and other master pianists and pedagogs, be indorsed and approved as a suitable basis for the high schools of Minnesota to use in accrediting music study outside of the schools. It further provides that piano teachers of Minnesota who have qualified by passing the various normal examinations of the Progressive Series with the National Board of Examiners of that series shall be accepted and shall have issued to them the Licentiate, Associate and Fellowship degrees of the association according to the Progressive Series examination upon which they have qualified, the normal examinations of that series being thereby accepted as the full equivalent of the State Association examinations.

After lengthy discussion the resolution was unanimously approved and adopted. It is expected, as a result of this progressive move on the part of the association, that many certified teachers will be added to that body during the coming year.

MARION ANDREWS CONCERT BUREAU PRESENTS JASCHA HEIFETZ IN MILWAUKEE

Tuesday evening, December 2, at the Pabst Theater, Milwaukee, Jascha Heifetz, violinist, Samuel Chotzinoff, accompanist. Program:

Chaconne (Arrangement de Leopold Charlier).....Tomaso Vitali (1650)
Fantaisie.....Bruch
Grave-Adagio cantabile
Allegro
Andante Sostenuto
Finale, allegro guerriero
Romance in G Major.....Beethoven
Menuette.....Beethoven
Andante Cantabile.....Tschaikowsky-Auer
Guitarre.....Moszkowski
On Wings of Song.....Mendelssohn-Achron
Les Rondo des Lutinz.....Bazzini

Entirely melodic was this program, from beginning to end. The audience, which completely filled the Pabst Theater, was not slow nor mild to appreciate or express; from the very first they wanted encores, and they kept insistently at it throughout and very lovely indeed were the encores, including "Valse Biuette" (Drigo), "Slavonic Dance" in G minor (Dvorak-Kreisler), "Moto Perpetuo" (Cecil Burleigh), "Serenade" (d'Ambrosio). Heifetz might be an inspiration for another William J. Locke novel, for he is indeed the "fortunate youth." His short autobiography is now known to every musically inclined or interested person in this country, and his records are taking him into the homes of the great general public. For those who have never heard or seen him it would take more than mere ink and paper to describe the youth and his work. When first heard two seasons ago he left one in a trance with no adjective big enough to describe the sensation. He was a composed, serious slip of a lad with an almost flawless technic, big tone and a gift for phrasing that was the essence of perfection. Prophets prophesied diverse things prompted by many motives. He has far outrun those who prophesied superb things, and yet no great outward change has taken place. A few inches taller, but on the stage the same sedate dignity befitting a man of three times his age, the same easy poise, not a quiver of nervousness, not a mannerism. What a picture for some of our orchestra players and, alas, even many of our soloists to study. He holds his violin rather high, but easily, and a pair of keen eyes with an active brain back of them watch the work. Heifetz has agile left fingers and a firm, graceful bow arm, but back of both is the real secret, an active mentality, imagination and temperament. His tone is ravishing—there seems to be nothing left to be accomplished. It has fire, brilliance in staccato, luscious velvety legato and pure clarity in sustained passages. Harmonics that thrill you from head to feet, they are almost supernatural. Heifetz has his own interpretations and they are not fantastic; one thinks as he finishes it was never played more beautifully.

This program would be rather hard to dissect. The Bruch "Fantasie" was lovely in the extreme as was the Vitali "Chaconne." The Auer arrangement of the Tschaikowski "Andante Cantabile" was a jewel among jewels. The program was laden with sweets and yet was not monotonous. The charm of the violin is in its sensual appeal and it is through just such programs it reaches all. There was not a number but what would have been thoroughly appreciated by young or old, musician or laity.

Whether it is a gift of imagination or just a well rounded genius for music, time alone can tell, but there is something way out of the natural order of things in the way this lad plays.

He is a pleasant, easy young chap to meet, and in conversation has a ready smile and the same composure he has on the stage. He seems to have many gifts from the gods and not even our "popular tenors" receive any bigger reception and none of them have established themselves so quickly and firmly. Heifetz has made his hit and now is here to stay.

MILWAUKEE

Mme. Schumann-Heink, radiating all the vitality and effervesence of youth, was heard in a program selected to especially appeal to war mothers Friday evening, under the auspices of Marian Andrews' Concert Bureau. Not having appeared here in concert for several seasons, realizing the many seasons she has been heard, and taking into consideration the noticeable deterioration of some of our much younger singers, one may perhaps be pardoned for having an "air of expectancy" in that direction. Not so with Madame; if possible, her upper voice was more sparkling than at any time, and after a taxing program, responded with an encore exhibiting all the coloratura tricks, and trilled and rouladed like any featherweight. It is gratifying to know a voice can be retained in this manner. Frank La Forge, as soloist and accompanist, occupied a large moment, of the evening as Madame sang one entire group of his songs as well. Mr. La Forge is so familiar a figure that one knows the most satisfying support will be rendered.

Heifetz and Ornstein were each heard in recital recently; in fact the air fairly buzzes with concerts this time of the year.

Tomlinson—At a recent meeting of the Christian Fellowship Association of Chicago Jane Weidgenant, a ten-year-old pupil of Miss Anna Tomlinson, played so splendidly the association voted her an honorary membership and presented her with the gold and enamel pin of the organization. On last Tuesday evening Miss Tomlinson's two classes, composed of Harriet Beebe, Ellen Topping, Iva Jarrett, Helen Steinhauser, Mrs. Frazee, Evelyn Larsen, Marie Hartkop, Frances Hannett, Raymond Anders, Catharine Brill and Ruth Barton, entertained their relatives and friends at the studio. Especial interest was manifested in a composition by Helen Steinhauser, who is only sixteen years old and has not yet studied one year. She called her composition "A Ceremony in the Temple of Vesta" and clearly portrayed in tone The Quiet in the Temple; The Entrance of the Priestesses Followed by the People; The Incense Put on the Altar and Lighted; The People's Prayer; Vesta's Reply; The Hush After the Voice Had Ceased; The Dispersing of the People, and again the Quiet and Silence of the Temple.

Psychoanalysis and Music

By DANIEL BONUS, B. M., and EDW. N. SCHOOLMAN, M. D.

(All Rights Reserved.)

In using the term "'unconscious" as an entity it is essential to avoid the popular superstition of something "spiritualistic." Especially in this age of fads, systems and superstitions, psychoanalysis is apt to bring to the uninitiated a suggestion of mysticism, of psychic manipulating, veiled by the curtain of the supernatural. This is not unexpected when we consider the term "psychic" as it is usually presented to us in the press, fiction and literature in general. "Psychic" conjures before our eyes the picture of some spiritually endowed mind-reader or oriental fakir, bent upon demonstrating the nothingness of matter or "life after death."

So potent has been the influence of such mystery workers upon the thought of our day, and among them may be mentioned thinkers of wide reputation, that Mr. T. W. Stanford, brother of Leland Stanford, placed at the disposal of Leland Stanford University a ten thousand pound grant for investigations in spiritualism and psychic research. The result was a report of some six hundred pages. It was the first time, to all intents and purposes, that an accredited institution of learning had taken up this subject in a serious way. Heretofore it has, for the most part, either been exploited by individuals for personal gain or investigated by biased enthusiasts. The general results of the work are what might have been expected. No evidence has arisen in the course of the work which has tended to substantiate such alleged phenomena as telepathy, thought-transference and the like. Many of the mysterious phenomena in this field are quite capable of scientific interpretation with the psychoanalytic method of approach. But such a method is essentially an individual study. What, after all, are all prejudices and superstitions but the mass effect of individual opinions and beliefs?

Dr. Freud, the discoverer of our method of investigation, says: "I am sorry to confess that I belong to that class of unworthy individuals before whom the spirits cease their activities and the supernatural disappears, so that I have never been in a position to experience anything personally that would stimulate belief in the miraculous. Like everybody else, I have had forebodings and experienced misfortunes, but the two evaded each other, so that nothing followed the foreboding, and the misfortune struck me unannounced. When as a young man I lived alone in a strange city, I frequently heard my name suddenly pronounced by an unmistakable, dear voice, and I then made a note of the exact moment of the hallucination in order to inquire carefully of those at home what had occurred at that time. There was nothing to it. On the other hand, I later worked among my patients calmly and without foreboding while my child almost bled to death. Nor have I ever been able to recognize as unreal phenomena any of the forebodings repeated to me by my patients."

LANGENHAN FILLS RE-ENGAGEMENT IN FARGO, N. D.

A capacity audience came to the Auditorium last Saturday, November 29, to hear again Christine Langenhan, the well known dramatic soprano, and greeted her with the same enthusiasm as at her first appearance before the Concordia College in Fargo last year.

Miss Langenhan proved again a singer with a most beautiful voice, which is rich, full and round and capable of the most varied coloring and amenable to every possible demand in the way of flexibility or stress. Miss Langenhan's great ability lies in the fact of extraordinary fine interpretative power. Her English songs were rendered with a clarity and purity from the standpoint of enunciation.

Miss Langenhan has been given the greatest ovation and in addition to repeating the songs, "The Faltering Dusk" (A. Walter Kramer), "Kom Kjyra," Norwegian Echo Song; "One in One" (H. Spielter) and "The Three Loves," dedicated to Miss Langenhan by Arthur Trostwyk, she was obliged to respond with six encores.

Her program follows:

Oh, Had I Jubal's Lyre	Handel
Before the Crucifix	La Forge
Carneval (in French)	Fourdrain
Tes Yeux (in French)	Rene Rabey
Au Printempts (in French)	Gounod
The Glow of Spring	B. F. Rungee
The Faltering Dusk	A. Walter Kramer
One in One	H. Spielter
Awake, It Is the Day	Florence Barbour
Aria, Cavalleria Rusticana (in Italian)	Mascagni
When I Was Seventeen	Swedish Folk Song
Tak for Dit Raad	Grieg
Kom Kjyra	Norwegian Echo Song
Dream Tryst	Charles W. Cadman
The Three Loves (dedicated to Mme. Langehan)	Arthur Trostwyk
Think, Love, of Me	Frank Grey
Sunrise and You	Arthur Penn

We have a number of desirable vacancies for young Men and Women with high grade AMERICAN TRAINING. Pianists-Vocalists-Violinists. Teachers must be able to meet keen competition, willing to go most any where a contract calls for—no short people who are "on the job." These opportunities offer splendid salaries and are altogether exceptional.

NORTHWESTERN SCHOOL OF MUSIC ORCHESTRA

A bumper house filled the Patten Gymnasium on Friday evening to hear and applaud the twentieth concert of the Symphony Orchestra of eighty players fostered by the School of Music of Northwestern. Harold B. Knapp is the conductor of the vivid group of earnest players and in the few words with which he prefaced the concert demonstrated why he was successful. Sharp, successive, vigorous and keenly alert he is, and the young people followed him with energized desire. But he has another trait to enjoy keenly—he is so interested in the music that he forgets all about himself. He didn't even seem to notice the applause—the usual fuel to feed the artistic flame!

Everything went with vim and zest and obedience. There was good ensemble and sturdy loyalty to notes and shading. In the Bach-Albert Prelude, Choral and Fugue there was most enjoyable fusion and musical sincerity. Smetana's "Bartered Bride" Overture was a merry rout and Grainger's "Mock Morris" another joyful moment. With Mark E. Wessel at the piano the players put over Grainger's "Handel in the Strand" capitally, Mr. Wessel being excellent in his portion.

Rollin M. Pease fell into the Grainger mood also, and did with such abiding charm the "Willo Willo Song" that a repetition was necessary. He sensed its quaintness, its affected woe and dolour, and his voice met its exactness with rich and fitting color.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

Racine—At the Guild Hall in Racine, Wis., late in November Frank Olin Thompson gave an unsually successful piano recital, receiving the praise of public and press alike for his splendid playing of a program which included a long Chopin group, "Ecossaisen" (Beethoven-Busoni), "Minuet" (Lachaume), "Gavotte" (Martini), "Rondo Characteristique" (Faeld), and "Caprice" (Gluck-Saint-Saens).

Rockwell—Helen Rockwell will be the soprano soloist in the Community Chorus presentation of "The Messiah" at First Methodist Church in Evanston on next Sunday evening.

Kirkwood—At Kirkwood, Mo., Bessie Bown Ricker appeared in November, scoring great success in a program of characteristic child readings.

MARIAN CORYELL

Composer-pianist, whose songs are pronounced by American critics to be among the most charming of compositions in that line, and whose musical readings are in constant use by such artists as David Bispham.

It was David Bispham who wrote that he knew of no one whose compositions for musical readings could compare with those of Miss Marian Coryell, and it must be granted that no living artist is better capable of judging such work than is Mr. Bispham. He emphasizes his commendation by constant use of them on his programs. Miss Coryell sort of happens to be here this winter, for, according to plan, she was to be in New York studying piano with Boyd Wells, as she was last year, and having records made of her piano group of "Cynthia Stories," for children, and attending to the publication of her songs that have already been sung in manuscript by concert artists.

But instead of that Miss Coryell has come to Seattle and is studying with Boyd Wells and Calvin B. Cady, composing more songs and thoroughly enjoying her first season in the Northwest.

One of her songs, "The Medlar Tree," has been compared favorably to the best American songs ever written, and her setting of the Twenty-third Psalm, a duet for soprano and contralto, is both lovely and singable, according to church singers. "The Watcher," for low voice, and "Contentment" have achieved instantaneous success, and so this young composer-pianist is most happy in her work.

Two of her songs will be sung by Kirk Towns, baritone, at his recital, which comes in about two weeks, and Miss Coryell is to appear in recital herself later in the season.

Miss Coryell is a teacher in the Cornish School of Music, Seattle, Wash.

Schumann-Heink—The Schumann-Heink tour is progressing with unabating success. The concert in St. Louis December 1 was attended by over 8,000 people, and the public and press alike declared that the golden voice of the diva had lost none of its old-time grandeur. The Atlanta concert on December 8 was one of the greatest ever given in Atlanta. The audience was aroused to such enthusiasm that Mme. Schumann-Heink finally told them she would give no more encores, as she wanted to sing "a lot" for her boys the next day. This she did at Fort MacPherson, where she went with Frank La Forge from ward to ward in the Red Cross Hospital there. In all the concerts the pianist-composer, Frank La Forge, has come in for a great share of the applause and praise. The group of his songs has met with such success that the critics do not hesitate to place them among the finest works of American compositions. The Flanders Requiem, just published, has made a profound impression at all the concerts.

McKinney—Many artists are adopting Howard D. McKinney's novel composition "Four Crumbs from Peacock Pie," the sub-titles of which are "An Introduction: Jemima Is My Name," "Hide and Seek," "The Cupboard" and "The Little Old Cupid." His "De San'man's Song" is also attaining great popularity.

SCHUMANN-HEINK THRILLS LARGE ST. LOUIS AUDIENCE

Like wine that ripens and mellows with age, so are the magnetic voice and personality of Schumann-Heink. All who heard her in recent recital at the Coliseum here proclaimed her greater than ever. An audience of six thousand people filled the building, which is about the poorest place imaginable for music with any fine effects, but it is the largest available place in St. Louis and the management was justified in bringing the artist there, in order to give the people a chance to hear her. Such a program and pleasure as given on this occasion are rare treats in the lives of the average music lover.

While the concert was given under the auspices of the St. Louis Symphony Society, the great artist was the star. Her program was a delightful arrangement of the serious and gay in vocal music. And whereas the program contained arias and numbers from the French and German, all were sung in a beautiful English and showed no lack of power or effect in the rendering. Schumann-Heink is the great musician because of her psychology and great human experience. She has the good judgment to associate with herself the artistic Frank La Forge, composer and finished pianist. His accompaniments and songs added greatly to the vocal portions of the program.

While the program was long, Mr. La Forge and the orchestra, conducted by Max Zach, contributed several numbers in a manner which pleased the great audience. A study of the program should be helpful to concert givers.

The many friends of Maud Powell will be relieved to know she is recovering from the collapse following her violin recital at Odeon on Thanksgiving night. The violinist had excelled herself during the evening and her serious illness has been most alarming. American artists of her standing are needed to inspire the American student to greater efforts.

The illness of the pianist Rachmaninoff prevented his appearance with the Symphony Orchestra. The manager, Mr. Arthur Gaines, is trying to arrange a future engagement.

Albert Spalding, the great American violinist, is to be soloist with the symphony in the near future. Fritz Kreisler is billed as the next symphony soloist.

Helen Stanley, soprano, recently appeared as soloist with the Apollo Club male chorus, directed by Charles Galloway.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

The second concert of the Fortnightly Musical Club was given by Lila Robeson, contralto, on Tuesday afternoon, December 2, at the Duchess Theater. Miss Robeson is a well-known contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and the splendid program she gave was heard by a very appreciative audience.

Two interesting features of the program were numbers by well-known Cleveland composers. Two songs, "La Musique" and "La Mort des Amant" by Gordon Hatfield, and the cycle "In Memoriam" by James H. Rogers.

Mrs. F. A. Sieberling, president of the National Federation of Musical Clubs, was presented with an ivory gavel at this time, in honor of three members of the Fortnightly Club who have become presidents of the federation.

Concerts under the direction of Adella Prentiss Hughes:

Sunday, December 7, Sistine Chapel Soloists; Thursday, December 11, the Philadelphia Orchestra; Sunday, December 14, Popular Concert of the Cleveland Orchestra.

Wednesday evening, December 3, the Cleveland Orchestra, Nikolai Sokoloff, conductor, gave its third concert of the season. Frances Alda, soprano, was the soloist of the evening.

A very small audience heard the concert given by Frances Nash, pianist, and Vahrah Hanbury, soprano, in the ballroom at the Woman's Club Wednesday evening, December 3. This was without doubt due to the fact that next door the Cleveland Orchestra was giving its concert. Those who missed the concert may very justifiably have regrets, for they missed a splendid program given by these two artists.

The Masonic Hall was filled for the first concert of the Singers' Club, Thursday evening, December 4. Carroll B. Ellinwood, one of the club's first leaders, was welcomed back after an absence of several years.

The special feature of the evening's program was the tribute paid to the memory of Albert Rees Davies, leader of the club for fourteen years, who died this last spring. They sang two songs which were long time favorites of Mr. Davies—Daniel Protheroe's setting of the beautiful poem of Alfred Noyes, "The Pilot," and Arthur Sullivan's "The Long Day Closes."

Theodore Karle, well known American concert tenor, was the soloist.

GRAY-LHEVINNES THRILL CAPACITY AUDIENCE

The Santa Anna (California) Musical Association had the good judgment to open their season with Estelle Gray and Mischa Lhevinne as the attactions. These popular artists drew 600 new members into the association and the night of the concert, the 27th, there wasn't even standing room at 7:30 p. m.

Wherever the Gray-Lhevinnes have previously appeared they have the reputation of drawing a capacity house.

There is an atmosphere of charming simplicity and Estelle Gray is simply lovable when she stands violin in hand and tells informal stories about each composition before it is played. The masterpieces of both the violin and piano are so much more enjoyable as the Gray-Lhevinnes present them than in the stereotyped way the public has grown used to. Young Mischa Lhevinne always lifts up his hearers with his vital pianism.

The following letter was sent them on the 28th:

"Dear Gray-Lhevinnes:

"I cannot refrain from expressing to you not only our pleasure which your concert for our musical association created but also the general delight and satisfaction which your program gave to the overflowing audience which greeted you.

"On every hand I am besieged with expressions of delight, not only for the content of your program but at the unique manner of its presentation.

"Everyone feels that our club could not have had a more successful or happier opening, and on behalf of the association I thank you most heartily.

"The common expression is that your concert was the most enjoyable musical event which Santa Anna has enjoyed in many months. Everyone is anxious for a return engagement, which, as you know, will make your fourth appearance here in two years.

"Very sincerely,

(Signed) "C. A. GUSTLIN."

NEW YORK

7, 8, 10 and 11 Bible House, Astor Place

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Emil Oberhoffer and with its personnel raised to pre-war strength, is well launched on its seventeenth season. Judging from the caliber of the concerts given so far this season, the organization fully merits the high place which is accorded it among similar music bodies throughout the United States. The program for Friday evening, November 7, was made up of the Beethoven overture to "Fidelio," Op. 72, No. 4; Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98, Brahms, (never more beautifully done here), and concerto for piano and orchestra No. 3 in C Minor, Op. 37 of Beethoven. At the piano was Mischa Levitski, soloist for the evening. This was the artist's second appearance with the orchestra, and he confirmed in every particular the fine impression made on his first visit. The pianist seems to be endowed with an uncanny strength which is not made manifest in a disagreeable way, but which, on the contrary, produces a most beautiful singing tone. The Beethoven concerto, through his art and the splendid support of the orchestra, became a vital thing. Graciously responding to insistent applause, he played extra a Chopin nocturne and Schubert's "Marche Militaire."

The preceding fortnightly concert on October 24 brought forth the orchestra in the first major performance of the year. The opening number was the Tschaikowsky Fourth Symphony. The composition, imbued with the pessimistic spirit of the author's philosophy, was vividly rendered. "Poems de l'Amour et de la Mer," by Chauson, was the second offering of the evening. A trifle lengthy perhaps for so immobile a composition, yet it was charmingly done. Margaret Matzenauer, whose glorious contralto voice blended so well with the strings, shared honors with the orchestra. The closing number of the program, the Ravel Rhapsody, a veritable riot of tone color, was splendidly given.

The "Popular" Concerts

For the first five popular concerts a group of well-known artists had been engaged—three vocalists and two instrumentalists. At the opening concert October 19 was featured, as soloist, Florence Macbeth, prima donna coloratura of the Chicago Opera Association. Always a prime favorite with a Minneapolis audience, Miss Macbeth was given a warm reception. Very lovely was her rendition of the programmed "Bell Song," from "Lakme," and the aria, "Hymn to the Sun," from "Le Coq d'Or," Rimsky Korsakow, while in the "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark" of Bishop, sung extra, the singer excelled in beauty and grace of tone.

On Sunday afternoon, November 9, the second vocalist, Harriet McConnell, contralto, was heard. In the arias "Farewell Ye Forests" from "Joan of Arc" and "Ah, Mon Fils" from "The Prophet," the singer showed marked improvement over her work last year; the high voice was much more free and brilliant, while the low tones displayed added depth.

Finlay Campbell, baritone, was soloist for the popular concert November 16.

Anthony Linden, flutist of the orchestra, won honors on his first solo appearance in Minneapolis October 26, and proved himself a splendid artist.

The combination of a favorite symphony and the appearance of a local artist of exceptional merit for the Sunday afternoon concert November 9 drew a capacity house. The "Unfinished" symphony of Schubert was given a loving interpretation. With the symphony was placed the Bruch violin concerto in G minor.

University Concert Course

The concert course of the University of Minnesota opened on Friday, November 14, with a recital by Schumann-Heink, assisted by Frank La Forge, composer-pianist. The event proved to be a high mark in what promises to be the most brilliant music season Minneapolis has ever had. The wonderful contralto was in splendid form and sang with all the fervor and artistry that long ago placed her at the pinnacle of fame. Her program, with a few exceptions, was composed of songs with a popular appeal and Minneapolis had a glimpse of "Mother Schumann," the idol of the boys in the military camps. Of special artistic merit were Handel's "Lascia ch io pianga" and La Forge's "Flanders Requiem." The singer was beautifully accompanied throughout by Frank La Forge who also played two groups of piano solos with unerring technic. Unfortunately, however, the instrument which he was forced to use was not of the best, its thin, unpleasant tone rendering well nigh impossible any real interpretative coloring.

The Thursday Musical

The third in the annual series of programs given by the Thursday Musical took place at the First Baptist Church November 22. The program consisted of chamber music ensemble and two groups of songs by Victor Pinet, baritone. A concerto for two violins and piano in D minor Opus 9 by Herman Zilcher, given for the first time in Minneapolis, was played by Lillian Nippert Zelle, Marion Baernstein Bearman and Eloise Shryock. The concerto, though interesting, at times failed to rivet the attention. The second ensemble group proved a happier choice, the performers charming in an unaccompanied larghetto, Opus 17, by Spohr; Moszkowski's suite, Opus 71, and a minuet by Mozart.

Victor Pinet, vocalist for the afternoon, is the possessor of a tremendously big voice, which would undoubtedly be more pleasing were it under better control. He was heard in two groups of songs.

On the afternoon of November 6 the Musical presented in concert Gertrude Cleophas, pianist, and Ruby Campbell Ledward, soprano. Miss Cleophas, who has been winning an enviable place for herself in the concert field of the northwest, was heard to distinct advantage in the following numbers: A flat, Sonata of Beethoven, Opus 26, a Chopin Etude; "La Toupie," Leschetizky; "Refets dans Peau," Debussy, and "Carneval" (Grieg).

The event proved to be the first Minneapolis appearance of Mrs. Ledward, who is endowed with a naturally fine voice, but who, unfortunately, was not in form. Palpably nervous, the two really lovely song groups in which she was heard, were sweetly but unconvincingly rendered. We shall hope to hear her again soon under more favorable circumstances. Miss Eva Johnson, accompanist, elicited much attention and warm approval by her thoroughly artistic playing.

The first in the series of musicals occurred October 23, when Esther Osborne, soprano, and N. Stuart Smith, pianist, appeared in recital. Miss Osborne opened the program with a group of English songs. "Down in the Forest" by Landon Ronald was capitally done, as was also "Air de Lenora" from "La Tasse" by Godard. A group of three French songs, "Strophes Lakme" (Delibes), "Voici que le printemps" (Debussy), and "Arietle" (Vical), were also given.

Mrs. John Dahl played the song accompaniments.

Rudolph Ganz, pianist, was heard in recital at the Minneapolis Auditorium on October 10. Mr. Ganz was presented by the Thursday Musical, under the personal direction of Mrs. Richard Swain, to whom we are deeply indebted for so many opportunities of hearing worth-while music. Although Mr. Ganz has been heard here before, as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra, this was the first time he played an entire program, and his audience loved him. Apparently playing with his whole soul, he moved his listeners to smiles and tears, while with the wonderful pedal effects alone he left an unforgettable impression. His program consisted of the following:

Variations on a Motiv by Bach.....Liszt
Three Impromptus:
In A Flat
In G Flat Major
In F Minor
.....Schubert
Sonata Eroica, Opus 50.....MacDowell
Nocturne in F Sharp Major

MISCHA LEVITZKI

Mischa Levitzki, through both his recitals and his appearances with orchestra this season, has demonstrated that even his great art has known considerable growth since last he was heard. Wherever he has played since November 1, when he gave his first recital, his successes have been greater than ever before, just as his recital at Carnegie Hall, New York, on November 18, won for him the most pronounced triumph that New York has ever accorded him.

Among his engagements during the month of November have been recitals in New York, Chicago, Peoria, Aurora, New York (Wells College) and Fredonia, N. Y., and with the Minneapolis Orchestra in both St. Paul and Minneapolis and the New York Symphony in Washington.

When We Ask For It, We Will Get It

"I have sung a great many performances of grand opera in this country," said Florence Macbeth in an address to the Rotary Club last week, "but never one of them in English.

"I am an American girl, and would love to sing to my countrymen in their own language, but, unfortunately, at the best opera houses in America it is considered the proper thing to sing in every other language rather than English.

"But," she continued, "Chicago and all the rest of America can have opera in English whenever they get ready to ask for it, for opera is sung in whatever language is demanded by the public, and American artists would certainly rather sing to Chicagoans in English than in French or Italian."

. . . . . .

Edward Johnson, the popular American tenor of the Chicago Opera Association, sang last week with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra as soloist, and as there was some Wagner on the program, the question arose as to what language it would be sung in.

German, of course, was not considered. "But," said Mr. Johnson, "I could more readily sing it in Italian than in any other language, for I have never sung Wagner in any other than Italian."

Now, this is not because Mr. Johnson wanted to learn Wagner in Italian originally, nor that he prefers to sing in that language now. It is simply because, there being no real Americanism in our opera houses, he found it necessary, as have many other fine American singers, to go abroad for repertoire and routine.

It chanced that he made his big success in Italy and that he learned all his repertoire in that language, and that was simply and solely because we in this country have provided our young singers no opportunity to begin their operatic careers in any other way than via Europe.

. . . . . .

But there is no valid reason under heaven why we should not have our opera houses in America devoted to the giving of opera in our own language, and, as stated above, we will have that when we demand it, for the American public pays the bills and can have what it wants.

. . . . . .

Reginald De Koven told me, in an interview last week, an anecdote of Gatti-Casazza which will bear re-reading (it was published in Music News of last week).

The New York impresario admitted to Mr. De Koven that he had made his own premiere successes as a director of Wagner in Milan, and that these operas were presented (as a matter of course) to the Milan public in Italian.

And, if Gatti-Casazza could present Wagner in Milan in Italian, he could present Puccini in New York in English if the New York public insisted upon it, no matter what the house of Ricordi in Milan thought of such a proceeding.

CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

On last Saturday evening the last place at Orchestra Hall was taken and there was intense enthusiasm for the work of Edward Johnson, tenor, of the Chicago Opera Company.

Mr. Johnson, of a truth, deserved the special recognition and gave an exposition of pure singing at once authentic and beautiful.

Of classical elegance was his performance of two old Italian songs, of modern color and brilliance was his work in a florid aria from "Andrea Chenier" (Giordano), and his singing of the number from "The Mastersingers" was all that could be asked of a full-fledged Wagner expert.

Mr. Johnson was indeed the most famous of all Wagner singers in Italy, and it was he who "created" the part of Parsifal in Italian.

The program otherwise was of fine caliber, but only mildly diverting.

The Franck Symphony is good music, pure, but unemotional, and Mozart was pleasing, but not exciting.

The Symphonic Tone Poem, "The Fountains of Rome" (Respighi), proved to be a charming conceit, full of melody and colorful charm.

The program for this week is as follows:

Introduction to Part II (Pastorale), "Christmas Oratorio" ..... Bach

Symphony No. 2, D Major, Opus 73 ..... Brahms
- Allegro non troppo
- Adagio non troppo
- Allegretto grazioso (quasi andantino)
- Allegro con spirito

Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2, G Minor, Opus 22 ..... Saint-Saens
- Andante sostenuto
- Allegretto scherzando
- Presto

The Warriors ..... Grainger
Music to an Imaginary Ballet. (First Performance in Chicago.) (The Composer at the Piano.)

Valse de Concert No. 2, F Major, Opus 51 ..... Glazounow

CONCERT AT WEST SIDE AUDITORIUM

Sunday afternoon, December 28, at 3:15 a concert will be given at West Side Auditorium by Madame Chepich, pianist; Alto Delimmer, violinist; Miss Kartok, soprano; Mrs. Bessie Rosenthal, soprano, of lovely voice and fine personality, who has been heard often with pleasure, will head the list of soloists at the concert.

———♯♯♯———

Proctor—Warren Proctor, the American tenor, now touring with Mme. Tetrazzini, according to advices received from the far coast, is sharing fully in the great success attending the famous diva. Recent appearances in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Oakland have been greeted with large and most enthusiastic audiences, and the initial success of the great Hippodrome debut has been many times repeated.

———♯♯♯———

Moiseiwitsch—Several cities have heard Benno Moiseiwitsch since this latest of noted pianists made his debut two weeks ago. Two appearances with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra introduced him in that city last week; Philadelphia will hear him with its orchestra this coming Saturday. His next recital in Carnegie Hall takes place on Sunday afternoon, December 28.

———♯♯♯———

Simmons-Worthington—Ruth Simmons-Worthington, contralto, has sung recently for the Standard Lodge, the Edison Symphony Orchestra, Covent Garden Theater, Turner Hall, Michigan Society, Hamlin Theater, in "Messiah" at Goshen, Ind., and in a song recital at Tonica, Ill.

———♯♯♯———

Teninga—Renzina Teninga, organist at the Bethany Reformed Church, played "Prelude on Two Christmas Hymns" (Guilmant) as her voluntary last Sunday morning and the "Hallelujah Chorus" from "The Messiah" as her postlude.

———♯♯♯———

Smith—Miss Mildred Smith, contralto, of the Hyde Park Baptist Church, sang last Sunday evening at the Hyde Park Y. M. C. A. and has been re-engaged for another appearance in the near future.

———♯♯♯———

Ballmann—Martin Ballmann and his orchestra gave a special concert of Christmas music at North Side Turner Hall Christmas afternoon.

———♯♯♯———

Norton—Mae Norton sang December 1, 2 and 3 at the Pantheon Theater and on December 4, 5, 6 and 7 at Covent Garden.

———♯♯♯———

Edgewater Beach Musicale—The concert of Betty Baxter and Grant Hadley will be reviewed next week.

SERGE PROKOFIEFF

RUSSIAN COMPOSER-PIANIST

DUPLICATES HIS SUCCESS OF LAST SEASON

CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE
(W. L. Hubbard), Nov. 2, 1919

Mr. Prokofieff is an interesting figure in the music world and his two appearances here in recital were productive of an exhilaration and a pleasure that the majority of piano recitals do not afford. He grips attention the moment he appears on the stage and he does not loosen it until he has completed his performance.

To analyze the power he exerts is not wholly easy. There is personality there, but it is the most unobtrusive kind so far as any deliberate exploitation of it is concerned. His stage manner is entirely unusual.

I know of no pianist now before the public who sits so quietly at the instrument as does this young Russian. And yet there is no effect or dynamic climax impossible to him. He has tremendous force in his hands, and the left is fully as marvelous as is the right. Technical difficulties seem not to exist for him, and he overcomes them with a quietness and ease that verge on the uncanny. Few players that the present or the past generation of concert-goers have heard have distinguished and articulated the musical phrase with such clarity and precision, few have been able to make a melody set for the left hand ring out with as close similarity to the one the right hand has just voiced as he does.

IN HIS NEW YORK AND CHICAGO RECITALS

NEW YORK TRIBUNE
(Grenville Vernon), Oct. 13, 1919

At his concert yesterday afternoon Serge Prokofieff discoursed Bach, Beethoven and Chopin as if he were any ordinary Hofmann or Paderewski. Moreover, his discourse was well tempered, clear, reticent, serene.

His playing of the Bach "French Suite" would have endeared him to a generation who had never heard of Scriabine or any of the later moderns. It was playing of a high order of beauty, rhythmic, gracious, exquisite in balance and proportion. Beautifully, too, did he give the three "Country Dances" of Beethoven. He then played the Schumann F sharp minor sonata to general satisfaction. Mr. Prokofieff is a pianist of a rare talent.

Other New York and Chicago Notices:

NEW YORK TIMES
(Richard Aldrich), Oct. 13, 1919

Serge Prokofieff, the Russian pianist, reappeared before an audience in which his own countrymen were numerous in Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon. He played Bach's melodious suite with simplicity and grace such as belongs to it, and he found delightful expression for Beethoven's little pieces.

NEW YORK SUN
(W. J. Henderson), Oct. 13, 1919

Mr. Prokofieff's reading was beautiful in line and color, the interpretation indeed of an artist capable of entering deeply into moods foreign to his own. The performance was an interesting disclosure of the pianist's breadth of vision. His own compositions again brought forward his fondness for the witchery of beating rhythms.

NEW YORK WORLD

It was a fine performance and enjoyed by a big audience.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH
(John Raftery), Oct. 13, 1919

It's like witnessing a good play hearing Prokofieff, for he is something of a dramatist, both in his awareness of dramatic argument and climax as well as in his ability to project values with originality and unforgetable effect.

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS
(Maurice Rosenfeld), Oct. 29, 1919

Prokofieff fascinates in his playing by his crisp, clean-cut technical brilliance, by a breezy style, and by a straightforward manner.

CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE
(W. L. Hubbard), Oct. 29, 1919

It would seem that anyone hearing him play even the most startling and original of his own creations for the piano could but discern a musicianship and a pianistic skill which would make possible to him the effective presentment of any work of any school.

As a pianist he is astoundingly equipped technically, and in every phase shows himself a musician whose grasp of the minutest detail as well as the broadest outline of the composition presented is supreme.

CHICAGO EVENING AMERICAN
(Herman Devries), Oct. 29, 1919

It was good to hear my prophetic hope realized last night at Serge Prokofieff's second recital in Kimball Hall.

The fundamentals of his training leave nothing to be desired. There is something absolutely fanatic, unshakably precise, in the irresistible power and drive of his rhythm, as there is undoubted power in the insolent solidity of his technic and beauty in the caress of his cantabile touch.

Good Pianos
are made slowly

It takes a long time to build a really good piano. Pianos which are hastily constructed are usually poorly constructed.

Every Cable-made Piano is many months in the making. After the wood has been thoroughly seasoned, expert workmen form and shape the piano—slowly, painstakingly, exactly. Then expert tone builders begin their careful work.

The result—an instrument of supreme beauty—one which will give you for a lifetime a full measure of satisfaction.

PAUL ALTHOUSE RETURNS TO METROPOLITAN OPERA CHRISTMAS DAY

For its Christmas evening operatic fare, the Metropolitan will offer Paul Althouse in the role of Turiddu in "Cavalleria Rusticana." This will be the popular tenor's first appearance at the Metropolitan this season, as he has been on a continuous concert tour since early October. His triumphs in the many western and southern cities where he has appeared have been remarkable and it will be interesting to his many New York admirers to witness his return in such a grateful part as the chief tenor role in "Cavalleria."

MADRIGAL CLUB

The Madrigal Club of Chicago is celebrating its twentieth season. Mr. Clippenger, therefore, is entitled to the halo which time has a way of sprinkling on its faithful servants. He is the only white head, however, who can hold his place permanently. One of the cruelties of life is that when the rime frosts the hair, or it is removed altogether, that the outward decoration puts an edge on the voice. Thus do we have to pay for everything!

But if Mr. Clippenger's older singers are missing from the active ranks what they did still remains as precedent and tradition and the work of the club today is built upon the atmosphere provided by yesterday. Something more than a season's rehearsals is necessary to surround the singing of such music as Palestrina's "Sanctus" and Morales' "All Ye That Pass By" with the enduring charm which was felt on Tuesday. All the loyalty and sincerity of the club's members of twenty years entered into the voicing and their voices were as integral a portion of the result as if they had been actually there in person. It was exquisite music exquisitely done, measured by any standard which has vision. There is small need to analyze such a program. There were high lights at times and there was also a modicum of unconvincing work in the Gretchaninof "Planting Flax," but in the main the sterling worth of the compact and enthusiastic little organization was just as manifest and admirable as it has ever been. In these days of flair for the illusion of opera it was genuine joy to find a big following enjoying to the fullest the earnest offering of Mr. Clippenger and his cohorts. In certain solo episodes it was good to see singers of fine equipment of Guy Latchaw, Mrs. Latchaw and Jessie Nichols Baldwin step from the ranks and do the bits more than well.

Arthur Kraft, in the finest of vocal trim, fitted his numbers to the program's scheme, doing some quaint Handel and Old English in one group and three Shakespearean settings in another and a good modern cluster for the end. He was artistic throughout, his voice resonant, appealing and responsive, and his diction a model of what such things can be. And the audience liked him beyond measure and told him so in a way he could feel when he put over the simple "Old Fashioned Town" inimitably. As good accompaniments as they send out were supplied by Adalbert Haguelet.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

LYNELL REED

A jealousy song entitled "Of a Certain Green-eyed Monster" by Lynnel Reed of Toledo, Ohio, was recently sung by Miss Florence Otis, the New York soprano. Miss Otis obtained the song in the afternoon and featured it on her program on the evening of the same day, since when she has been including it in many of her concerts on her coast to coast tour.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

A Christmas vacation of ten days from December 25, 1919, to January 5, 1920, has been provided for its students by the American Conservatory.

Ben Claire Crow, an artist pupil of Karleton Hackett, is one of the principals in a Schubert company touring in the operetta "May Time" by Friml.

A delightful dramatic entertainment was given by advanced pupils of Letitia Kempster Barnum and A. Louise Suess at Kimball Hall Saturday, December 13, under the auspices of the American Conservatory.

Besides several recitations, the program included two one act plays, "The Land of Heart's Desire" by Yeats, and a farce entitled "A Happy Day," which were accorded an admirable rendition by the students.

Morgan Park—The first concert of the Euterpian Club was given on December 13 to the usual capacity audience and to much more than the usual great enthusiasm. The club, under direction of Edward Clissold, was in fine form and sang excellently a varied program, including works of Cole, Clippinger, Fearis, Protheroe, Wathall, MacDermid, Fay Foster, Mary Turner Salter, Carrie Jacobs Bond and other American composers as well as a few of other nationality. The principal soloist was Amy Emerson Neill, who created a sensation with her beautiful violin playing. Her numbers were Nocturne (Chopin-Sarasate), Menuett (Porpora), "La Capricieuse" (Elgar), Melody (Dawes), "Scherzo Fantastic" (Bazzini) and several encores.

MUSICIANS' CLUB OF WOMEN

The program of the Musicians' Club just heard by this writer was unusually appropriate and delicately artistic in its makeup, so much so that we print it herewith in full:

Two Preludes.....Carol Robinson
Sonata Heroica .....Campbell-Tipton
Winifred Lamb
In the Carpenter's Shop.....Fay Foster
The Sailor's Christmas.....Chaminade
Naomi Nazor McLain, Florence Hallberg, Ruth Simmons Worthington, Eva Gordon
Melody .....Marie Pierik
Gavotte .....Marie Pierik
(Dedicated to Miss Breytspraak)
The Sussex Mummer's Christmas Carol.....
.....Percy Grainger
Ruth Breytspraak
The Infant Jesus.....Pietro A. Yon
In a Manger Lowly.....Mabel Daniels
Naomi Nazor McLain
(Violin obligato, Miss Breytspraak)
Merry Yuletide (from the opera "Christmas Night")
.....Rimsky-Korsakoff
(Christmas song from Little Russia)
"There Was a Pig Went Out to Dig," or "Christmas Day in the Morning".....Grainger
The Quartet

Especially worthy of mention were the numbers done by the quartet of women, with Miss Tina Mae Haines at the piano. The Rimsky-Korsakoff was full of the Russian minor harmonies which suggest to the American mind more pathos than merriment, and the Percy Grainger "There Was a Pig Went Out to Dig" was clever and rollicking.

Ruth Breytspraak's group was very interesting, especially the two little numbers by Marie Pierik, which were played with rare artistic sympathy.

Miss Lamb was not heard in her numbers, which opened the program, although it is not difficult to think of the commendatory remarks which would fittingly be made of this sterling young artist and her playing.

Miss Haines also accompanied Mrs. Naomi Nazor McLain in a group of songs, and Miss Carol Robinson was at the piano for Miss Breytspraak. Both accompanists were delightful.

BETHLEHEM, PA.

The Bach Choir of Bethlehem, whose annual Bach festivals at Lehigh University have won it renown as "the best choir in the United States," has accepted an invitation of the Oratorio Society of New York to sing in New York City on Saturday, April 10, 1920, during the Oratorio Society's festival of music. Charles M. Schwab, main guarantor of the Bach festivals and president of the Oratorio Society, will bear the full expenses of the trip of the 300 Bethlehem singers to New York, as he did in 1916 and 1917.

The invitation from Dr. Walter Damrosch, conductor of the Oratorio Society and the New York Symphony Orchestra, was addressed to Dr. H. S. Drinker, president of the Bach Choir, and Dr. J. Fred Wolle, conductor, and was conveyed through them to the members of the Choir. The decision to accept was unanimous. The singers also extended a vote of thanks to Mr. Schwab for his generosity.

In the program, of which the Bach Choir's choruses and chorales will be the main feature, are included Brahms' double concerto for violin and violoncello by Heifetz and Casals and a Beethoven symphony by the New Yorw Symphony Orchestra.

FIFTH WEEK OF OPERA

Repetitions of Rigoletto and Aida—Splendid Success of Galli-Curci and Schipa in La Sonnambula—Gorgeous Revival of Norma—Continued Success for Marinuzzi — The Death of Maestro Campanini Casts a Gloom Over the Auditorium and Causes Cancellation of Three Performances—Rip Van Winkle Next Week—Many Other Novelties Pending.

By CHARLES E. WATT.

"Norma"

After many postponements "Norma," the masterwork of Bellini, came to its revival on the Auditorium stage last Tuesday evening.

It had not been given for a quarter of a century and fell upon the Chicago ear as a most pleasant novelty.

GINO MARINUZZI

It was beautifully put on and discreetly managed.

Marinuzzi was the conductor and held his forces to fine values, especially the chorus.

Even at this late day the opera is a beautiful one in its many arias, duets and trios, but in listening to the endless dialogues between Norma and other characters, one could not repress the wish that it were being done in English so that we might know what all the pother was about.

Undoubtedly, as is often urged against opera in English, we could not understand the big numbers in any language, but if we had the opera in good English we could at least hear the recitative and the dialogue sections and thus have the thread of the story.

Three big characters there are in the opera, two sopranos and a tenor, and these were well taken care of by Myrna Sharlow, Rosa Raisa and Alessandro Dolci.

The first named, having to sing endless duets with Raisa, was put upon her mettle and, in justice to her, it must be said that she fully held her own even in spite of such trying comparison.

La Sonnambula

Two nights in succession was Chicago treated to Bellini for, following the "Norma" of Tuesday, which was a "big" brilliant performance, with much pomp and circumstance, we had, on Wednesday evening, the fragile "La Sonnambula," the chief pleasure-giving of which consists of the charm, naturalness and utter sincerity of the acting of the peasant boy and girl by Galli-Curci and Tito Schipa, consummate artists both, and not the least so when playing parts of this kind.

The Bellini music is delightful and afforded both these singers some splendid solo moments and a wealth of graceful duet, which placed them high in popular favor.

The dressing of the old opera is quaint and the scenic environment at this time was agreeable, while the entire production went forward with grace and ease.

The story is laughably antique and simple. After such bed room dramas as "Scandal" and "Up in Mabel's Room," that in "La Sonnambula" is childlike in its naivete and improbability and yet, daintily as it was done at this time, the audience laughed.

Trevisan had, in this opera, one of the kindly, whimsical old men characters which he knows so well how to handle and there were other good bits of characterization, acting and singing.

Aida

The very first performance ever given by the Chicago Opera Company was "Aida," and the production was a gorgeous one.

Incidentally, this was the first appearance in Chicago of Cleofonte Campanini as conductor, and his success was immediate and resounding.

And we have had many other fine performances of the opera since that day.

But always, we have used the same scenery, the same costumes and the same pageantry until these had grown shopworn and out of date.

And so, on last Thursday, we went to the Auditorium with no special feeling of joy-to-come, for we expected the same old costumes, the same moth eaten fans in the temple scene, and the same cut-and-dried March and Ballet.

But, the opera had proceeded only a little ways when we began to make discoveries.

The scenery had been furbished, there were new costumes, the chorus had been awakened, the orchestra was more alive, and when the pageant of the second act arrived we found that we were watching a virtually "new production."

And, of a truth, the March, the Ballet and the general ensemble of this scene were positively stunning in their brilliance and glitter as well as thoroughly satisfying in their adherence to the tenets of good and modern art ideas.

And of course, most of the principals were good. Miss Raisa has long stood at the front in her impersonation of the slave girl and Cyrena Van Gordon is no less past-mistress of the vocal score and the proper appearance and action of the princess, and Dolci looks and sings Radames excellently.

The cast needs revision, however, and some of the present principals should be dropped along with the frayed fans and other worn out paraphernalia.

The chorus work at this time, however, was magnificent, and the Orchestra, under de Angelis, was superb.

Other Operas

The gala performance of last Friday evening, involving the premiere of "The Birthday of the Infanta," "The Old Eagle" and "The Spanish Hour," as well as the announced "Masked Ball," of Saturday afternoon and "Traviata" of Saturday evening, were canceled out of respect to the memory of Cleofonte Campanini.

On Monday evening the three Puccini operas were again given, affording fine opportunities for Johnson, Herbert, Galeffi, Raisa, Marinuzzi and others.

On Tuesday "La Sonnambula" was given with Galli-Curci and Tito Schipa, this being followed by the postponed "Birthday of the Infanta."

On Wednesday evening the beautiful performance of "Faust" by Gall, Fontaine and other favorites of last year was repeated.

All these performances will receive further comment later.

"Rip Van Winkle," announced for premiere this (Friday) evening, is postponed till January 2. "Masked Ball" will be given.

On Saturday afternoon "Don Pasquale" and "Birthday of the Infanta" will be repeated and in the evening Miura will make her last appearance for the season in "Butterfly."

———♯♯♯———

GINO MARINUZZI, BRILLIANT CONDUCTOR OF THE CHICAGO OPERA

Gino Marinuzzi, whose brilliant conducting has won him a firm place in the hearts and minds of the musically alert in Chicago, gained all his musical education at Palermo, under Maestro Zuelli. His great talent and ability won for him the unanimous election to the directorship of the Conservatory at Bologna, which postion he held until the demands of opera conducting made it necessary for him to resign.

BALATKA ACADEMY

A pupils' recital of the Balatka Academy, which took place last Thursday evening at Recital Hall, Auditorium Building, was of the progressive kind, ranging from the littlest to the biggest, and from simple to complex in the matter of performance. Perhaps it will not be amiss to begin our comment at the wrong end and to say that two of the most advanced pupils, Charlotte Krause and Erhardt Bergstrasse, made special impression. They are both young artists in interpretative equipment and amply prepared from a technical standpoint. Miss Krause also pleased earlier on the program in a vocal duet from "La Boheme" with Mr. Donath. Of the less advanced young pianists, Esther Berneke was heard in "Pixie on Flying Horse"; Lillian Alperb in "Hungarian Dances" and others. Sylvia Pritikin, Theodore Nuesman, Dorothy Obenman, Florence Bade, Marie Hiddlicka, Evelyn Pearce, Dorothy Rest, Roslyn Shonfield and Earl Smith all pleased in large measure. There were several violin solos which showed excellent preparation and thought. Of these the performers were Beatrice Haas, Henry Corbett, Guido Rizzo, Stanley Swartz, Joseph Rizzo, and Auriel Potter. But this splendid school is many-sided in the training which it offers. In addition to these was heard a mandolin and banjo duet by Horace Griffin and Norman Heyne, several vocal numbers by Helen Murray, Nina Hedine and Frank Ahlberg and a whistling solo by Miss McKee. Dancing was done with delicate art by Ferroise Newman, Violet Newman and Gertrude Caplin, and a reading was given by Dorothy Symons, in addition to an appropriate little sketch, "Nation's Christmas Greeting," with a well selected cast.

The evening was an enjoyable one and demonstrated to full satisfaction the conscientious and thorough character of the work of this school.

ALBERT WOLFF

Proves Again a Master of the Baton. Conducts Brilliantly "MAROUF" on Saturday Matinee, December 20th, at the Metropolitan Opera House

FOLLOWING ARE THE PRESS COMMENTS:

By RICHARD ALDRICH
(New York Times, Dec. 21)
"The performance was under the direction of Mr. Albert Wolff, who conducted it with immense energy and an evident purpose to make the Oriental ginger hot in the mouth of everybody within range; and yet not without finesse and a regard for the delicacies of the score."

By PAUL MORRIS
(New York Herald, Dec. 21)
"He gave a finished and effective reading of the score."

By GRENVILLE VERNON
(New York Tribune, Dec. 21)
"Mr. Wolff infused life into his reading."

By JOHN H. RAFTERY
(New York Telegraph, Dec. 21)
"Conductor Albert Wolff gave a most determinedly vivacious momentum to the music, almost deriving humor out of the never wholly frolicsome score, awakening along the comedic opportunities of the singers with rare skill and a splendid sense of values great and small."

By W. J. HENDERSON
(New York Sun, Dec. 21)
"He demonstrated completely his fitness for the task. Under his baton the glowing colors of the score were clearly displayed."

By JAMES GIBBONS HUNEKER
(New York World, Dec. 21)
"Certainly the music went at a swifter gait than of yore, and there were many novel nuances and dynamic accents in Mr. Wolff's reading."

By MAX SMITH
(New York American, Dec. 21)
"Albert Wolff handled the tiller this time, and right valliantly did this muscular navigator guide the pretty toy ship. He made the journey shorter, too, by eliminating tactfully some of the tasks and trimming his sails well to the wind."

FLORENCE EASTON ENGAGED AS SOLOIST WITH NEW YORK SYMPHONY

It is particularly gratifying to an operatic artist to find herself also in demand as a Symphony Orchestra soloist, as the qualifications for these differing branches of the musical profession are so far removed. Therefore Florence Easton's engagement as soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra in Baltimore, January 21, in Philadelphia, January 22, and in Washington, February 24 are extremely flattering to her. The famous prima donna soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company has appeared in these cities in opera both with the Metropolitan and the Scotti Grand Opera Companies, and her success with both organizations has created a great popular demand for her services.

PIETRO YON AT EMPORIA

Pietro A. Yon of New York gave a splendid organ recital on our College Organ Course on Friday evening, December 5. His remarkable playing is characterized by a prodigious technique, most artistic musicianship and a splendid ease and abandon. He knows well how to employ all the total resources of the organ and yet preserve a fine balance of tone color. His program was lengthened a great deal by the many encores he was obliged to play simply because the audience liked his playing and his program. His own compositions found especial favor with the audience. We hope to have Mr. Yon play here again some time in the near future.

Psychoanalysis and Music

By DANIEL BONUS, B. M., and EDW. N. SCHOOLMAN, M. D.

(All Rights Reserved.)

Introduction Continued

The Rev. Oskar Pfister of Zurich reports an investigation of superstition in the case of an unintelligent person, forty-eight years of age. On the occasion of a visit, he put the following question: "Do you not think, Pastor, that people who were born on special days can see wonderful things which are hidden from ordinary people?" "Why? Did you come into the world on a special day?" "Certainly, on the birthday of the Confederation." (Referring to the Lutheran Church.) "What secret thing have you seen?" "Thirty years ago, one evening at nine o'clock, on the steps, I saw a white figure with piercing black eyes, long black hair and long fingers. It looked at me without moving. I was at first rigid from fright, but then ran into the room and shouted that someone was standing out there. My parents, however, saw no one. Some days later, the angel appeared to me in my sleeping room." "Good! Put yourself back with strained attention to the moment of the vision. Consider the piercing black eyes. What comes into your mind?" "Our neighbor had such eyes." "Now, the hair of the angel." "This, too, corresponded with that of the neighbor." "But the angel had long fingers, which is not usually related of the messengers of God," replied the pastor. "Marvelous! The neighbor also had long fingers." "What about this neighbor?" "On that afternoon, a sales woman had said to me: 'Your neighbor will find no rest in the grave for she has obtained her home through legacy hunting.' In other words, the neighbor was grasping, which accounts for the long fingers in the vision. She liked to scare children. We couldn't endure her!" Then the pastor explained: "The neighbor was hostile to you but you wished her not simply death, but made her in your vision into an angel of God. What better could you wish for such a person if you would put him aside?" "I see that you are right. I have rejoiced over my angel for some thirty years." Pfister recalls that professional murderers of children (in Europe) were called "angel makers," in which title, likewise, the base motive is hidden by one outwardly sublime. The vision gratified the secret wish of death for the neighbor, at the same time protecting the vision maker from his inner guilt.

This is a typical example of superstition analyzed and leads the investigator to the conclusion that hallucinations are dependent upon trains of thought that are active without the person being aware of it. What he perceives as reality is merely the projection of his inner wishes.

It is not our purpose to enter into the refutation of occult phenomena, other than to separate these absolutely from Psychoanalysis, making it clear that this process has nothing to do with the supernatural. It is a clear-cut, definite scientific procedure, dealing with the mind as the surgeon handles the body. The surgeon removes the affected parts that threaten comfort and health; the psychoanalyst removes the disturbance in the mental field that interferes, also, with health and efficient functioning. It has often been called mental surgery.

OSCAR J. EILER

Oscar J. Eiler, well-known cellist of Cleveland and a member of the Cleveland Orchestra, with his teaching and concert playing is having a very busy season.

Early in September he played at the Methodist Conference in Columbus, Ohio.

Friday, December 5, he played a group of solos at the Wimadosian Club of East Cleveland.

He is to be the soloist at a Cleveland orchestra concert a little later in the year.

Mr. Eiler is also cellist of a trio, which has been formed within the past few months. The other members of the trio are Walter Logan, violinist, and Lester Hodges, pianist. This trio expects to fill several important engagements this season.

Cleofonte Campanini

BORN IN ITALY 1860 DIED IN AMERICA 1919

The opera in Chicago has suffered a terrific loss in the death of the General Director, Cleofonte Campanini, and yet—such was his acumen and skill that he himself had planned every detail of the current season so well and so carefully that even his own removal could not hurt it in any particular.

But, the question as to what effect it will have on the future is still an open one.

To Campanini, Chicago owes its present advanced ideal of what opera really should be.

We had an opera before him, it is true—but no such vision and no such achievement as he has given us.

Being an Italian, he gave us, first of all, correct Italian opera, but his outlook was much wider than the boundaries of Italy and it is certainly the fact that not only Chicago but also America at large owes it to him that we have had so much of the French school of opera the past ten years or so, and that it has been presented with such faithfulness and precision.

CLEOFONTE CAMPANINI

Even American opera, the Cinderella of the operatic family, has received much consideration at his hands and, following his seed sowing, it but remains for others to push the idea further than he was able to do in his life time.

Mr. Campanini's personality was most kind and generous.

He had big ideals on every subject and he was profligate in his use of materials, just as all great men and pioneers in any line must be unafraid to explore and to try out.

And, always, underneath his busy, sometimes dictatorial exterior, there was the kindliest of personal feeling.

He reprimanded a foreign singer in the presence of the whole company because, during the war, she expressed a national feeling at variance to America, and yet, such was his personal kindliness that he immediately followed up the reproof by sending to her room armsful of white (peace) flowers!

He discovered new voices and gave them opportunities. He spent endless sums on "productions" so that Chicago might truthfully say it was the equal of the best.

When the bomb scare at the Auditorum two years ago jeopardized the lives of thousands, he promptly saved the situation by swinging the orchestra into "The Star Spangled Banner" and never once did he pause even to glance in the direction where the danger lay, and it is felt by many that the beginning of his fatal illness dated from that eventful night and that the shock was one from which he never recovered.

We have all seen his gradual decline for months and all have wished that it might be stopped.

"How's my opera?" was reported to be his recurrent question while lying on his death bed and his interest in that and his concern for the singers was given its reflex illumination when on Sunday afternoon at the Auditorium not alone did the public apply for admission away beyond the capacity of the place, but all the Company, directors and patrons of the opera came together in a memorial which was at once beautiful and dignified and which expressed but a small part of the admiration and regard in which Mr. Campanini was held.

There was no spoken word at this beautiful service, only music, the music that Campanini loved, given by the people who understood and revered him.

Said one of the singers, "Maybe the Maestro will hear as we sing—and then he will smile."

They all loved the Maestro's smile.

When the curtains parted on the stage on this wonderful occasion, there was in sight only the casket, with its blanket of violets, the beautiful candles, the Maestro's long used desk and baton—and flowers!

Oceans of them—filling the entire orchestra pit, filling the stage to the very limit, filling the Campanini box and adjacent boxes—such a wealth of flowers in fact as bespoke the admiration and love of thousands.

No singers were in sight—the music proceeding from the sides of the stage; and long silences marked the intervals between numbers.

The following list of compositions was given and it is entirely beyond words to tell of its beauty and impressiveness or of the effect on the throngs present.

Prelude—Deluge ..... Saint-Saens
Conductor, Marcel Charlier

Ingemisco—Requiem ..... Verdi
Alessandro Bonci
Conductor, Teofilo De Angelis

Prelude—Pelleas et Melisande ..... Debussy
Conductor, Louis Hasselmans

Inflammatus—Stabat Mater ..... Rossini
Rosa Raisa
Conductor, Gino Marinuzzi

Fourth Movement—Pathetique ..... Tschaikowsky
Conductor, Gino Marinuzzi

And, after the curtains had closed and the service was over, a director of the opera told the audience that all who wished might pass the casket to see the well remembered face again.

It required three hours for the throng to pass.

And on Monday morning there was an impressive church service, at which Mme. Galli-Curci, Yvonne Gall, Tito Schipa, Forrest Lamont and Hector Dufranne sang.

CHICAGO ARTISTS' ASSOCIATION

To great importance and size has the Chicago Artists' Assciation grown, and the concert of last Tuesday afternoon was one of proportionate significance.

Opening, as usual, with a Junior program, Florence Gullans and Lillian Nottleman, voice, and Hazel Johnson and Jacob Hannemann, pianists, were heard to advantage, Emily Robberts being accompanist for the singers.

The artists' program following was opened by Frances Carey Libbe, whose contralto voice is one of the best in Chicago, and whose musicianship, stage bearing and interpretative style are excellent.

Mrs. Libbe created a fine impression with the popular short song of Vanderpool, the much heard "Values," and in the best of the La Forge songs, "To a Messenger," and the extremely effective "Bird of the Wilderness" (Horseman).

Edward Collins, following, was heard in a characteristic piano group.

The second singer of the program was the popular soprano of the Sunday Evening Club Quartet, Mae Graves Atkins, who was heard for the first time by the writer.

Mrs. Atkins has a splendid voice, full, warm and brilliant, and also a superb equipment as to presence, intelligence and musicianship.

Her handling of Fourdrain's "Le Long des Soules" and Liszt's remarkable "Comment dissient ils?" was at a point of vocal beauty and interpretative art hard to equal, and her rendering of a group of La Forge songs was a distinct credit both to herself and him.

The group included "The Butterfly," "Like a Rosebud" and "Come Unto These Yellow Sands," and it was beautifully done.

The good taste of a group of original poems by Lester Luther is to be seriously questioned; one of these was parlor Bolshevistic in tendency, one was perilously near being sacrilegious, and all had a strain of bitter pessimism, which should find no place on any public stage.

The reference to "God's Painted Children" on Michigan Avenue was typical of the glibness and flippancy of all the pieces.

Besides, they were not good poetry.

Following this number, and proving a welcome contrast, was a group of Christmas Carols sung by the Boys' Choir of St. James Episcopal Church, under direction of John W. Norton.

There was fresh, youthful beauty in the voices, splendid musicianship in the readings and the whole number was one of truth and sincerity.

Seder—"Sing and Rejoice," a new Christmas Anthem by Edwin Stanley Seder, was sung at the First Congregational Church in Oak Park last Sunday morning and made so fine an impression that, by general request, it is to be repeated next Sunday morning.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

The quality of pupils at The Chicago Musical College as well as the splendid routine to which they are subjected was shown very forcibly last Saturday morning when two young pianists were taken out of the audience and asked to go on the stage and without any preparation whatever substitute for other pupils who were ill.

These two were Mrs. Forrest, a pupil of Alexander Rabb, and Wyoneta Cleveland, who studies with Rudolph Reuter.

Mrs. Forrest made a fine appearance and played with great poise and assurance the exceedingly difficult "Magic Fire Music." (Wagner-Brassin.)

A beautiful quality of tone ripples from under her fingers and her taste in interpretation is impeccable.

Miss Cleveland is a young artist who has often been heard and who was received at this time as an established favorite.

She has brilliance as well as finesse of musical feeling and displayed the best sort of musicianship and good taste in a genre piece by Griffes and one of the Rhapsodies of Brahms.

In addition to these two excellent numbers, which were greatly appreciated by the audience, the C Sharp Minor Polonaise (Chopin) was well played by Lulu Whisnant, there were fine piano groups by Mae Gilbert (pupil of Harold V. Mickwitz) and Kathryn Thomas Whitfield (pupil of Alexander Raab) as well as a thoroughly virtuosic presentation of the great B Minor Ballade (Liszt) by Aaron Ascher, a talented pupil of Rudolph Reuter.

Miss Gilbert showed skill and excellent style in works of Chopin and Arensky and Miss Whitfield, besides giving much pleasure in a composition of her own (Toccatina), showed fine technic and good musical feeling in "Le plus que Lente" (Debussy.)

C. B. Talbot showed a good bass voice in "Why Do the Nations" ("Messiah") and Elizabeth Muncie was thoroughly agreeable in "The Valley of Laughter" (Sanderson.)

There was but one violinist on the program—Ben Zimberhoff, a very talented and altogether attractive youth who in a movement of a Vieuxtemps Concerto proved his own talent and the fine work of his teacher, Max Fischel.

IN HONOR OF GENERAL JOHN G. PERSHING

At the Auditorium on last Sunday evening a Public Meeting in honor of General Pershing was attended by all the people the vast building would hold and there was unlimited enthusiasm.

Addresses were made by General Charles G. Dawes, Bishop Samuel Fallows, Hon. William Hale Thompson and General Pershing.

The Chicago Band, under direction of William Weil, played a "Triumphal March" and there was some congregational singing.

Clarence Eddy played wonderfully well on the fine old organ. Cyrena Van Gordon made a sensation in "The Star Spangled Banner" and Florence Macbeth, after giving a fine reading of "The Americans Come" (Fay Foster), touched every heart with the singing of "Home, Sweet Home."

A Story About Tito Schipa

Tenors at times have the most absurd whims. Don't you think that they are different from other people? They are like painters, only different; they're like school girls, but only different. And curious, those who are normal are so dull!

So, Tenor Schipa, is a tenor. And the gang meets in the hotel lobby—you have got it—The Biltmore. There was, besides our tenor, Maestro Bellini and friend Turchetti, all of them waiting for hustling Loubet.

Simple waiting is, however, unimportant. So the presiding magistrate of Olympus forthwith dispatches one of his animalia ridicula, incarnate in a gentleman of pitch black clothes.

Halting before our waiting triumvirate he addressed them, the tenor directly.

"What? Are you always waiters?"

"I haven't the honor to know you," retorted the tenor's secretary, rudely unobligingly.

"We know one another," was the quick reply. "We have waited in the most honorable Spaghetti Houses together. You are evidently out of a job, and therefore unable to recognize people. If you are not lazy, come with me; I'll give you a job!"

But gods are not like men; they oppose one another. Thus Olympus' enemy prompted our tenor: "With whom have I (indeed!) the honor of speaking?"

"I am an agent; I employ waiters!"

"I am tenor Schipa"—the speaker spoiled the soup—"I have never been a waiter. I have always had two waiters with me, and there's place for another" (evidently our tenor has a fine appetite). "If you wish work, I'll take you along, too!"

And a rumbling like thunder was suddenly heard; the gods in deadly combat were shaking the poor abode of ant mortal! The messenger of Olympus gazed in wonderment!

"On second thought," resumed Mr. Tito Schipa with an amiability and smile that made all the others relax from the tenseness in which they had worked themselves, "I think that I would accept your admirable offer, that is, if I had time. But I just happen to be on my way to Chicago to fulfill a little promise of mine, trifles, you know. I should like to be a waiter at least for one day."

Our tenor possesses a quick intelligence. He has learned in a few days' stay in America not only our artistic position but also our economical rolling stone."—New York Press.

EDWARD JOHNSON

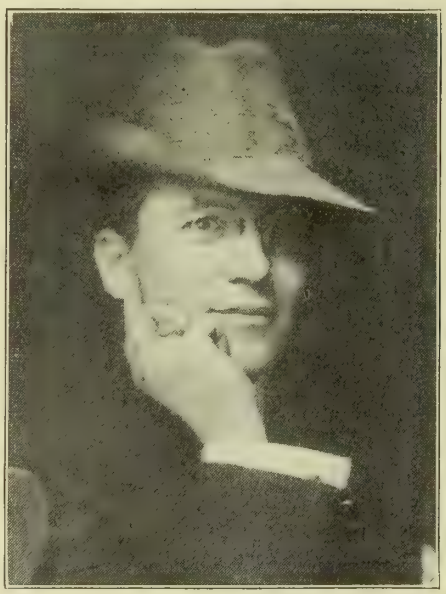
The Distinguished American Tenor Who Has Created a Sensation Each Time He Has Sung With the Chicago Opera Company

By CHARLES E. WATT

That famous American opera singer who is familiarly known as "Our Mary," had to make her impression on America via France.

In other words—there being no operatic openings whatever in this country fifteen years (or more) ago, and no encouragement whatsoever for any American to aspire to opera here, she went to Paris, and there, in the very stronghold of French art, she triumphed in competition with the best of the French artists.

And so, Edward Johnson, the possessor of one of the finest voices that God ever gave any American man, after making a concert career in this country found it advisable to go to Italy for the beginning of an operatic career and there he was immediately adopted by the populace and became so great a favorite that it was almost ten years before he came home again to delight his countrymen with his art, his voice and his intelligence.



EDWARD JOHNSON

Mr. Johnson was born in Canada—Oh! not so very many years ago! and came, naturally, to New York as a young man to further his musical studies.

He had the usual church and local career of the good student in New York and Chicago, but was fortunate, too, in attracting the attention of the Wolfsohn bureau, which began by sending him out with quartets for near-by engagements, but which very soon, on cancellation through sickness of a date by one of the most famous tenors of the opera, sent him, on short notice, to fulfill a most important concert engagement in St. Louis.

Here he made a sensation and the result was that the young singer immediately stepped into a line of engagements covering the best concert dates handled by the Wolfsohn's, and it was during this period that Edward Johnson came to Chicago and sang so beautifully as soloist with our famous Mendelssohn Club that he is remembered with joy to this day by everyone fortunate enough to have been present at that particular concert.

The brilliant young tenor, however, had operatic aspirations and was constantly on the alert for the means and the opportunity to further them.

One day he had his bag all packed to go to Oberlin to sing in "The Dream of Gerontius," and just before train time he was approached by the agent of a broadway production with an offer of appearance in "The Waltz Dream," an operetta which was built somewhat along the lines of "The Merry Widow" and which required the stellar services of a high, light tenor voice, exactly such, in fact, as that possessed by Mr. Johnson.

The singer took the score with him on the train and read it over en route and liked it so well that he was ready with his acceptance of the part on his return.

The result was one of the longest and most successful Broadway runs on record, and better still, a sum of money which, to the young singer, meant Italy and an operatic career.

It is not to be supposed that the young American started out with any idea of so long a stay abroad, but, as matter of fact, his residence in Italy covered almost ten years and it is such a record of study, achievement and success as has been won by but few singers of the generation.

The choice of teachers was fortunate and the career was built up by most careful and logical degrees—a debut being made at the Theater Verdi in Padua in Giordana's "Andrea Chenier," which was such a brilliant success that it led to offers from all parts of Italy.

During the next few years Mr. Johnson sang everywhere, in all the best theaters and, by degrees, in a list of parts which soon encompassed the entire repertoire.

He went also to South America and there also scored resounding successes.

In Italy he married and at Florence was born his daughter, Fiorenza, who is now eight years old and who has accompanied her father to this country and will return with him after the New York season to the beautiful home maintained in Florence.

This little girl, who has spent almost all her life at Florence, was baptized there in the famous Batistero, where also were baptized all famous Florentines, including musicians and artists of the past several hundred years.

Mr. Campanini, always alert to secure for Chicago the best of singers, engaged Mr. Johnson last year, and not only has he scored heavily in our opera but also as soloist at the Chicago Symphony Orchestra concerts of last week he made one of the finest successes of the season.

At his first performance (in "Fedora") in the opening week of our season, he literally "stopped the show," while Chicagoans cheered him to the echo, and his later appearances in "Il Tabarro" and "Gianni Schicchi" have been productive of the same enthusiastic approval. We anticipate his appearances in "Aphrodite" and "The Love of Three Kings" with assurance of great delight and hope for his casting in other parts.

On the stage Mr. Johnson is boyish, eager, and altogether agreeable in appearance and action, to say nothing of his singing, which is another matter and which has been praised in superlative terms by every newspaper writer in Chicago.

In his room at the hotel, where he graciously submitted to a little questioning, he is proved to be of charming personality and an alertness of mind which made his conversation fascinating.

He can tell you anything you want to know about Italy and Italian opera and his talk was most interesting and illuminative.

But—he is a thorough American first of all and he likes to talk about the possibilities and the actual achievements of music in this country, too.

Like all artists nowadays, he is strongly of the opinion that the real development and growth of opera in this country will come through the singing of opera in the English language.

"And," he said, "when there are as many opera houses in this country producing opera in English as there are now in Italy producing opera in Italian, the United States will become just as good a place for the young American singer to develop as Italy has so long been. In a word, we need to develop opera in English for the purpose of Americanization of the art and when we have once accomplished that result there will no longer be any question of preference for the foreign singers, for our own, in our own tongue, will give the greatest satisfaction."

EMMA ROBERTS SPENDING THE HOLIDAYS AT HER HOME IN KENTUCKY

Following her appearance in recital in Elizabeth Cueny's series of afternoon musicales in the ballroom of the Hotel Statler, St. Louis, on December 15, Emma Roberts, the New York contralto, went to Henderson, Ky., to take part in a family reunion at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Roberts. This will be the second time that all the members of the family have been together during the present year, as there was an earlier gathering of the clan at Spring Lake, N. J., where Miss Roberts had a cottage last summer.

The contralto will have to return to New York for the performances of "The Messiah," which will be given in Newark and New York on December 29 and 30, stopping off en route at Greensburg, Pa., for the Mendelssohn Choir's performance of the same work on December 28. Miss Roberts will achieve a new record in singing in three distinct performances of the Handel oratorio on three successive days.

"THE MESSIAH"

"The Messiah" was written by George Frederick Handel in the year 1741.

New First Congregational Church

The first performance of the "Messiah" by the United Choirs at the New First Congregational Church was a signal success under the able direction of Mr. George Tenney. The soloists were Else Harthan Arendt, soprano, and Lucy J. Hartman, contralto. Of the women, Mrs. Arendt, with limpid beauty of tone, sang "I Know That My Redeemer Liverth" brilliantly and in the "Come Unto Me" displayed a great gift for the interpretation of beautiful melody. Miss Hartman in "He Shall Feed His Flock" was her equal in expression and execution and was thoroughly artistic and at her ease in the air with the chorus, "O Thou That Telleth." Mr. Frank Collins in the bass role distinguished himself in the great aria "Why Do The Nations," and Mr. Bajori, who substituted for Mr. Miller in the tenor part, was satisfactorily schooled.

In the second performance Friday night, Mrs. Arendt's place was taken to infinite satisfaction by Ethel Benedict, not in the loss of the former soloist, but in the acquisition of the latter by way of change, and John B. Miller sang for himself. On both occasions the chorus work was excellent, spirited, well balanced and well instructed under Mr. Tenney, and Mr. Manuel at the organ provided unusually sympathetic accompaniments. He is an organist of the first rank and an accompanist of equal proportions.

GRACE CHURCH, OAK PARK

Is there any moment of "The Messiah" more beautiful than that where, following the wonderful "Pastoral Symphony," the Soprano enters with the recitation, "There were Shepherds" and proceeds through the story of the Annunciation to that thrilling climax where the exultant chorus bursts in with the jubilant "Glory to God in the Highest?"

I think not. And especially so when the Pastoral is done so exquisitely as it was by Arthur Fraser of Grace Church on last Sunday afternoon and when this is followed by such Soprano clarity and beauty as that of Hazel Silver, the Soprano, and such whole-hearted enthusiasm and good musical values as were submitted at the moment by Grace Church Choir.

And there were other fine moments—"For Unto Us" and "The Hallelujah" were excellent, and throughout the choir showed again the value of the Fraser knowledge, routine and training. Arthur Kraft was the tenor and his voice was pure gold in "Comfort Ye," and vital indeed in "Every Valley."

Rollin Pease, a favorite at Grace Church and excellent in Oratorio always, was musicianly in "Thus Saith The Lord," and very strong in the dramatic moments of the work.

Mary Welch, a newcomer to the Oratorio fold, and announced as contralto soloist for the Apollo Club's "Messiah" of next Sunday, proved to be a veritable "find."

She has a beautiful voice—large and vibrant, and her musicianship is decidedly fine also.

She ought to take a big place in the local field.

Grace Church and Mr. Fraser are to be congratulated on one more fine success, to be added to the long list already standing to their credit.

At Evanston

The idea of a big chorus for "The Messiah" is not a new one in Evanston, for once they had a thousand voices sing it at a North Shore Festival and the Evanston Musical Club, which has always given an annual performance of the Handel work, is invariably large and alert.

But this year Dean Peter C. Lutkin decided to have something different and the result as shown at the First M. E. Church of Evanston on last Sunday evening was such as to prove rather conclusively that the "Community idea" is the proper one to apply to "Messiah" giving. For this was a community performance in deed and in truth.

Two-thirds of the main auditorium of the big church was filled with volunteer singers (with scores of "The Messiah"), these including members of the Evanston Musical Club and whatever other singers chose to report for the three or four rehearsals.

And how they did sing! "And the Glory," "For Unto Us" and "The Hallelujah" were wonderful in vitality and effect, and every number of the score was delivered with intelligence and a surprising amount of finish.

Excellent accompaniments were furnished by the University School of Music Symphony Orchestra (which also played the "Pastoral" beautifully) in conjunction with Katherine Howard Ward at the fine organ of the church.

The solos were done very impressively by Charles E. Lutton (Bass), an alumnus of the School of Music; Helen Rockwell (Soprano), a talented artist pupil of Alta Miller, and Doris Doe (Contralto) and Elwin Smith (Tenor), talented students of the same institution.

Mr. Lutkin was in his element and conducted with fine inspiration.

Hundreds surged about the church unable to gain admission, and everyone within sound of the unique and beautiful performance went away giving thanks to Mr. Lutkin, to the Evanston Musical Club and the Community Music Association of Evanston for a very definite contribution to holiday joy and cheer.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL, OAK PARK

Under the energetic management of William Shuey and with the splendid directorship of Edwin Stanley Seder, whose organ playing is so masterly as to make him equal (on the splendid First Congregational organ) to a first class orchestra. "The Messiah" was given its annual performance on Sunday night to an audience which filled the great First Church to capacity.

Again was there a chorus of forty recruits from the Apollo Club (Chicago) and, as in "Elijah" given a few weeks ago, the results obtained were amazingly fine.

The quieter choruses were sung with an intensity of religious feeling and a finesse of musical values which made them effective to the last degree and the broader numbers, such as "For Unto Us" and "The Hallelujah," became paens of joy.

The soloists were fine also and, in spite of the regretted illness of Else Harthan Arendt, the popular soprano of the church, the solos for that part were done admirably by Ethel Benedict, whose fine voice and good oratorio style fit "The Messiah" splendidly.

Permelia Gale, the contralto, was in excellent voice and sang the allotted solos with that same sincerity and intensity as well as the perfect musicianship which have long made her "Messiah" famous.

Arthur Kraft, whose beautiful tenor voice was heard earlier in the day in another "Messiah," again proved to the people of the First Church his superior equipment and style, and William Phillips, the newly appointed bass of the quartette, did such fine work and was so royally received as to proclaim aloud the fact that he will become speedily one of the most popular of the church soloists in Oak Park.

Mr. Seder was superb in a short preludial program, including numbers by Yon and Grison, and at the close he played the Handel "Largo" with equal effect.

The Apollo Club to Sing "Messiah"

On Sunday afternoon, December 28, at 3:30 at Orchestra Hall the annual performance of "The Messiah" by the Apollo Club, under direction of Harrison M. Wild and with full orchestral accompaniment, will be given.

The soloists will be Grace Kerns, Mary Welch, Theodore Karle and Rollin Pease.

"Messiah" at Englewood Sunday Evening Club

Sunday evening, Jan. 4, Englewood Sunday Evening Club Choir will render a service from the oratorio "The Messiah," by Frederick George Handel. The choir of 50 voices will be assisted by the following soloists: Hazel Silver, soprano; Mary Welch, contralto; Arthur Kraft, tenor, and Rollin Pease. Glenwood Preble, director. This service has been given by this choir regularly for over fifteen years and is always greeted by a large audience. It is held in the auditorium of the Englewood Presbyterian church, corner Yale avenue and 64th street.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC AT SOUTH CONGREGATIONAL

The Pageant and Cantata "The Coming of the King," as given Sunday p. m., the 21st, by the Musical Ministry of the South Congregational Church, under the leadership of Albert Cotsworth, registers high water mark in the art of appropriate Christmas commemoration. It was in no sense pure entertainment, nor was it purposed as such; it was a high, inspiring act of worship, dignified, reverent, artistic. The large congregation caught the spirit of reverence and adoration, and listened in the darkened room with a rapt silence that could be felt. There was a gratifying absence of the crude and bizarre effects so often characterizing attempts at religious symbolism and pageantry. The parallel stories of the Nativity as told on the screen and in tableaux and in song, each illuminating the other, were unified by the controlling religious ideal and purpose. Altogether the service was worthy of the best traditions of churchly celebration, for which too much credit cannot be given the South Church Quartette, and to the "Elderly Person," the directing genius of it all. Particularly effective and memorable were the scenic arrangement and the singing of "The Star in the East," the "Prophetic Angel," the "Manger Scene" and the "Coming and Adoration of the Magi Kings."

HYDE PARK BAPTIST CHURCH

At the Hyde Park Baptist Church last Sunday evenings Saint-Saens' beautiful Christmas Oratorio was given with Ada Tilley, soprano; Mildred Smith, contralto; Eugene Dressler, tenor, and Frank Parker, director, and bass, together with a chorus of fifteen or twenty voices. The ensemble of this body of singers is excellent, and the performance unusual from a soloistic standpoint, all the voices coming out with particular lustre and expression.

BERRY MEMORIAL M. E. CHURCH

A large congregation attended the Christmas Song Service at Berry Memorial Church on last Sunday evening. The work presented was "The Star of Promise" by E. L. Ashford, not often given in Chicago but very effective considering the simplicity of its structure. The assisting soloists were Miss Ida A. Apeland, Miss Ethel M. Blimmer, Miss Pauline Elizabeth Stephens, Miss Edith C. Stephens, Mrs. Ethel A. West, Howard G. Grimm, Walter C. Hachmeister and William H. Matthews, all present or former members of the choir.

The chorus work was the best rendered of this season and gave evident pleasure to the congregation. The solo and quartet work were also of a high order of merit, the whole ensemble being one long to be remembered.

The offering of the organist, Mrs. Eva A. Hachmeister, was the Dubois "Hosannah," and the "Paraphrase on a Christmas Hymn" by William Faulkes, which were given able and resourceful readings.

The baton in the hand of Irving Gingrich was wielded with a precision that left no doubt in the minds of the singers, with the result that the attacks and shadings were most effectively done.

For the benefit of many who were unable to attend last Sunday evening, the program will be repeated next Sunday evening, December 28, at 7:45.

ACTING AT THE AMERICAN ACADEMY OF DRAMATIC ARTS

Notwithstanding the propaganda in favor of the National Institution for Dramatic Arts, the Legislature has not yet determined to institute a National Academy for the promotion of drama in the United States. There is little hope that our city fathers or members of the Legislature will for the present at least endeavor to fill a gap which would place the stage, with its interpreters, on a level with the great European centers. In the absence of such institutions private enterprises are attempting to create a movement in favor of the stage. In New York City there are hundreds of individuals teaching or attempting to teach theatrical skill and the so-called stage technic. Many small schools more or less prominent are attempting to spread the knowledge of acting. I must say that the results obtained either by the individuals or the small enterprises are only meager. It seems, nevertheless, to be true that very few are competent to impart the importance of the stage. Every year aspirants, actors and actresses make their exits from the various conservatories, but only a small number of them are fit to appear before the public in an exhibition of their talents. Drama and tragedy on the American stage has been, unfortunately, for the last three decades a failure because the public at large never cared to be educated in the selection of their theatrical entertainments. The best dramas have failed because of the lack of appreciation; tragedies are acted on the American stage on scant occasions. We can easily point out a half dozen excellent actors, but the rest is a conglomeration of accidental performers. The stage is one of the greatest institutions of our civilization, but very few have realized it, and therefore cheap entertainments, interpreted by mediocres, meet on the whole with great success in the hands of the public. Ever since the movies have been instituted the masses prefer them to the stage. I know of some girls who, attending a film performance, were struck with an ambition to become movie actresses without having any notion of what acting is. It is true that movies have never been a source of education for those who really attempt to entertain themselves in the proper way. But mere boys and girls are obsessed with the idea of becoming movie performers with only one thing to show to their credit—physical beauty. Movie enterprises have always been looking for striking musical personalities, not for able interpreters, and even when a star or two appeared in a film in a stupid play they always fail to do justice to themselves. It seems rather curious that many an individual before the movies were instituted had a certain ambition to study, but for the last few years many performers who have never dreamed of being professional actors or actresses are today put on the screen without having the least knowledge of theatrical skill. Ninety-nine per cent of the performers on our stage today are mere puppets and talkers, yes, mechanical talkers. Few of them ever express the meaning of an author. We have to admit that our present stage is decidedly behind the musical arts, but evolution and stage matters must come for an improvement of our much neglected stage. There comes a glimmer of hope for us in the establishment of reliable dramatic schools, and the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, located in Carnegie Hall, is one of the best institutions in the United States, because its faculty is composed of competent teachers and good plays are being acted by the pupils. This institution accepts only aspirants who possess the natural gift for the stage. I believe that some four hundred pupils are today in attendance at the academy in an endeavor to study acting and theatrical technic. The American Academy of Dramatic Arts presents from time to time plays which are a joy to the real lovers of drama. I believe that the American Academy of Dramatic Arts is the first institution which gave plays which the public at large has not enjoyed for many years. From time to time these performances are given at the Empire Theater with the intention of providing an opportunity to pupils to acquire poise, routine and facility. Notwithstanding that these performances are semi-professional, the leading critics of the New York papers are attending them as well as they do the rest of the entertainments. I don't believe that "Les Precieuses Ridicules," by Moliere, was ever given on the American stage, or at least it has not been heard for some fifteen years, but the American Academy of Arts gave it as far back as 1887. I am willing to wager that this jewel of Moliere is unknown to ninety million inhabitants in the United States. It is useless to look for the reason. Some time in 1890 the American Academy of Dramatic Arts arranged a performance at the Harvard University. It consisted of "Electra," by Sophocles, and later Ibsen's remarkable drama, "The Pillars of Society" (played some time ago by Nazimova), was given with much success. The American Academy of Arts is responsible for the introduction of Maeterlinck when his plays, like "The Intruder" and "The Sightless," were given. Following these presentations "School for Scandal" and "The Hunchback" were also given. It would be difficult to enumerate all the plays that have been given by the American Academy of Arts, but the following is a representative list of plays performed under the auspices of this institution and naturally acted by their pupils: "Les Precieuses Ridicules" (Moliere), "Electra" (Sophocles), "Pillars of Society" (Ibsen), "School for Scandal" (Sheridan), "Epicoene" or "The Silent Woman" (Ben Jonson), "The Hunchback" (Knowles), "Secunda Pastorum" (Miracle Play), "Love for Love" (Congreve), "Winter's Tale" (Shakespeare), and "Tartuffe" (Moliere).

ANN ARBOR, MICH.

The month of December has been a banner one for Ann Arbor's music loving public, a number of splendid musical attractions having been scheduled. On December 4, Jascha Heifetz made his first appearance in the city and gave a masterful demonstration of violin playing before an audience which taxed the capacity of Hill Auditorum, where even the stage had to be crowded. He fully substantiated the splendid reputation which preceded him, and justified the high hopes of Ann Arbor musicians who have been clamoring to hear him.

On December 15, the New York Chamber Music Society, under the direction of Carolyn Beebe, also made its Ann Arbor debut in a masterful program. That Ann Arbor loves chamber music was demonstrated by the tremendously enthusiastic reception which was accorded this fine organization. Each of the eleven artists proved to be a real virtuoso and their combined efforts produced an entertainment seldom equaled.

In addition to these concerts several student organizations were also heard from. The University Glee Club of more than 100 picked voices, under the direction of Russell Carter, Head of the Public School Music Department of the School of Music, appeared in an interesting program of songs. Although they had but a short time in which to prepare for this appearance their work was highly satisfactory and proved to be a great credit to their inspiring leader as well as to the individual members. An interesting feature of the program was a group of songs in which the Girls' Glee Club of the University (75 members), under the direction of Nora Crane Hunt, of the Vocal Faculty of the School, was heard.

On December 5, the men of the Michigan Union appeared in an interesting amateur production known as "Spotlight Vaudeville," in which a large number of young men provided musical "stunts." Much talent of a varied nature was brought out and the large audience was well pleased.

The most elaborate undertaking of the students was the production of DeKoven's "Redfeather," which was given three performances on December 11-12-13. Leading roles were taken by Mrs. Pearl W. Wolcott, Soprano; James Hamilton, Tenor; Robert R. Dieterle, Baritone; and other members of the School of Music. The opera was directed by Professor Earl V. Moore, Head of the Organ Department of the School, while the general stage direction was in charge of E. Mortimer Schuter. All participants were carefully drilled and the production was given with a smoothness which measured up exceedingly well and could be compared not unfavorably with many professional performances.

On December 18, an interesting program was provided by the children of the Ann Arbor Public Schools, when about three thousand youngsters gathered in Hill Auditorium for the sing of Christmas carols. The general public was admitted to the balconies. Miss Lulu Allen, in charge of the music in the grade schools, appeared in the role of conductor, while Russell Carter, Director of Music in the Public Schools, presided at the piano and Mr. Earl V. Moore officiated in the same capacity at the organ.

William Wheeler, Head of the Voice Department, sang the tenor role in Handel's "Messiah" at Alma College on the evening of December 17th. During the Christmas vacation and again in February he will appear in concert in New York and in several other Eastern cities.

Mr. Robert R. Dieterle, of the Vocal Faculty, with Miss Dorothy Wines of the Piano Faculty, accompanist, will appear in recital in Chelsea, December 28; in Grand Rapids before the St. Cecelia Society, in January; and before the Tuesday Musicale Society of Detroit, in March.

Director Albert A. Stanley, Professor Earl V. Moore, and Russell Carter of the School of Music Faculty will attend the meeting of the National Music Teachers' Association in Philadelphia during the holiday vacation.

EDGEWATER BEACH MUSICALES

Sunday afternoon, December 13, at Edgewater Beach Hotel, an interesting concert was given by Esther Gielo, soprano; Arthur Kraeckmann, baritone, assisted by Beulah Taylor Porter, an accompanist of fine parts and musicianship.

Miss Gielo has a lovely lyric soprano; she sings easily and is sincere in manner. She did musicianly and artisic work in Eden's "What's in the Air Today," and "By the Waters of Minnetonka." The last number showed good legato and tone.

Chaminade's "Summer" was presented with a spirit that caught the fancy of the audience, and was graciously applauded. In a group by Emory, Reidlinger and Clough-Leighter, she caught the spirit of the songs well.

Heifetz—Jascha Heifetz completes this year's duties with an appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House next Sunday evening. His last out of town concert was given last Sunday in Providence, where the audience overflowed to the stage in regular New York fashion. His first New York appearance of the new year will be a recital in Carnegie Hall Sunday afternoon, January 11. Following this concert the violinist starts on a far western tour.

Pierce—Adelaide Pierce is the popular contralto of the quartet at the splendid Plymouth Church of Minneapolis. Last Sunday morning she sang as offertory Maunder's "The Gracious Lord His Promise Has Remembered" and in the evening (in duet with Grace Chadbourn) "Hark, Hark, My Soul" (Harry Rowe Shelley).

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Madame Schumann-Heink, assisted by Frank La Forge, on November 28 at the Auditorium under the auspices of Marion Andrews Bureau played with great versatility upon the emotions of her audience, swaying them at will. Her voice seems to grow younger with the passing years and is lyrically light in such things as Arditi's "Bolero," tender and appealing in songs like "Danny Boy" and "Slumber Song" by Alex. MacFadyen. What it is that she does differently from other singers is hard to define. It is more a sense of feeling the pulse of her auditors and giving rein than to her own feelings. A more dramatic rendering of Mary Turner Salter's "Cry of Rachel" has never been heard by the writer. The program opened with Handel, Bach and Meyerbeer, a group of Frank La Forge's songs and a miscellaneous group. The songs first mentioned with MacDowell's "Beaming Eyes" and a repetition of Lieurance's "Indian Love Song" were used as encores. La Forge was the brilliant accompanist as usual, and also gave good account of himself in two groups of piano numbers, responding with encores of "Concert Study" by Boothe and "Minuette" by Haydn. Altogether it was a great concert. The artist is a woman who has endeared herself personally to her following and her great art fully satisfies the demands.

Singing Societies

The Milwaukee Mannerchor, directed by Albert Kramer, gave the first concert of their twenty-second season the evening of November 25 at the Pabst theater. Miss Gustel Hansen of the Pabst Stock Company read a prologue, and a trio composed of Miss Vera Prengel, Alex. Prengel and Robert Prengel and Professor Arthur Bergmann, organist, were the assisting artists. The chorus singing was good for the greater part of the evening. A little tendency to drag tempos was evident at times. The program included the usual assortment of romantic and half humorous numbers. There were encores and a sincere appreciation of the better things by a capacity house.

One of the outstanding numbers was Damrosch's "Trust in the Lord," set to Handel's "Largo," and it was exceedingly well done.

The Milwaukee Liederkranz gave the first concert of their forty-first season Sunday afternoon, November 30, at Pabst Theater, Otto A. Singenberger, director. Alma Hohn, soprano, Pearl Brice, violinist, were the assisting artists. The chorus of male voices was very well balanced and Mr. Singenberger has them under splendid control. Attacks were rhythmic and shading nicely colored. There was a good interpretative value in concerted numbers, and a beautifully reverent singing of "The Almighty" (Liszt-Schubert) was inspiring. Mr. Singenberger has an authoritative baton and obtains his artistic results without any wild display of eccentric mannerisms. "Massa's in de Cold, Cold Ground," arranged by Koemmenich, and "Youthful Love," a delightful little humorous number by Haloma, were given the desired repetition, and a lovely unknown "Lullaby" was an extra encore.

Miss Brice played her two groups with a splendid tone and being well known popular violin numbers, she met with her usual vociferous reception.

Miss Hohn is a young singer with a naturally pretty voice, but needful of more training and experience.

The Lyric Club, assisted by Ethel Benedict, popular Chicago soprano, gave the first concert of their twenty-third season Tuesday evening, December 11, at Pabst Theater. This is a corking good group of male voices, plenty of "ping and punch." In the unaccompanied number there was a tendency to lose pitch, but it was more than made up for in the enunciation, which was excellent. Albert Kramer, director pro tem. while Arthur Dunham is away, is to be congratulated on the way he manipulated his singers.

Kenneth L. Jacob in Will Marion Cook's "Exhortation" and Robert M. Owen singing "A Ford Song" were the "hits" of the evening. Both had to repeat their songs in entirety.

Of the club numbers, "Deep River" by Lucas, "Volga Boat Song" arranged by Tuthill and a "Song of Deliverance" set to the music of Coleridge-Taylor's "Viking Song" won the most approbation. There were frequent repetitions demanded and Henry Hoaley's "Lucky Horeshoe" delighted with its comedy, and the three verses were sung the second time.

Miss Malek and Miss Lean, also faculty members, substituted at the last moment for Frank Ormsby and Miss Katherine Clarke and great credit was reflected on their teacher, Miss Clarke, for the way they filled the breach on short notice. The entire program was artistic and interesting.

Twilight Musicales

The first concert of this series for benefit of Milwaukee County Nurses Club was given by Flonzaley Quartet. Miss Margaret Rice has directed the management of this series for several seasons and the splendid following this series can boast is due to her foresight. The Twilight Musicales were started with the idea of eventually growing into a chamber music society. The propitious moment seems imminent and probably before the end of this season Miss Rice's plans, so far embryonic as far as the public is concerned, will be announced to the season subscribers and the general public, and to judge from the voluntary attendance at this chamber music concert and the enthusiasm evinced, it is not going to be hard work to start a worth while society.

From the Twilight Musicale the reviewer went to a very interesting piano recital at the Milwaukee Art Institute by Miss Irma Goebel, a former pupil of Alexander Raab of Chicago.

Miss Goebel played the following program:

She has power and fluency and the first and last numbers exhibited her versatility. The Mozart was played with delicacy and poetry, distinctiveness and purity. The Grieg "Ballad" was given a purely intellectual reading and but for having heard the Mozart, one would say power was Miss Goebel's predominant characteristic. The Liszt Etude, Schutt and Rubinstein emphasized the fact that she has technical equipment to spare. A more frequent pedal release would clear some of the heavier work, which at times was blurred.

Miss Goebel is an interesting young pianist, and has some worth while originality in her work.

The third concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra introduced Joseph Malkin, new first cellist of orchestra, as soloist. The majestic Coriolanus overture opened the program and the merry scherzo of Dukas, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," was the finale. The meat in this lovely wheaten sandwich was the No. 6 B minor symphony of Tschaikowsky and the concerto for violoncello and orchestra of Lalo. The symphony was exquisitely delineated through its four movements leading to the lamentoso of the adagio. The tempo of the third did not stand out as brilliantly as at some hearings perhaps, because the first two movements were of more rapid tempo than is usually taken.

Joseph Malkin is an artistic acquisition of high standard. He has a pleasing personality and a quiet, reposeful manner. A velvety tone, sonorous and vibrant and warm depths in the coloring of this most grateful of cello concertos won Mr. Malkin an everlasting place in the affections of the Milwaukee public.

The Pabst Theater is sold out for every concert of the Chicago orchestra this season. There are very few seats left for single sale and they are quickly taken for each concert.

Miss Adeline Ricker gave the first two lectures on Symphony concert programs and Frank Olin Thompson the third at Stephenson Hall.

The local Auditorium orchestra, under Herman Zeitz' direction, is increasing its audiences every concert. Viola Ellis, contralto, was soloist on Sunday and Theodora Troendle, pianist, appeared with the orchestra December 15. The programs of popular classics are meeting with approval and a special ticket selling campaign has just been inaugurated which it is hoped will put the orchestra on a self-supporting financial basis and at the same time gain a permanent following for the association.

During a recent appearance at the Majestic Theater of Vernon Stiles, the American operatic tenor, a meeting occurred between him and Alexander MacFadyen, the composer. Mr. Stiles had made a big impression on his audiences with opera arias and some delightful new songs by Irving Berlin of a caliber not hitherto attached to that composer, and Mr. Stiles prevailed upon Mr. MacFadyen to surprise the Saturday aftenoon audience by playing the accompaniment to his song "Inter Nos," which has long been a favorite concert number with Mr. Stiles. The surprise was in the nature of a boomerang, for the audience went wild over the unexpected treat and both artists were recalled again and again.

MORE ENGAGEMENTS FOR LEVITZKI

History is repeating itself in the case of Mischa Levitzki. This time it is happening in Washington. Last year his success was such that when he appeared there as soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra he was engaged by Mrs. Ona B. Talbot, the Indianapolis-Louisville-New York impresario, for a recital at the Belasco Theater on Easter Sunday. On November 25 he played again with the Damrosch orchestra in the capital and an echo of his triumph then comes in the announcement that he has just been engaged by the Chamber Music Society for a recital on March 12.

Other recent bookings for him in an already crowded route sheet are for the Academy of music, Brooklyn, on February 27, and Toronto, Canada, for March 23.

His next New York appearance will take place on January 3 and 4, when he will be soloist with the New York Symphony. On January 20 he will give his second Carnegie Hall recital.

A POEM BY THE AUTHOR OF "OFF AGIN, ON AGIN."

TO GRAY-LHEVINNE HIMSELF
By STRICKLAND GILLILAN

Say, I know your dad and mother,
Gray-Lhevinne.
Are you like one or the other,
Or between?
Whatsoever guise you wear
Whatsoever form you bear,
Luck go with you everywhere,
Gray-Lhevinne.

In that nook they've made for you,
Gray-Lhevinne.
Out of music played for you
(After they had prayed for you),
Gray-Lhevinne.
I am hoping that, some day,
When it's time for you to stay,
That you'll like old "Frisco" bay,
Gray-Lhevinne.

ELLEN KINSMAN MANN STUDIO NOTES

Mrs. Viola Osmon Bannon has been engaged as soloist at First Church of Christ, Scientist, Morris, Ill. Mrs. Bannon has a large class of voice pupils in Morris, and comes to Chicago every week for her lessons with Mrs. Mann.

Mr. Leonard Allen, tenor, has been engaged as a member of the faculty of the Mendelssohn Conservatory of Chicago.

The Oak Parker says of Miss Geneve Cadle's singing as Phyllis in the Gilbert and Sullivan Opera, "Iolanthe," at Warrington Theater, Oak Park: "Miss Cadle as Phyllis won all hearts by her charming acting and the beauty of her clear and sweet soprano voice."

Borghild Langaard

Dramatic Soprano

Chicago Opera Association

COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

A quite phenomenal success was the "Santuzza" of Borghild Langaard, who not only sang the somewhat worn strains of Mascagni's work with remarkable ease and vocal tone, but at the same time showed herself possessed of very marked dramatic gifts.

This was most extraordinary, seeing that it was but the second occasion she had appeared in opera.

Borghild Langaard's performance gave the lie direct to that ancient and ultra conservative theory concerning "old heads and young shoulders."—Court Journal, London.

THE ROYAL OPERA, COPENHAGEN

Mme. Langaard brings all her wonderful gifts from the concert platform to the opera stage, where they seem to unfold in all their splendor. That this was Elsa, Wagner's Elsa, was understood immediately.

This impersonation, the incarnation of womanly tenderness and affection, this glorious voice of sunshine—an ocean of tone—this was the resurrected Mme. Sucher herself with her wonderful scale of human music, from the softest pianissimo to the loudest fortissimo. It was at once understood why Bayreuth is in need of and has sent for such a singer.—Kjerulf, in Politiken.

COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Mme. Langaard's "Venus" was undoubtedly, from the point of personality, one of the most successful that has been seen, while her wonderful voice had no difficulty in making the full use of the luscious music.

She was indeed the alluring hostess of "Tannhauser," and the fact that she gave one of the best impersonations seen at Covent Garden is a striking evidence of her vocal ability and dramatic intuition.—The Standard, London.

NEUES PESTER JOURNAL, BUDAPEST

Mme. Langaard had, as Aida, a real triumph. The wonderful voice filled Verdi's music with warmth, glory and beauty. The voice carried with brilliant power and dramatic expression.

Her interpretation had style, imagination, intelligence and human expression, and her personal charm and refined appearance made her Aida perfect.

A storm of applause followed her arias, and she had uncountable curtain calls.

IMPERIAL OPERA, VIENNA

The new Aida, Mme. Langaard, hails from Norway, which her appearance clearly indicates.

Her voice floats like a fresh breeze from the fiords, an Apollo-like voice that always sounded clear and strong.

Right from the first moment, her high tones were of great carrying power and rang out through the orchestra without any effort. Her pianissimo floats softly and sweetly from her lips, and it was a great pleasure to listen to her tones of sorrow when Rhadames leaves her.

Taken all around, Mme. Langaard's engagement would be a gain for the dramatic soprano roles.—I. Wiener, Extrablatt.

AFTENPOSTEN, CHRISTIANIA

Mme. Langaard's appearance as Tosca was a real festival night. The magnificent voice was used with the most superior skill, and everything she sang had just the effect Puccini intended with this passionate music—(Composer) Hjalmar Borgstrom.

ROYAL OPERA, BUDAPEST

Mme. Langaard, our Norwegian guest, sang today Tosca and increased with this role her number of opera impersonations, which all have been very successful.

Strikingly beautiful in appearance, she also raised the role to a very high artistic standard that showed all her great knowledge. Her beautiful voice, which she uses with fine art, made her Tosca a triumph, and she found very strong expressions for the most dramatic parts.

Her interpretation showed great intelligence, and the artist was applauded warmly all through the opera and recalled uncountable times after each act.—Pol. Volksblatt.

CHICAGO OPERA ASSOCIATION, CHICAGO, ILL.

MEETING OF MISSOURI FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS

It is with much pleasure and satisfaction that the officers and delegates are attending the second convention now being held at Sedalia.

The president of the State Federation, Mrs. Joseph H. Rodes, reported an enrollment during the past year of twenty-nine federated music clubs. Among this number are many junior clubs. One of the chief aims of the State Federation is the fostering and development of the junior organizations. To stimulate the love of music in the youth of today is a worthy though not an easy task, with so many of the mechanical forms of music on the market, making musical effects easy or, worse still, destroying the musical incentive in the young.

Mr. Arthur Gaines, manager of the St. Louis Symphony, will speak on "Symphony Orchestras." Miss Alice Pittengill, the well known pianist and corresponding secretary of the federation, will give a paper on "The Child in Music." "The Value of Creative Work in Music Education" is the subject of a talk to be given by Mrs. Jessie L. Gaynor.

The musical event of the convention is to be an evening concert, given by representative musicians of St. Louis, including Miss Vera Schlueter, and Mmes. Carroll Smith, Lillian Kauffman and F. C. Papendick. Mr. Harold Henry of Chicago will give a piano recital.

The Symphony Orchestra concerts for December 19 and 20 will contain the following numbers:

Symphony No. 3, in E Major.....Alfven
Allegro con brio
Andante
Presto
Allegro con brio (first time)
Concerto No. 2 for Violoncello, Op. 30.....Herbert
Allegro impetuoso. Lento. Allegro
Andante tranquillo
Allegro (tempo primo)
Orchestra Suite, "Namouna," No. 1.....Lalo
Prelude
Serenade
Theme Varie
Parade de Foire, Fete foraine

Mr. H. Max Steindel, a member of the orchestra, will be soloist and play the Herbert Concerto for Violoncello.

Ernest R. Kroeger has recently signed a contract with the St. Louis Concert Bureau for a series of Lecture Piano Recitals in the West and Southwest, to be given in the winter and early spring.

Mr. Kroeger's subjects comprise over thirty different recitals. One of them, entitled "The Emotional and Picturesque in Music," has been given over forty times.

Mr. Kroeger is now busy preparing his "Masque of Dead Florentines" for a performance at the Artists' Guild in January.

Sapolski—Miss Cora Sapolski, through the courtesy of Mrs. Bennett Trelvar, sang the "Care Nome" (Rigoletto), at the Edgewater Club in the Marigold Gardens Tuesday last.

BURLINGTON, IA.

(Taken from the Burlington Hawkeye)

Clarence Eddy played to a fine audience at the First M. E. church last evening. All the old admirers of this master of the organ turned out and he won many new friends. The old remarked that the years had not, as yet, begun to touch him, but that he was still the master, and some there were who imagined that there was a richness and mellowness, a ripeness of tone, which had not been there in the long ago.

That he had his audience with him from the very beginning is no more than a simple statement of fact, and all who saw and heard him marveled at many things, and among them at the ease with which he played the most difficult passages. He played as if it were the greatest pleasure of his life to leave his home to come out to Burlington and to play for the old friends and other music lovers there, and to win new friends. And perhaps it was. What greater pleasure, what greater reward can the true artist crave, than a respectful and appreciative hearing of his work? And thus his work is not work for him, but actual play, a pleasure that never grows old, and of which he never tires.

Mr. Eddy had well chosen his program. It was instructive as well as entertaining. For he played a number of new compositions, some of which have not yet appeared in print. They were the work of American composers, and those in the audience who do not lay claim to much knowledge of music in general and organ music in particular, noted with just pride that great work is being done by American composers. And that despite the fact that we are told again and again by people from across the seas that we are a young people and, as such, have no conception of beauty and therefore have no art. The artist included in his program, besides a number of charming compositions by living American composers, a few compositions by older masters, for the sake of comparison. And, no doubt, many made such comparisons and arrived at widely different conclusions. Others marked less the composer and more the artist, and found that it was all far beyond the commonplace—that they were enjoying a real treat, that they were listening to a real artist.

Schubert's ever-beautiful, ever-popular "Ave Maria" was one of the gems of the evening, and would alone have richly repaid anyone for turning out. But where there was so much that was so very beautiful, no numbers can be picked out and given a preference, because always there is personal taste for which there is no set rule.

There was but one regret awakened last evening. Clarence Eddy is almost a neighbor. He lives in Chicago. Why do we not have a chance to hear and enjoy his playing, his art, oftener?

CLARA EDMUNDS-HEMINGWAY

Agnes Woodward, director of the California School of Artistic Whistling at Los Angeles, has accepted the dedication and will use a whistling solo, "Woodland Echoes," by Mrs. Edmunds-Hemingway, who is herself a concert whistler.

The composer continues to receive splendid reports of her song "Twilight." Several new singers are added to the long list of those presenting the song.

Two recent appearances were made by Miss Ethel Martha of the Carl E. Craven Studios, Chicago, in a Chicago recital, and by Ernestine Hyatt Villalon, contralto, who sang "Twilight" before the Gary Musical Club. Mrs. Villalon voiced her opinion that the song was one of artistic worth and of rare beauty. Her rendition left nothing to be desired, and was, therefore, doubly pleasing to the composer, who was present. Mrs. Diedell played the obligato and Mrs. Miller acted as accompanist, both lending able support.

Harold Hamilton Hall, concert organist of New York, used his own transcription of this number in a recent pipe organ recital. Mr. Hall recently appeared in a Michigan recital following his return from service.

Levitzki in New York, St. Paul, Chicago and Washington

"Mischa Levitzki is, we repeat, a pianist who charms and a rare sort nowadays. You may count such artists on the fingers of one hand and have several digits to spare. He is, however, a modest youth who plays the piano as Heifetz plays the fiddle; by the graces of God. His talent proclaims him the best pianistic timbre since the advent of Josef Hofmann, and that is saying a lot."—James G. Huneker, in the New York World.

"The young man, who is one of the four wonder boys now before the American public, possesses an almost inconceivable elan, a touch which is as a thunderbolt, or as the pattering of spring raindrops. Every resource of the pianoforte is instantly within his grasp and throughout his interpretations are practically flawless."—W. W. Judd, in the St. Paul Press.

"Four interpretations of this big piano composition (Schumann Etudes Symphoniques) stand out in the course of many hearings. Those of August Hyllested, whose performance was compared to Rubinstein's by George P. Upton, Paderewski's, Carreno's and Levitzki's. The last certainly brought out the finer, more delicate intricacies of the work. He gave these incomparable variations with greater poetry, with clearer technical finish and with finer tone gradations than any of his predecessors. He has added to his great refinement a sterner tone, more virility and more sparkle since he was last heard here."—Maurice Rosenfeld, in Chicago Daily News.

"In the Schumann concerto in A minor Mischa Levitzki showed himself a pianist of great brilliance."—Washington Herald.

Army Concert With Namara Is Musical Treat—Big Audience Pleased

A most successful concert was given last night at the Armory when Post 21, American Legion, presented Marguerite Namara, Cornelius Van Vliet and Rudolph Gruen in a delightful program. There was a large and appreciative audience and the program was thoroughly enjoyed. Three songs, "La Partida," of Alvarez, "Pour un Baiser," of Tosti, and "La Girometta" (Sibella) brought out the beautiful quality of her voice and her pleasantly sure handling of songs in foreign tongues. Wide range and sweetness of tone are among her many musical gifts. "Mollie," a charming little Irish song, was the next offering by Miss Namara. "Values" (Vanderpool) was graver in thought and she sang it equally well. "Twickenham Ferry" was sung with a delightful vivacity, and "Come to the Woodland" was also pleasing. The closing number was the waltz song from "Romeo and Juliet" which Miss Namara sang admirably.—Schenectady Gazette, December 6, 1919.

Charlotte Demuth Williams in New York, Oberlin and Duluth

"At a musical given before the members of the National Arts Club and their guests Wednesday evening Miss Demuth made her first appearance in New York. She proved a young artist of exceptional attainments. Her tone is vital and of lovely quality, her technical command entirely adequate and there is revealed in her playing a true artistic spirit. She was received with great enthusiasm."—The Concert-Goer, New York.

Friday evening we listened to Charlotte Demuth, a young artist of the first rank. Her tone is wonderfully pure and beautiful, and her intonation is simply phenomenal. Such keenness of tone we have never heard, except from her own teacher, Henri Marteau. And after all, the best thing about her playing is her refinement, her intuitive sense of the beautiful. Her program contained several new things, and was as choice a selection as one ever hears.—Oberlin News, Oberlin, Ohio.

Miss Demuth appeared in three fine selections, and won the hearty applause of the audience after each. The rich, mellow tones which she brought from the instrument were such as to inspire in the audience a desire for more, and still more. She won many friends by her artistic work, and her modest, unassuming manner was captivating.—Tribune, Duluth, Minn.

Likes His Own Show

Among the enthusiastic witnesses of the performances of the Boston English Opera Company at the Arlington Theatre during the past week has been Mr. Leon A. Berezniak, who is the general counsel for that organization. Mr. Berezniak has such thorough confidence in the movement for the permanent establishment of grand opera in English in this country that he is backing it with the necessary financial encouragement. Called east from Chicago, which city he makes his home, by some big interests with which he is connected, he gave up several evenings to the hearing of "Martha," and what pleased him most was the public response of the audience expressed by its size and its applause.—Boston American.

Moiseiwitsch with the Orchestra

"Interest at the Chicago orchestra concert yesterday in Orchestra hall centered in the first appearance here of Benno Moiseiwitsch, the Russian pianist whose playing has held England in thrall for the last few seasons, and whose recent recital in New York won uncommonly warm commendation.

"That it was expected he would create something of a sensation yesterday was shown by the arrangement of the program. There is a rule that at the symphony concerts no encores shall be permitted. In arranging a program on which a Paderewski, a Hoffmann or any other artist whose popularity with the public is such that encores are apt to prove unavoidable Mr. Stock lets the solo number form the second half of the program. The soloist appears, plays, is recalled several times, the audience insists on having more, the men of the orchestra rise and start for the exits, the pianist comes to the piano, and, if he desires, may give an entire recital. The rule against encores has not been broken, for what is done after the concert is ended is not the business of a rule or of anybody else. Mr. Moiseiwitsch was thus placed yesterday, but the audience recalled him only twice.

"It likely was the Beethoven Concerto, which does not rouse to frenzied enthusiasm, no matter how beautifully it be played. And doubtless too, it came from that due-at-a-tea hurry which makes so many of the devoted music worshipers who 'just dote' on the Chicago orchestra afternoon concerts grow wiggly and worried if the program is long. Be the reason what it may, the pianist was not asked for a recital, but was permitted to go his way approved but not ovationed. The fault lay not in his presentment of the Beethoven 'Emperor,' however, for he played it with uncommon beauty, great tonal charm and fine emotional sincerity.

"There will be opportunity to judge later and more accurately of Mr. Moiseiwitsch's powers and place as a pianist, for he is to give a recital here early next month. With varied program and with selections probably better suited to his bent than is the Beethoven Concerto, he then will be able to show his full stature."—W. L. Hubbard, Chicago Tribune.

Students at Recitals

Much good may be derived from attending student recitals and concerts. As yet, we have had no formal concerts at the Convervatory, but when we do have them, we hope to find them well attended by our students. It has been said that no mind is more critical than that of the student. This being true, he should profit greatly from these concerts, which, of course, are frankly amateur. And not only should the student attend Conservatory recitals, he should, so far as he is able, take in professional concerts, recitals and operas. We hope to see the Fritschy concert series well attended by our pupils, as well as the divers recitals and concerts given throughout the year at Convention Hall and other places. Too much cannot be said in favor of these musical offerings. We are here to get an education musically, and this cannot be properly done without attendance at all sorts of musical events. We believe, too, that the custom prevalent in the east, that of granting rates to the students of music in the city, should be followed out here.—"The Student," Kansas City Conservatory.

Anthony Linden Plays in Minneapolis

Anthony Linden, flute, and Henry J. Williams, harp, were the soloists who combined their efforts in bringing forward what was an interesting novelty to local music lovers, a fantasy for their instruments by Franz Doppler and Antonio Zamara. That the director of the imperial ballets of Vienna in his day knew as much about the technique of the flute as his colleague at the conservatory, the orchestral conductor at the Kaernthner theater, knew about that of the harp was made evident in a scholarly performance by the two artists, who play their number with joint devotion for ensemble effects. The fantasy is of one movement connecting four, each of which was well characterized as to mood and tempo with a wealth of refined color values. Most warmly received the artists played extra a waltz study by Grandval, a quite interesting little composition of modern type, also most delightfully done.—Minneapolis Journal.

Lois Johnston in Detroit

For Detroiters who know and have watched the splendid progress of Lois Johnston, chief interest centered in her appearance, and this youthful artist was accorded a spontaneous welcome home. Her voice has developed remarkably since she was last heard here. It is fuller, more resonant, of beautiful lyric quality, and the deep, rich tone which she commands in the lower register is lovely. Her earnestness and intelligent study are bearing remarkable results, and Sunday it was not only the increasing volume and growing wealth of tone which was commented upon, but the fine interpretative powers which this singer displayed. The sincerity of the applause proved how wide an impression she made by her work.—Detroit Free Press.

The soloist yesterday was Lois Johnston, the young Detroit soprano of brilliant promise. Miss Johnston was in excellent voice, which appears to have taken added volume since she sang at the May Festival in Ann Arbor last spring. She gave Duparc's quaintly lyrical "Chanson" (Triste), and the difficult "Carnival" of Felix Fourdrain, the latter of which revealed a fluid flexibility of organ. Miss Johnston should return soon from Chicago, where she is studying, and give us another recital.—Detroit Journal.

Hazel Dell Neff at Warsaw

Without trespassing upon the prerogatives of an experienced critic, the writer would like to convey something of the impressions of the program given Monday evening. Miss Neff was delightful—good to look at—and the event of the evening was her rendition of that great contribution, "Hear Ye Israel," from Elijah.—Warsaw (Ind.) Daily Times.

May Peterson

May Peterson, soprano, seemed to have as good a time singing as her audience had in listening to her in her recital here Friday evening. Her graciousness and charm combined with her beautiful voice and distinct dramatic talent to make the occasion a real treat. When the program had been sung and some of it re-sung, Miss Peterson was not allowed to retire. Time after time she was called back, and time after time she sang, sometimes sitting at the piano as she played her own accompaniments.

Miss Peterson's gifts as a singer are beyond question. Her voice is flexible and pleasing in all its ranges. She sings her songs with an appreciation which brings them home to her audience.

It was a trifle unfortunate that the chapel cat should have seen fit to put in its appearance during the singing of "Allelujah," by Mozart, the most pretentious number on the program, but the audience restrained its emotions nobly and Miss Peterson quite won all hearts by her gracious reception of the small feline which had unconsciously intruded.

The program was full of pleasing songs. The Aria-La-Gavotte, from "Mignon," was the only number of operatic caliber, and was beautifully sung. The program ran from grave to gay and old to new. One of the most enthusiastically received numbers was the negro spiritual, "The Ol' Ark's a-Moverin'."

Gordon Campbell contributed unusually artistic accompaniments. — Editorial in Grinnell (Iowa) Herald.

Harriet McConnell in Maine

Mr. Chapman had for some time promised to give Portland people a singer who was destined to be a shining light in the concert world, and his prediction will undoubtedly come true, for Miss Harriet McConnell, the mezzo-contralto, proved to be an intelligent singer and the possessor of a beautiful voice.—Daily Argus (Portland, Me.)

Miss McConnell is in some respects the most satisfying contralto who has sung in our city. Her voice is of the kind that eludes a catalogue description, but finds its way straight to the hearer's heart—rich, full, smooth upon every side and marked by the refreshing quality of youth. Miss McConnell is with justice spoken of as a second Schumann-Heink, but her musical individuality is such that she is to be recognized as a singer by herself, who does not need to be compared with others.—Courier-Gazette (Rockland, Me.)

Lenora Sparkes in Carbondale, Pa.

The second concert in the Premier Concert Course at Carbondale, Pa., took place on December 4th, when the program was given by Lenora Sparkes, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company and Phillip Gordon, the American pianist. The success of both artists was unquestioned and of Miss Sparkes' contribution the critic of The Carbondale Leader said in part:

"She is just about the most delightful personage who has ever appeared on a Carbondale platform. She is winsome and beautiful and sweet, and with not a touch of artificialty of expression, smile or manner, and we never expect to hear the angels sing more beautifully. She sang Thomas Moore's 'Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms' with such feeling and sweetness and tenderness as we have never heard it sung. This was of the earth and humanity as we live it and feel it, but in the famous 'Vissi d'arte' aria from 'Tosca,' she just gathered her soul up in her voice and sent it out and up heavenward in such a volume of impassioned glory as we never knew the human voice was capable of. As she had prepared us for the climactic numbers by the first simple song she brought us back to earth by the singing of that delightful and quaint song of old English times, 'The Nightingales of Lincoln's Inn.'"

Cecil Fanning in Boston

"Heard anew in Boston, after long absence, at Jordan Hall on Saturday afternoon, Mr. Cecil Fanning, the baritone singer, proved his ripening abilities in light airs from French operas of the end of the eighteenth century, latter-day French songs of Duparc and Debussy, the narrating music of Loewe's ballad of Archibald Douglas, and sundry American songs, sentimental, 'effective' . . . and also mediocre. They served well the present quality of Mr. Fanning's tones, which are warm, resonant, flowing and plastic, but his other music more invited his waxing perception, skill and taste. He has gained finesse and innuendo for these French airs; he discovers and imparts mood and picture with Duparc and Debussy. He perceived, if he does not project, Loewe's wild and piteous tale in tones. Mr. Fanning has seen a light. He now cultivates the arts of song as well as audiences for it."—H. T. Parker, The Evening Transcript, Boston, Mass.

Schumann-Heink Touches Hearts of Audience

The fourth season of the concert series under the management of the civic music committee opened last night at the high school auditorium with a recital by Madam Schumann-Heink, assisted by Frank La Forge, composer-pianist. Every seat in the auditorium was occupied and every available space was filled with chairs, even to the stage. Not only was this a tribute to the great artist that sang, but a testimony as well to the growing musical interest of the community.

It is after all something of a matter of indifference what Schumann-Heink sings; she could doubtless sing the scale in a manner that would move her audience to smiles or tears as she willed. And here is the secret of her lasting charm. Vocal skill, musicianship, intellectuality, all that goes to make up the supreme artist and singer are swallowed up in her intense humanity. The experiences of the years, the joys and sorrows, the triumphs and, we doubt not, disappointments, have given her a taste of so much in life that she is enabled to voice them in her art in such a manner as to find a response somewhere in the heart of every man, woman or child who hears her.

She will never grow old. Whatever may be her years, however her voice may become as time goes on, her soul will always be young, and the memories of her songs and of her graciousness will live in the lives of those who have heard her. Mr. La Forge played two solo numbers, the first a dance, by Beethoven, Chopin's "F sharp Nocturne" and MacDowell's "Etude de Concert" and Lisz't's "Twelfth Rhapsody" for the second. In these the accompanist's has grown to be a task of no mean proportions in these recent years. To support an artist like Schumann-Heink requires an approximation of the same qualities, and it was a great treat to have one like La Forge in this capacity.—Sioux City Journal.

Minna Kaufmann proved she had taste and sentiment.—New York American.

Minna Kaufmann has what is very rare, a remarkably well placed soprano voice. With volume of tone and correctness of pitch, she sang throughout with fine tone and much dramatic instinct.—Town and Country (New York).

Mme. Kaufmann sang with true and compelling emotion, with a sincerity, free from any taint of exaggeration.—Boston Herald.

It is not without reason that Mme. Kaufmann should be obsessed with that terrible ambition of giving recitals. Her singing afforded true pleasure. Her voice is of a fine natural timbre. It has apparently been nurtured and developed wisely. Her tones have poise, purity and power. As an interpreter she evidences understanding and penetrates into the emotional import of a song.—Boston Globe.

The singer is to be commended for her interpretative insight and skill.—Boston Transcript.

The reception given Madame Minna Kaufmann last night at a recital at Carnegie Music Hall was a most flattering one, and her voice, which is a rich soprano, was pronounced equal to some of the best of the world's famous singers. She sang a number of selections, some classical and some of lighter vein, and in all of them she gave delight to her hearers.—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

Madame Minna Kaufman, soprano, gave proof of possessing a voice of great power and sweetness.—Pittsburgh Post.

Votichenko's Tour

The Russian Symphony Orchestra of New York gave its second Williamsport concert last evening. The audience was of good size and highly appreciative. This was demonstrated when after the completion of Kalinnikoff's G minor symphony, the orchestra and its popular conductor, Modest Altschuler, were accorded a genuine ovation.

The orchestra numbers, however, were only a part of the concert. The three selections and encore played by Sasha Votichenko on the tympanon, a seventeenth century instrument, also afforded the audience great pleasure. Mr. Votichenko is a distinguished Russian composer and the sole master of the tympanon, which has been in his family since its invention. It was aptly discribed on the program as "exquisite in tone and fascinating in variety of color effects." It certainly was a decided novelty and Mr. Votichenko's interpretation of his numbers was refreshing, especially "Easter Chimes in Little Russia," which reproduced the folk songs of the Volga. Many went on the stage after the concert to inspect his old instrument.—Gazette and Bulletin, Williamsport, Pa.

Gilberte Songs and What the Critics Say

All of Gilberte's songs brought much applause. The "Ah Love But a Day" and "Evening Song" had to be repeated. In these songs, as in many of his others, Gilberte has so cleverly linked his music to the sentiment of his poems that the result is delightful in its consistency.—Boston Advertiser.

Mr. Gilberte writes happily for the voice. There was melodious and appropriate setting for "Ah Love But a Day," "Two Roses" and "The Evening Song" and especially the exquisite "Minuet La Phyllis," which had to be repeated.—Boston Herald.

Madam Jomelli sang four songs by Gilberte, "Ah Love But a Day," "A Valentine," "A Dusky Lullaby" and "Spring Serenade." These songs are splendidly written and were delightful in themselves.—Madison Gazette.

Gilberte's "Ah Love, but a Day" and "Minuette La Phyllis" were particularly well received, as was

"IS ONE OF THE MOST MUSICAL OF LIVING VIOLINISTS"

—New York Tribune
December 17, 1919

Appeared in recital at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday afternoon, December 16th

FOLLOWING ARE THE Press Comments

"Mr. Thibaud's playing had great beauty, the beauty of a fine and searching tone, of a mechanism so unfailing that it ceased to obtrude itself as a factor, and especially an elastic and eloquent bow arm. It was playing full of fire combined with grace, elegance and repose, and above all, marked by the intangible quality of style; style that comes from an artist's comprehension and that gives distinction. He played Lalo's Concerto with admirable finish and a self restrained brilliancy that sets forth the spirit of the work."—Richard Aldrich, New York Times, December 17.

"Mr. Thibaud played with a generally fine musicianship; he was especially happy in tone and finesse. The Bach Prelude he played with admirable clarity, accuracy of pitch and dignity of style."—W. J. Henderson, New York Sun, December 17.

Mr. Thibaud was as pleasing as ever. His taste, his delicacy of color and his warmth of tone were gratefully evident in the Lalo number, of which he gave a generally graceful and beautifully articulated performance. Mr. Thibaud is one of the most musical of living violinists—he remains true to those qualities which have always informed French music and musicians."—New York Tribune, December 17.

"New violinists of all sorts have invaded New York in large numbers during the last few years, but none has assimilated much of the delicate elegance of the style of Jacques Thibaud. French violin playing seems almost to begin and end with him so far as that country's artists here are concerned. Mr. Thibaud is an expert at program making."—New York Herald, December 17.

the "Evening Song," which is a charming number, and had to be repeated.—Calgary Herald.

As a final number Macbeth sang "Moonlight-Starlight" by Gilberte with all the soft brightness that the name implied, and the trills and quivers that might describe the most twinkling stars.—Fresno Republican.

"Moonlight-Starlight," the last number on the program, is a dazzling waltz song of showy qualities which makes it an excellent concert number even if sung by one less gifted than Jomelli. Composer and singer were both recalled several times to acknowledge the tribute of applause, and there is no doubt that Gilberte's songs will be more often heard on local programs after last night's triumph.—Victoria Daily News.

"Moonlight-Starlight" was Florence Otis' most brilliant achievement. Her voice sparkled and scintillated in its elaborate coloratura. This song was a triumph for the composer, Hallett Gilberte, no less than for the singer. It is excellent in technique and truly melodious.—Lewiston Journal.

Clarence Loomis with American Symphony Orchestra

Clarence Loomis was playing his Fantasie for piano and orchestra as I entered, and a very interesting work it was. Melodious, sprightly, with lots of snap in the music in his playing of the piano part, it was distinctly worth hearing.—Post.

Among the noteworthy numbers played must be mentioned Clarence Loomis' playing of his own Fantaisie for piano and orchestra. Mr. Loomis has written music that strikes me as being distinctly American, the themes he uses of national tinge, all handled with dexterous effect.—American.

Mr. Loomis delivered himself of his concerto with considerable ability. It is at once easy and difficult to interpret the music of Mozart. The technical exactions of the concerto are not arduous, but there is more than technique required in order to make the music convincing to the ear. The performer was successful if only because he discovered in the compositions that there was more than notes.—Herald.

Press Comment on Lusinn Barakian

Miss Barakian's program opened with "Cavatine" from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba," in which she measured up at all times to the exacting demands of the difficult composition and well displayed the dramatic element, the power and the range of her voice. Following this number were groups of Italian, French and English songs, numbers in which the versatility and artistry of her voice were manifest.—Worcester Gazette.

On Armenian day at the Allied Bazaar the honors of her country were admirably upheld by Miss Lusinn Barakian, chosen by her people to sing their national hymn. She sang with deep patriotic feeling. Her voice is rich and vibrant.—Chicago Tribune.

Notices About Morgan Kingston

Mr. Kingston was heard in two arias, "Chegelida manina" and "E lucevan le stelle." His clear and resonant voice was very satisfying and his utterance very convincing in these operatic numbers characterized by authority and artistic fervor. He proved that oratorio as well as opera was familiar ground. His command of a beautiful mezza-voce was displayed and his ability to build up an impressive climax was shown. Mr. Kingston was made to feel indisputably that the audience thoroughly enjoyed his fine singing and art.—Buffalo Express.

Mr. Kingston is an artist of fine qualities, serious in his work, fervent and never unworthy in his treatment of the music. He gave much pleasure in his singing.—Buffalo Enquirer.

Kingston, another distinguished artist, won a share of the honors with his cultivated musicianship. In an aria from "Boheme" his sonorous voice, with skill in tonal color and feeling for nuance, aroused great enthusiasm. His second aria from "Tosca" was another artistic blending of vocal and dramatic art. In two groups of songs he won encores, and his closing number, "Nirvana," was a superb effort.—Buffalo Courier.

Morgan Kingston won the appreciation of a delighted audience in two arias and crowned his evening's success with "Nirvana."—Buffalo News.

His fine training is conspicuous in his manipulation of the keyboard. Without any show or parade, he disclosed yesterday not only excellent technical equipment but genuine musicianship and a most comprehensive memory.—New York Evening Sun (Max Smith).

The keen imaginativeness of his interpretations have from the first been appreciated here. He was at his best in Dohnanyi, whose "Boisterous Party" and "Ada" he played in a manner suited to the charming subject.—New York Evening Sun.

His playing is of that crisp, incisive sort that the experts dwell upon as virile. It is a clean-cut pianism that goes directly to the heart of the music in hand. Mr. Reuter commands respect.—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

Rudolph Reuter, a sterling artist of honest methods at the piano, gave an interesting and commendable recital before a knowing audience which showed its satisfaction both with the program and the admirable manner in which it was played.—New York Telegraph.

Creating Real American Orchestras

The proposal to form the Civic Music Student Orchestra, announced yesterday, is the first definite step in Americanization of our orchestral bodies.

It is all right to talk about putting native musicians in our orchestras and killing off the foreign domination, but how are we to do that without giving our young musicians the requisite training? The patriots who believe in shortcut methods quite forget that a finished artist is not made overnight or even in six months or a year or two.

Now that the A. F. of L. has stepped in with another "Thou shalt not" to the effect that orchestral players for our orchestras must bear the "made in America" stamp, it is high time we got busy.

That is what the Civic Music Association and the Orchestral Association have thought for some time, and so these two bodies have joined forces and are bringing to this problem a remarkable offer which means the training of first rate orchestral players for the great symphonic bodies of the country.

A guarantee extending for five years is being raised to make this possible. Young people who play an orchestral instrument are asked to apply at the Civic Music Association in the Fine Arts Building for membership at once. Their application for examination will be passed on to Frederick Stock.

It is proposed to organize at present to the extent of fifty-four players. Mr. Stock or Eric Delamarter will do the conducting. There will be four rehearsals a week in Orchestra Hall. Concerts will be arranged by the Civic Music Association.

Each player accepted will be paid a small fee for each rehearsal and concert to cover car fare, care of instrument, etc.

The bigger reward will lie in the training received in playing under one of the greatest orchestral leaders of the present day.

The building and vast library of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra are being placed at the disposal of the student organization. Classes may be formed to prepare younger students.

It is by such means alone that our orchestras will in time be Americanized. In this way we shall declare a new independence, our civic cap will be decorated with yet another feather, and the body of public spirited men who have the ability to dream dreams and then see them through to a practical consummation have once more honored themselves and our great city.—Editorial in Chicago Herald and Examiner.

Marian Coryell

It was David Bispham who wrote that he knew of no one whose compositions for musical readings could compare with those of Miss Marian Coryell, and it must be granted that no living artist is better capable of judging such work that is Mr. Bispham. He emphasizes his commendation by constant use of them on his programs. Miss Coryell sort of "happens" to be here this winter, for according to plan she was to be in New York, studying piano with Boyd Wells, as she was last year, and having records made of her piano group of "Cynthia Stories" for children and attending to the publication of her songs that have already been sung in manuscript by concert artists.

But instead of that Miss Coryell has come to Seattle and is thoroughly enjoying her first season in the northwest.

One of Miss Coryell's songs, "The Medlar Tree," has been compared favorably to the best American songs ever written, and her, setting of the Twenty-third Psalm, a duet for soprano and contralto, is both lovely and singable, according to church singers. "The Watcher" for low voice and "Contentment" have achieved instantaneous success, and so this young composer-pianist is most happy in her work. What more can one ask?—Town Crier, Seattle, Wash.

We Are Progressing

It was an afternoon of musical delight in Orchestral Hall yesterday. The Chicago Orchestra and Mr. Stock were at their finest, and the soloist, Edward Johnson, was one of the best heard here with the organization in many a day. The audience, catching the happy spirit, responded fully, and all was therefore, on the heights.

Mozart's overture to "Magic Flute" was the first orchestral selection, and the prelude to Wagner's "Mastersingers" the last. Long reach of time between those two. And a wide field of musical development and expression! And yet, listening to Wagner yesterday, the realization came of how far we of the present day have journeyed musically beyond even him. There was a day not all too far in the past when the prelude impressed as complicated and abstruse to the last degree. Yesterday it was transparent and as easily grasped as was the Mozart.—W. L. Hubbard, in Chicago Tribune.

MIURA WOULD LIKE TO BE AN AMERICAN

The following interview in the Chicago "American" gives an interesting insight into the character of Mme. Tamaki Miura, the Japanese who has won so warm a place in the affections of the opera loving public. The approbation meted to her since she became a resident of this country has made her an ardent admirer of all things American. Despite her customary reticence Mme. Miura allowed herself to be drawn into an expression of her real opinions the other day, and to a reporter from the Chicago Evening "American" she unburdened herself.

This lovely little Mme. Butterfly has one great regret in her heart today and one great wish. She is sorry that she is not an American-born woman, and she wants to dwell permanently in this country, and preferably in Chicago. Her reasons are, first, America appreciates her art, Japan does not; she admires American men above all others, American women are permitted to vote, and, most important, she has gained thirty pounds since coming to America, which brings her now to the unusual weight of 120. Mme. Miura, who speaks English in a quaint, childlike fashion, said: "I wish I were not Japanese, and I wish my hair were blond instead of black. Besides, American women have so much more independence than Japanese women have; I envy them. And American men—they are so handsome, so splendid looking." She sighed. (It may be remarked lest she be overwhelmed with matrimonial proposals, that she has a Japanese husband now studying medicine at Yale). She refused to be drawn into a discussion concerning Japanese-American relations, however, and only sighed and said, "I wish I were an American."

ERIE, PENN.

The Russian Symphony Orchestra paid us a visit on the evening of November 23, presenting a program which contained many items of interest, chief of which was the G minor symphony of Kalinnikoff, a work of much beauty. The writer was too late to hear any but the final movement of this symphony, but this bit was played with utmost power and depth of feeling by the orchestra, under the compelling direction of Modest Altschuler, the charm of this brief portion of the symphony kindling in the heart of the writer a great desire to hear the complete work, the type of which suits exactly Altschuler and his men. The "Raymond" overture was given an interesting reading, and the final number, "Easter Feast in Ukrainia," was one of the most striking orchestral compositions heard in many a day. This colorful and vivid work is a product of Sasha Votichenko, better known as the sole living exponent of the tympanon than as a composer, but in this brilliant number he commands interest and respect. It is a vital work, melodious, well-developed in its climax and full of thrilling effects. Mr. Votichenko was heard in an interesting group of numbers as soloist with his peculiar instrument, the tympanon, but to the writer, Sasha Votichenko, composer, is infinitely a greater figure to reckon with. Mr. Votichenko was given a big ovation at the conclusion of the orchestra's playing of his composition and Mr. Altschuler seemed to enjoy the young composer's success as much as he himself.

On Sunday afternoon, November 30, the choir of Luther Memorial Church, under the direction of Ernest Parshall, sang Henry B. Vincent's "Prodigal Son." Through Mr. Vincent's residence in Erie there was a great deal of local interest in this performance. The oratorio contains many fine numbers, some of them being more noteworthy than others, but all effective. Mr. Parshall had a goodly number in his chorus and they showed the result of some careful training on his part. Notably good renditions of the "Trust in the Lord" and "Eat and Drink" choruses were given, as well as the "O That Thou Hadst Hearkened" which followed the alto solo so charmingly sung by Miss Julia Karch. Mrs. Homer Kendall, the soprano of the quartet, gave a thoroughly moving and vocally effective interpretation of the aria "Love Not the World." Mr. Harold Titus, the bass soloist, possesses one of the most beautiful voices in the city, and while his big solo, "Trust in the Lord," preceded by the recitative, "Hear Me, My Son," did not give him the opportunity to display the low tones which are by far the finest in his voice, nevertheless he sang it superbly, with much vigor, depth of feeling and beauty of tone. One always feels, when Mr. Titus is at his best, that he is giving all that is in him to bring out the meaning of the number he is interpreting, rather than to use it as a means of displaying his voice, which undoubtedly is the reason his work is so thoroughly enjoyed. Mr. Parshall sang his solos creditably, and more than sustained his reputation as a director by the good work of his chorus in the above named numbers. A word of praise is due Clarence Dresser, organist, for the fine accompaniments throughout the oratorio, as the work is one that is full of difficulties.

Pianism as revealed by Josef Hofmann in his recital at the Park Opera House on Tuesday evening, December 9, as the third number of Mrs. McCoy's Artist Course, is heard so rarely that it is a thing at which to marvel. When one comes to analyze the playing of a master he is left hopeless, for where can one find words that will adequately express the unspeakably beautiful tonal effects, perfection of phrasing and almost unbelievable power as revealed in Hofmann's faultless playing. Suffice it to say that Hofmann played a program which contained much of interest, from the classics to the ultra-modern Dvorsky, in the best Hofmann manner. An audience which overflowed the auditorium and crowded the stage let itself show in no uncertain fashion that it had been moved as only an audience can be by a genius.

Verdi's Requiem Sung at the Metropolitan Opera

Holidays are always signally announced by the various musical organizations. Although Verdi's "Requiem" could not be called a strictly sacred composition because of its operatic vein, it was given on Sunday evening, December 14, before a large audience. The first honors went to the splendid and inspiring work of the chorus which sang with fine effect and a certainty for which the leader, Mr. Setti, deserves the highest praise. I have listened to many a choral organization, aside from the English choral societies, who have the reputation of being in the first ranks, and there is no operatic choral in the world so well trained, so effective as the Metropolitan Opera Chorus. Of the soloists, Florence Easton was easily the first to achieve the signal success of the evening. Last year Rosa Ponselle interpreted her part, but Mme. Easton outdistanced her through her clear, pure, warm and ringing soprano voice. Not contented to display her beautiful voice, Mme. Easton exhibited her marvelous and skillful interpretation and a splendid control of beautiful tone. Charles Hackett also contributed much with his beautiful and fresh tenor voice. He sang with ease, fluency and fine tonal effects. Mardones was splendid in his basso fragments. We missed Jeanne Gordon, whose illness prevented her appearance as scheduled. In the point of ensemble the performance was one of the most beautiful of the season.

John McCormack Again

The most popular of all the male singers in America made another appearance at the Hippodrome on Sunday evening, December 14, before an audience which overflowed the giant Hippodrome. Mr. McCormack was in good voice and his program was more interesting than the previous offered during the month of November. He sang a recitative and air from Handel's "Solomon," a group of Irish folk songs and new compositions by Chausson, Frank Bridge, Wintter Watts and H. T. Burleigh. The tenor was given an unusual ovation and certainly he could not resist the temptation to give a number of encores. Edwin Schneider gave more than adequate accompaniment at the piano. Winston Wilkinson, violinist, was the assisting artist.

Theatre Parisien

The French Theater presented for the week ending December 20, "La Cruche," a comedy in two acts by Pierre Wolff and George Courteline, followed by an operetta entitled "Music Softens the Hearts" by Andre Mauprey. I don't know who is responsible for the poor ending of "La Cruche" because two names are attached as authors of the comedy. The play, especially the dialogue, is entertaining, but we are disillusioned by the end, which is not theatrical and decidedly unrealistic in its denouement. Mr. Felix Barre deserved to be placed among the first by his excellent playing of Lavernie. Mr. Lucien Weber as Laurianne gave a practical impersonation of a character which is not at all sympathetic. There was grace, charm, exquisiteness in the acting of Mlle. Germaine Grattery. A note of commendation for Mr. Andre Franky for his adequate impersonation of the farmer. Very correct was Mme. Lili Rito. The balance of the cast was satisfactory. The operetta enlivened the performance and special praise should be accorded to Mlle. Lucienne Debrennes, who sang exquisitely and acted charmingly the part of Lilly de Nangis. Not only her action and charm but her statuesque figure was a capital factor to make the performance most enjoyable. Mlle. Suzanne Caubet as Betty had a share of success when she sang appropriately and in good English diction some of our characteristic music hall songs. Her personal charm, her gayety and her naive acting contributed much to make "Music Soften the Hearts" a pleasurable evening. Mr. Robert Casadesus completed the cast. The orchestra under the direction of Oscar Liffshey gave sympathetic accompaniment and played also between the acts compositions by Gretrey, Messager and Saint-Saens.

sor of the Theory of Music at Yale University for twenty-five years, died yesterday morning of pneumonia in the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ralph Seeler at Cedarhurst, L. I. He had been in bad health for three months and was on his way to the West Indies in the hope of finding improvement there when his condition suddenly became so serious that he was taken to his daughter's house.

Professor Parker was born in Auburndale, Mass., on September 15, 1853. His father, Charles Edward, was an architect, and his mother, from whom he learned his musical alphabet, was Miss Isabel Jennings, daughter of Rev. John Jennings of Worcester, Mass. Before his fifteenth birthday he had in less than two days set to music for solo voice and pianoforte the verses in Kate Greenway's "Under the Window." And when still in his teens he filled the first of several engagements as a church organist.

He was sent to Boston for his first studies. There he learned harmony from Stephen A. Emery, pianoforte from John Orth, and composition from George W. Chadwick. Curiously enough, the last of these teachers was in 1911 one of the three judges who awarded to Parker and Brian Hooker the Metropolitan Opera Company's prize for the opera "Mona."

In 1881, in order to complete his musical education, Mr. Parker went to Munich, There he remained for three years at the Hochschule. On his return to this country he brought with him a wife. She was a Miss Anna Ploessl of Munich, whom he had met as a fellow-pupil at the Hochschule. His first engagement was as professor of music in the Cathedral of St. Paul at Garden City. Only two years were spent there, to be followed by five as the organist of Trinity Church in this city. Then Boston summoned him at the highest salary ever paid to an organist in that city, to Trinity Church there. Although he joined the Yale faculty in 1894 he retained this position until 1901.

Before he left New York he had completed the oratorio "Hora Novissima," which was performed in this city, Boston, Worcester, and Cincinnati, and in 1899 was the principal novelty of the Three Choirs Festival at Worcester, England. This was the first inclusion of an American work at one of these historic English festivals.

The opera "Mona," already mentioned, is probably his work best known to Americans. It was produced at the Metropolitan with Louise Homer in the title role. In 1914 he and Brian Hooker captured another $10,000 prize, that offered by the National Federation of Women's Clubs. The winning opera was entitled "Fairyland."

Other works of Professor Parker's are the cantatas "King Trojan" and "The Koboids," the oratorios "St. Christopher" and "A Wanderer's Psalm" (the latter given under his direction at the Hereford festival in 1900), and many church and secular pieces.

Blanche Da Costa Sings at the Wanamaker Auditorium

On Saturday afternoon, December 13, the young but excellent American soprano appeared in recital under the auspices of M. Witmark & Sons. On this occasion Miss Da Costa, among five other soloists, distinguished herself in several vocal renditions. Combining them with her beautiful personality, which is one of the necessary factors in classing a singer above the average, Miss Da Costa sang with three other soloists in a praiseworthy manner a mixed quartet entitled "Neath the Autumn Moon," by the young American composer, Frederick Vanderpool. Another mixed quartet which enlisted the services of Miss Da Costa consisted of "The Magic of Your Eyes" by Arthur A. Penn. The young singer was appreciated when she sang Frederick Vanderpool's "The Want of You," "If," "Regret" and "The Heart Call." The composer was at the piano. For the rest of the program all the Witmark compositions were featured by the soloists.

A program such as that given by the Sistine Choir Soloists Sunday afternoon, December 7, does not appeal to the American concert-goer, which was proved by the very small audience attending. The first half of the program was indeed very inappropriate to the surroundings. If we could close our eyes and imagine ourselves in some great cathedral, such as St. Peter's, then it could be fully appreciated. Also a program composed entirely of quartets is very apt to become monotonous to the casual listener.

The individual singers wese no doubt representative of the best to be found in the Roman choirs.

Tuesday evening, December 9, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was indeed at its best under the baton of Pierre Monteux, their splendid new conductor.

The Tschaikowsky Symphony, No. 6, "Pathetic," was given an almost perfect rendering and the late comers were not allowed to take their seats until the entire symphony was completed. If this were done at all symphony concerts it would cause a great deal less annoyance and distraction.

The soloist of the evening, Jean Bedetti, cellist of the orchestra, played Boellmann's "Symphonic Variations for Violoncello and Orchestra."

The last two numbers were Debussy's "Prelude a l' apres-midi d'un Faun" and "Bourree Fantastique" of Chabrier.

SALINA, KANS.

The Salina, Kansas, Chamber of Commerce has voted to endorse financially the Salina Spring Music Festival, which will be given in April.

A committee of three was appointed to meet with the executive committee of the civic music association in arranging and planning details. The guarantee will be about $2,000.

The festival will extend over three to four days and will center around the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra; a local performance of Grand Opera given by the Wesleyan College of Music, Dean E. L. Cox director; local concerts and contests; and a performance of "St. Paul" by the Salina Oratorio Society, George W. Barnes, director, with visiting soloists.

The civic music association has been organized one year. Its officers are: E. L. Cox, president; T. S. Howell, vice president; Winifred Neptune, secretary; John Eberhardt, treasurer.

GEORGE ROBERTS

George Roberts is one of the younger American pianists in constant demand in New York this season. His appearances in Aeolian Hall, Greenwich Theater, and elsewhere have been exhibitions of splendid artistry and technic. Already he finds himself an established favorite of the concert-going public of the United States. and his many appearances in various parts of the country have tested his popularity. Mr. Roberts has appeared in concert and recital with the following artists:

May Marshall Cobb, Mary Carson (Milan, Century and Boston Grand Opera), Alice Eversman (Metropolitan Opera Company), Mary Bowen-Fultoni, Sara Heineman, Marie Torrence, Marianna Carlo, Umberto Sorrentino, Henry Parsons (Teatro Rossini), John Finnegan, Percy Hemus, Bernardo Olshansky, Alois Trnka and Paulo Gruppe.

Famous Librettist Dies

Luigi Illica, Italy's foremost grand opera librettist, died in Italy on December 17. In all he gave the words to fifty operas, including works by Puccini, Mascagni, Cilea, Giordano and Franchetti; the libretto of Mascagni's "Iris" and Puccini's "La Boheme" were written by Illica, who also, aided by Hiacosa, developed the libretto of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly." Illica had been ill for several years and unable to write.

Carolyn Willard in Recital

Chicago is determined to place itself deep in the hearts of the music loving people of New York. Not since 1917, when the writer established himself in New York, have so many pianists from the Windy City come to New York to exhibit their musical talents. In spite of the zero weather a large audience listened to Miss Willard's recital given on Wednesday afternoon, December 17, at Aeolian Hall. The cordial reception given to this pianist attested the audience's pleasure. She was heard in the Italian Concerto by John Sebastian Bach. There was no doubt about the pianist's abilities, after the conclusion of this composition. She exhibited a splendid musicianship of no ordinary means. She imbued Bach's music with temperament, expression and gave an interpretation which denoted her comprehension of the great master. There were many compositions on the program and in all she demonstrated that in her Chicago possesses a brilliant artist musician. The balance of the program consisted of:

Duo Repos d'Amour.....Henselt
Rhapsody, Op. 119.....Brahms
Eclogue (Annes de Pelerinage).....Liszt

The brilliant Bostonian pianist, in spite of an attack of pneumonia, preferred to appear in recital on Thursday afternoon, December 18. But after two renditions the physician who was in attendance announced that Miss Buell would be unable to proceed with the recital. Under these circumstances it would be superfluous to extend any comments on her playing, though in her two renditions she exhibited splendid qualities of the pianist. "Courante" and "Zigue" by Bach-MacDowell were the only works played of the program.

Caruso Once More a Father

On Friday morning, December 19, Mrs. Enrico Caruso, formerly Miss Benjamin Parker, gave birth to a girl, who has been named Gloria. The tenor was in the happiest mood and was showered with congratulations from all over New York. In spite of the happy event he sang in the evening in a performance of "L'Elisir D'Amour."

On Friday afternoon Alexandra de Markoff gave a piano recital at Aeolian Hall. In the evening George Harris Jr., tenor, assisted by the New York Chamber Music Society, appeared in the same hall in a song recital.

Georgia MacMullen to Sing for the Women's Philharmonic Society of New York

The excellent American soprano who has returned to New York from several engagements will appear on Saturday evening, December 27 at Carnegie Hall as soloist for the Women's Philharmonic Society of New York. For this occasion the charming soprano will feature the following program: "In quelle tirne," aria from "Manon Lescaut" by Puccini and the same composer's Minuet, "L'heure Delicieuse" by Staub, aria "Dans la Foret" from the opera "Lakme" by Delibes and the same composer's "Blanche Dourga." The English group will consist of Campbell Tipton's "A Spirit Flower," Bishop's "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark," "Christmas Song" by Pietro A. Yon and "Love's in My Heart" by Huntington Woodman.

Louis Simmions' Pupil Scores With Boston English Opera Company

Beatrice Bowman, an artist pupil of Louis Simmions, the excellent vocal teacher, met recently with unusual success when she appeared with the Boston English Opera Company at the Arlington Theater in Boston as Gilda in "Rigoletto." The Hub papers speak in unusual terms about her exceptional coloratura voice, and of her clear, flexible tone. Her singing of the aria "Caro Nome" was especially commended by the Bostonian critics.

Jacques Thibaud in Recital

Ever since Edward Colonne discovered Jacques Thibaud, the French violinist has been the admiration of the musical world. He was no child prodigy and we thank Providence he wasn't one, because prodigies as a rule have come and disappeared soon. Jacques Thibaud had talent since childhood and today, after many years of an eventful musical career, he is just the same true, sincere, genial violinist as he has been for more than a decade. With such violinistic glories no one need to despair that the world is not producing great artists. He is today the master of masters and maybe an example to all the best violinists appearing not only in this country but in any part of the universe. He stands in his own class. His playing, his musicianship, his artistry, his technic, his temperament, grace, finesse are qualities which belong to him. At his recital on Tuesday afternoon, December 16, he played better than I ever chanced to hear him. He began his program with Concerto, F major, by Ed Lalo. This French composer is always interesting, agreeable and more or less melodious, but, in any event, it is inferior to his beautiful Spanish symphony. Mr. Thibaud brought out the qualities of the Concerto with clarity, perfect intonation, a beautiful, large and ingratiating tone. His technic in the last movement was flawless. It was the performance of a master, and a master truly he is. A large audience listened to his recital and paid him a tribute which only great artists receive from the hands of the music loving people. He was assisted at the piano by L. T. Gruenberg. The balance of the program, which the writer was not able to hear, consisted of Fantaisie, by Robert Schumann; Prelude, E major (violin alone), Bach; Intrada (17th Century), Desplaines-Nachez; Prelude and Allegro, Pugnani-Kreisler; Nocturne, Grieg-Elman; Rondo Capriccioso, Saint-Saens.

Florence Easton With the Beethoven Association at Aeolian Hall

The second concert of the Beethoven Association was given on Tuesday evening, December 16, before a large and distinguished audience. The aim of the organization is to give concerts enlisting the works of the great masters. The receipts are to be used for a noble cause, but who is to benefit from these concerts is yet unknown to musical circles. Many American and foreign artists have enlisted their co-operation and voluntarily and without any fee they will appear at Aeolian Hall to provide adequate interpretations of the great master. At the second concert Florence Easton, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, was the bright star. Her lyric, dramatic voice was beautiful to listen to, ringing and brilliant in tone. She gave occasion for praise in the singing of Beethoven's "Penitence," "In questa Tomba Oscura" and "Longing" gave much pleasure and on this occasion the Sonata, op. 23, for violin and piano, was also played by Mr. Elman and Mr. Gabrilowitch. Two movements from two of the Sonatas for pianoforte, op. 49, in G minor, and op. 49, in G major, were also played, as well as the Septet in E flat major, op. 20. In the latter composition, the soloists were assisted by Messrs. Ferir, Stoper, Chiaffarelli, Reiter, Kohon and Manoly. The evening was a very artistic and enjoyable entertainment.

Marouf

Henri Rabaud's opera comique will never appeal to the masses because the latter look for something that modern operatic composers do not believe in—melody a la Verdi or Donizetti. Musicians and individuals whose artistic sensibilities are developed towards the refined music will always find in Rabaud's score a source of delight. On repetition the work gains admirers. "Marouf" was given on Saturday matinee, December 20, before an audience unusually distinguished and decidedly more refined than on any other occasion. The beauty, the value of the score, the refined, colorful music lies in the orchestration. Many passages are fascinating and of an oriental flavor. The opening of the second act, the ballet and the last act will never bore an intelligent audience. To make "Marouf" the more appreciated, the scenery, the ballet and the costumes must be choice and artistic. On these points, especially on the scenery, the Metropolitan gives us the opportunity to bestow praise. The potential artistic power of the performance was Albert Wolff. He extracted magnificent results from the orchestra which sounded more like a symphonic body. Nuance, finesse, grace all added to make the score sound so beautifully and so ravishing. He tempered the musicians and he made them also flame with marvelous effects. His devotion of proving Rabaud's work worth while for many presentations was in evidence from the inception to the concluding note. With such conductorship we have not been gratified for many seasons. A week from today he conducts his own "Blue Bird" premiere. We may expect some revelations. Meanwhile Mr. Wolff is a giant batonist. De Luca, who created the part of the cobbler last year, sang well, acted capitally and enunciated correctly. Of the Metropolitan male artists he is the artistic power without equal. Alda sang the Princess and looked charmingly. Leon Rothier is always agreeable in the lower and the medium registers, but his upper is at times lacking in resonance. His diction and action are delightful. There was a large cast.

J. DE V.

In the evening "Faust" was given, with the previous cast, save for Jose Mardones, who sang Mephistopheles with his usual beautiful voice. Giuseppe Bamboshek conducted for the first time since his connection with the Metropolitan. Though a young man, his musicianship was a factor during the performance. He proved familiarity with the score and acquitted himself most honorably. A capacity house listened to Farrar, Arisinon, Martinelli in their various roles.

"La Juive"

After many years absence from the Metropolitan boards—thirty, to be exact—Halevy's "Juive" was given recently to immense enthusiasm and with splendid effect. This constituted the first novelty of the season and was welcomed so heartily as so show how keen is this public for works of unusual trend and meaning.

The cast of this opera requires some thoroughly good singers—many of them in fact, and, at the Metropolitan these have been, for the most part, well distributed.

Caruso and Ponselle have leading roles and Rothier, Chalmers and D'Angelo have colorful parts which they presented with much effect and the opera was conducted by Arthur Bodansky.

The setting was prodigally fine and the performance on the whole at a splendid status.

But chief interest centered in the work of the two singers new to the Metropolitan, Evelyn Scotney, coloratura soprano, and Orville Harrold, American tenor, each of gorgeous voice and excellent presence for the part assumed.

Miss Scotney has a voice of extraordinary vitality as well as astonishing flexibility and her scale runs to the highest tones of the coloratura range with surety and pure quality.

The audiences which have heard her at

SIDELIGHTS ON FRIDA STJERNA

Personality is difficult to define and I am not going to invent a new definition nor am I going to explain what personality is. But I am delighted to be able to say something about Frida Stjerna. I don't know whether my subject is that of personality. In any event it deals with some characteristics of this young and comely singer.

A musician or an artist may be cultured or willing to educate herself by reading all sorts of literature. But education does not necessarily combine the striking characteristics of the artist. It is the expression which surges from the eyes, the power of conviction emanating from eloquent speech, the soul which expresses the ideals and principles of life which make one an elect. When I met the singer by appointment at her studio before suspecting the existence of her voice I was struck with the striking and the rare characteristics which emanated fluently and flowingly from the personality of Miss Stjerna. It is not the physical qualities which make one different than the rest and certainly Miss Stjerna has been endowed even with the gift. But this is not all.

We were discussing the musical art and its sidelights and one of the subjects we dealt on was interpretation. And we both agreed that this particularity in the singer and in the musician is one which is to be found only in few individuals. In interviewing the profession, I have found only scant opportunities to discover such intelligent, inspiriting, and musicianly artists as when I met this comely blonde, for a blonde she is. I had no opportunity to listen to her voice, but the impressions she left on me will be lasting because of her intelligence, aristocratic bearing and prolific musical ideas. She chances to be of Swedish birth but has inhabited the middle west since childhood. She studied at one of the Illinois universities, pursued her musical education at the American Conservatory of Chicago, appeared in many recitals throughout the middle west, established herself at Boston and finally came to settle in one of the most fascinating cities of the universe. I am speaking of New York, for the metropolis is indeed full of thrills and the people who live in it are also thrilled. Some time during the month of February Miss Stjerna will appear in a recital of Swedish folk songs, then we shall avail ourselves of the opportunity to comment on her voice and the rest which makes up the personality of an artist.

Some musicians and singers are just as mechanical in their professional work as they are in private life. It is not too much to say that Miss Stjerna would be an inspiration to a listener because her personality is an unusual one and we know well that half of the musical battle is won if you happen to possess this great gift, which only nature bestows on rare occasions. When she is not filling engagements her time is taken up with teaching, and what a tonic she must be to pupils provided the latter grasp her ideas. I don't know whether it is possible to transfer your own magic to someone else, but it is almost certain that the soul of a teacher singer can be felt if an individual is gifted with enough intelligence to divulge the gifts of the elect musical soul.

Lack of space does not permit the printing of other sidelights on this interesting personality, but I certainly anticipate great pleasure when I see and hear Miss Stjerna on the recital platform. J. DE V.

The Metropolitan have endorsed her work in "The Jewess" in the most extravagant way and the critics of the daily press have, without exception, acclaimed her as a remarkable new find for The Metropolitan.

Orville Harrold has come into his own at the opera with resounding success also. His commanding figure fits excellently the part of Leopold and his voice proved, on the great stage of The Metropolitan, to be one of great purity and beauty, and he showed also in his handling of it that his schooling has been of the finest and that his routine has been extended to the point where he can grasp so difficult a part with the utmost of confidence and carry it to resounding success.

Like Miss Scotney he was most enthusiastically hailed by both the press and the public, and both singers may safely be counted as Metropolitan successes.

EDISON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Twice last week (Tuesday and Friday evenings) the Edison Orchestra drew capacity audiences to Orchestra Hall and twice were they applauded to the echo by people who know good music when they hear it, and are not afraid to express an opinion on the matter.

These concerts were the Eighth Annual Gala Events of the organization, and they surely reached a high water mark of value and appreciation.

Mr. Eastman has developed a remarkable fluency and skill with his baton, and the playing of the orchestra has reached a status at once distinctly musical and brilliantly intelligent.

Foremost in interest of the numbers was the Fantasie on "Pagliacci" airs, one well built and exceedingly beautiful and which was played with great spirit as well as abundant charm.

The Edison Orchestra seems destined to take the place once occupied by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, in its old-time Summer Night Concerts, for the repertoire is much the same, and there is the same eager attention from the audience and the same unstinted approval of the cheerful music.

There was, for instance, on Friday the "Swedish Coronation March" by Svendsen, formerly played in the popular concerts at the old Exposition Building, and the "Nut Cracker Suite" (Tschaikowsky), always popular, and the "Bridal Song" from Goldmark's "Rural Wedding," played by Theodore Thomas scores of times, to say nothing of the overture to "Pique Dame" (Suppe), and other light opera pieces, as well as a lot of strictly modern dance music, some of it bordering delightfully on the "jazz" order. And all this was presented with such skill and such esprit by Mr. Eastman and his men that the whole program became an intoxication and a delight.

There were recalls without number, and the audience voted Morgan Eastman and his big idea a very great success.

There were some operatic arias also sung by Margery Maxwell. C. E. W.

MR. HARRISON TO TEACH DURING HOLIDAYS

There has been so great a demand for lessons with Theodore Harrison at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory during the Holidays by teachers who are on vacation that he has consented to teach during the week beginning Dec. 29 and the booking of lessons is already a remarkable one.

ALLEN SPENCER

Allen Spencer's recital last Sunday afternoon was attended by a splendid representation of friends and local musicians. Mr. Spencer played the following program of old favorites, with the addition of the Rossetter Cole "Legend" and a Toccata of Norman O'Neill:

Three Preludes and Fugues, from the "Well Tempered Clavichord"; in C minor, G minor and B flat major.....Bach
Sonata in A flat major, Op. 26.....Beethoven
Andante and variations
Scherzo
Funeral March for the Death of a Hero, Allegro .....Beethoven
Pastorale .....Scarlatti
Capriccio .....Scarlatti
Prelude, Fugue and Variation (transcribed from the organ by Harold Bauer).....Franck
Minstrels .....Debussy
Waltz, Op. 64, No. 2
Berceuse, Op. 57
Polonaise, Op. 53 } .....Chopin
Rustling of the Forest.....Liszt
Legend, Op. 31.....Rossetter Cole
Toccata, Op. 24, No. 2.....Norman O'Neill

That Mr. Spencer's playing pleased was very evident from the enthusiasm of the house. His art is distinctively American. It is clean-cut, terse, intelligent and thought out with conscientious observance of detail. In addition to this there is an observance of artistic values and an interpretative conception which is straightforward and sane.

In the Scarlatti numbers his attacks were clear and his accents made with delicate good taste. The Debussy "Minstrels" was also done with distinctness of outline and effective dynamic changes.

Perhaps no one number was as effective or as well done as the Cole "Legend." It is a composition of enchanting fancy and original outline, and Mr. Spencer made it intimate, narrative and exquisitely limpid in expression.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

On Saturday afternoon a fine program was given by members of Mr. Weidig's Ensemble Class. Several of the numbers were especially enjoyed by the writer, those being the Schubert "Torelleri Quintet," a Rhapsodie for quartet by Juon, and "Chanson Perpetuelle" by Chansson, in which the voice part was taken by Miss Keirnan, who also did two Brahms' songs with viola obligato.

HANS HESS WILL BE HEARD AGAIN IN NEW YORK

Hugo Boucek, New York manager, informed us that he secured an engagement for Hans Hess, cellist, for January 17th, 1920, as assisting artist at the debut of the Italian-American tenor, Angelo Raggini, at the New 61st Street Music Hall, of New York. He will be heard in one group of solos and will also play two selections obligato.

———♯♯♯———

Bohnet—Mr. Cleveland Bohnet filled the following engagements the past week as accompanist: Dec. 16 for Olive Nevin, the New York soprano, at a private musicale. Dec. 17 for Miss Jennie F. W. Johnson. Dec. 18 for Benjamin Paley, Miss Katherine Spronz and Elmer S. Lott at the Oriental Consistory.

TITO SCHIPA

Scores Success as Elvino in La Sonnambula, with Chicago Opera Association

SCHIPA AGAIN FAVORITE

Tito Schipa, as Elvino, appeared to find his usual congeniality with the lovely suavities of the Italian school. In his duet with Mme. Galli-Curci in the second act, he afforded royal pleasure.—Chicago Evening American.

He sang with excellent discrimination, and he kept himself at all times wholly in the picture, even when the applause grew insistent, as it did after the tellingly given ensemble in the second act. His voice is one of true beauty, rich, full, and admirably free in emission. And last night he employed it like an artist and won deservedly hearty approval from his public.—The Chicago Tribune.

So when two artists like Galli-Curci and Schipa put their heads together, join hands and begin to blend their voices in the thirds and sixths of the score, the audience is quite certain of having a good time over the performance. They did it frequently last night. When they were not in vocal conjunction, either one or the other was quite likely to be singing a solo of quite as ingratiating a type. —Chicago Daily Journal.

Mme. Galli-Curci and Tito Schipa made an ideal young peasant couple, a sort of grown-up Hansel and Gretel effect, and they sang and acted to and for each other in the way by which they are setting a new operatic standard.—Chicago Herald and Examiner.

The young tenor was in excellent voice and found great favor with the public.—Herman Devries, Chicago Evening American.

Tito Schipa was quite as important to the success of the evening as Mme. Galli-Curci herself. He is the true tenore leggiero and has just the kind of voice and vocal control demanded by the music. Also he is young, with all the exuberance of youth, yet with enough routine to have himself in hand, and a clever actor. He can sing the florid ornaments with such ease as gives you a grateful sense of comfort in listening to him and such understanding of the music as makes them decorative figures. His rhythmic sense is strong, and while he makes big ritardandi and long holds he does it only where the composer intended, and consequently the conductor has no difficulty in following him. In the old Italian music these long holds on the high notes, with diminuendi (if the singer have the vocal control to accomplish them) are essential to bringing out the meaning.

Those singers with the technic to perform these feats invariably do; those who cannot quite fetch it are fain to cover up their shortcomings by finding such things inartistic. Mr. Schipa has one more admirable quality, which so far I have not dared mention, and do so now with fear and trembling—he sings in tune.—Chicago Evening Post.

The Elderly Person

A battle royal has been going on in the exclusively organ journals. "Is American church music good?" is the challenge. For a long time that music was the under dog in the fight but when the reserves from the wooded districts and prairies were brought forward a rescue was effected. Without driving our English ally off the scene entirely, his supporters have been given pretty plainly to understand that the kind of American music for church use which has stood some rigid time tests is fully worth while.

It sometimes seems as if when men take up a pen to write they lose control of it and say things they do not really mean. Just as many a man who undertakes to "make a few remarks" finds himself clear beyond his depth and floundering while he unlooses words which make him trouble afterwards. No end of mischief results from one being unable "to think on his feet" or with pen in hand.

While one indulgently submits to the wholesale denunciation of the "Evensongs" and "sensuous tunes for oboe solo (and tremolo!) with blithe piano accompaniments," so generally reputed to be representative of the American output for organ, when it comes to "roasting" Dudley Buck and Harry Rowe Shelley, then some of the old timers sit up briskly. Not all of Buck and Shelley is to be accepted offhand, but without doubt Philip James will be found dull at times and we all know that Horatio Parker is heavy as lead in a bad average. Accurately written, correct, clean and scholarly, but not serviceable, is a fair estimate for our leading composer. He gets all the prizes that are offered when he competes, because he is erudite and the judges admire erudition naturally. But his operas are shelved after expensive preparation and so many of his anthems are treated the same way that only "The Lord Is My Light" and "Behold, Ye Despisers" are in any way generally used—to say nothing of being understood. It is well to think of men like Parker and Chadwick being ahead of their day. If posthumous popularity will satisfy their spirits one likes to believe they will be happy yet.

But why exalt their product just because it approaches English standards and depreciate the men who meant much to their time and won such friendship that their works continue to live seriously after them? Why speak of "Shelley's dear old ditty, 'The King of Love,'" in order to praise James' "Hail! Dear Conqueror"? Buck's B Minor Te Deum will measure up royally beside Parker's "Lord Is My Light," and MacFarlane's "Angel Voices" is better balanced and more effective than many of George C. Martin's ornately heavy anthems.

Buck is censured because he fastened that "deadly incubus," the quartet choir, to our choir gallery and thus prevented expansion along the lines Lowell Mason had in mind as fit for preserving the Puritan simplicity of the early American Church. That was characterized by the use of tuning fork, flute and bass viol, and severe harmony to fit the somber attitude of those believers who sang "How Vain Are All Things Here Below." That early church didn't take to the English anthems. Those savored of priestly rites and formal observance. Because he was good and pious, L. O. Emerson obtained a hearing and admission which will always be a mystery, for he is as obvious as Danks and Sudds, who chased him hard in after years. Because it is a fact that shortly after the Civil War the general reconstruction hit church music as well as the color line. The old volunteer choirs and ambling, grumbling, growling, squealing instruments went out with the melodeon when the cabinet organ with "forty-leven" stops, one-half of which were dummies, led the procession which finally evolved the quartet choir. The Elderly Person rememberes it all and the grief of his English leader who had been importing the fugal efforts of Morley, Farrant and Hopkins for his tyros to wrestle with. When Warren's "Rock of Ages" and "Come, Holy Spirit" came they fairly routed the severe school by their simple, direct lyricism and cheerful way of vocalizing what had been awe-inspiring texts. Warren was too sugary and grew too elaborate, while Harrison Millard adapted everything he could lay hands on to sacred words, including the garden music from "Faust," which it must be remembered was a comparatively new opera in the seventies.

And just at this time Dudley Buck experimented with himself and did so well in so many ways that he set the pace which eventually drove out the wishy-washy stuff that was usurping a desirable place. What he did inspired others and with the coming of good organs to play on—for you simply couldn't do his stuff on a single manual or reed organ—his music made its enviable way. There was so much of it that it pretty nearly made sufficient library! Much was prepared hastily and, in the flight of years, has fallen by the wayside. But when any moderns make as good settings of the Te Deum as his E Flat Festival and B Minor and strike twelve as he did in "Sing Alleluia Forth" there will be a scuffle on the part of all choir directors to get hold of the new product. Only a prejudiced observer speaks of it as "cheap and obvious," for the compositions cited are neither. One writer confesses that he "HAD to play the Festival Te Deum once and never got over it." Perhaps it got away with him. It has done so with others.

Much the same may be said of Shelley, who even yet lifts up his voice in an occasional new setting. Shelley is more melodiously simple than Buck, but his gift of tune which voiced fitly a text stood in good stead to make him a formidable competitor. "Hark! My Soul," "Christian! the Morn," "God Is Love" and "Savior, When Night Involves the Skies"—well, go on using them, choir leaders and organists. They are all right and you will be in keeping them for the happiness and ministry of your people in the pews—who after all are the court of last resort. What Lincoln said about fooling people applies well in church music.

Best of all, Buck and Shelley fostered a taste which sought for the good in everything that was beautiful, while it was reverent. There was no trouble in accepting Barnby, Tours and Stainer at full worth. Go into any church choir library that has not been sifted out and see how serviceability has created discernment. What a very small proportion of Schnecker and his sort finds root, or at least a chance to grow. It won't do to be too hard on Schnecker. He is a marvel in the way he uses other men's ideas as if they were his own and fits them into that mosaic. To his credit is the most effective anthem setting of Kipling's "Recessional." This can be maintained in the face of Matthew's elaborate work, which despite admirable qualities lacks a real climax.

Now this much is true—that the men who have followed Buck in America as composers haven't been many and they haven't produced much that is proving worth while by enduring. In so far as music of permanent value for a choir of any sort is concerned, the contention that American church music is indifferent in quality holds good. Building on what went before, it is reasonable to ask why there isn't plenty of music on the market as good, at least, if not better than what was produced fifty years ago. If it were produced it would have hearing and if better than what had served well for a long time the old stuff would promptly be shelved. Choirmasters are on the lookout for things which they regard as good music, music which their choirs enjoy practicing and their congregations like to listen to. Before you get through with the proposition you have to think about that congregation which keeps the church operative. It has a persistent way of estimating what ministers to its religious needs and a determined way of insisting on hearing its "favorites" even to the point of weariness. It continues to enjoy the "good reliable blackberry jam" which tastes good, and to act offish toward what it is told it should like. Foxy is the choirmaster and organist who keeps that in mind. When you see Warren's "Magdalen" popping up in so many Easter service lists that it can't be counted, be sure it is there because it is asked for in a way that is not to be ignored. And it has seen fully fifty years of hard service, been placed in juxtaposition with the best modern competitors and seen them, one by one, go into desuetude. It is deplorably simple, cheap if you insist, but the same people who are rapt as they call the "Hallelujah Chorus" "grand" are rapturous over the "sweetness" of "Magdalen" and only mildly placid over "Light's Glittering Morn." And there you are—and there you'll have to stay until the man comes along to do something better than Buck and his comrades, who are in the saddle so firmly after all by the simple reason of having made good.

This good natured ramble of a comment can only end where it began. It's all right to ask for progress, but don't belittle Buck and Shelley and blame them for doing successfully what they undertook to do. Until some composers fully arrive to replace them, why not be grateful that they were better than their forbears and gave the church music a stimulus which by the test of time has proven worthy of the confidence given it?
